COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES

IN THE

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

WASHINGTON:

EXPENDITURES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

WASHINGTON, May 8, 1884.

ADDISON J. BROWN sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Please state your age, residence, and occupation. —Answer I am thirty-eight years of age; I reside at East Moravia, Pa.; I am a farmer.

Q. State whether you were at any time a deputy marshal in the western district of Pennsylvania.—A. I was.

Q. During what time?—A. I was appointed in 1880.

Q. How long did you serve?—A. I served until 1882, but I had acted in the capacity of a deputy marshal for nearly three years prior to that.

Q. During the three years prior to that, in what way did you serve as a deputy?—A. I was serving writs for the Roberts Torpedo Company, and was recognized by the office as a deputy—a special.

Q. Who appointed you to perform that service?—A. I cannot tell you whether I was appointed or not, but I was employed by a man named Thomas, who was an agent for the Roberts Torpedo Company.

Q. Did you serve the processes of the courts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From whom did you receive the writs?—A. I received them from Mr. Thomas. At that time I was not acquainted with Mr. Hall at all.

Q. Who is Mr. Thomas?—A. Mr. Thomas is an agent for the Roberts Torpedo Company and attends to that part of the business; he is in their employ.

Q. Did he have any official Government position?—A. No, sir; not at all that I know of.

Q. What kind of writs did you serve?—A. Chancery subpœnas, preliminary injunctions, and injunctions and subpœnas for witnesses. During that time I also collected some executions.

Q. In what manner did you sign the papers?—A. I signed as a deputy, "John Hall, U. S. marshal, per A. J. Brown, deputy."

Q. Do you say that you had no authority from Marshal Hall?—A. I never had met the gentleman at that time to my knowledge; I knew him by sight.

Q. Had he given you any written or verbal authority to act for him?—A. None whatever.

Q. What was the extent of the business that you performed there as a deputy?—A. In 1878 the business was quite large. I cannot tell you the exact number of suits or writs, but I was quite busily employed.

Q. In what way did those writs and papers come into your hands?—A. They were given to me by Mr. Thomas, and in one or two instances by Mr. Roberts himself, and sometimes, if I recollect right, they came to me directly from the marshal's office.

Q. Who forwarded them?—A. The marshal or his clerk; they came from the office; I don't know who sent them.

Q. Who paid your fees?—A. Mr. Thomas.

Q. Did you get any fees for serving court process?—A. Yes, sir; those are the ones that I am speaking of. He paid me $2 a writ, and I paid my own expenses.

Q. Did you make any charges on the papers for expenses?—A. No, sir; I simply made my return, showing that the papers were served on the proper person, either by leaving them at the residence, or by personal service.

Q. Did you render any account for those services?—A. I always rendered it to Mr. Thomas.

Q. That was the account for $2 for each writ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you render any other account?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Hall pay you anything?—A. At that time nothing. I had no business with Mr. Hall until 1882.

Q. How were you employed after that?—A. After that I worked directly for Marshal Hall, and served the same papers. Then I got two-thirds of the legal fees, which I found to be much more profitable.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. To whom did you send those subpoenas and writs while you were working for Mr. Thomas?—A. I turned the papers over to him, and he paid me the money.

Q. What he did with them you don't know?—A. I do not know what he did with them. I suppose he sent them to court.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was the nature of the court proceedings against the parties that you served?—A. They were sued for infringement of patents and the usual chancery subpoena was issued first. Sometimes that was accompanied with a motion for a preliminary injunction; frequently the preliminary injunction was granted and then a perpetual injunction; then a master's notice, and frequently subpoenas for witnesses.

Q. Can you explain how the court processes were issued—whether the names were inserted in them or whether they were issued in blank.—A. Oh, they were issued directly to the parties. The Roberts people would lodge the information and the clerk of the court would make out a regular chancery subpoena.

Q. In the case of an injunction, were any of the names of persons to be served left blank?—A. No, sir. There were many subpoenas for witnesses that were issued by Mr. Gamble that were issued in blank; that is, the seal of the court was put on and his signature, but no term and no number—just his name and the seal of the court. But those were subpoenas for witnesses.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Who was Mr. Gamble?—A. Mr. Gamble was the clerk of the court.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were those subpoenas issued by him as clerk, or as a United States commissioner?—A. As clerk.

Q. You had blank subpoenas, then, issued by the clerk, leaving you to insert the names of the parties when you found them?—A. Yes, sir. But those, you understand, were subpoenas for witnesses; the parties were not principals in the cases at all.

Q. In the injunction proceedings and in the summonses for defendants you found the names inserted in the papers when they came to you?—

A. Oh, yes; always. They were always correct and issued properly.

Q. Do you know whether they were inserted by the agent of the torpedo company or whether the papers came from the court in that way?—

A. I think they came directly from the court.

Q. Do you remember how many cases there were that you served as agent of the torpedo company?—A. I cannot say exactly. There were a great many more services than there were suits, but in 1878 I was very busy the whole year; I did nothing else than just travel from one district to another.

Q. Do you know how many cases there were?—A. No; I do not.

Q. About how many?—A. I presume that I made 500 services in 1878, but that would be only an estimate; I do not know exactly.

Q. Were you entitled to $2 for each?—A. Yes, sir; $2 for each.

Q. Did anyone pay you for the services?—A. Mr. Thomas always paid me.

Q. Did he pay you in full?—A. Yes, sir; with one exception. My contract was that I was to receive $2 for each paper that I served. A question arose about one lot of papers which he issued, in which there were a master's notice and a motion for a preliminary injunction served with the chancery subpoena. Mr. Thomas claimed that they all being served at the same time I was not entitled to pay for that. I claimed that I was, and that was the way that I got acquainted with Marshal Hall.

Q. What was the difference between the amount of your claim upon the torpedo company and the amount which they allowed you?—A. They paid me $850. That was all they had refused to pay. I went to Marshal Hall and asked him if he knew anything about it, and he said he did not; that he had not employed me; that I was employed by the company, and that his contract with them did not admit of any third party; that is, he gave them the papers to serve, and he had some arrangement with them, and they were to get the papers served.

Q. What arrangement did he say he had with them?—A. He did not say. I knew nothing whatever about that. But when he found that I was determined to get the money, he telegraphed for them, and they came down and paid me $850, and then Marshal Hall gave me an appointment as deputy.

Q. What was the basis of your suit against the company?—A. That was for services rendered three years before that—in 1874.

Q. Were you acting at that time as a deputy marshal?—A. No, sir; I was acting as an informer, or a detective, or a spy, or whatever you choose to call it.

Q. For whom?—A. For the Roberts Torpedo Company.

Q. Did you bring the cases to the notice of the United States authorities?—A. I furnished the information to the agents of the company.

Q. Were suits commenced and brought to trial?—A. Some were, but many of them were not; from the fact that Mr. Roberts surrendered his patent at that time in order to have it reissued, and that cut out many of the suits.

Q. How much did you claim at that time?—A. I think the difference between Mr. Roberts and me was something like $21,000.

Q. How long a period did that claim cover?—A. I worked just two months, October and September, 1874.

Q. And in that time did your fees amount to that sum?—A. Yes, sir; according to our contract.

Q. What was the contract?—A. I have a copy of it with me here. The witness produced and read the paper as follows:

Memorandum of agreement made this second day of August, 1874, between Roberts Torpedo Company and A. J. Brown, to wit: The Roberts Torpedo Company agree to pay to said A. J. Brown $10 for the report of each party buying, selling, handling, or using torpedoes in oil wells other than the Roberts patterns; said Brown to receive one-half of the amount at the time of making the report, the balance when proven, or any of the parties may settle for the same. The Roberts Torpedo Company further agree to pay A. J. Brown $10 for each torpedo proven after the first one and $20 for each torpedo put in after the parties have been enjoined.

By order of E. A. L. Roberts.

LEVI MASON, Agent.

Q. Were there proceedings pending in the United States court during this time in regard to the cases that you were then making service in?—A. Many of them had not been settled. There were a great many of the cases that suits were brought in immediately at the time the reports were made, but there were some that they never brought any suits in, for some reason that I do not know; but I was told it was on account of the surrender of the patent and the reissue, which had cut them out.

Q. How many cases do you say you discovered and worked up in those two months?—A. I forget the exact number, but at $10 and $20 each they amounted to about $21,000.

Q. What did you do with the parties against whom proceedings were instituted?—A. I did nothing whatever. My work was done after I made my reports.

Q. What was the nature of the reports?—A. I discovered that those men had been using torpedoes different from the Roberts patent. You observe that the contract says any man "buying or selling," so that if a man bought a torpedo, and if I reported it, that settled the business so far as I was concerned, except that I had to prove the case when the suit was brought to trial.

Q. How many cases were instituted in pursuance of the reports you made?—A. That I could not tell you without referring to the record.

Q. What is your estimate of the number?—A. I presume that suits were brought in about one-half the cases.

Q. Were there compromises in those cases?—A. That I do not know. In fact, the Roberts Company were very particular that I should not get at those facts.

Q. For what reason?—A. For the reason that they did not want to pay me.

Q. Have they paid you?—A. They have now.

Q. How much did they pay you?—A. They paid me $2,500 three years ago, and I think at the time I made the reports they paid me about $1,200, making about $3,700 altogether.

Q. Is that all that you received under your contract?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were not the company responsible?—A. They were, and I brought a suit, but I found that the statute of limitations had nearly or quite cut me out, and it was a question whether it had or had not done so, and I thought it was better to take that amount of money than to stand a fight.

Q. Do you know how many cases were instituted, or could have been instituted, from the information you furnished?—A. No, sir; I could not tell you that exactly; but if I was at home I could tell you the exact number, as it is in my bill of particulars. The reason I cannot tell you now is that there were many of the parties that had ten or fifteen torpedoes, so that that would limit the number of parties—would reduce the number materially. I should judge that there were in the neighborhood of two hundred and fifty or three hundred of them.

Q. What was the nature of the proceedings instituted in the United States Court in those cases?—A. Simply a suit in equity, and most of the Roberts cases were allowed to drop after the chancery subpoena was issued.

Q. What was done in the way of compromising those suits by the Roberts Company?—A. That I cannot tell you; from the fact that there were but very few entries made on the docket at Pittsburgh.

Q. How many?—A. Possibly 15 or 20, or perhaps more; but there were many of the parties who settled to my knowledge that the records at Pittsburgh did not show anything about.

Q. State what you know with regard to the returns made to the court of costs that should have accrued in those cases, and should have been collected by the marshal for serving the court process.—A. Do I understand you to want me to state what the marshal's returns were?

Q. What his returns were and what the facts were?—A. Of course I cannot tell you exactly what the facts in the cases were, but I know that if you go back over the term of marshals holding that office nine and a half years, according to his returns the gross earnings of the office were only $70,000; the office was not self-sustaining except in the year 1878; in that year he turned over to the Government $143.70. That was all the money that he paid to the Government during that nine and a half years, according to his own sworn statements.

Q. Where were those sworn statements made? Do you mean his emolument returns?—A. Yes, sir; his emolument returns, which I examined in the Treasury Department two years ago.

Q. What should have been returned from that office during that period, according to your knowledge of the business?—A. Well, I have a very poor idea of what there should have been. Of course I have a pretty good idea of what his earnings would have been in the Roberts torpedo cases, and I considered that the actual costs in the Roberts business alone would have been more than $70,000.

Q. Upon what do you base that opinion?—A. I think so from the simple reason that of all the records in the marshal's office that I have ever examined I have failed to find the first one that was correct.

Q. What were the discrepancies that you discovered? Please state at length what you know about that matter.—A. Well, for instance, there was one suit that was brought in 1876 that went through the full process of the court and the execution was issued and collected. The marshal's costs, as figured up on the execution—I served it myself and I collected it—amounted to $142; and then for collecting the execution there was $53. The marshal's docket shows that his costs in that case were something like $63. I was very much surprised on looking over his emolument sheets to find that the first return of the Roberts torpedo business that I could discover was in the year 1881; it was ignored prior to that time. The names of none of the deputies who served those processes were mentioned in the returns, although I believe the marshal is required by law to swear to how much money has been earned by the different deputies and special deputies. Giving the names of all the deputies that ever worked for Mr. Hall, his emolument sheets show only eleven, and they show that he paid those deputies $17,000. Now, his own son was one of those deputies, who received over $12,000, leaving the remaining $5,000 for the other ten deputies. The only return that he has ever made in regard to Mr. R. K. Campbell, one of the prominent deputies, is something like $112 or $113, and that only for one year. Mr. Campbell's name was never mentioned elsewhere that I could discover, and I went over the emolument sheets very carefully.

Q. What office did he hold?—A. He was a deputy marshal.

Q. And you say you could not find his name in the emolument returns?—A. Only for some $112 or $113—in one year.

Q. How much money do you say went into his hands?—A. I don't know anything about how much he was paid, but I know that he was a deputy marshal for six or seven years.

Q. What was the name of the marshal's son?—A. J. Ad. Hall, I believe, is his signature to the court process.

Q. Where does that son live?—A. At Little Washington, Pa.

Q. How much do you say he was paid?—A. Nearly $13,000.

Q. Covering how long a period?—A. I forget the exact number of years, because I was not connected with the office at that time, but he was in there five or six years. Mr. Perkins could probably tell you better. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that Mr. Hall in his sworn returns says that he never paid but $17,000 to his deputies during his term of office, and that his own son got over $12,000 of that, leaving only $5,000 for the rest of the deputies.

Q. How many were there?—A. He reports eleven, but there are a great many whose names are not mentioned in his returns. I went to work myself in 1878, and his emolument returns bear my name for the first time in 1881.

Q. What did you discover in the entries with reference to yourself as a deputy and your earnings?—A. I discovered that I had been ignored up to 1881; that is, for two or three years I had not been recognized as a deputy, nor any account made of the amount of business that I had done, which was pretty large. In fact I don't know of any way that Mr. Hall could have made those returns and made them correct. For instance, if he gave Roberts 50 per cent. and Roberts got the processes served for $1 apiece, the question would arise in my mind, which was the deputy, whether Roberts or the man that served the papers. If it was the man that served the papers, then the marshal could not swear that he had paid him 50 per cent. when the man got only 10 per cent., and he could not swear that Roberts was the deputy because the name of the third party would be on the writs. I give it up as a conundrum, and I think the matter was ignored altogether.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. State in this connection what the statutory fees are for the service of those various papers?—A. Prior to 1880, as I said before, it was \$2 a writ; that is what I got. After that I received $66\frac{2}{3}$ of the actual fee.

Q. That was the arrangement between you and Marshal Hall?—A. That was the arrangement between me and Marshal Hall; after I was appointed deputy the business was all done through the office; there was no outside party known. I recollect one case in particular where Mr. Roberts's man came to me and requested me not to make the service, as the case had been settled. We were not very good friends, and I was not disposed to recognize him as having any authority in the matter, and I went ahead and served the papers. The defendant was very much surprised, and showed me the receipts that he had taken from Roberts.

Q. Did you understand from your interview with the marshal that he farmed out this privilege of serving papers to a special deputy for a consideration?—A. I did, sir. I understood that; but what I was going to say was that they had received from these men $50 for the infringement and $40 for the costs of court. Possibly I have got the figures reversed; it may be that they got $50 for the costs, and $40 for the infringement, but I know they got $90, all told.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who got that $90?—A. Mr. Roberts. He had settled with these men, and had got, as I have said, $50 for the infringement of the shot and had charged the parties $40 for the costs of court, and they paid it and took his receipt. I returned those papers in the case to Mr. Hall and told him that this man Roberts, or rather his agent, had requested me not to serve the papers in the first place, and then, afterwards, had requested me not to make any return, and was very indignant because I had served the papers. Mr. Hall said, "Well, you had better make no return; just return it n. e. i." (non est inventus). I said, "No, sir; I cannot do that; but if you order me not to make any return I will not do it." I left the writ without making any return at all, and I afterwards discovered that Mr. Hall had written on the back of the writ, "Returned at the request of the prosecutor," and had signed his name, "John Hall, U. S. marshal." The costs in that case were $1, and the writs were served—I served them myself—and those men paid $40 for costs of court to Mr. Roberts. I cannot give the number of the case, but I can refer you to a gentleman whose character is above reproach, and who, I suppose, will be glad to furnish you the facts.

Q. Who are the gentlemen?—A. The name is Mitchell. I would have to look over my papers to give you the term.

Q. That is one case that you refer to?—A. That is one particular case that came to my knowledge.

Q. Have you examined Mr. Hall's emolument returns?—A. Yes, sir; very carefully, in the Treasury Department.

Q. Did he make return of the fees collected in those torpedo cases as a part of his emolument returns?—A. No, sir; I could not find any returns that I could trace, as I said before, up to 1881, from the simple reason that all the deputies who did that class of business were ignored in the returns. Whether he embraced that in work that he had done himself mainly or not, I could not tell.

Q. You knew that he did not do the torpedo business personally?—A. Yes, sir; I knew that it was a sort of a general jobbing business. I presume there were twenty-five different men that served those processes the same as I worked on them for two years. I know one man that was appointed a deputy in 1874, and remained a deputy, I think, until about 1880, and his name does not appear in the emolument returns.

Q. What is his name?—A. Beardsley.

Q. Was he recognized as a deputy marshal?—A. Oh, yes, sir; he was appointed in 1874.

Q. What did he do in regard to this service?—A. He served the same papers that I had served, only his work commenced prior to mine. At the time I was serving these papers, in 1878, 1879, and 1880, I served in only one district, and they had several others that were serving besides me.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. The same class of papers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did this man Beardsley do a large business of that kind? Did he serve many papers?—A. Yes; I think he did.

Q. A very large number?—A. I think so.

Q. How extensive was that business in behalf of the torpedo company in that region during those years, so far as you know?—A. Mr. Hall's docket shows something like 1,800 cases during his term—that is, 1,800 suits, but oftentimes there were ten or eleven writs in one suit. I was surprised that his docket did not show more.

Q. Did you examine the emolument returns to ascertain whether in that number of suits return had been made of the $40 of fees which should have been collected as the costs of court?—A. I could not tell. The nature of those returns is such that you cannot pick out any one item. For instance, I think that I earned that year about $900; that was the last year that Mr. Hall was in, 1882, and he put in my voucher, but he never paid me anything for that writ. I told him that I should have had it, but he said, "No, I do not think you ought, on account of the nature of my agreement with Mr. Roberts." Consequently I did not insist upon it.

Q. What was the basis of the $40 costs that each defendant paid on the settlement of his case?—A. Oh, that was not a general rule. I spoke of that in one particular case.

Q. What was the rule?—A. The rule was, just as much as they could get—just according to the man they were dealing with.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. What would be the general average in that class of cases?—A. That I do not know, because I had nothing to do with the settlements. All I know is what different parties would tell me from time to time.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What did you learn that those parties were being taxed for costs?—A. Well, I don't know as I have ever heard that in any particular case outside of the one I have mentioned. They would generally settle the thing together, the costs and the infringement, according to the number of torpedoes the party had put in. For instance, if you had been torpedoing for several years in so many wells, they would make a general estimate and settle for so much, and you would agree not to use any more.

Q. Were those suits for infringement tried in the courts or settled on the ground?—A. They were tried in the courts, all those that came to trial.

Q. What was done with the others? Were they settled on the ground?—A. I cannot say, because I do not know. I know that the record shows hundreds of cases commenced—the case commenced and the chancery subpoena issued; that is all the court record shows, and it is a question of doubt what was done with the cases.

Q. Do you know what was done with them, as a rule?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. In your own cases you do?—A. My own cases were settled, many of them, after the chancery subpoena was issued.

Q. How were they settled?—A. They were settled by the defendants paying whatever they could agree upon. In some few instances notes were taken.

Q. You mean that the defendants settled on the ground with the agent of the torpedo company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then he returned the papers to the court or did not return them, as you have stated?—A. Yes, sir. I presume there was not a case where the defendant went into court to make a settlement.

Q. Then the torpedo company had the power of the process of the court to enable them to settle with the parties infringing their patents?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they used that means throughout the time you have mentioned for the purposes you have indicated?—A. Yes, sir. Another peculiar thing I discovered in Mr. Hall's method of transacting business was that he never paid any attention to any of the writs in any of the cases except the chancery subpoena and the injunction. Subpoenas for witnesses, master's notices, and motions for preliminary injunctions, although served by a deputy and his name put to the papers, as he expressed it to me, "to make it a legal service," were always completely ignored, so far as he was concerned.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. There was no mention made of them in the records?—A. Not any. He claimed that he knew nothing about it, because those writs were not sent to his office to be sent out to be served. I don't know that Mr. Hall and Mr. Roberts ever had any understanding or any bargain. I have been told by good authority that Mr. Hall allowed Mr. Roberts to take those writs from his office and get them served the best he could, and allowed him 50 per cent., and Mr. Roberts sent A, B, or C out to serve them just upon such terms as he could make with them. Some served for $1 a paper, some for $2, and some for so much a month.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. But Mr. Roberts always collected from the defendants the whole amount of costs that the case would bear, did he?—A. Yes, sir; so far as I know. Of course, I don't know anything on that point only about this class I have spoken of, because I had nothing to do with the others in the settlements.

Q. What was the general basis of the settlement with those different defendants, so far as you learned it?—A. I don't think they had any general price fixed. I think they settled with a man for anything they could get.

Q. Did the settlement always include the court costs?—A. Yes, sir; I think there was always a good round sum set for the costs of court; $40 would be a good round sum for costs.

Q. Do you know what items constituted the costs of court in the case you have mentioned?—A. I know what the costs should have been in that case; they should have been about $23, the legitimate costs, according to Mr. Hall's book. According to Mr. Hall's docket, his charge was $1, and I presume that Mr. Gamble's docket fee and other things would amount to about $4. I presume that, as the record stands to-day, the legitimate costs would be about $5, but they had collected $40.

Q. How extensive was that business of collecting $40 as costs when the records of the marshal's office showed only $5, for instance?—A. Well, I know of no other case besides that one. I know, however, that they always collected the costs of court wherever they could.

Q. Did you examine the emolument returns as you have stated?—A. Yes, sir; but that business was not embraced there. As I say, the Roberts torpedo business was ignored in the returns, so far as I could discover, up to 1880.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. There was no evidence of anybody having done anything in that line?—A. No, sir; and all the deputies that had done the work up to that time were completely ignored in the record.

Q. They should have been embraced in the marshal's return, should they not?—A. Yes, sir; I think so. He swears that the return is true and correct. Now, I failed to discover one item that I considered was true and correct. The emolument sheets are open to you, of course, and perhaps you may view them in a different light from what I did.

Q. Did you make any estimate or calculation from the emolument returns of the amounts of fees that the marshal had returned?—A. No; I did not, particularly; but from memory I should say that it did not exceed $2,500.

Q. How much would the earnings in the torpedo cases really amount to in your judgment?—A. As I said before, I think the whole amount of the torpedo business would be more than $70,000.

Q. And the marshal, you say, accounts for only $2,500?—A. I don't think he accounts for much. That business was ignored entirely up to the time I have stated. I think I am the only man that served any of those processes that he made any return of, and that, as I have said, was not until 1880.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who is Mr. Roberts?—A. Mr. W. B. Roberts is a brother of the original inventor of this torpedo. The inventor is dead. The two together were known as the Roberts Torpedo Company.

Q. Where does Mr. W. B. Roberts live?—A. He lives at Titusville, and he is the surviving partner of the firm.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Is his sole business running this patent-right, and making sale of torpedoes?—A. He is also a banker, and he has become very wealthy through the torpedo business.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When did the patent expire?—A. I think it expired in 1882, but possibly it was 1883.

Q. Do you know whether that company owe the Government anything for fees that they have not paid yet?—A. I think they do. Of course, though, I have no means of knowing. I do not know whether Mr. Hall has collected the money and has not returned it to the Government, or whether Mr. Roberts sold out. I don't know anything about that. I only know and state that it stopped somewhere between Mr. Roberts and the Treasury Department.

Q. It has not got to the Treasury?—A. No; it has not got there. One hundred and forty-three dollars and seventy cents has got there. That was in 1878.

Q. When did you give information to the Government of Mr. Hall's transactions in this torpedo business?—A. It will be two years ago next June or July.

Q. State what you did in respect to that.—A. I simply made the statement to Attorney-General Brewster that Mr. Hall's accounts to the Treasury Department were $200,000 short.

Q. When was that?—A. As I have said, it will be two years in either June or July.

Q. State what was done in reference to the matter.—A. Mr. Brewster was very busy that morning; he had just come from Philadelphia—I had been waiting for him five days—he had just come from Philadelphia, and he said that that was Cabinet meeting day, so that he did not have time to talk with me then, and he wanted to go back to Philadelphia that night, and he referred me to Mr. Brewster Cameron. I went to Mr. Cameron's office, and he was not in, consequently I did not see him.

Brewster Cameron followed me back within ten days to Pittsburgh and told Mr. Hall that a man named Brown had been on here and had reported that he was short. Mr. Hall then turned around and accused me of trying to blackmail him for $10,000.

Q. State what foundation, if any, there was for that charge.—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. Did you ever ask any money of him?—A. No, sir. I borrowed money from Mr. Hall, and Mr. Hall has paid me all the money that was due me with the exception that there was a question whether I was entitled to mileage in cases where I had traveled to serve writs and could not find the parties. I never received anything for that at all.

Q. Did you ever demand of him, or intimate to him that you wanted, $10,000, and that if he did not give it you would report his delinquencies?—A. I never did, sir, do anything of that kind; never demanded money or anything else. He alleges that I made that demand in a letter that I wrote to him.

Q. It seems that some one stated that you had asked Mr. Hall for $10,000 as "hush money," and that Hall said that if he owed the Government anything he would pay it; is that correct?—A. There was never any such talk between us at all. I never demanded any money of him, nor he never offered me any to keep quiet.

Q. State what further transpired with reference to the information you gave the Attorney-General or Mr. Brewster Cameron.—A. That was all. I gave no information, any more than that I made a statement that Mr. Hall was that much short. The Attorney-General referred me to his special agent, Mr. Brewster Cameron, but he was not at home, so I did not see him; and I never saw him from that day to this. The Pittsburg press took up the cudgels in Hall's behalf, and I saw that I could not battle against them and the Department of Justice, too, and I just ignored the thing.

Q. Did you ever ask anything of the Department of Justice or of any of the agents of the Department?—A. I simply asked them what they were paying. I asked them if the old law was still in force by which the informer would get a certain percentage.

Q. The moiety law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they say to you?—A. They told me it was not in operation.

Q. Did you offer to withhold or to disclose any information in consideration of the payment of any sum?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. When you were informed that the moiety law was no longer in force, were you still ready and willing to make a statement on the subject of the management of the marshal's office?—A. I certainly was, or I would not have made the statement broadcast against a Government officer that, in my estimation, he was $200,000 short in his accounts.

Q. Did you offer to any one connected with the Government to prove that shortage?—A. No, sir; for the reason that I could not get an audience with them. Mr. Brewster, as I have said, was very anxious to attend a Cabinet meeting that day, and after that he had to go back to Philadelphia.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. When you went to the Attorney-General's office, was it your purpose to communicate to him what knowledge you had upon this subject?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. State what you did say to him; state all that transpired; who inroduced you to the Attorney-General?—A. I took a letter from a gentleman who occupies a position in the Treasury Department; I forget now just what the position is, but he was the party to whom I thought it was proper to go to find out whether the Government was paying anything or not for information of this kind. He was unable to tell me, but he wrote a letter to the Attorney-General introducing me and stating that I claimed that Mr. Hall was $200,000 short. I sent that letter in to Mr. Brewster and he told his attendant to show me in. He simply asked me if my name was Brown. I told him it was. Said he, "You think Mr. Hall is this amount of money behind in his accounts?" I told him I thought he was. "Well," said he, "I have not time to attend to it now. You will have to go and see Brewster Cameron, who is my agent."

Q. Who was the gentleman who gave you that letter to the Attorney-General?—A. I cannot call him by name.

Q. Was he one of the accounting officers of the Treasury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What conversation had you had previously with that gentleman?—A. I simply asked him the question whether the Government was paying anything or not. He told me that this moiety law had been repealed, but said that if I would come in the next morning he would find out in the mean time whether anything could be done. I did go in the next morning and then he told me that nothing could be done under the law; that that law had been repealed, but that Attorney-General Brewster had the right to make any bargain with me that he saw fit with regard to the matter, and he sat down and wrote this letter of introduction to the Attorney-General, stating that I claimed that Marshal Hall was that much back in his accounts, and I presented that letter to the Attorney-General.

Q. How did this gentleman know about that; from what you told him?—A. From what I had told him.

Q. What was said between you and the Government officials as to Hall's emoluments?—A. They told me that according to his returns the office had not been self-sustaining; in other words, that it never had paid Mr. Hall the $6,000 a year that he was entitled to and anything over, and that they thought it strange that that should be so. And when I examined his emolument returns I found that statement to be true with the exception of one year, 1878.

Q. Was your opinion as to Marshal Hall's accounts confirmed by your examination of those returns?—A. Yes, sir; and my statement was made immediately the next day after examining the sheets, from the fact that my knowledge of the business and my examination of those sheets confirmed to my mind the idea that Mr. Hall was that far behind.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Bayne, your Representative?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he offer to introduce you to the Attorney-General?—A. He introduced me to Judge Lawrence, the Comptroller, but that was only for the purpose of my getting permission to examine those emolument returns.

Q. What was said about the matter to Judge Lawrence? Did you make any statement to him?—A. None, at all; I simply requested that I should be allowed to examine the returns.

Q. Did you inform Mr. Bayne in reference to this defalcation or shortage of Marshal Hall?—A. No, sir; not as to any particular amount. I told him that I was surprised at the condition of those emolument returns. Possibly I might have mentioned the amount, I would not say for certain, but I think not, because I had no reason for talking to him about it.

Q. Did you inform him as to the nature of the business that was being transacted by the office?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Bayne offer to assist you in the matter?—A. Nothing more than in getting at the emolument returns.

Q. He showed a willingness to assist you in getting at those returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he offer to introduce you to the Attorney-General?—No, sir, he did not.

Q. Do you know whether Marshal Hall had anything to do with bringing about a settlement between you and the Roberts Torpedo Company?—A. I do not think he did, sir, at all.

Q. Did Mr. Hall ever ask you to postpone your suit against the Roberts Company?—A. No, sir, he did not. He told me that I had better go to Crawford County and commence the suit under the contract before the six years had expired, which you will find by examination was nearly up. I think I had just one day to spare. He said that he did not think Mr. Roberts would be in Pittsburgh until after the six years was up. I waited until the very last day.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Hall has offered to pay any money to the Government recently in settlement of his accounts?—A. No, sir; I know nothing about that at all; I have not seen Mr. Hall in two years.

Q. Do you know what Mr. Hall's financial condition is?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you live in his vicinity?—A. I am living about 15 miles from where he lives.

Q. Do you know who his bondsmen are?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with Hall himself in reference to his accounts?—A. Yes, sir; I had a bet with Mr. Hall at one time. I offered to bet a suit of clothes against a plug hat that he couldn't find any two entries in his docket in the Roberts cases that were correct; and I requested him to turn to any two that he was a mind to. I took down the docket and turned to two just as it happened, went over to the clerk's office and got the writs and brought them in just to convince him; and in one case he was $100 short and in the other case something like that of $53. But I never got the hat.

Q. Did he show you any case in which the entries were correct?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. When was this conversation?—A. Three or four years ago; that was when I went in there as a deputy.

Q. How long after that did you remain as a deputy in his office?—A. Nearly two years.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. In the two cases to which you called his attention did he make any explanation?—A. No; he did not. He said there was a mistake somewhere; I thought so, too.

Q. Did you ever bring those matters to the attention of the district attorney?—A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with District-Attorney Stone about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or with his assistants?—A. No, sir. Well, I think I did, too. I think that Mr. Woods and I talked it over, because he made out my bill of particulars.

Q. What conversation did you have with Mr. Woods with regard to these accounts?—A. It has been so long ago that I cannot repeat it word for word, but it was mutually understood between the two that things were transacted in a very peculiar way. Mr. Woods didn't tell me that he knew that Mr. Hall was a defaulter, nor did I tell him; we simply talked the matter over. Mr. Perkins and I have done the same thing.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with Mr. Perkins with regard to bringing that suit against the torpedo company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was that?—A. Well, Mr. Perkins and I entered into an agreement at one time by which he was to receive 20 or 25 per cent. for collecting it. In the first place Mr. Perkins took me to Mr. Stone; he told me that he thought he would be a very good man to consult and that he could effect a settlement through Paterson. Mr. Stone saw Paterson and he communicated with Mr. Roberts, or Thomas, or some of those parties, and the supposition was that we could get a settlement in some of those cases; but after Paterson had corresponded with the Roberts Company he told me that it was no use; that they would not do anything; that they claimed they had paid me all that they owed me.

Q. Did you make any contract with Mr. Stone with regard to the case?—A. I did.

Q. What was the nature of it?—A. That he was to collect my claim at 20 per cent. or 25 per cent., and then after we went into Crawford County he withdrew and I employed some other attorneys. Then I made another contract with Mr. Perkins, offering him 20 or 25 per cent. if he could bring about a settlement. I think that contract was drawn up by Mr. Adams. I know I got a copy of the contract, but he never did anything.

By Mr. ADAMS:

Q. Will you produce the contract?—A. Yes, sir; I can produce a copy taken from a letter-press which they had carried with them. I would not say positively that Mr. Adams drew that contract, but my impression is that he did.

Q. What was the substance of it?—A. Well, for his assistance, such as he could render, in helping me to collect that bill, he was to receive 20 or 25 per cent.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Was Perkins at that time a Government officer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was he?—A. The same as he is now.

Q. This claim was for your fees as agent of the torpedo company?—A. Yes, sir; the old affair.

Q. And for which you claimed something like $22,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has any Government officer called upon you, since you made a statement to the Attorney-General, to furnish any information upon that matter?—A. No, sir; they have not.

Q. Has the district attorney?—A. No, sir; no person. The fighting has been done principally through the press, similar to the statement that is going the rounds now that Mr. Perkins got this cipher book by its being left as collateral security for my board. That has been published in all the papers.

Q. That is not true, you say?—A. Well, I rather think not. I brought a man on at my own expense to try to have that matter straightened out.

The CHAIRMAN. When Mr. Woods was here he left a book with me. Here it is. [Producing it.] I don't know whether you recognize it or not.—A. Yes, sir; I recognize it. I would like to tell you about the book. I was boarding and was going home with a little sachel, and I could not get the book into my sachel, and I left it with this gentleman and told him that I would like him to keep that book until I called for it; that I might be back in a day, and might not be back in three months. Shortly after this this gentleman moved to Allegheny City. Thinking, perhaps, that I did not know where he had gone, or wanted my book, he told me that he had given it to Sam Woods. He also told Mr. Perkins that Woods had the book. Sam told me two years ago that he had the book, and I asked him to bring it over, and he said he would. Mr. Perkins told me two years ago that Mr. Woods had the book and I had better get it. Well, I didn't place any stress on the book, because there is nothing in that that has any bearing upon this case; it is my own private diary. I am very much obliged to Mr. Perkins, though, for giving some of it to the press; it is about the way he does business. I don't want to get personal, but I am very sorry not to have met Mr. Perkins under other circumstances.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Why did you keep this book in cipher?—A. Simply for my own amusement. It is not so very hard.

Q. Does this book contain any entry in connection with the business of the torpedo company?—A. Not one, with the exception that in the back part of it I copied two or three letters. There are more pages in the book than there are days in the year, and after I got to December 31 I copied in cipher some of my letters as I received them at that time. I never received a letter in cipher in my life, and there is nothing here that I am aware of that I have any recollection of that is either from Mr. Hall or Mr. McDonnell, although some of their correspondence may be copied in here; there is nothing that I am not willing shall be laid before this committee, or Mr. Perkins may give it to the newspapers if he sees fit. He is something of a newspaper man.

Q. Did you receive any letters from Mr. Hall which are there in cipher?—A. Never. Well, I don't know; it has been so long I may have copied in something. Mr. Perkins can probably tell you better than I can; he has had this book for two years.

Q. Turn to page 379.—A. I find a signature here of "John McDonnell." I can explain that to you.

Q. Do you see Mr. Hall's name there?—A. Yes, sir; that is correct, I presume. I do not see anything in it that is out of the usual way, or that requires being kept in cipher.

Q. It simply shows that he had sent you some papers for service?—A. Yes, sir. You understand that part of my district was over 200 miles from Pittsburgh, and I would go out, and any new writs that came up he would send me by express and then write me to that effect. I recollect requesting Mr. McDonnell to tell me if there had been any papers or injunctions issued, and he did it.

Q. Who is Mr. McDonnell?—A. He is the deputy clerk, as I understand, in the circuit court.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. This letter from Hall appears to have been received in 1880?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you then a regular deputy, or were you also acting as the agent of the torpedo company?—A. I was then working for Mr. Hall. I think I was appointed for him in June, 1880.

Q. Then at that time he was sending the injunctions and other papers directly to you?—A. Yes, sir; there was no middle man between us at that time.

Q. Well, it seems that that book was for the purpose of entering the correspondence that you had with regard to the business you transacted?—A. This that you have pointed out is October 12, 1880; that is the date of that letter.

Q. Who was John Gleason?—A. Mr. Gleason was Mr. Hall's clerk.

Q. These letters are unimportant, except that they show that that book contained memoranda of those transactions?—A. There is nothing of that sort in the book, only, as I say, there are a few letters copied here that I regret very much I haven't got the originals of. These were copied after I got through with the days of the year. The rest is my own private diary and has nothing to do with Mr. Hall or the court.

Q. The letters you received from Hall were not in cipher?—A. No, sir; I can give you a sample of them.

Q. You simply transferred them into cipher?—A. Yes, sir; for my own amusement.

Q. Why did you desire to keep them in that way instead of the original?—A. That is a question that is very hard to answer. Probably I was foolish, but I had as much right to do it as anybody else. Of course I had no idea that that book would be brought before a body of men like this. I had no idea that Mr. Perkins would neglect his duty for two years. Here is a sample of my correspondence with Mr. Hall [handing some letters to the chairman]. I almost always destroyed them as fast as I received them. Now those would look very mysterious if they were put in the book in cipher, and perhaps they are.

Q. These are merely instructions in sending you papers?—A. Yes, sir; that is all. And all that I had from him were the same.

Q. You were at that time acting as one of his deputies?—A. Yes, sir. This McDonnell letter I don't think would come under the head of any colluding, as his friend Perkins expresses it, any conniving between me and Mr. McDonnell.

Q. You had no arrangement with Mr. Hall as to the costs which should be collected?—A. Most emphatically no, sir.

Q. You had arrangements as to how much you should be paid in the torpedo cases?—A. Yes, sir. But not with McDonnell nor with any of those parties. That was with Mr. Thomas. He is a man that could give you information about the contract between Mr. Hall and Mr. Roberts. He did most of the business; Mr. Roberts did very little.

Q. Who is Mr. Thomas and where does he reside?—A. He is the mayor of Titusville to-day. He married the widow of the deceased Roberts.

Q. He is a brother-in-law to the president of this torpedo company?—A. Yes, sir; he is the man that has always brought the suits, since 1876 to my knowledge, for the Roberts Torpedo Company. All the men that made those informations returned them to him.

Q. Then Mr. Thomas should know whether the costs were paid to Marshal Hall in all those cases?—A. Yes, sir; he knows all about it, because I know in several cases where persons would go to see Mr. Roberts, and he would tell them to go and see Mr. Thomas and see what settlement they could make with him.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. What is Hall's business now?—A. I don't know whether he is farming or not. He has a couple of farms there, I believe, but I don't know whether they are his or not.

Q. Are they in the vicinity of Pittsburgh?—A. They are at Little Washington.

Q. Do you know anything about his physical condition; whether he is a sick man or a well man?—A. I do not. I saw that piece in the papers some time ago, that he had to be watched, but I do not think there is anything in it.

Q. When did you see him last?—A. I have not seen him for two years.

Q. Was he an apparently well man then?—A. Oh, yes, sir. According to his own statements, this doesn't worry him any. He claims that the Government owes him $1,200. I presume that the $143 that he turned in in 1878 was an overpayment, and that perhaps interest and other things from that time to this will make up the $1,200. I know that $143 is all that he has ever turned over to the Department.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In what way do you estimate the defalcation to be about $200,000?—A. I knew about how many torpedo cases there were; I knew about how many bank cases there were, and I went on that basis. In saying that it was $200,000, I calculated to put it low enough. I calculated in my own mind that it would admit multiplying by two easy enough, and still be below the figure.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. That would be $400,000?—A. Yes, sir. I think his own books show that the earnings in the torpedo cases were something over $30,000; that is according to his docket entries.

Q. And that was a small portion of it, in your estimate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Give the committee the basis of your calculations, then, upon which you suppose that he would be short $400,000. I presume you took some basis upon which to arrive at that conclusion?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. State upon what you based your estimates.—A. Well, there was something over 3,000 bankruptcy cases, and I know it was usual to pay the marshal $25 down on the start. If he got $25 in each, every thousand cases would make $25,000; and if there were 4,000 cases it would be $100,000. Then if the torpedo business was another $100,000, and perhaps the other business of the court would amount to another $100,000. That was about the way I figured it. I never got down and figured it closely, but I made these estimates concluding that I was safe in making the statement and that I would not have to take back water.

Q. Have you examined the records at Pittsburgh?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Hall's emolument returns in Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have examined the records of the clerk's office?—A. Oh, no; not particularly; only in a few cases. I had nothing to do whatever with his records.

Q. I mean that in order to obtain this information you looked into the court records in Pittsburgh?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And into the marshals emolument returns here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were connected with his office, directly or indirectly, for a number of years as a deputy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From the knowledge you have had of the business done, and your examination of the records, you have reached the conclusion which you have stated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you seen anything since to change that opinion?—A. I have not. In fact for two years I have paid no attention whatever to the matter.

Q. And you say you have never demanded any money of Mr. Hall to keep quiet?—A. No, sir; I never have.

Q. Directly or indirectly?—A. Directly or indirectly; and I think that my action ought to satisfy the committee of that from the fact that I came to the Attorney-General and made a statement. I don't think that goes far toward showing me to be a blackmailer.

Q. You have never made any proposition to any officer of the Government authorized to look into these matters demanding consideration for your information?—A. No, sir; I have not. I think Mr. Perkins was the last man that I ever talked to about it, but that was back, I think, two years ago. Mr. Perkins, I know, telegraphed me to come and see him. That was a year ago last October. I was building a house and could not go, and I replied to him that if he wanted to see me he would have to come to see me, and I never heard from him from that time to this.

Q. When did you last see Hall?—A. I think it has been about two years.

Q. Have you been to Little Washington recently?—A. I have been there.

Q. Do you know anything about what amount of property he owns there?—A. No more than as it has been pointed out to me from the railroad.

Q. How much is there of it?—A. He has two farms there. He told me at one time how much there was in those farms—how much he paid an acre. I think he has got a farm, containing in the neighborhood of 150 acres, that cost him about $200 an acre, and then a smaller farm that cost him something over $100 an acre. I repeat that as he stated it to me, but that is all that I know about it. The farms may be mortgaged, for all I know.

Q. Has he any business property in the city?—A. Not that I know of. I know there were lots of rumors there that I don't know anything about.

Q. Did he say anything about having any interest in any bank?—A. No, sir. Well, now, hold on. I don't know but he did. I know he was at one time a stockholder in the Penn Bank, of Pittsburgh. To what extent I don't know.

Q. That is all I desire to ask, unless you want to make any further statement.—A. Well, no. I would like to know when I can get possession of that cipher book of mine. I think I have a perfect right to demand that. Mr. Perkins should rectify that statement about the book being held as collateral for my board; I don't know that he made it, but if he did it would be only fair for him to say that that book was not held as collateral for my board.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think that statement was made before the committee.

The WITNESS. No, I do not think it was.

The cipher book referred to in the foregoing testimony was returned to the witness by the chairman.

WASHINGTON, May 8, 1884.

A. A. ADAMS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. I am 36 years of age; I am an attorney at law; my residence is Clearfield, Pa.

Q. Have you been in the service of the United States as an assistant district attorney at any time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where, and how long?—A. I was appointed the 19th of December, 1872, and remained in the service until, I think, about the 26th of May, 1875.

Q. Where were you residing during the time you were in the service?—A. I was residing at that time in Pittsburgh.

Q. What was the nature of the duties you had to perform?—A. Well, my duties were varied, under the peculiar circumstances under which I went there. My legal preceptor was Mr. Swope. I had entered his office as a boy, studied law, been admitted to the bar, and then went with him to Pittsburgh. I very seldom assisted at the trial of cases, but I prepared the indictments, made the reports, kept the accounts, and attended to that part of the business of the office almost entirely.

Q. How many assistant attorneys were there during your time in the western district of Pennsylvania?—A. I was the first assistant that was appointed.

Q. Were you the only one then?—A. No, sir; Mr. Thomas Pender was appointed, I think, at the same time. He was appointed as assistant to the United States attorney. There was a distinction made in the commissions that were sent.

Q. What were Pender's duties?—A. His duties at that time were more those of a detective officer.

Q. Was he a lawyer?—A. He was not a lawyer.

Q. What did he do there?—A. I can scarcely answer that question. He was the janitor of the office; he was an errand boy; he was a detective; his duties were those of a general man around the office.

Q. What was his salary?—A. I think it was $1,200 or $1,250 a year.

Q. How long did he serve in that capacity?—A. He served in that capacity up to the time I left the office in 1875. I think his commission was dated in January or shortly after mine was.

Q. How long after you left was he still in the service?—A. I don't think he remained in the service after I left there. There was a general change made at that time.

Q. You say they made a distinction—that he was appointed an assistant to the district attorney—not an assistant attorney?—A. That is my recollection; I would not state positively, but that is my recollection of the wording of the letter.

Q. But you know that he was not an attorney?—A. No, sir, he was not an attorney; and my understanding at the time was that Mr. Swope came down and consulted with the Attorney-General with regard to the appointment of assistant United States attorneys for that district; up to that time there had never been any regular appointment, and I received the first appointment. That appointment they decided would be legal, but as to the other they made it an assistant to the attorney; I don't know what the circumstances were, but I think that is all matter of record in the Attorney General's office.

Q. Pender did not perform any services that an attorney would be called upon to do?—A. No, sir; not as an attorney.

Q. Who succeeded him?—A. Mr. Knox.

Q. Was he an attorney?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who succeeded him?—A. I think Mr. Cameron.

Q. Was not Mr. Woods in there?—A. Mr. Knox was succeeded by a gentleman whose name I cannot recall now. He was a lawyer, and I knew him, but I cannot recall his name; and then Mr. Woods succeeded him, and after Mr. Woods Mr. Cameron.

Q. Have you a knowledge of the business required to be performed in that district?—A. I had at the time I was there.

Q. State whether, in your opinion, an efficient district attorney, giving his whole time to the Government service, could perform the duties required to be performed in that district?—A. I do not think he could, if the business was of the same character that it was when I was there—the same character and amount as when I was there.

Q. You were there during the time of the bankruptcy proceedings?—A. I was there from 1872—I was there really from 1870, but I got my commission in 1872, and I was there until 1875.

Q. The business was heavier in 1875 than it is now, was it not?—A. At the present time I have no knowledge of what the business is.

Q. Do you know how many attorneys would be required to efficiently perform the business in that district now?—A. I think there ought to be an assistant and either a second assistant or a clerk there.

Q. You think a clerk would answer as good a purpose as a second assistant?—A. It amounts to the same thing.

Q. Do you know anything about the accounts of the marshal in that district?—A. No, I have no personal knowledge of them.

Q. Have you had any conversation with Mr. Hall as to his financial ability?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he ever give you any information with regard to his property that he owned?—A. No, sir; I don't think that he ever did; I have had conversations with him when he spoke of his farms and stock and matters of that kind, but I do not think anything definite was said as to what he had.

Q. Did he tell you how much he paid for those farms?—A. I think that he did tell me about the first farm—I would not be certain; I have a recollection of his talking about the cost of it, but I suppose that would be a matter of record and could be easily shown; I think he said $60,000 was the cost of the first farm; he bought the Chartiers farm, as they called it then.

Q. Did he say anything about the other property?—A. No, sir; not at that time.

Q. At any other time did he say anything about it?—A. Never directly to me.

Q. Do you know anything about the suit that Mr. Brown desired to bring against the Roberts Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state what you know about it.—A. I think it was about May, 1880; I was in Pittsburgh; Mr. Perkins and Mr. Brown and myself were boarding at a private boarding-house on Eighth street, and Mr. Brown came to me and told me that he had a claim against the Roberts Torpedo Company and against Marshal Hall; he told me that Marshal Hall was a partner with them in the transaction of this business; that they had made a contract under which, if I recollect—and I think I can recollect it pretty clearly, because it rather astonished me—he was to receive as deputy marshal $2 on each case brought by the Roberts Torpedo Company for infringement of their patent rights, and that Hall and the company were to divide the balance. That was his claim; he said they owed him from $17,000 to $20,000. Well, he talked to me about it, and he came in with his figures (I was rooming in the same house, next room), and we sat down and figured and counted it up, and he went on to show up the profits and things of that kind until I got considerably interested in it. He wanted to make a contract to bring suit for certain profits. I was at that time acting as an assistant in the secret service division of the Treasury Department, and I was uncertain as to whether I had the right to make a contract of that kind, but I drew up a contract, I think in the name of Mr. Perkins or Mr. Stone—Mr. Stone got interested—at any rate, I drew a contract between the parties, which was signed, by which suit was to be brought in Crawford County against the Roberts Torpedo Company to enforce Mr. Brown's contract with them, a copy of which he delivered to me, but I have either mislaid it or was unable to find it to bring it here. The suit, I believe, was brought up there, and afterwards another contract was made. That was about the end of my connection with that case. I left there in the fall. During this time he delivered to me certain papers that I suppose under the subpoena that was sent to me it is my duty to produce, though I don't know whether they have any bearing on the case. They are the original contracts between the Roberts Torpedo Company and their glycerine men. It was simply in connection with conversations with regard to profits and matters of that kind that he delivered the papers; among them, several others, showing what the profits were. This is the only one I could find. [producing it].

Q. Do these papers relate to the Government fees?—A. Yes, sir; this one with the glycerine men relates to Government fees.

Q. Then you say Mr. Brown gave you a number of papers to show the amount of fees that should have been received in those cases?—A. Yes, sir. And during our talk and negotiation he told me that he had in one month served writs in which the fees would aggregate $14,000. I think that is about the figure. I believe I made a written statement of the whole matter, but I have not seen it since.

Q. Were you authorized to bring a suit for those fees?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was done with it?—A. I believe the suit was brought by Mr. Stone, or probably by Jenks and Wilson.

Q. What became of the suit?—A. I have no knowledge of that.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. You did not bring any suit, did you?—A. No, sir; when I left there I abandoned the case.

Q. Do you know anything about Hall's financial condition?—A. Well, no; of my own personal knowledge, I do not.

Q. Do you know who are on his bond?—A. I do not.

Q. What was his financial condition when he was appointed marshal of the western district of Pennsylvania?—A. I do not think that at that time he had any property; I know he had no real estate, and I don't think he had any personal property that would have covered the exemption in our State of $300. I know he was poor, and was considered poor; I know that, because there were peculiar circumstances connected with his appointment which particularly called my attention to it at the time.

Q. What were those circumstances?—A. Marshal Murdoch wanted to go out, and Mr. Hall was his deputy, and Mr. Swope was the district attorney; and he and Judge Kennan took a special train over the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, came down here to Washington, went back the next day, and there was a change in the office.

Q. What change took place?—A. Mr. Murdoch was turned out, went back to Little Washington, and Mr. Hall became marshal and assumed the duties of the office.

Q. What was peculiar about that?—A. I suppose the peculiarity of it was that somebody else wanted to get in at the same time that Mr. Ruttan, of Beaver, was a candidate for marshal.

Q. They stole a march on him?—A. Yes, sir; stole a march on him. That is nothing to their discredit.

Q. Was there any reason other than that why he should have been appointed marshal?—A. I don't know what the reasons were why he should have been appointed. He was appointed. As a deputy he did credit to the office, I always thought—always performed his duties nicely.

Q. Was he, so far as you could see, an efficient business man in the office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he pay personal attention to the business?—A. I think for the last three or four years that he did not. I think he rather delegated it, and let the deputies do more of the business than he did himself. That was my experience with him for the last three years that he served.

Q. What was his financial condition at the close of his official term?—A. I only know from general repute. He is reputed to be worth from $200,000 to $300,000.

Q. Have you not lived in that community?—A. Yes, sir; I did live there until 1875, and then I came to Clearfield, my old home. I was in Pittsburgh almost constantly until two years ago.

Q. Do you attend the courts there?—A. Yes, sir; occasionally.

Q. You have means of knowing the amount of business done there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever act as a deputy for Hall in the service of writs or processes?—A. I never acted as such but once to my recollection. I went to Paola, in Kansas, and Falls City, Nebr., to serve some subpoenas.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, May 10, 1884.

A. J. BROWN recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State whether you have examined the report made by Mr. Ralph Ballin, examiner of the Department of Justice, in relation to Marshal Hall's affairs.—Answer. I have, sir; I have looked it over carefully.

Q. State whether that report disclosed all of the matters relating to Marshal Hall's accounts.—A. I think not; I think it claims to cover only those civil cases in which Mr. Ballin testified to discrepancies amounting to $153,000.

Q. In the investigation which you made into the accounts of Marshal Hall, did you discover other cases which do appear in the report of Mr. Ballin?—A. No; I did not, because I confined my investigation particularly to the Roberts business; I know nothing about the bankrupt business.

Q. Does Mr. Ballin's report show all about those torpedo cases?—A. I do not think it does, although it may. The matters are not itemized at all.

Q. Please explain what that report does show in reference to the Roberts cases, and what your investigation shows so far as regards the proper fees to be returned in those cases.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. I understood the witness to say yesterday that there were no entries upon the marshal's docket in reference to the Roberts transactions before 1880.

The WITNESS. Oh, no; I did not say that. The marshal kept a regular docket on which there was entered something over 1,800 cases, in which he carried out his costs, which amounted to something like $30,-

000. Then he was required by law to return to the Department the names of the deputies who had served those writs, with how much each had been paid; but I said up to 1880 none of the parties who handled those writs appeared in his emolument returns.

Q. Did the cases themselves appear in the returns in any way?—

A. No; it was not necessary that they should.

By the CHAIRMAN.

Q. The fees did not appear and they ought to have appeared?—

A. The fees ought to have appeared there and they did not. For instance, if I, as a deputy, earned $1,000 in any particular year the marshal was required to state that in his emolument return, and also to state how much he had paid me for doing the work and to return my voucher.

Q. And the fees earned were over $6,000 a year he was required to cover into the Treasury.—A. Yes, sir; by law the marshal can only pay to any one deputy 75 per cent. of the earnings; he is limited to that; he has a right to say that much or any less figure that he sees fit, or that they can agree upon, but if he pays a man 50 per cent. then he must account to the Government for the other 50.

Q. And you say that up to 1880 the marshal made no return at all to the Government in those Roberts cases?—A. He did not.

Q. So that whatever fees he got in those cases are not disclosed in his emolument returns?—A. No, sir; only as he has put them under the head of his own personal earnings, and it would be false if he did that.

Q. Then, if all the earnings in the Roberts cases were not included in the marshal's emolument return as shown by Mr. Ballin's report, what would be the excess of fees, in addition to what Mr. Ballin found, that the marshal should have returned?—A. That is a very hard question to answer, owing to the way they do their business. Of course, the marshal should return the gross earnings, and then should make a statement of how he had disposed of the money and how much he had paid his deputies. If the gross earnings in the Roberts torpedo business amounted to $30,000, it should have been returned, with a statement of who it was that earned those fees.

Q. What would have been the earnings in the Roberts cases, according to your judgment, based upon your knowledge of those cases and your investigation?—A. I cannot say in dollars and cents, but Mr. Hall's own books show about $30,000. I have got data of all the cases, the numbers of the terms, and the amounts that he has carried out, and, as I stated the other day, there is not one case of those that is correct.

Q. You say you have examined his emolument returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how much do they show that he earned in these cases?—A. They show that he earned $70,000 altogether while he was in office; that embraces everything.

Q. But do they show that he earned anything in the Roberts torpedo cases?—A. No, sir; not up to 1880.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. What did he do with those fees; pocket all the money and make no return?—A. I don't know. That is something that we are trying to find out. The Department of Justice has seen fit to call me a black-mailer, a thief, and a perjurer, because I have been inquisitive enough to want to find out.

Q. Would you not have a cause of action against the Department for making a statement of that kind?—A. I don't know; I am very much gratified that they have treated me so kindly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. People in my part of the country are not gratified at having such charges made against them.

The WITNESS. I defy any man living to say that I ever stole a dollar.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. But you say that the Department of Justice has said it.—A. They have testified to that before this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It was stated by Mr. Ballin that he had been informed at Pittsburgh that you had demanded $10,000 from Mr. Hall as hush money, but you have stated here that that was not true?—A. It is not true. Mr. Hall, I believe, states that, but the statement is false, as is the nineteen sworn statements in the Treasury Department, which Mr. Ballin says are false.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Where are the books that you examined?—A. In the marshal's office, and in the office of the clerk of the circuit court in Pittsburgh; the emolument returns are in the First Auditor's Office, here in Washington.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Then all of this which you have testified to here is matter of record, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the record is the best evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ballin has already examined the records and reported the result.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Having examined Mr. Ballin's report, how much do you find that the records fail to show of evidence in the Roberts cases, which according to your investigations should appear?—A. I cannot tell you, because he embraces everything, and without an itemized statement no man can tell. It may take that all in and it may take none of it.

Q. But I understood you to say that the court record only shows the issuing of the subpoenas and the injunctions, and that in nearly all of those cases proceedings were stopped at that point.—A. Oh, I understand you now. I presume there would be $25,000 or $30,000, taking that class of writs that have never been entered.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Would not those writs be returned to the court?—A. No, sir. They claim that the master's notices are still in the hands of the master. The master was Mr. Gamble, and he was also the clerk of the court. Subpoenas for witnesses would also remain in his hands.

Q. After you had served the subpoena, what would you do with it?—A. I would return it to Mr. Roberts when I was working for him, and after I began to work as a deputy for Marshal Hall I returned the subpoenas to him.

Q. Do I understand you to say that those writs have never been returned?—A. Yes, sir; a certain class of them; the subpoenas for witnesses in the Roberts cases and motions for preliminary injunctions and master's notices. Mr. Gamble claims that they are in the hands of the master, and he is the master. But I think I can explain to this committee so that they will understand why it was impossible for Mr. Hall to embrace those in his emolument returns. Those papers would be issued and he would turn them over to the Roberts company. His arrangement or contract with them was that they should do the serving of their own papers and pay him 50 per cent. of the cost instead of the whole cost. That was the transaction between the two. Then Mr. Roberts would hire men to serve the papers. Many of the papers were served for $1 a writ, many of them for $2 a writ, and some of the men worked by the month. There you have the contract between Mr. Hall and Mr. Roberts, and the contract between Mr. Roberts and his man. Now, who is deputy? Can Marshal Hall swear that he has paid 50 per cent. to Tom Jones when Tom Jones got only 10 per cent.

Q. I believe you have testified that there was a large number of those suits?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were for infringements of patents?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The practice was to sue out a preliminary injunction in the court at Pittsburgh?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have it referred to a master for subpœnas?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the papers were sent out into the oil regions and were served, and there was no record or return of costs made?—A. There never was in the marshal's office. I know that in cases that I looked after, when I did not find those subpœnas and master's notices, I asked the question where they were and was answered that they were still in the hands of the marshal.

Q. How long was that after the proceedings were instituted?—A. In some cases four or five years.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. From whom did you get that information?—A. From the clerk of the court.

Q. Who was also the master?—A. Yes, sir. But at the time I asked the question he was serving in the capacity of clerk.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you any information as to the amount of money loaned by Hall's son to other deputies under Hall for any given time?—A. No, sir. In fact I was not acquainted with Mr. Hall's son. He went out before I came in. I think he left the office in 1878.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Were you ever appointed a deputy marshal, at all?—A. I was. I was appointed in 1878, but was never sworn in.

Q. So that you never served in the capacity of a deputy marshal with authority to serve?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you a list of the earnings of the deputies during the time you were in the service?—A. I have.

Q. Can you give us that?—A. I can give you a statement.

Q. A statement of what appears in the marshal's emolument return?—A. Yes, sir. Aside from that I do not know anything about it.

Q. What period of time do those returns cover?—A. Nine years and a half.

Q. Were they embraced in Mr. Ballin's examination?—A. I do not know whether they were or not. [Reading]: A. Murdock received $500; J. Ad. Hall, the marshal's son, received $12,850; T. J. Cochran, $75; John T. Sweeney, $985; John Patterson, $50; John Grayson, the marshal's clerk, $1,705; W. T. Lindsay, another clerk, $600; A. J. Brown, myself, $854.14; Samuel Woods, a gentleman who testified here the other day, $89.90; R. K. Campbell, who was a deputy for six or seven years, $112; Mr. R. Rouse, $89.85. That is all that the marshal returned as having been paid out by him to his deputies. Here is what Mr. Hall says was earned by himself during those nine and a half years, according to his sworn statement—$35,591.37. He says that his deputies earned during the same time, $34,641.43. These figures are taken from his emolument returns. These two amounts together are just what he returned to the Government as his earnings. His net earnings each year always came a little below the $6,000, except one year, 1878, when there was an excess of $143.70. That is the only year he ever returned anything, and the only amount of money he ever returned, according to his statements.

Q. Can you tell how much he should have returned so far as your knowledge goes?—A. No; because I did not go over everything. I only went over the Roberts cases, and they amounted to about $30,000. I could prepare a statement giving you each number, and just exactly what the marshal's docket shows in the Roberts cases.

Q.. That, however, would not show all that he received, would it?—A. I think not, because it would not cover all the writs that were issued. The idea of anybody stating here that Mr. Hall was not a business man! He was appointed receiver of a bank that had suspended, and he performed the duties, I believe, very creditably. He has held different positions of trust, and has always been considered a shrewd business man, and these ridiculous statements regarding him have always come from somebody connected with parties in the office. I have never seen any such statements from parties outside. This torpedo business has been public talk through the oil country for the last ten years, a matter of gossip on the street corners among business men. I know they always employed in the marshal's office the best clerks they could get, and I know that Mr. Hall was always present, while I was in the service, when these emolument returns were made out. It was stated here that they were made out by Mr. Hall's son, but that son had no connection with the office after 1878.

Q. It is your opinion, then, that if there was any bad management Mr. Hall was personally cognizant of it?—A. Yes, sir; it could not have been any other way, because he was a sworn officer of the Government and there was no reason why he should not have known exactly how the business stood, and to my knowledge he was a good business man; a competent man, and a man of good business standing, and I am only surprised that in that year, 1878, he did not figure down that $143 so as to keep that too [laughter]. I do not wish to black-mail Mr. Hall, or to injure him at all, though of course I do not feel friendly to him for giving out to the world that I was a thief, a black-mailer.

WASHINGTON, May 16, 1884.

WILLIAM A. STONE sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your residence and occupation.—Answer. I am thirty-eight years of age; I reside in Allegheny City, Pa.; I am a lawyer by profession.

Q. Do you hold any office under the Government?—A. Yes, sir; I am United States attorney for the western district of Pennsylvania.

Q. How long have you held that office?—A. I was first appointed in July, 1880, when the Senate was not in session. Afterwards I was re-appointed and confirmed in January, 1881.

Q. Do you still hold that office?—A. Yes, sir; I still hold that office.

Q. Have you read the evidence given before this committee in relation to the question of the necessity for a third assistant district attorney in the western district of Pennsylvania?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything that you desire to state in regard to the business of your office and the force necessary to transact it efficiently?—

A. Yes, sir; I desire to make some statements on that subject. I see by the testimony of Simon B. Benson, before this committee, that he speaks of a conversation which he had with John Fox, our court crier, in which, he says, Mr. Fox informed him that he did not know my assistant, Mr. David Cameron. I have here the affidavit of John Fox. He is a very old man and could not well come to testify before the committee, but I would like to read his affidavit.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not exactly come within our rule, but you can state the substance of it.

The WITNESS. Well, the substance of it is that when interrogated as to his acquaintance with Mr. Cameron he did not understand whom Mr. Benson meant, that Benson did not explain what Cameron he meant, and that Mr. Fox was not thinking of David Cameron and did not answer with reference to him. Mr. Fox says further that he does know David Cameron, the assistant United States attorney, and that he, Cameron, has been present at every session of the court in Pittsburgh, since his appointment, and is regarded as an attentive and efficient officer by the court officials in Pittsburgh.

Then, as to the manner of the appointment of Mr. Cameron, the second assistant attorney in my office, Mr. Benson stated here that I got the office created by representing that there was necessity for such an officer in my district. In reference to that I wish to say that I did not get the office created. The office of second assistant United States attorney in that district has been in existence fourteen years. The salary of the office was originally $1,200, under Mr. Swope. Under my immediate predecessor the salary was $1,000, and the office was filled by Joseph F. Cook. When I was appointed district attorney Mr. Cook resigned. Judge Devens was then Attorney-General, and for some time the matter was held under consideration by him as to the salaries. Finally the Attorney-General increased the salary of my first assistant, and reduced the salary of my second assistant to $500. I was unable to secure a man to fill the office at that salary, and I made application to Mr. MacVeagh, after he went into General Garfield's cabinet, for an increase of the salary of the office; and I desire to read to the committee my letter to Mr. MacVeagh, which tells the whole story.

(The witness read the letter as follows:)

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY, WESTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Pittsburgh, March 21, 1881.

SIR: Referring to a letter from your predecessor to me, dated August 27, 1880, in which he says, in conclusion, "The sum of $500 per annum will be devoted to the service of a second assistant, to be appointed hereafter," I have the honor to state that the man I want is one who possesses detective ability and capable of judging of the merits of a case, so that when reports reach this office of violations of the law I can send him out to investigate the facts, make informations, and arrests if the offense be of a character to warrant it. He must necessarily go at his own expense, and as my district is large, the appropriation is not sufficient to meet the demands upon it, neither can I get a man competent for the position at the amount allowed, $500. When not employed in the investigation of offenses I can use him to good advantage as a clerk and copyist in this office. I deem it essential to the proper administration of justice in my district to obtain such a man. The sum of $1,250 at least will be required to employ a competent assistant, which will involve an extra allowance of $750 over and above that awarded by Judge Devens. Therefore, referring more particularly to my interview with you in Washington on the 17th instant, I have the honor to apply for the appointment of an assistant at a salary of $1,250 per annum.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM A. STONE,
United States Attorney.

Hon. WAYNE MACVEIGH,
Attorney-General.

The previous conversation with Mr. MacVeagh referred to in this letter was simply this: I called upon him and he told me to go home and write what I wanted and he would take the matter into consideration. I wrote this letter which I have read, and the result was that I was given permission to name an assistant, at $1,250, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Cook. The gentleman whom I recommended first for appointment, Mr. James A. MacLaughlin, of Pittsburgh, was not a member of the bar. My idea as to the kind of man I wanted was well expressed in this letter to Mr. MacVeagh. I wanted a man that I could send to different parts of my district, a man who had some knowledge of the rules of evidence and could examine witnesses before the grand jury. Mr. MacLaughlin, however, received a better offer from his employer, and did not accept the position, and I then recommended the appointment of Mr. Samuel Woods, of Erie. Mr. Woods was an entire stranger to me at the time. He was recommended by Mr. Perkins, who testified here the other day. Mr. Perkins was so warm in his recommendation, and so strong in his indorsement of Woods that I believed that we were getting a very efficient man. I said to Mr. Perkins that I would try Mr. Woods for a year, and that if he was satisfactory he would probably remain in the office, but that I was making the appointment entirely on his (Perkins's) recommendation, Mr. Woods being an entire stranger to me. It was represented to me that he was a shorthand writer and was familiar with the rules of evidence, so that he could examine witnesses before the grand jury, could go before a United States commissioner, and in general that he possessed all the legal knowledge that was requisite to fill the position. I recommended his appointment, and Attorney-General MacVeagh appointed him. For a time Mr. Woods did very well, but he had to pay his own expenses out of his salary of $1,250 a year; I was unable to get him passes over the roads, and he soon grew tired of going before United States commissioners, and he was not efficient as an examiner of witnesses before the grand jury. I found that he was unacquainted with the rules of evidence, and that it was not safe to send him before the grand jury with a bill. I spoke to Mr. Perkins upon the subject, as the year drew to a close, and said to him that Mr. Woods had not performed the duties that he, Perkins, had said he would; that he was a good man, and had tried to do as well as he could, but that he had not the qualifications which Mr. Perkins assured me he possessed. I don't remember saying anything more to Perkins on the subject; I think that was the extent of my conversation with him; that I complained about the inefficiency of Woods. Mr. Woods himself saw the position and the difficulty in which he was placed; saw that he did not suit the office, and that the office did not suit him, and he so stated to me, and on the 31st day of March he resigned. I submit here his letter of resignation, addressed to the Attorney-General.

PITTSBURGH, March 31, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to respectfully tender my resignation as an assistant United States attorney for the western district of Pennsylvania, to take effect from this date; and with my resignation, I beg the privilege of expressing my regard and esteem for my superiors in office, United States Attorney Stone and Assistant United States Attorney Wilson, with whom my official relations have been uninterruptedly pleasant.

Very respectfully yours,

SAMUEL WOODS.

Assistant United States Attorney.

Hon. B. H. BREWSTER,
Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.

I submit that letter in reply to some suggestion that was made here that Mr. Woods was forced to resign. There was nothing of that kind. It was his own voluntary act, and after his resignation I recommended the appointment of Mr. David Cameron. Mr. Cameron is a man with whom I have been personally and intimately acquainted for a great many years, and his appointment was recommended by Judge Wilson, Judge Williams, of the fourth judicial district, and the Hon. Hugh Young. I believed him to be a proper man for the office, and thought he would make a good, efficient officer. I thought also that his location, his residence being in the northern portion of my district, would be an advantage rather than a disadvantage in transacting the business of my district. I never was written to or spoken to by Senator Mitchell in relation to Mr. Cameron's appointment. They are brothers-in-law, but Mr. Mitchell never requested Mr. Cameron's appointment, directly or indirectly. I recommended his appointment mainly from my own personal acquaintance with him and regard for him.

As to Mr. Cameron's services and the necessity for a second assistant in my district, I have this to say: My district is a very large one, and I beg leave to submit for the consideration of the committee a map of the district, showing its extent as compared with the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that your district embraces all the States outside of the eastern district.—A. Yes, sir. Here is my district [indicating on the map].

The CHAIRMAN. It embraces about three-fourths of the State?

The WITNESS: Three-fourths of the State in territory and over one-half in population. My district is larger as to population than any other district in the United States except one, the southern district of Ohio, and one other which is hardly larger than mine if properly understood, the northern district of New York. The southern district of New York includes the navigable waters about the city of New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The eastern district includes only Long Island?

The WITNESS. It includes Brooklyn and the waters about the two cities. Litigation arising upon those waters comes within that district, and a great many while they live in other districts probably have their business in that district. The southern district of Ohio is largely an agricultural region. My district, on the other hand, contains mining regions, and the oil territory of the State is included in it. The anthracite and the bituminous coal regions of Pennsylvania are in my district—not all the anthracite, but a portion of it—for instance, Luzerne and Lackawanna Counties. As I have said, with the two exceptions I have mentioned, my district is larger in population than any other in the United States. It is larger than Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, Michigan, Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, or North Carolina; and all these districts, which are less than mine in population, have each more than one district attorney, and some of them have two or three assistant attorneys. I claim that, in view of the magnitude of my district, its population, and the business transacted in the courts there, I have fewer assistants comparatively than any other district in the United States. Compare the business transacted in my district with that transacted in any other district in the country. Take, for instance, the southern district of New York, where the United States attorney has a specific salary of $6,000 a year, and has seven assistants with salaries aggregating $15,000. In that district, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, it appears by the report of the Attorney-General that they tried only two more criminal cases than I tried in my district; that is, they tried 77 and I 75.

Now, as to the amount realized from judgments obtained during the year——

Mr. FYAN. What is the object of this testimony? Do you offer it to show the necessity for a third assistant?

The WITNESS. Yes. The amount realized from judgments obtained during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, in the western district of Pennsylvania, was $49,474.27, being more than twice as much as was realized from any other district in the United States with the exception of one, the district of New Jersey. In that district that year a man named Lewis died and bequeathed to the Government about $1,000,000, which was finally collected and paid into the United States Treasury, And the last fiscal year was not an isolated or exceptional year in respect to the amount of business in my district. My report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, will show the collection of a large amount of money and the payment of the same into the United States Treasury, or judgments obtained during the year. I have not only litigation of a criminal character in the United States courts, but also litigation in several of the county courts in my district wherein the Government is a party. In the case of the distribution of the proceeds arising from the real estate of Moss, in Westmoreland, I appeared for the Government and argued questions in the case, and the Government was awarded $8,300; and there are other matters which will appear in my report for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1884, which will show, not so much as for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, but comparatively a large amount of money collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States.

In addition to this, the navigable waters about Pittsburgh furnish a considerable amount of litigation in which the Government is interested. I have now pending a bill in equity against the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company for maintenance of a nuisance in the Ohio River in the nature of a pier, and I also have pending in the circuit court of the United States an action of ejectment in behalf of the Government for 450 acres of land in Forest County, which is supposed to be valuable land. There has been a verdict for the Government and motions and reasons for a new trial; those motions and reasons have been overruled and the other side claim that they will take the case to the Supreme Court. I never have had a special assistant assigned to try cases or transact any business. It has all been done by myself and my assistant.

Mr. Cameron's services are not alone before the grand jury. He is not only in attendance at every United States court which is held in the district, but he frequently goes before United States commissioners in various parts of the district that are adjacent to his place of residence, and, by way of illustration on that point, I wish to submit here a telegram which will give you an idea of the kind of business which Mr.

Cameron is called upon occasionally to do. Here is a dispatch, dated May 1, 1884, sent to me by the deputy marshal at Wilkes Barre. He says: "Have arrested Martin Schlager for violation revenue laws and perjury. Hearing Saturday, May 3, 2 o'clock p. m.; defendant represented by able counsel. Will you attend? Answer."

That was just at the beginning of our United States court, and it was impossible for me to attend personally, but I telegraphed Mr. Cameron, who, you will see by the map, lives there near that part of the district, and he went there and represented the Government at that hearing. He has also been before other commissioners in the section of the district where he resides. Mr. Cameron draws indictments, conducts the examination of witnesses before the grand jury, and also, when there is a case of importance which I cannot attend to myself, he frequently attends examinations before United States commissioners. In addition to that, Mr. Cameron is not all the time at his home when the court has adjourned. He is occasionally in Pittsburgh when the court is not in session, and he generally remains some days after the adjournment of the court until the business is gotten through with. Something has been said about the Crowell case. That was a very important case. There were several attorneys employed by the defendants and they expected a trial before the United States commissioner, and, in my absence from Pittsburgh, Mr. Wilson went there to represent the Government. He regarded the importance of the case as sufficient to require his attendance.

Something was said also about my employment by A. J. Brown. Mr. Perkins, I believe, testified that I had been employed by Brown to collect a claim against the Robertses, and then intimated that later I became employed by the Robertses. In reference to that I wish to say that Mr. Brown did speak to me about a claim which he had against the Robertses and did employ me to collect it. I undertook the collection of it. I, however, was unable to get any service upon the defendants in Allegheny County, and the statute of limitations having nearly expired upon Mr. Brown's contract (which was with Colonel Roberts), I told Mr. Brown that he must go up into Crawford where the defendant resided and bring his suit where he could get service. He did so and employed counsel up there. I never saw Mr. Brown nor his contract after that. He never paid me a cent of money in any way, shape, or form. After it was said that Mr. Brown had settled his case with the Robertses, in March, 1882, Mr. Hugh Young, who has been an intimate friend of mine for years, became the guardian of the minor children of Colonel Roberts, deceased, and those children became interested in litigation in the United States courts and in other courts. Mr. Young desired counsel to look after his interests and he employed me, and I was retained for that purpose. That was months after Mr. Brown had settled his case with the Robertses; and I was so concerned for Mr. Hugh Young something over a year, until he finally sold and transferred the interest of the minors over to Dr. Roberts, and with that transfer employment ceased. I never represented the Roberts Torpedo Company in the world, except as I represented the interest of these children through Mr. Hugh Young, who was indirectly interested in the litigation.

Something has been said about knowledge coming indirectly to me of charges against Marshal Hall. Mr. Perkins had something to say upon that subject.

By Mr. FYAN :

Q. Before you leave that torpedo company matter please state whether you know anything about the practice that was going on there by your assistant in relation to that patent.

The WITNESS. By my assistant?

Mr. FYAN. I think it was your assistant. Was it your assistant who went out and served warrants upon parties who were violating this patent?

The WITNESS. No; that was the deputy marshal.

Q. Did you know anything about that?—A. I did not.

Q. Was that practice pursued in that district?—A. I do not know; that business was principally before my appointment, as I understood from the evidence.

Q. My recollection is that the statement was made here that there was an agreement between the deputy marshal and this man Roberts, by which warrants were to be placed in the hands of Roberts, and Roberts was to employ a man to serve them, and that man made a compromise with the parties and the papers were never returned, neither the warrants nor the subpoenas. Do you know anything about that?—A. I do not know anything about that.

The CHAIRMAN. Those were processes in civil suits and injunctions in the same cases, where the parties were about to be enjoined for infringing upon the Roberts patent. They were suits between individuals, and the United States was interested in them only to the extent of seeing that the fees and costs were accounted for.

Mr. FYAN. The witness has stated that the district attorney had something to do with the returns that were made.

The CHAIRMAN. If the attorney had to approve the marshal's accounts they would come under his supervision. [To the witness.] Did you have to do that?—A. Not as to the marshal's emolument returns; those I never saw.

Q. What accounts did you see?—A. His quarterly accounts.

Q. Do you approve those?—A. I approve those; that is, I am present when they are approved in court in the presence of the judge and attorney.

Q. Did you examine those?—A. Yes, sir; the quarterly accounts.

Q. For what year?—A. They were for the quarters ending after my appointment, which was in 1880. I think Marshal Hall resigned in March, 1882, and they were therefore for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for that portion of the year between July 1, 1881, and April 1, 1882.

Q. In what do those quarterly returns consist?—A. They consist only of a statement of the number of prisoners of the United States in different jails, the cost of their maintenance, the number of jurors, and the necessary accounts which come within the personal knowledge of the court. The emolument returns are personal to the marshal entirely, accounting for the fees earned and received by him; those we never saw; I never saw one of the marshal's emolument returns.

Q. By your use of the word "personal," you do not mean to say that that is the personal business of the marshal?—A. I mean to say that the marshal and the district attorney and all the officers make what is called an emolument return to the Government, in which they account for the fees earned and received by them in their official capacity. I think the emolument return is pretty much a personal return between the Government and the officer.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Does that include the civil business?—A. Yes, sir; it includes all the earnings of the office.

Q. Whether civil or criminal?—A. Whether civil or criminal.

Q. Was this Brown who testified here a deputy marshal while you were United States attorney?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He spoke of having made a great number of arrests in a place called Bradford?—A. Yes. Those matters were wholly in the circuit court of the United States; civil cases between individuals.

Q. You had no knowledge of them?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. They were never brought to your attention?—A. No, sir; they could not be, because—

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. (Interposing.) Were there no cases brought to your attention of violation of the internal-revenue laws, in the vicinity of Bradford, by selling liquor without license?—A. Oh, yes; a great many.

Q. Those were prosecuted, were they?—A. I prosecuted some of them, and some of them were compromised. Upon that point let me say that the criminal prosecutions brought in the United States courts for violations of the internal-revenue laws are frequently compromised by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue under the provisions of section 3229 of the Revised Statutes, which authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to compromise cases where the defendant is willing to pay the Government tax, and what is called the assessable penalty, and the costs in the case. Let me say further that these cases are frequently reported to the district attorney. In fact, all violations of the internal-revenue laws are reported to the district attorneys by the collectors. I have brought along a sample letter, such as I frequently receive, reporting violations of the law. In every one of these cases, however, the collector recommends no prosecution.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. When they compromise those cases with the collector of internal revenue, where does he make his return?—A. He makes his return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in Washington.

Q. When those matters are called to your attention, then, there are no writs issued?—A. No; there are no writs issued in these cases. The collector here explains why he recommends a compromise in every case, as you can see (exhibiting the letter). In some cases the offense has been committed in ignorance of the law. Now it should be remembered that the Government does not license any body to sell liquor; it simply says that those who do sell shall pay so much tax. It does not license a man to sell liquor, as the municipal authorities do. It simply requires that every man selling liquor shall pay so much tax to the Government, and all the Government can do is to enforce the collection of the tax when they find the man selling. If the prosecution was continued in every case of violation of the internal-revenue laws, the United States courts would be in constant session. Of course it is for the interest of the Government to get the tax with the least possible cost, and in very many of these cases while the defendant, as soon as he is arrested, will come forward and pay the tax and the assessable penalty and the costs, if the Government, through the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, refused to accept that proposition, and went on with the prosecution, they might keep him for some time in the county jail, at the public expense, and get nothing whatever out of him after all.

The collector of internal revenue reports these violations of law to me, with a recommendation. Where he recommends a prosecution we prosecute. Where he recommends that there be no prosecution commenced, we do not begin any. He also sends a similar report to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in Washington. Wherever there is a case compromised, it is compromised only with the consent and approval and by the direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I would not nolle-pros a revenue case of any sort without the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, because the object in those cases is simply to collect the revenue. In my district (and it is so generally in the other districts, I suppose) it is only in cases where there is willful, determined, continued violation of the law, and an intention manifested not to pay the tax at all, but to sell liquor without the tax, that prosecutions are had and continued.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. A great many of these violations grow out of ignorance of the law on the part of the offenders?—A. Yes, sir; most of them. I want to say one word further in reference to some statements made here by Mr. Perkins. He said that my attention was called to the charges against Marshal Hall. I had no knowledge, direct or indirect, nor any information, direct or indirect, of any charges against Marshal Hall until I read in the newspapers that charges were preferred by one A. J. Brown to the Department of Justice. Marshal Hall stood very high in our community, and no one ever supposed that there was anything wrong with his administration of the office or his accounts.

Q. Is he an efficient business man?—A. Well, sir, I am hardly a judge of that. I know very little about him, more than my official connection with him.

Q. You ought to know, as he was marshal of the court while you were district attorney.—A. A man might be marshal of the court and still not be an efficient business man, or not give people an opportunity to judge of that fact.

Q. Well, you would be in a position to know about that as well as anybody, would you not?—A. I do not know, sir, whether he was or was not an efficient business man. He was regarded as a good marshal at the time of my official connection with him.

Q. From your observation of the manner in which the business of the office was transacted, what was your opinion as to whether he was attending efficiently to his official duties?—A. I supposed, from anything that I saw or heard, that he was attending to the duties of his office with efficiency. I never had any opportunity to get any special knowledge of his business capacity.

Q. Did he give his personal attention to the affairs of his office?—A. He was there in the office frequently. I saw him frequently in the office, and so far as I know he did give his personal attention to the business of the office.

Q. From the quarterly accounts which he presented, and which you examined, did it appear that he had personal knowledge of the business of the office?—A. Yes, sir. They were always presented by him in person, and I regarded him as a very efficient officer. Of course, though, I had been but a short time in office when he resigned.

Q. How long was he in office during your term?—A. I think he resigned about the last of March, 1882. I have not consulted the register as to that, but I think he did, and if he did, I had been in office then about a year and 8 months.

Q. During the time that he was in office, while you were holding the office of district attorney, did you see anything in the manner in which he administered the duties of the marshal's office to lead you to think that there was anything wrong in his accounts?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you at any time previous to the publication of the charges made by Mr. Brown, suspect that he was in any way short in his accounts?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. What was his manner of living?—A. Well, sir, I scarcely know. He boarded somewhere in the city. His family lived over in Little Washington, the county-seat of Washington County, about 30 miles from Pittsburgh; I do not know where in Pittsburgh he boarded. I never was at his boarding place in my life.

Q. I am not asking as to that. You understand what I mean. What I want to know is whether his manner of living indicated extravagance and large expenditures, or whether it was economical, indicating that he lived within his means derived from the legitimate returns of his office?—A. Well, sir, his manner of living, so far as I observed it, was an ordinary one, and nothing occurred to lead me to think that he was living outside of his means.

Q. What is Mr. Hall's present condition physically; is he in good health?—A. I have not seen him for months. I believed him to be in good health; but I do not know anything about it. He may or he may not be so; I have not heard anything about him as to health for some time.

Q. There was some testimony here to the effect that last fall he was in a very critical condition, and that was given as a reason for not pressing the matter of a settlement of his accounts, and I did not know but you knew something of his actual physical condition.—A. Well, sir, I did hear that he was not very well, or that he was unwell, but for the last several months I have not heard anything on the subject. I think that possibly he may have been ill last fall. I do not now remember. I remember something about his being sick after these charges by Brown were made public; I heard he was sick some time last year, but I do not know when it was.

Q. Do you know what his financial condition is?—A. I do not. I know nothing whatever about it.

Q. Were you district attorney when Mr. Ballin was up there to examine Marshal Hall's accounts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Ballin call your attention to the investigation he had made?—A. Mr. Ballin came to me and told me what he was doing there; he told me he was there to investigate Mr. Hall's accounts. He did not submit to me the result of any of his investigations.

Q. Before he left did he tell you anything about the condition of the marshal's office?—A. Yes, sir; I think he did. I think he said to me in substance that he found things looking bad; that he could not tell definitely until he had time to figure them up, but that he believed there would be a balance against Marshal Hall.

Q. Did he state how much he thought it would be?—A. I don't think he did, sir.

Q. He did not seem to know then, at the time he left Pittsburgh, how much the balance would be, until he could have an opportunity to compute it?—A. That is the impression that he left upon me by what he said. I cannot remember what he said.

Q. Have you had any instructions from the Department of Justice since Mr. Ballin left Pittsburgh, with regard to any steps to be taken to secure the Government in any amount that might be found due from Marshal Hall?—A. I have not.

Q. Or any instructions as to whether he should be prosecuted for rendering false accounts?—A. None, sir.

Q. Is it your duty to bring those matters to the attention of the grand jury without awaiting instructions from the Department?—A. Well, I hardly know, but I should think it my duty to do so until I had the benefit of the result of the investigations already made.

Q. That you have not had?—A. I have not, sir.

Q. Do you know who were on Marshal Hall's bonds?—A. I do not, but my understanding is that his bondsmen are regarded good and sufficient. That is the understanding I have. I have heard it so stated by somebody whose name I do not remember now.

Q. Does the district attorney approve or does the court approve of those bonds?—A. I think so. I will not be sure. I did not approve this one, I know, because it was made long before my appointment, but I understand the district attorney and the judge do approve them.

Q. Do you desire to make any further statement with regard to the necessity for a second assistant attorney in your district?—A. Yes; I wish to say this, that in a number of districts throughout the country the assistant attorneys do not live at the point where the judge and the district attorney live; that there is precedent for an assistant living outside of the principal place where the courts are held in the district; and that there are a number of districts which are not as large as mine, where the United States attorneys have more assistants, and pay them more money than I pay mine.

Q. During the time that you have been district attorney, have you transacted any law business on your own private account?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you keep an office in Pittsburgh?—A. Yes, sir; I had an office when I was appointed, and I still keep one.

Q. How much of your time can you give to the transaction of private business without interfering with the discharge of the duties of your office?—A. Well, I cannot say how much of it—that is, I cannot divide it. I have some practice, but it does not occupy near so much of my time as the business of the Government occupies. I never transact any private business when there is any Government business to be done, and I am always every day of my life in the United States attorney's office most of the time.

Q. How long do you say that you have been in office as United States attorney?—A. I have been in office practically since about the first of July, 1880.

Q. Nearly four years?—A. Nearly four years.

Q. During that time what has been the average amount of your receipts from private sources in the practice of the law?—A. I cannot tell you—that is, I do not know. When I was appointed, I had some unfinished business which was in process of adjustment, and a large portion of my receipts since that time has been derived from that business which was pending at the date of my appointment. I do not know just what my receipts have been.

Q. Can you estimate the amount?—A. I could if I should go home and take time to figure it up, but I would dislike to guess at it, and it would be no more than a guess if I should undertake to state it here. I do not know what the amount has been. I know, however, that it has not been so large as my receipts from the Government, but I keep no books in my office, and—

Q. What have been your receipts from the Government business during your term?—A. I cannot answer that, either, without referring to my accounts, which are on file in the Attorney-General's office. I can state, however, that the office has never yet paid me the maximum of $6,000.

Q. We have received from the Secretary of the Treasury a statement of the returns of the district attorneys in the different districts, including the western district of Pennsylvania, and it seems, from that statement, that you have never earned the maximum in that district?—A. (Referring to the statement.) No, sir; it seems not.

Q. Are the amounts stated there those which you have returned?—A. I suppose so, if these amounts are taken from the return.

Q. I had supposed that your office had earned the maximum, but it appears from this that it has not?—A. Well, you know that the fees of district attorneys are largely fixed by the judges. The report to the Secretary of the Treasury does not indicate the amount of business transacted or the amounts earned. You understand, I suppose, how the compensation of district attorneys is fixed?

Q. It is fixed by law, I suppose, and ought to be the same in every district for the same service?—A. But it is not. For instance, wherever there is a verdict in a case for the Government the judge may award to the district attorney an amount not to exceed $30.

Q. Do you mean in other than criminal cases?—A. No; only in criminal cases.

Q. There is a docket fee of $20 fixed by law, is there not?—A. There is a docket fee of $20 fixed by law, but where there is a verdict for the Government, the judge may award in addition to that a sum not to exceed $30.

Q. To be taxed as costs?—A. No, sir; to be charged in the attorney's account and paid by the Government.

Q. Is that in addition to the $20?—A. Yes, sir. Now judges differ in regard to those awards. Therefore, one district attorney might be trying a great many more cases than another, and might yet get a great deal less money.

WASHINGTON, May 16, 1884.

T. C. KNOX sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. My age is 31; I am an attorney-at-law.

Q. You reside in the western district of Pennsylvania?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you resided in that district?—A. All my life.

Q. How long have you been engaged in the practice of the law?—A. About ten years.

Q. Have you heard the testimony of Mr. Stone as to the business of the office of the United States district attorney in the western district of Pennsylvania?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you say as to the amount of business transacted there, and the necessity for the service of two assistants to the district attorney?—A. I have no knowledge as to the amount of business transacted since the time when I was an assistant, except from the statement of Mr. Stone.

Q. Do you hold any public office now?—A. I do not.

Q. Were you an assistant attorney in that district?—A. I was assistant United States attorney from March, 1875, until June or July, 1876.

Q. You were second assistant?—A. There was no distinction made then. Mr. Wilson and I were appointed assistants, without any distinction as to our rank, and we “pooled” the income of the office—divided it equally. Mr. Wilson nominally drew a larger salary than I did, but we made an equal division.

Q. In what way were you paid?—A. By the Government.

Q. By fees, or by salaries?—A. We were paid salaries. I think our salaries aggregated $3,200. He drew $2,000 and I drew $1,200. I am not certain about the figures, but that is my recollection.

By Mr. STONE:

Q. Do you regard two assistants as necessary to the proper transaction of the business of the office of the United States attorney in that district?—A. Well, I know that when I was there it took all of my time and all of Mr. Wilson’s time, and I know that Mr. Reed, who was then United States attorney, gave very close attention to the office; and, in addition to that, Mr. Wilson and I paid out of our salaries for the services of Mr. Thomas A. Pender in outside work. At that time, therefore, there were practically three assistants in the office, and it kept us all busy, and the reason I resigned in 1876 was because I had private business offered me which I could not attend to on account of the duties of the office.

Q. From your knowledge of that district and of the business of the courts there, what is your judgment as to the number of assistants required?—A. Well, I think the interests of the United States could not be properly attended to there with a less force in the district attorney’s office than there is now and has been always since I have had knowledge of it.

Q. State whether there is a good deal of business transacted in the United States courts there, and whether there is a good deal of litigation in that district?—A. There was when I was in the office, and I have been constantly about the United States court since, and I have a good deal of practice there, and I do not notice any diminution in the volume of business on the part of the Government.

Q. You have tried cases there since I have been United States attorney?—A. Yes, sir; frequently.

Q. Please tell the committee how the business is conducted before the grand jury and the traverse jury by the district attorney and his assistants—how we do the business, and how it has been done to your knowledge.—A. Well, the way we did it when I was there was this: Mr. Wilson would take the grand jury at one term of the court, and I would assist in trying the causes, and then we would reverse that at the next term of court. I found it just as difficult to try cases before a United States grand jury as before a traverse jury, because the United States grand juries are composed of men of superior intelligence, and an ordinary prima facie case would not always work with them, and we would have to study up our cases for them just about as thoroughly as for the traverse juries.

WASHINGTON, May 16, 1884.

E. A. MONTTOOTH, sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. I am 46 years of age; I reside in Pittsburgh, Pa.; I am an attorney-at-law.

Q. How long have you been in practice?—A. Since 1861. I have been in active practice since the close of the war.

Q. Have you had any official connection with the Government?—A. No, sir; I have occupied the position of district attorney of Allegheny County; but that, of course, is not a position under the General Government.

Q. Have you heard the testimony of Mr. Stone and of Mr. Knox here, this morning, in regard to the business of the district attorney's office in the western district of Pennsylvania?—A. I heard a portion of Mr. Stone's testimony, but not all of it. Part of the time I was reading some of the evidence already given before this committee. I heard Mr. Knox's testimony, though.

Q. State what you know in regard to the amount of business in that district and the necessity for assistants in the office of the district attorney?—A. I try a great many cases in the United States court, the criminal branch of it, and in my business there since Colonel Stone has been United States district attorney I have very rarely found him absent—no more so than possibly you or I would be. I have always found him giving strict attention to the business of his office. I never attend the sessions of the court in Erie or Williamsport, and, therefore I do not know what the third assistant, Mr. Cameron, does there, or what necessity there may be there for his services, but I have no recollection of his ever being absent from any session of the court in Allegheny County or in the city of Pittsburgh.

Q. He has always attended there, then?—A. I may say always. I have not had any occasion to examine the matter critically, but I have no recollection of his ever having been absent from any session of the court there. Possibly, however, he may have been without my recollecting it.

Mr. STONE. He has never been absent from any court except the Erie court.

The WITNESS. I find Mr. Cameron and Mr. Wilson and Mr. Stone all three engaged in attending to the business of the district attorney's office during the sessions of the court.

By Mr. STONE:

Q. State whether you have had a large experience in the prosecution of criminal cases there.

The WITNESS. Do you mean in the United States courts, or generally?

Mr. STONE. In the United States court and generally.

The WITNESS. Generally I have had, I presume, as large an experience as any person in Allegheny County.

Q. State whether you are not constantly trying cases throughout the year?—A. I am, save during the summer vacation.

Q. Do you not try cases at every term of the United States court that is held at Pittsburgh?—A. Very nearly every term.

Q. You know something of the magnitude of the western district of Pennsylvania?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And of the character of the country it embraces and of the business of the people?—Yes.

Q. What is your judgment as to the amount of force that is necessary in the district attorney's office for the proper transaction of the business of the Government in that district?—A. I believe that one assistant is necessary constantly in the city of Pittsburgh. From what I know of the outside regions and the business there, I presume that it would be impossible for the district attorney to attend to it all personally, and I think that for that a second assistant district attorney would be required. There is a very large territory embraced in that district, comprising, I should judge, two-thirds or three-fourths of the State of Pennsylvania.

Q. When the grand jury is in session in Pittsburgh are there not, at the beginning of the term, a great many witnesses, and generally do not the grand jury and the traverse jury sit at the same time, and are we not trying cases not only before the grand jury, but also before the traverse jury, and is it not therefore necessary to have two assistants, in order that the business before both juries may go on at the same time?—A. Well, the records of the court will show the attendance of a large number of people. They congregate there from all over that section, and there is business enough, I presume, to require two assistants, in addition to the district attorney, in order to expedite matters and save expense to the Government. But for the employment of such assistants, the probabilities are that the terms of the court would be longer.

Mr. STONE. Yes. We let the grand jury go two days earlier than they would otherwise get off if we did not have a second assistant district attorney, and we let off a large number of witnesses a good deal sooner than they could go otherwise.

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

WASHINGTON, May 15, 1884.

O. E. MITCHELL sworn and examined.

By Mr. HEMPHILL :

Question. Please state your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. I reside in the city of Atlanta, Ga.; I am thirty-five years of age; I am chief deputy United States marshal, under Marshal Longstreet.

Q. State now in as brief a way as you can what you desire to put before the committee.—A. When General Longstreet was here before the committee there was testimony about Mr. Robinson, one of his deputies, who had been convicted and sent to the Albany penitentiary, and whose term hadn't expired, and the facts connected with his accounts were not known to the marshal except in general outline. Since Mr. Robinson's release he has gathered evidence among the court records, and from the affidavits of different parties who worked with him or under him, and he desires to have his case presented to this committee, or an analysis of them. He was to come here himself, but he is too poor to pay his expenses, and the general insisted on my going through the accounts with him, and aiding him in getting them up, and showing that these expenditures as made by General Longstreet were correct and right, and that the treatment that his account had received at the hands of the Department of Justice was wrong; that the disallowances, some of them, or the majority of them, were not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not know that it is necessary for you to make a general statement of that kind; you had better take up the details and show that as you proceed.

The WITNESS. You remember that in General Longstreet's testimony before this committee he testified that Mr. Robinson should have had an opportunity of explaining his accounts; and Mr. Ballin, I believe, testified that he promised to give him the opportunity, but that no explanation would have made the result different. Here are some affidavits that have been made as to that agreement between Mr. Ballin and Mr. Robinson.

Mr. HEMPHILL (after inspecting the papers). These papers have never been filed in the office of the Attorney-General or in the Department of Justice, I suppose?

The WITNESS. No, sir. We did not know of the existence of these papers. We knew that there was an understanding of that sort, but no affidavits on the subject had ever been furnished the office.

Mr. HEMPHILL. All these papers are of the same purport, are they?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; of the same purport. Some of them were sworn to before a justice of the peace.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not see how we can receive these under the rules which we have laid down and of which General Longstreet was apprised when he was here. The rule stated was that no affidavit should be received which had not been filed in the Department of Justice previous to the investigation, and thus become a part of the records of that office.

The WITNESS. It is our purpose to file these with the Comptroller in answer to these disallowances.

Mr. CRISP. We are not investigating the disallowances. What would be the purpose of that?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It would be simply to show that Robinson did not have an opportunity to explain his accounts.

The WITNESS. That is the main thing.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. He did have an opportunity in court and did not do it satisfactorily to the jury; is not that the fact?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. But we contend that if he did not feel that he was innocent, and if his lawyers had understood the fee-bill as well as they should have done, he would not have been convicted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Of course we could not revise the judgment of the court in that way.

The WITNESS. No, sir; I understand that. Well, I hardly know how to present this evidence. We have a number of affidavits here, but under your ruling I hardly see how I can get them in. I suppose that these certified copies of his warrants and bonds would be received.

Q. Has there been any question that these defendants did give bonds?—A. There are a number of defendants and the accounts have been disallowed by Mr. Ballin, accounts in the indictment under which Mr. Robinson was tried.

In the case of United States vs. Fayette Smith there was a disallowance made. That disallowance was properly made by Mr. Ballin on the ground that the warrant was not signed by the commissioner, but as a matter of fact the warrant had been regularly entered in our office and had the seal of the commissioner, although he had omitted to sign it; therefore, while we admit the technical correctness of the disallowance, no bad motive can be imputed to the officer concerning it. There was another case similar to this, and upon that case a question was put by Judge Crisp, I think, and Marshal Longstreet stated that the warrant was not signed. That was a mistake. It was in the case of the United States vs. William Cavender. Here is what the examiner says about it:

Case United States vs. William Cavender: All fees for travel service in this case disallowed. The warrant was not signed by the commissioner who issued it; it was no legal warrant, and the defendant was dismissed on that account, and no fees can be allowed the marshal for serving it.

Now, the affidavit was not attested by the commissioner, but the warrant was signed, and it was issued on the day that the affidavit was taken.

Q. The warrant was signed, but the affidavit was not signed by the commissioner?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was that disallowed?—A. Yes, sir; on the ground that the warrant was not signed by the commissioner.

Q. Then, what you desire to say about it is that it was not signed, but that there was no improper motive?—A. No, sir; I desire to say in this case that it was signed, and that the deputy did exactly right in serving it. It was a neglect of the commissioner not to attest the affidavit, but he went forward and issued the warrant. Now, here is the case of the United States vs. Alfred Garrett, in which there was $24.74 disallowed, upon the ground that there was no surrender of the defendant.

Q. That is, that he was not turned over to the officer?—A. Yes, sir. Now, in this case I have a certified copy of the surrender, or the commitment issued upon the surrender, of the parties in the case by their bail, taken from the clerk's office and certified to by the clerk, which shows that there was a surrender. The point that we make in this case is that the facts in the case are entirely ignored by the examiner.

Q. Do you know anything about the case of your own knowledge?—A. Nothing whatever; all that I go by is this certified copy from the clerk's office. I stated in the beginning of my testimony that all these facts were furnished me by Mr. Robinson, but as to the certified copies, I aided him in getting them up—a great many of them. I have no individual interest whatever in the matter. I never spoke to the man a half a dozen times in my life until very lately.

Mr. CRISP. Let me make a suggestion, Mr. Mitchell. If there is any part of the evidence before us which contains specific charges against Robinson, and if you can present in his behalf any evidence which refutes or tends to refute those charges, of course we will accord you the opportunity to present it. The charges upon which he was indicted were the only ones, I think, that came before us. That voluminous book of disallowances was not in evidence here. It will not be printed in any report or document of ours. There was reference made, however, to certain items upon which Mr. Robinson was indicted and convicted. If you have any evidence there on his behalf to show that any of those charges, although found true by that jury, were really untrue, we will accord him the privilege of putting that on record here, so that it may go with the testimony on the other side. But the general disallowances we have not got here, and we have not undertaken at all to adjust any of those accounts.

The WITNESS. I thought that when General Longstreet came on the stand as a witness he expected to show before this committee the character of the expenditures made in his office, and that they were not made improperly as stated by the examiners, but were made legitimately and for services legitimately rendered.

Mr. CRISP. Yes; anything of that kind on behalf of General Longstreet is admissible; but I understood that you were speaking particularly about Mr. Robinson. Of course, any intimation of improper charges on the part of General Longstreet he will have the opportunity of refuting here.

The WITNESS. Well, I will take up the items upon which Mr. Robinson was convicted. Here is the case of Andrew Woody, in which Mr. Ballin makes a direct charge that there was no necessity for the man being carried before the commissioner, and says that the clerk had inserted in the warrant that the prisoner's own recognizance might be taken. Now, here is a certified copy of the warrant, and there is no such insertion in it.

By Mr. CRISP:

Q. You say the statement was made by Mr. Ballin, that that was inserted in the warrant?—A. Yes, sir. He says that the defendant was arrested on a bench warrant, and that by order of the court the clerk inserted that his own recognizance should be taken for his appearance. Now, we have an order of court that in vacation, a bench-warrant being issued by the clerk, the bond may be fixed upon the face of it. In that event the deputy marshal, obeying the order of the court, carries the prisoner before the nearest commissioner, and that was done in this case.

Q. Then the statement of the examiner as to the insertion being made there is not true?—A. No, sir; it is not true.

Here is a case on another bench warrant, the case of the United States vs. Hardy S. Kirby, and also the case of the United States vs. Henry M. Kirby. Mr. Ballin charges that these three were taken on the same day. The charge here for attendance on the commissioner's court is disallowed, as charge for attendance is allowed him in the case of Robert Bennett, who was before the commissioner at the same time, and not on February 13, 1882, as charged.

Now, you see the charge is that this bond was taken on the 15th and that the case of Bennett was taken on the same date, and the charge is allowed in the Bennett case. In the certified copy of the warrant under which Bennet was arrested the date is the 13th. This date, the 13th, is declared fictitious by Mr. Ballin, and he claims that it was on the same date with this other, but here I show you the one taken on the 13th and the other on the 15th. There are a number of accounts just like that, where it was claimed that they were fictitious and fraudulent, and those accounts have been thrown out and we have not been able to get them allowed.

In the cases of the United States vs. Andrew Woody, the original commitment shows that the 22d day of July is not a fictitious date, as charged by the examiner.

In the indictment of Mr. Robinson it was charged that, in the case of Alexander Gilreath, he had rendered a false account for $4, and in the report of disallowances there is a statement showing that $2 of that $4 was allowed as proper, and $2 disallowed. General Longstreet was asked when he was upon the stand in regard to special deputies. Now, in this case there were four arrests made at the same time. This man had two or three men employed under him, and those men had their horses, and their expenses were charged in these accounts as actual expenses in endeavoring to make the arrests. In that way the accounts have been allowed where they have been made by special deputies. But the point was raised by Mr. Ballin that this service was entirely illegal. We contend that that service was not illegal, from the fact that section 788 of the statutes confers upon the marshal and his deputies the same power as is exercised by the sheriff and his deputies in the State where the service is rendered. Now, in the State of Georgia the sheriff can appoint; and in one notable instance there was a case before the circuit court (in 3 Ga., I think) where Judge Nesbit, the chief justice, rendered the discision, and went so far as to say that a deputy could be appointed by the sheriff or by his deputy—that he could be deputized simply by word; and under that law our deputies deputized men to aid them in making arrests. Last year the comptroller gave us a circular decision that that was illegal, and that no further such accounts could be allowed in such cases even for guards; and since that time every special deputy has been appointed by the office itself. General Longstreet, in order to aid the deputies in making these appointments, had commissions struck off with his name printed, and whenever a deputy would apply for the appointment of special deputies the marshal would send him one of these commissions and the appointment was regarded as coming from himself. We have eleven regular deputies in the field, and two in the office, myself and the clerk. One of us stays in the court-room, so that when it happens that there is no deputy around, and service has to be made at once, we perform that duty; we hold the appointments for that purpose. Then we have some little perquisites which come into the office in civil cases and which we could not charge unless we were deputy marshals. We have, I think it is, some ten or eleven special deputies. They are deputized by the office to aid these men in different Territories.

Q. Do the special deputies give bond and take the oath?—A. Yes, sir; they take the oath. The oaths are filed in the clerk's office and the bonds are filed. Owing to their being subdeputies and doing very little work except in aiding the other deputies, we require but very light bonds from them. In other cases we require a $2,000 bond.

In the case of Alonzo Strong the examiner claims that Robert Bennett was not serving on the 19th of October; that there was no court held on the 19th of October, 1881, and that no such charge could properly be made. Now, the certified copy of the witness-roll in that case shows that court was held on the 19th and 20th of October.

Q. Have you any further statement to make now in connection with these accounts under our ruling?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is Mr. Robinson, the deputy, at large now?—A. Yes, sir; he was released on the 1st day of March or April, 1884. He served ten months.

Q. Did his term expire, or was he pardoned?—A. His term expired. He was very anxious to get a pardon and there were efforts made to get him pardoned, but his time expired before those efforts were successful.

Q. Do you know who was acting in his behalf?—A. Only from hearsay.

Q. How long have you been in the office?—A. I went in on the 19th of June last year.

Q. Does your position keep you in the office?—A. Yes, sir; I am chief deputy there.

Q. Your business, then, is more that of a clerk and bookkeeper than that of a deputy to execute processes?—A. Yes, sir. I seldom execute any process at all. When we have no deputies or bailiffs, and the court is not in session, I carry prisoners to and from the jail; and I have made one trip to the penitentiary with the Georgia Ku-Klux.

Q. What efforts are made in your office to verify the accounts of the deputy marshals?—A. Each deputy is required, when he makes out his account, to date the mileage from the post-office nearest to the place where the arrest is made, so if he puts down the correct place, we know pretty nearly the distance that he has traveled in making the arrest, or the distance that he has to return. If that mileage is charged anything like exorbitantly, or if we think it is, we call the attention of the deputy to it before the account is copied, and if his explanation is satisfactory, it is so specified. The account is then copied, and at the end of the quarter it is forwarded to the Department for payment. We give the accounts the most rigid scrutiny, and, in fact, we have been cutting out items in the accounts, owing to these previous disallowances that the comptroller, in that letter of last week, says that we are entitled to.

Q. What is your rule about guards?—A. Guards are seldom used now, at all. As they cannot be used in attendance upon court (they can be used in field work, but not in attendance before court) we appoint in the Atlanta territory, or in any territory in the division, one man as head deputy, and if he wants a special deputy under him to help him, we appoint one. But the accounts are made out differently now. The head deputy has his page upon our books and his account is sworn to the same as that of any other deputy. They are all under bond, and their oaths of office are filed in the clerk's office.

Q. How many deputies have you?—A. We have eleven in the field and two in the office. But under the fee-bill system there is hardly a living in it for any of them. Another thing I would like to state here is that we have a force of very good men. We have no bad men. I believe that the character of our deputies was questioned here along in the first part of your investigation.

Q. Yes. How long have those men of whom you speak been employed there?—A. Some of them have been employed for several years, and some of them are new men. We have weeded out the bad ones.

Q. Do you know how many commissioners there are in Atlanta?—A. Yes, sir; there are six.

Q. What is the necessity for so many?—A. There is none whatever.

Q. One or two could do all the work, I suppose?—A. Well, it goes sort of by seasons; one commissioner will get on the scent of something and he will get a week or two of work out of it. There is where the difficulty is. It is not in the marshal's office. Under Judge Woods's decision the marshal is compelled to execute the writs, and he has no discretion whatever in the matter. Judge Woods issued an order requiring all warrants in internal-revenue cases to be approved by the deputy collector before they could be placed in the hands of the marshal. Those warrants are issued by the commissioner upon the affidavit of some one, the party is taken before the deputy collector and examined, and if he sees fit he approves it, the warrant, and if it is placed in our hands and we execute it without question and without knowing whether it is a good one or not.

Q. That is right. An executive officer has no right to have discretion about serving a legal process. He does not have it under the State laws?—A. Well, there is where we have our trouble. These subpoenas, warrants, and all their court papers are issued in that way. For instance, take up this case of a habeas corpus ad testificandum that was ventilated before your committee. There was a mistake made in that by Lee Longstreet which the general attempted to rectify. Now those are not writs of habeas corpus; they are simply orders of court. Last week we had some cases of that kind. The commissioner issued his order, but the deputy, obeying the instructions from the office, came to the office before he would execute it and we went to Judge McKay and asked him to indorse it—to issue a court order. He sat down and wrote—

The within order is hereby approved, and the jailer will turn over to Deputy-Marshal Hubbard the prisoner named, to testify, &c.

Q. Those are not regular writs of habeas corpus, but the one that Lee Longstreet was examined about, as I recollect, was a case of the delivery of a prisoner for the purpose of giving his testimony upon the order of the district attorney, and not upon the order of a judicial officer at all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, does that practice obtain there, and is it the rule that, on the order of the district attorney, the jailer will deliver a man to testify?—

A. The district attorney directs his order to James Longstreet, United States Marshal, saying: "You are hereby directed to take so and so, or bring him to such or such a point"; stating the purpose it is for. Sometimes it is for the purpose of giving information; sometimes for the purpose of testifying. Now, we file away that order of the district attorney in the office, for our own protection, and we issue an order to the jailer to turn over the prisoner.

Q. You do that, then, on the order of the district attorney?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What authority has he to order a prisoner around in that way?—

A. None, whatever, that I know of, except the practice there. We do a great many things down there under the direction of the district attorney and the judge that I suppose might be questioned as to their propriety, but they are done to save time.

Q. Is there anything else that you wish to state?—A. I would like to state that the accounts are kept by Mr. W. B. Fitzsimons, who has had an experience in the field of some five or six years, and has had disallowances in his own accounts, and who is really the best qualified man in the force to keep those accounts in accordance with the rulings of the Department and the fee-bill.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 25, 1884.

JAMES A. WINSTON sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your residence, age, and present occupation.

—Answer. I shall be 60 years old in August. I reside in Springfield, Ill. I am a lawyer.

Q. Have you held any official position in the State of Illinois?—A. Yes, sir; for ten years I was connected with the circuit clerk's office, in Sangamon County; eight years of which I was deputy clerk, and eight years principal. My time as clerk expired in December, 1880.

Q. Then you have had considerable experience in the matter of court expenses and the accounts of court officials?—A. Yes, sir; I have been connected with the State circuit court for thirty years, but not so long in Sangamon County.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Winston, the witness, is the gentleman who was designated by the chair to assist Mr. Bowman in making a special examination into the expenditures of the United States courts in Illinois.

Q. Please state briefly what duties you have performed in pursuance of your designation to assist Examiner Bowman in his investigation in Illinois.—A. In the first place, we got the books and papers connected with the marshal's office. We got permission of the judge to get such papers as we needed. We then examined the accounts rendered by the ex-marshal, Mr. Wheeler, who had been marshal for four years, and compared those accounts with the books he had kept. We understood that our time was limited, that we had only a certain time in which to perform this work, in order to make a report before Congress adjourned. We looked over the accounts to see if we could find any irregularities on the face of them. We selected out a number of cases, and, after being engaged nearly a week upon this comparison of the accounts with the books, we started in the southern part of the State, the southern part of the southern district. We went to the parties who had been arrested, and also to reputable persons, in their neighborhood, to get such testimony as we could in regard to those accounts. After having visited the greater portion of the southern part of the State, and gathered this testimony upon these irregularities, we returned to Springfield. We then got Mr. Wheeler, the ex-marshal, before us, who made a statement in regard to the transactions of his office. Then we got his principal clerk, Mr. J. M. Reece, and he made his statement. We have the testimony that we took, and from that testimony we have made proofs, which are embodied in our report. The report describes every case investigated. There were 104 cases investigated, and the irregularities, or what you would term, I suppose, fees charged not allowed by law, amounted to $2,152.22 in the 104 cases.

Q. Had the marshal presented accounts upon those and obtained payment of them from the Government of the United States?—A. Yes, sir; his statement shows that.

Q. What was the nature generally of those charges not authorized by law?—A. Well, sir, there were guards charged for where they had no guards employed; mileage charged where the mileage was not traveled upon the writs; deputy marshals charged for that were fictitious; the names of men put in who did not act; transportation charged for prisoners where they were not transported by the marshal or transportation paid for; charges for subsistence furnished prisoners, the subsistence not having been furnished; charges for attendance before the commissioner with the prisoners when the attendance was, in many cases, fictitious, the persons whose names were put in not having attended; and in many cases charges for guards before the commissioners which we considered not necessary at all. I believe those are the principal irregularities. There were subpoenas sent out by mail to deputies in remote parts of the State, and served and returned without fees, and the fees were placed upon the writs after they were received at the marshal's office and the mileage charged in all cases.

Q. That is where writs were sent by mail?—A. Yes, sir; re-sent by mail to the party acting as deputy, and returned by mail. Our investigation commenced with the accounts, beginning on the 1st of January, 1880, and extended down to December 30, 1883, covering four years.

Q. How many criminal cases were there in the district court for the southern district of Illinois during the last four years?—A. There were 843 cases on the judge's criminal docket from January 30, 1880, up to December 31, 1883.

Q. Do you remember how those cases were disposed of?—A. I have compiled from the docket a brief statement which will give you that information, and which I now present as a part of my testimony:

Q. Have you and Mr. Bowman, since you returned to Washington, prepared a report in writing under the instruction which you received from this committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under the resolution appointing you a copy of that report was to be furnished to this committee and one to the Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether you have that report prepared for the committee and ready to submit.—A. Yes, sir; here it is [producing it].

Q. Have you carefully examined the matters embraced in this report and prepared it in connection with Mr. Bowman?—A. Mr. Bowman and myself have been together all the time making up this report.

Q. State whether all the facts set forth in that report are true, so far as you have been able to obtain information in regard to them.—A. They are, sir.

Q. In what way are they supported?—A. By the written statements of persons named in the report.

Q. How did you obtain those statements from those persons?—A. We went to them and explained what we wanted, and asked them if they were willing to give voluntary statements of the facts. They agreed to do so and did so. Those statements were reduced to writing as we went along, and we insisted that the parties should read their statements over carefully, and in the majority of cases, after they had read them, we, one or the other of us, read the statements to them ourselves and asked them if they were true and if they had been voluntarily made, and they answered yes, I believe, without exception.

Q. Please state what course you pursued with reference to the late marshal, Mr. Wheeler.—A. After having gotten up our testimony and returned to Springfield, we notified ex-Marshal Wheeler that we would hear a statement from him, if he wished to make it, but that of course he could make a statement or not, as he pleased. He said he would like to make a statement, and we took the different accounts and showed them to Marshal Wheeler, indicating to him where we thought the irregularities existed, and asked him in every case to explain them, and his explanation appears, of course, in his written statement.

By Mr. STEWART :

Q. Did he make a statement in writing?—A. Yes, sir; we have his statement in writing.

Q. You have not embodied that statement fully in your report?—A. No, sir. We have referred to it as an exhibit.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Did you also examine Mr. Reece, his chief deputy?—A. Yes, sir; in the same way.

Q. Is the package which you have in your hand now made up of the exhibits referred to in your report?—A. Yes, sir. We have two statements here from ex-Marshal Wheeler which he made at the same time.

Q. Does ex-Marshal Wheeler in his statement deny the facts set forth by you in your report?—A. He does not deny them. In some cases he seems not to know anything about them; he does not recollect them; but I think that in no case does he deny the facts.

Q. In your report you have given only a synopsis of his statement?—A. That is all, but we refer to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then I think that in justice to Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Reece, their statements had better be printed in our record.

Q. Please state briefly now the matter in controversy between ex-Marshal Wheeler and his deputy, Mr. Reece.—A. Mr. Wheeler stated that he had in his office a principal clerk; that he relied chiefly upon that clerk to discharge the duties of his office; that he himself examined all the accounts that were presented to the court for allowance previous to their being so presented, but that he examined them more to find out whether the number of miles was rightly stated than for anything else. To illustrate: Cairo being 220 miles off, he would look at an account for mileage from Cairo, to see whether the distance was correctly charged, or whether more miles were charged, and if he found the distance correctly stated, he thought it was all right. In a number of cases it appeared from the writs that Mr. Wheeler had done the service himself, and had made the travel; but Mr. Wheeler acknowledged that he had never made the travel on those writs; that he never had made the arrests at the places designated, and that if the parties were arrested by him, it was in the hall of the court-house at Springfield. He said that Mr. Reece made up the accounts, and he laid the irregularities in those accounts upon Mr. Reece. Mr. Reece, in his statement, says that he never made up any accounts unless the deputy making the arrest furnished him a tab, as he calls it, containing the information from which he made up the account, and in case of service by Mr. Wheeler himself, that information, he said, was furnished to him by Marshal Wheeler and from the information so furnished he made up the accounts.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. All that appears in the statement, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. As I have suggested, we will receive the statements of ex-Marshal Wheeler and Mr. Reece, and print them in our record. In addition, I have received through Senator Cullom, of Illinois, from Mr. Wheeler, the affidavits of Samuel T. Dresser, B. B. Longenecker, E. J. Krampff, John C. Bell, and W. S. Larison. These parties were formerly deputies of the marshal, and the substance of each of the affidavits is that Marshal Wheeler gave instructions to his clerk to make no charges except for actual services, and not to allow any constructive mileage or fictitious or illegal charges to be made. That is the substance of the instructions which these men say were given by Marshal Wheeler to Mr. Reece. Receiving those, and thinking it due to Mr. Wheeler that they should be put in as exhibits in the case, I telegraphed Mr. Reece of the fact, and he sent me a telegram in reply which also, I think, ought to go into the record.

Mr. STEWART. Is that sworn to?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. STEWART. Then it goes in for what it is worth. It is not evidence upon which the committee could act, because not verified by them.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not, but I presume it is the statement that Mr. Reece would make if he were under oath. The telegram is as follows:

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., 20. (Received at Washington, D. C., 21st.)

Hon. W. M. SPRINGER,

National Hotel:

Such instructions were given, but the marshal and deputies always reported the service and travel on writs served by them. They alone know whether there was actual travel or not. I always made the accounts from their reports and from data given me by them, and in their presence and under their directions. If illegal fees are charged they are responsible. The accounts were never made up for presentation until after the marshal had carefully examined them, and were always presented for approval by him in person. I can substantiate this by affidavits of others. Shall I do so? I state emphatically I am not responsible for the irregularities and ask for fairness at your hands, which I know will be given me.

J. M. REECE.

The WITNESS. I would state that both Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Reece seemed to be very anxious to appear in person before this committee, and said they were coming, and for that reason we supposed they would both be here as they said they would, and we never formed any opinion in regard to which was right or which was wrong. Their statements were, of course, in direct contradiction to each other.

The CHAIRMAN. I will state further that I telegraphed to Mr. Wheeler that the committee would hear him if he desired to come, but I presume he sent these affidavits instead of appearing in person.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Were any of the irregularities discovered by you, such as have no foundation whatever in law?—A. Well, as I said before, there were cases of charges made for mileage where travel was not performed at all.

Q. State what you ascertained in regard to charges for attendance before the commissioners in the city of Springfield?—A. I think that out of the 843 cases that I have mentioned, there were not to exceed 20 before commissioners outside of Springfield, and they were at Cairo. I think twenty would cover the number in the whole Southern district.

Q. During those four years the parties concerned were brought to Springfield from different parts of the State for preliminary examination in all those cases, except about twenty?—A. I do not think the exceptions would exceed twenty.

Q. Were there commissioners in the Southern part of the State?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Bowman has a book which shows the number. I do not recollect the number, but there are quite a good many.

Q. What was the custom in the marshal's office as to charging for attendance before the commissioners at Springfield?—A. In a large majority of the cases two guards were charged for—that is, the deputy and a guard.

Q. What is the fact in regard to the attendance of Louis Vetter?—A. Louis Vetter, as would appear from Marshal Wheeler's criminal docket, attended as a guard 312 times in the four years before commissioners.

Q. Who is Vetter?—A. He was the janitor of the building, and had been for twenty-five years. For the last four years he has been receiving a salary of $50 a month, paid by the Government.

Q. Did you take his statement?—A. We took his statement.

Q. What does he say?—A. He says he does not think that he attended in that period of four years to exceed twenty times, certainly not one hundred; and that he never received any pay for it.

By Mr. STEWART :

Q. Have you got his affidavit?—A. Yes, sir; we have got Vetter's affidavit, and Marshal Wheeler's also, on that point. [The witness here handed ex-Marshal Wheeler's statement to Mr. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (after looking over the paper). Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that it is necessary to take up any time in investigating this case. We have here the statement of the examiners, and here is an admission by this marshal that pretty much everything that is charged against him is true. He says that he did not know much about the business, and then he goes on to say :

I now see that my administration has been exceedingly loose and imperfect, and that false, fraudulent, and fictitious charges have crept into my accounts. I wish to swear positively that this was entirely unintentional on my part and that I have endeavored to prevent any charge being made in my accounts except those which were lawful and just. I wish to say that I am perfectly willing to refund all moneys that I have collected from the United States on account of these false and fictitious charges which my attention has been called to since this investigation commenced. I agreed with Messrs. Reece, Davis, and McCord, three of my deputies, when I took charge of the office, that I was to first receive my maximum compensation before any allowance was to be made to them. I will, however, add that if I had it to do over again I would not make any such arrangement, for I can now readily see what an incentive this was to cause my deputies to manufacture fees and swell their accounts against the United States as much as possible, for the larger their accounts were made the larger compensation they received. * * * I admit that I have not given the necessary attention to the duties of my office, and that I have relied entirely too much on others and have not been sufficiently careful in the examination of my accounts and watching the details of my office.

Now, this case is all on paper. This gentleman, Mr. Wheeler, admits the substance of everything that these other gentlemen say about the case, and I do not see that it is worth while to spend any time upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. I have not seen that statement of Marshal Wheeler.

Mr. STEWART. He does not deny what these affidavits allege. He says he does not remember serving a subpoena on so and so, but that he knows he did not travel 35 miles to do it, and that if he served the subpoena at all he did it at Springfield; so that he does not, in fact, make any issue with the parties who make these charges, and therefore the case is substantially admitted all round.

The CHAIRMAN. Except as to whether he or Mr. Reece, his deputy, is responsible?

Mr. STEWART. The legal responsibility is upon the marshal, of course. It is no excuse for a public officer to say that he did not know what his deputy was doing. You could not make the case worse if you talked about it for a week.

The CHAIRMAN. Then there is no necessity for our continuing the investigation, if the case is complete already.

Mr. STEWART. Why, of course, they have got a complete case against him. He says, in substance, "I have made false and fictitious charges, but I did not intend to."

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 26, 1884.

JOEL W. BOWMAN recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. You have already appeared as a witness before this committee?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. You have heard the testimony of Mr. Winston just given?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made, with him, the investigation in Illinois, in regard to which he has testified here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether the report of that examination produced here by him is one which was made by you and him jointly, and whether the matters therein stated are true?—A. Yes, sir; I wrote the report in conjunction with Mr. Winston. It embodies our ideas of the evidence that we obtained.

Q. And a correct synopsis of the exhibits?—A. Yes, sir; we believe it to be absolutely correct.

Q. Did Mr. Wheeler or Mr. Reece deny the truth of any of the statements set forth in that report?—A. No, sir. We sent for Mr. Wheeler after we had made a trip through a portion of the district. Mr. Wheeler had previously said to me that he desired to make an explanation of any irregularities that might be found in his accounts, and when we returned with these affidavits, he came up to our room and made two statements. One of those statements was in reference to particular services alleged to have been performed by himself. In that affidavit Mr. Wheeler admitted to us that he did not know whether he had performed the services or not, all of them, but, that even if he had performed any portion of the service, the travel and the expenses charged against the United States for endeavoring to arrest, and for transportation of prisoners and guards, must be incorrect, because if he had made the arrests at all he made them in the city of Springfield.

Q. Who were the parties arrested in those cases?—A. James M.

Garvin, David Calvert, Samuel Gates, Henry Winters, and William Baldwin. I wish to say that ex-Marshal Wheeler states very positively that he never intended to make any charge in his accounts except for services actually and necessarily performed. He appeared perfectly surprised when we called his attention to the accounts wherein his name appeared, and promptly admitted that the charges were irregular—that there were services charged for there that he had not performed. After taking the first statement, we then called upon General J. M. Reece, who was the former chief deputy of the late marshal, and asked him if he desired to make an explanation. He said he did. We then showed him several of these accounts, and asked him whose handwriting they were in. At first he was not clear as to the handwriting; he said he did not know. I suggested to him that in my opinion it was his handwriting, and he then admitted that it was. Now, in the majority of all these cases where there were fictitious or fraudulent charges, they were in the handwriting of Mr. Reece. He claims that the information upon which he made those accounts was furnished by Marshal Wheeler. Marshal Wheeler denies that emphatically, and states that he never instructed Mr. Reece, or any other man, to insert in his account any charge except for services actually and necessarily performed. The issue on that point is between those two gentlemen. One man is alleged to have performed the service, and the other appears to have rendered the accounts—that is, to have written out the accounts, for, of course, the marshal, in fact, rendered them.

Q. Then the facts were substantially admitted by all the parties?—

A. There was no controversy, so far as the making of the charges was concerned. I did not understand that there was any. I understood that they were admitted. Mr. Wheeler's affidavit admits the making of the charges, and admits that they are irregular, but he goes on to say that he is not responsible for their being made. Mr. Reece, on the other hand, says that Mr. Wheeler is responsible.

Q. Who would receive the benefits of the overcharges?—A. They would all receive it.

Q. In what way?—A. In explanation of that, let me say that the law allows the marshal a maximum compensation of $6,000 a year, and each deputy marshal a maximum compensation of $3,000 a year. When Mr. Wheeler took charge of that office there was an arrangement entered into by him with three of his deputies, Mr. Reece, Mr. Davis, and Mr. McCord, by which it was understood that the marshal was first to receive his maximum compensation of $6,000 a year, and that then, if the fees of the office would justify it, the other three were each to receive the maximum compensation of $3,000. But the marshal was first to have his $6,000, as I understood the arrangement. Therefore it was just as much to the advantage of the deputy marshals to swell their accounts so that they could reach their $3,000 a year each, as it was to the advantage to the marshal; in fact it was more for their interest than it was for the marshal's, because he had a sure thing.

Q. There were three deputies, you say, with whom that arrangement was made?—A. Yes, sir; Davis, McCord, and Reece.

Q. That would require net earnings of at least $15,000; $9,000 for the three deputies and $6,000 for the marshal?—A. Yes, sir; $15,000 altogether. Then there were miscellaneous expenses besides, such as stationery, fuel, &c.

Q. And the other deputies had to have their compensation?—A. Yes, sir; but their work went to make up this maximum. For instance, if the marshal sent out a special deputy and he could get that man to perform service for one-third of the net fees, then the marshal would get two-thirds; but if the deputy required two-thirds, then the marshal would get only one-third. The marshal made the best arrangement he could with the special deputies, so as to make as much fees as he could for the office.

Q. What do you say as to the general management of the office during Marshal Wheeler's term?—A. It was exceedingly loose and careless. It was almost totally void of system.

Q. Who was the responsible head of the office at that time?—A. Well, I must admit that I think Mr. Wheeler was very negligent. He did not give that attention to his office that he should have given it. That is quite evident to my mind.

Q. He so states, does he not?—A. I think he admits that in his affidavit.

Q. Were you able to determine the question at issue between Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Reece, as to whether these disputed items were entered in pursuance of the marshal's directions or not?—A. Mr. Chairman, that would be simply a matter of opinion with me, and I would not like to express my opinion.

Q. There were, I believe, some cases where persons were arrested in the city of Springfield by Marshal Wheeler, and the fee-bill was rendered as if the parties had been arrested in remote portions of the State.—A. Well, I can say that there was one case of that kind, certainly, and the accounts show several; but whether Marshal Wheeler actually arrested those several parties or not I do not know. He did arrest one of them. That man was arrested in the hall of the court-house, and the account was made out as if he had been arrested 197 miles off.

Q. What fees were charged in that case?—A. That was the case of The United States vs. James M. Garvin. The account as rendered amounts to $55.72, and the amount that is shown to be lawful as a charge in that case is $2.50.

Q. What were the facts about that case?—A. The facts, as we obtained them from the affidavits, and as I believe them to be, are that Mr. Garvin was subpoenaed as a witness before the grand jury, I believe, at Springfield. He went to Springfield in compliance with the subpoena, and was there one or two or perhaps three days. While he was in Springfield a bench warrant issued for him for a violation of the pension laws. He was indicted, and the bench warrant was issued and placed in the hands of Marshal Wheeler for service. Mr. Garvin was standing in the hall of the court-house, within a few feet of the marshal's office, when Marshal Wheeler came up and asked him if he was in the party (there were several persons standing there), and he said he was. The marshal asked him to step into a room; he did so, and there Marshal Wheeler informed him that he was under arrest. Garvin then went out and asked one or two of these gentlemen to go on his bond, which they declined to do. Marshal Wheeler then told him that unless he could furnish bonds he would have to go to jail. He told the marshal that he could not give a bond there; that his friends were down where he lived, at Macedonia, and that he did not want to go to jail; and he wanted to know what arrangement he could make to keep out of jail. The marshal told him that if he would employ some man to guard him until his friends should arrive, he would let him stay out of jail; so the marshal selected a man and Garvin paid him $2 or $2.50 a day until his brother or brother-in-law came on and he was bound over for trial.

Q. How much fees were charged in that case?—A. Fifty-five dollars and seventy-two cents was the charge against the United States, and the marshal was entitled to $2.50 under the law.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Was that $2.50 all there was that was legal in the charges that made up the account?—A. Yes, sir; as appeared by the account. For instance, the marshal was entitled to charge $2 for the service, and 50 cents for discharging the prisoner. The mileage, the expenses endeavoring to arrest, transportation, &c., were irregular and unfounded charges.

Q. All beyond the $2.50 was illegal?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. There were no expenses in endeavoring to arrest, and there was no travel?—A. No, sir. The marshal himself says that if he arrested this man at all he arrested him in Springfield; yet he charges for travel 197 miles. Of course, if he did not make the travel, he could not have transported the prisoner.

Q. In whose handwriting is that account?—A. In the writing of Mr. Reece, the chief deputy.

Q. And it appears upon the books of the marshal's office, and has been approved by the court and paid by the United States?—A. I presume so. It is on the books of the Treasury Department.

Q. And the account has been settled?—A. I do not know that. I know that Marshal Wheeler's accounts were presented for payment, but whether the Department has settled with him or not I do not know.

Q. When did he go out of office?—A. I think he went out of office about the latter part of last December.

Mr. WINSTON. He went out on the 30th of November last.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. When did you make this investigation?—A. I made it under the direction contained in the resolution of this committee, dated April 22, 1884.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is there any other statement that you desire to make on this subject?—A. No, sir; I do not care to make any statement.

Following are the report of Examiner Bowman and Mr. Winston, and the statements of ex-Marshal Wheeler and his chief deputy, Mr. Reece:

REPORT OF EXAMINER BOWMAN AND MR. JAMES A. WINSTON IN RELATION TO EXPENDITURES OF UNITED STATES COURTS IN ILLINOIS.

To the Committee on Expenditures, Department of Justice, House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN: In conformity with a resolution of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, dated April 22, 1884, in which the Attorney-General was requested to "authorize Mr. Joel W. Bowman, one of the examiners of the Department of Justice, to make a special examination into the expenditures of the United States Courts in the State of Illinois, and that he be directed to report the result of the examinations, both to the Department of Justice and to this committee; and that he be authorized to employ, with the approval of the chairman of this committee, a competent person, a resident of that State, to assist him in making such examinations; and that all expenses thereof be paid as provided in resolution of the House of Representatives, passed March 17, 1884," Examiner Bowman was directed by the Attorney-General to proceed to Illinois to make the examinations required by the committee. He was there joined by Mr. James A. Winston, who had been selected by the chairman of the committee to act with him, and in compliance with that portion of the resolution calling for a report both to the Attorney-General and the committee, the following is respectfully submitted:

It will be observed that the resolution above referred to required an investigation into the court expenses in both the districts in the State of Illinois; but our examina-iotn did not extend beyond the southern district of Illinois, as we were summoned back to Washington by the chairman of the committee before we could extend it into the northern district, as contemplated in the resolution.

Immediately upon commencing the examination at Springfield, Ill., we called upon Hon. Samuel H. Treat, judge of the United States district court for the southern district of Illinois, and obtained from him an order of court permitting us to take from the United States district and circuit clerks' offices such books, papers, accounts, &c., as it would be necessary for us to refer to in the discharge of our official duties.

We obtained from the files of the United States district clerk's office at Springfield the file copies of the accounts rendered against the United States by Jacob Wheeler, esq., late United States marshal for the southern district of Illinois, on account of alleged services performed by him and his several deputies, covering a period of about four years. In addition, we obtained access to the books and dockets used by late Marshal Wheeler, and after a careful examination and comparison of said accounts with the books and dockets it became very apparent that the marshal's office during Marshal Wheeler's incumbency had been sadly deficient in system, and it was also plainly demonstrated that the duties of the office had been performed in a very loose and careless manner, and, presumably, with a view to increasing the costs against the United States to their utmost limit, so as to obtain the maximum compensation allowed by law to the marshal and his regular deputies.

We found that the accounts rendered by Marshal Wheeler not only contained many irregularities, but they also contained fictitious and fraudulent charges for services never performed. The accounts examined by us contained charges against the United States for mileage never traveled; transportation of prisoners when none were transported; expenses charged for endeavoring to arrest when no expenses were incurred; charges for guards when no guard was employed or used; subsistence of prisoners when none was furnished; attendance of deputies and guards at preliminary examinations before United States commissioners when the alleged deputy or guard did not so attend and when there was no necessity for their attendance, and charges for committing prisoners when they were not committed.

Exhibit No. 1 is a transcript taken from the criminal docket used by Marshal Wheeler during his administration of the marshal's office. It is shown by this exhibit that in the large majority of these cases two deputy marshals, or guards, were in attendance before the United States commissioner at the preliminary examinations of the different defendants therein referred to. It is also shown that in each of these cases Mr. Louis Vetter is charged for at the rate of $2 per day, as having attended before the commissioner. As appears from this exhibit, Mr. Vetter is alleged to have attended before the United States commissioners three hundred and twelve days, during Marshal Wheeler's incumbency, for whose services Marshal Wheeler has charged the United States in his accounts $624.

Exhibit No. 2 is the affidavit of Mr. Louis Vetter, the gentleman above referred to. In this affidavit Mr. Vetter swears that he is janitor of the public building at Springfield, Ill., which position he has held for nearly twenty-five years, and that he receives a stated compensation of $50 per month from the United States for his services. That he has frequently acted as a deputy marshal before United States commissioners during the examination of prisoners, but that he has never received any compensation for such services. He swears further that during the administration of Marshal Wheeler his best recollection is that he attended at preliminary examinations about twenty times, and positively swears that he did not attend as often as one hundred times. It is therefore shown by the foregoing affidavit that Mr. Vetter's name has been used in these accounts much oftener than he actually served; that he received no part of this $624, which it is shown by Marshal Wheeler's accounts, the United States has been charged for his services as a deputy marshal.

Exhibit No. 3 is an affidavit of late Marshal Wheeler, and refers to the charges in his accounts against the United States for alleged services by Mr. Vetter. In this Mr. Wheeler admits that he knew Mr. Vetter's services were being charged for in his accounts; that he never objected to it until within the last year; that Mr. Vetter received no compensation for this service; and that he was only allowed his regular salary of $50 per month as janitor, and that it has been customary in that district for the past twenty years to use Mr. Vetter as a deputy before commissioners' court and not give him any compensation for such services.

On page 11, of Exhibit No. 51, late Chief Deputy Marshal J. N. Reece swears that he never inserted Mr. Vetter's name in the accounts, except when it had been reported to him by the deputy marshals that Mr. Vetter had been in attendance on the commissioners' court; that he knew Mr. Vetter was receiving a stated salary from the United States, and that the money was paid to Mr. Vetter through him every month, but that he was instructed when he went into Marshal Wheeler's office that Mr. Vetter might be used as a guard before the commissioners.

In view of the fact that a system has grown up in this district to use two deputies or guards at preliminary examinations before United States commissioners, it is but fair to presume it was done for the purpose of increasing the fees, as we are convinced that in a very large majority of these cases it was wholly unnecessary. In the case of Mr. Vetter we have recommended the disallowance of the entire amount charged for his services as deputy marshal or guard, for the reason that the United States should not be required to pay for his services in two different capacities at the same time; but, independent of this, the service as deputy was not performed by Mr. Vetter, except in a few instances, as above stated.

Exhibit No. 4 is the affidavit of S. H. Jones, president of the State National Bank at Springfield, Ill., and one of the State Commissioners at the Joliet, Ill., penitentiary, and refers to the transportation of one Leonard Bailey, a United States prisoner, from Springfield, Ill., to the Joliet penitentiary on March 6, 1880. In the account rendered by Marshal Wheeler, for the services performed by his deputy, C. P. Davis, in transporting Bailey to the penitentiary, a charge of $15 is made for S. H. Jones, "necessary guard," from Springfield to Joliet, a distance of 150 miles. The gentleman above referred to is the only S. H. Jones we could find in or about Springfield, and we therefore presume he is the person who is alleged to have acted as guard on this occasion. In his affidavit Mr. Jones says he has no recollection of ever having acted as guard over this prisoner; that he may have been on the same train with Deputy Marshal Davis and the prisoner, and may have gone to Joliet at the same time, but that he never acted as a guard or received one cent. That he never knew he was charged for as a guard until the account was shown to him by us; that he has no recollection of Deputy Marshal Davis ever having asked him to act as guard on any occasion; that he never really acted as a guard, don't know anything about the case; and that he never had been informed that he had been or was going to be charged for in the accounts as a guard. We expected to meet late Deputy Davis before leaving the district but failed, and hence we were unable to interrogate him with reference to the services performed by him; but the statement of Mr. Jones cannot be doubted, as he is recognized as a gentleman of high standing and reputation in the community in which he resides.

Exhibit No. 5 is an affidavit of Mr. T. J. Puckett, and refers to the service of a subpoena by him on December 31, 1880, upon which he only actually traveled about 10 miles, while the account rendered by Marshal Wheeler makes it appear that he traveled 174 miles.

Exhibit No. 6 is an affidavit of Mr. Joseph F. Marshal, and refers to the service of a subpoena by him on December 23, 1881, upon which he only actually traveled about 7 or 8 miles, while the account as rendered by Marshal Wheeler makes it appear that he traveled 167 miles. This subpoena was sent by mail from Springfield to the postmaster at McLeansborough, Ill.

Exhibit No. 7 is the affidavit of Mr. C. F. Linzie, and refers to the alleged service of a subpoena on him at Duquoin, Ill., on December 16, 1882, by Marshal Wheeler. Mr. Linzie swears that he is not positive how this subpoena was served on him, and says that it may have been served on him at Duquoin or at Springfield, or it may have been sent to him by mail. He distinctly remembers having received one subpoena by mail from Marshal Wheeler, and swears positively that Marshal Wheeler never personally served a subpoena on him at Duquoin in his life. Marshal Wheeler, in his affidavit marked Exhibit No. 52, says that he has no recollection of ever having served a subpoena on Mr. Linzie at Duquoin; that he knows he never traveled 138 miles to serve this subpoena, as his account makes it appear he did, and that if he ever served the subpoena at all he served it in Springfield. The United States has been charged in Marshal Wheeler's accounts with $8.28 for 138 miles' travel to serve this subpoena, when the fact is Marshal Wheeler, as his own statement shows, did not travel any distance to serve it.

Exhibit No. 8 is the affidavit of Mr. Peter Saup, and refers to the service of subpoenas by him, at and near Cairo, Ill. Mr. Saup swears positively that six of the subpoenas referred to were sent to him at Cairo by mail from Springfield; and that in one case he is not positive whether the subpoena was received by him at Springfield or whether it was sent to him by mail. In the accounts rendered by Marshal Wheeler for the service of the above-mentioned subpoenas, constructive mileage to the amount of $77.88 has been charged.

Exhibit No. 9 is the affidavit of Jacob Alyea, and refers to a charge in Marshal Wheeler's accounts for his services on March 3, 1880, for attendance before United States Commissioner Adams, in the case of The United States vs. J. H. Thompson. Mr. Alyea swears that he has no recollection of having performed this service, or of ever having received any money for it, and that he thinks the charge must have been made through mistake.

Exhibit No. 10 is the affidavit of W. H. Hendricks, one of the bailiffs of the United States court at Springfield. Mr. Hendricks's name also appears in the accounts rendered by Marshal Wheeler as having attended before United States commissioners at preliminary examinations, and for each day's attendance the United States has been charged $2. It is shown by Mr. Hendricks's affidavit that he never received any compensation for this service, but was paid $2 per day for his services as a bailiff.

Exhibit No. 11 is the affidavit of William Derring and refers to the arrest of Michael Perrine and David Shanks at Duquoin, Ill., in October, 1883. This affidavit shows conclusively that false charges to the amount of $23.20 have been made in the account rendered by Marshal Wheeler for the arrest of Michael Perrine. We endeavored to ascertain in whose handwriting the Michael Perrine account is made out, but were unable to do so positively. We are, however, both of opinion that this account is in the handwriting of late Marshal Wheeler, but when we called his attention to it he denied having written it. The face of this account shows that it has been systematically and carefully prepared, and evidently with a view to its passage through the hands of the accounting officers of the Treasury without question. It will be observed that the name of "William Hamilton" is used as a guard, and for which the United States is charged $16.50. Also that the name of "John Hamilton" is used as a witness. The fact is this guard and witness is one and the same person, as is shown by the subpoena itself and the affidavit of Mr. William Derring, the special deputy who performed the service. This man William Hamilton was the detective who worked up this case of counterfeiting, and the only reason his name was changed to John Hamilton in this account was evidently for the purpose of deceiving the accounting officers of the Treasury. This charge in the account of $9.90 for 165 miles, travel to serve this subpoena on "John Hamilton" is purely fictitious and fraudulent. The subpoena was issued for and served on William, not John Hamilton, and no travel was required in order to serve it, for it was served on Mr. Hamilton in the city of Springfield, Ill.

Exhibit No. 12 is the affidavit of Henry Whyte, and refers to the arrest of Anthony O'Donnell at Jerseyville, Ill., on September 7, 1883. It will be seen by the affidavit of Mr. Whyte that the charge of $4.86 in Marshal Wheeler's account for 81 miles' travel on this warrant is irregular, for the reason that he did not travel on the warrant, and that the charge of $2 for endeavoring to arrest and $2.50 for committing the prisoner to jail is false.

Exhibit No. 13 is a joint affidavit of James Maulding, sheriff of Hamilton County, Illinois, and Mr. H. M. Crouch, one of his deputies, and refers to the arrest by him of David Clark near McLeansboro, Ill., on October 27, 1883. The accounts of Marshal Wheeler contain a charge of $12.90 for 215 miles' travel by Mr. Crouch on this warrant, which is irregular, as the affidavit of Mr. Crouch shows that he only actually traveled about 18 miles on this warrant instead of 215 miles, as charged.

Exhibit No. 14 is the affidavit of Robert C. Johnson, formerly deputy United States marshal under ex-Marshal Wheeler, and refers to various fictitious and fraudulent charges in the accounts of ex-Marshal Wheeler. It is shown by this affidavit that mileage has been charged on warrants and subpoenas which had been sent by mail and upon which no travel was made; that his name has been fraudulently inserted in the accounts as a guard, and the United States required to pay for his alleged services in cases that he (Johnson) swears he knows absolutely nothing about.

Exhibit No. 15 is the affidavit of B. F. Chase, supervising examiner of pensions at Saint Louis, and corroborates the statement of late Deputy Johnson as to charges for constructive mileage, and relates to the charge of $9.20 for one R. E. Pope as guard from 6 miles west of Kane, Ill., to Springfield, in the case of the United States vs. Orange Handling, who was arrested on April 2, 1882. The accounts of Marshal Wheeler show that the service in this case was performed by late Deputy Marshal C. P. Davis. From the affidavit of Mr. Chase it appears that this charge for guard is irregular, or at least partially so; and that even if a guard was employed after Deputy Davis got on the train with his prisoner, such employment was unnecessary.

Exhibit No. 16 is the affidavit of Patrick Kerrigan, formerly chief of police at East Saint Louis, Ill. It is shown by this affidavit that Mr. Kerrigan has been charged for in Marshal Wheeler's accounts in cases where he (Kerrigan) performed no service whatever; that he has been charged for as a deputy marshal when he did not so act; that he has been charged for in the accounts as a guard when he performed no service and was never asked to act as guard; that writs have been sent to him by mail and mileage charged thereon; that fictitious charges for guards, subsistence of prisoners while in custody, and expenses while endeavoring to arrest, have been inserted in accounts where he did not perform the service; that mileage has been charged for by Marshal Wheeler for service of subpoenas on him (Kerrigan) when in fact Marshal Wheeler made no travel but served the subpoenas on him at Springfield.

Exhibit No. 17 is the affidavit of M. A. Sullivan, principal of the Franklin school at East Saint Louis, Ill. It is shown by this affidavit that Mr. Sullivan was arrested at East Saint Louis, by L. E. Wheeler, a son of late Marshal Wheeler, on March 27, 1883, for a violation of the internal-revenue laws. Mr. Sullivan swears that he was not transported or guarded from East Saint Louis to Springfield, but that he went there voluntarily and alone. He states he was arrested by Deputy Marshal L. E. Wheeler, who met him on the street and requested him to report to the United States attorney at Springfield, which he promised to do and which he did two or three days afterwards; that Deputy Wheeler did not transport him to Springfield and that he was not guarded by any one between East Saint Louis and Springfield. Mr. Sullivan was a member of the Illinois legislature at the time, and had been in Springfield discharging the duties of his position until a day or two previous to his arrest, when he had gone down to East Saint Louis, his home, to spend the Sabbath with his family. This affidavit also shows that Mr. Sullivan appeared before the commissioner only on one day instead of three days, as the account shows.

The account rendered against the United States by Marshal Wheeler for the arrest of Mr. Sullivan shows a charge of $9.60 for transportation of prisoner from place of arrest to Springfield, 96 miles, and $9.60 for Patrick Kerrigan, necessary guard, 96 miles, and attendance of deputies at preliminary examinations on March 28 and 29 and April 5, 1883, at $2 per day.

Exhibit No. 18 is an affidavit of Patrick Kerrigan, the person charged for as having guarded Mr. Sullivan from East Saint Louis to Springfield, in which Mr. Kerrigan swears that he did not act as guard in this case, and that he never authorized any one to use his name in the account as such.

Exhibit No. 19 is the affidavit of late Deputy Marshal Loren E. Wheeler, who arrested Mr. Sullivan, in which he admits that he did not transport him from East Saint Louis to Springfield, as the account makes it appear he did. He says that after arresting Mr. Sullivan he left him and went to the railroad depot, where he got in conversation with a stranger, dressed as a laborer, who told him (Wheeler) that he was trying to get to Chicago; that he asked this man if he knew Mr. Sullivan, and was informed that he did, and he then told this stranger that if he would act as guard over Mr. Sullivan he would pay his fare from East Saint Louis to Springfield; that the stranger promised to do so, and he purchased a ticket and gave it to him. Mr. Wheeler further swears that this man was a total stranger to him; that he had never seen him before, but thinks he has seen him once since in Springfield; and that he knows Mr. Sullivan came to Springfield, but he does not know whether this man accompanied him or not. He admits that the person charged in the account as guard, Patrick Kerrigan, was not a guard, and did not accompany either him or the prisoner from East Saint Louis to Springfield.

Deputy Wheeler's statement with reference to this case is, to say the least, very inconsistent. It is not reasonable to suppose, if he really thought a guard was necessary, that he would have paroled Mr. Sullivan after having arrested him; nor is it quite reasonable to believe that if he did have any fears he would have relied upon the mere statement of an unknown man, whom he had never seen before. It is also strange that this stranger's name does not appear in the account, but that the name of Patrick Kerrigan, who did in a measure assist Deputy Wheeler, but only by pointing out Mr. Sullivan, should be inserted in the account as a guard. We are satisfied from conversations with all the different persons connected with this case that Mr. Sullivan was not guarded at all on this occasion, and that Mr. Wheeler's statement, so far as this case is concerned, is incorrect.

Exhibit No. 20 is the affidavit of James E. Hill, and refers to the arrest of Lafayette Hamilton and Charles N. Cullins at Macedonia, Ill., on March 7, 1883. It is shown by this affidavit that Deputy Hill arrested Lafayette Hamilton at Macedonia, and went out to look for the other defendant, Charles N. Cullins, whom he did not find. He then took Lafayette Hamilton to McLeansborough, when he placed him in the custody of J. H. Jacobs to guard him while he (Hill) went to bed; that he met one W. B. Creemens whom he told that if he would get the other defendant, Charles N. Cullins, and bring him to McLeansborough, he (Hill) would take him (Creemens) to Springfield as a deputy and that he should have the fees in the Cullins case, or he would give him $10 for his trouble. When he got up preparatory to taking the train he found Charles N. Cullins had come in, and was told that Mr. Creemens had sent him word that he did not care to go to Springfield and desired him to take W. D. Cullins, a brother of the prisoner, in his stead, which he consented to do. He says further that he is not responsible for the charges made against the United States in the Charles N. Cullins case, and that he received no credit on account of it and that he had nothing to do with transporting or guarding Charles N. Cullins on this trip.

Exhibit No. 21 is the affidavit of James H. Jacobs, who is charged for in the account as having guarded Lafayette Hamilton from Macedonia to Springfield, Ill., a distance of 206 miles, at 10 cents per mile, $20.60. Mr. Jacobs swears that he only guarded the prisoner while Deputy Hill was asleep at the hotel, and from the hotel to the depot; that Deputy Hill had no guard with him when he left McLeansborough, and that if he had any guard over Lafayette Hamilton, he must have secured one after leaving McLeansborough, and that Deputy Hill told him when they parted at the depot that he did not need a guard.

Exhibit No. 22 is the affidavit of Lafayette Hamilton, who swears that he was not guarded by any one except Deputy Hill from McLeansborough to Springfield; at least, if he was he did not know it.

Exhibit No. 23 is the affidavit of Charles N. Cullins, who swears that J. H. Jacobs only guarded Lafayette Hamilton at the hotel while Deputy Hill was asleep, and from the hotel to the depot at McLeansborough; and that if any one else besides Deputy Hill guarded Lafayette Hamilton from McLeansborough to Springfield, he did not know it.

Exhibit No. 24 is the affidavit of Perry Lee, one of the witnesses against Lafayette Hamilton. He swears that J. H. Jacobs did not guard Lafayette Hamilton from McLeansborough to Springfield, and that if any one except Deputy Hill guarded him he did not know it.

Exhibit No. 25 is the affidavit of Harvey C. Vise, also a witness against Lafayette Hamilton. He swears he did not see anybody but J. H. Jacobs guarding Lafayette Hamilton, and that said Jacobs did not accompany them from McLeansborough to Springfield.

Exhibit No. 26 is the affidavit of Wm. D. Cullins, a brother of Charles N. Cullins, one of the prisoners, and the person who acted in the capacity of assistant deputy marshal. He swears that he does not know of any body acting as guard over Lafayette Hamilton between McLeansborough and Springfield except Deputy Hill.

Exhibit No. 27 is the affidavit of ex-Marshal Wheeler, referring to this case. Mr. Wheeler says that he recalled the voucher in which this account appears from the First Auditor's Office in order to make certain corrections, and that he at that time changed the account so as to allow for the guard a distance of only 20 miles instead of 206 miles. He claims also to have changed the amount from $20.60 to $2, and that this change was agreed upon between Deputy Hill and himself after consultation, and that he is surprised to learn that the account has been changed back from $2 to $20.60, and that this last change was made without his knowledge, and that had he known it was going to be changed back to $20.60 he would not have permitted it. The account in a measure bears Mr. Wheeler out in his statement, as it still plainly shows the erasures where the change was made. It is but just to Deputy Hill to say that he admits that J. H. Jacobs, the person charged in the account as guard, did not act as guard from McLeansborough to Springfield, but he claims that he employed railroad employes to assist him with Hamilton on the different trains upon which he traveled between McLeansborough and Springfield, and, in order to save trouble, used J. H. Jacob's name in the account for the entire trip; and yet it seems to us if he really did employ railroad employes, and they were necessary, the others who accompanied him on the trip would have known it, and more especially is this true in the case of W. D. Cullins, who Mr. Hill himself deputized to assist him. Certainly, Deputy Hill considered W. D. Cullins a reliable person or he would not have placed him in charge of Charles N. Cullins, his brother, and if Mr. Hill did consider him reliable, then he must have known that he did not need any one else as guard, for he and Mr. Cullins were certainly able to look after Hamilton. It is shown by the affidavits above referred to that Charles N. Cullins did not need watching, for he came voluntarily and alone from Macedonia to McLeansboro, a distance of about 10 miles, to surrender to Deputy Hill.

Exhibit No. 28 is the affidavit of B. W. Creemens, the person who it is alleged by the account arrested and transported Charles N. Cullins to Springfield. It is shown by this affidavit that he did not accompany Charles N. Cullins on this trip; that Cullins went voluntarily from Macedonia to McLeansboro and there surrendered to Deputy Hill, and that he (Creemens) arranged with the prisoner to have Deputy Hill take his, Cullins', brother along to Springfield, as a deputy or guard. The affidavit of William D. Cullins, as well as that of Deputy Hill, hereinbefore referred to as Exhibits 20 and 26, shows that this arrangement was entered into and that Deputy Hill placed this prisoner, Charles N. Cullins, in the custody of his own brother, William D. Cullins. The affidavits of Deputy Hill and late Marshal Wheeler, marked Exhibits 20 and 27, show that the appointment of the deputy in the Cullins case is antedated four days; that is to say, the writ shows the appointment of W. B. Creemens on March 2, 1883, when the fact is that indorsement was made on the writ after the prisoners reached Springfield, which was on March 8, 1883.

The account rendered against the United States for services in the Charles N. Cullins case amounts to $78.30, of which the sum of $28.60 is purely fictitious and fraudulent, as is shown by the affidavits of Deputy Hill, late Marshal Wheeler, Charles N. Cullins, Lafayette Hamilton, R. C. Johnson, and W. D. Cullins, as well as others. The name of R. C. Johnson is charged for in this account as a guard a distance of 206 miles at 10 cents per mile, $20.60. Deputy Hill swears that if Mr. Johnson was along he did not see him. Charles N. Cullins, W. D. Cullins, and Lafayette Hamilton swear he was not a guard, and Mr. R. C. Johnson himself swears that he was not a guard and knew nothing about the case.

Exhibits Nos. 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36 are the affidavits of Rolandus R. Barnett, B. W. Creemens, H. S. Humphreys, Bernhard Senn, William Steffin, Chris. Baumann, H. Hartleib, and Abraham Fricker, and refer to fictitious and fraudulent charges in the accounts rendered by late Marshal Wheeler for services performed by late Deputy Marshal G. C. McCord.

Exhibit No. 37 is the affidavit of late Deputy Marshal G. C. McCord, in which he admits many irregularities and fictitious charges in the accounts. This man McCord is reported to be a very unreliable, immoral, and intemperate person, and, we were informed, was removed on account of his intemperance. We came in contact with a dozen or more persons during our travels in the district who informed us that Mr. McCord had borrowed money from them—various amounts—which they loaned him in consequence of his position, and which he had failed to pay, and in addition failed to settle his board bill before leaving Springfield.

Exhibit No. 38 is the affidavit of William M. Crisel, formerly a deputy under ex-Marshal Wheeler, and refers to the services of subpoenas which had been sent to him by mail to McLeansborough, Ill. In each of these cases where the subpoena was sent to Deputy Crisel by mail the accounts of Marshal Wheeler show that constructive mileage to the amount of $11.82 has been falsely charged against the United States. This affidavit also shows a false charge of $19.70 for J. S. Patterson as guard, in the case of A. J. Mackey, arrested by late Deputy Marshal G. C. McCord on May 31, 1882. Mr. Crisel swears that he accompanied Deputy McCord and this prisoner from McLeansborough to Springfield, and that if any such person as J. S. Patterson had acted as guard he would have known it.

Exhibit No. 39 is an affidavit of late Deputy Marshal Crisel, and refers to the arrest of Charles Walker on January 28, 1882. It is shown by this affidavit that Mr. Crisel arrested this defendant and transported him to Springfield. He swears that the warrant was sent to him by mail to McLeansborough, and that he only actually traveled between 15 and 16 miles to serve it, while the account of ex-Marshal Wheeler makes it appear that he traveled 182 miles, and for which the United States is charged $10.82, when it should only have been charged 96 cents. The account of Marshal Wheeler also shows a charge of $18.20 for R. C. Johnson as a guard in this case, from the place of arrest to Springfield.

It will be seen by this affidavit that Mr. Crisel swears he was not accompanied on this trip, or any part thereof, by R. C. Johnson, and that nobody but himself guarded this prisoner from the time he arrested him until he placed him in jail at Springfield. By reference to Exhibit No. 14 it will be seen that Mr. R. C. Johnson positively swears that he did not guard this prisoner any distance. This charge of $18.20 is therefore purely fictitious. This account also shows a charge of $4 for expenses of late Deputy Crisel on January 27 and 28, 1882, while endeavoring to arrest. The affidavit of Mr. Crisel, however, shows that the only expense he was at in endeavoring to arrest this prisoner was his railroad fare from McLeansborough to Belle Rive, which was between 40 and 60 cents. It will be seen, therefore, that of this charge of $4 the sum of at least $3.40 is fictitious and fraudulent, and of the entire account, amounting to $78.92, the sum of $31.46 is fraudulent.

Exhibit No. 40 is an affidavit of late Deputy Marshal Crisel, and refers to the arrest of James Carlin, on January 31, 1882. It is shown by this affidavit that Deputy Crisel arrested James Carlin near Williamsville, Ill., a distance of not to exceed 16 miles from Springfield, and that he transported the prisoner without any guard from the point at which he arrested him to Springfield, where he was placed in jail. The account as rendered by Marshal Wheeler makes it appear that the arrest was made 197 miles from Springfield, and that the prisoner was transported 197 miles by Deputy Crisel and also by a guard, one J. W. Boggs. Mr. Crisel swears positively that he does not know any such person as J. W. Boggs, and that no one guarded this prisoner but himself on this trip. The total amount of the account rendered against the United States in this case is $80.92, of which the sum $66.76 is fictitious.

Exhibit No. 41 is an affidavit of late Deputy William M. Crisel, and refers to the arrest of James Martin at McLeansborough, Ill., on February 9, 1882. The account as rendered against the United States shows a charge of $19.70 for James Randal as guard, and $4 for expenses on March 8 and 9, 1882, while endeavoring to arrest. The affidavit of Mr. Crisel shows that this charge of $19.70 for guard is purely fraudulent, and that at least $3.50 of the $4 charged for expenses in endeavoring to arrest is fictitious.

Exhibits Nos. 42 and 43 are affidavits of late Deputy Marshal Crisel, and refers to the cases of David Calvert and Samuel Gates, who appear to have been arrested on January 19 and 27, 1882, respectively. From these affidavits it appears that both of the above-named persons were subpoenaed to attend as witnesses at Springfield, and that in compliance with such subpoenas they went to Springfield voluntarily, and after their arrival there they were arrested. The accounts as rendered against the United States makes it appear that both of these defendants were arrested by ex-Marshal Wheeler at McLeansborough, Ill.; that he made two different trips to arrest them, traveling 197 miles on each trip; that each prisoner was transported by ex-Marshal Wheeler 197 miles, and that a guard was employed to guard each of these prisoners 197 miles, different names being used as guards in each case, and that the late marshal expended $2 in endeavoring to arrest each of the above-named defendants. In the affidavit of ex-Marshal Wheeler, marked Exhibit No. 52, he swears that he does not recollect anything about the arrest of the above-named defendants, but that he does know he never did arrest them at McLeansborough, and that if he ever arrested them at all he arrested them in Springfield. The United States has been charged $81.42 and $80.92, respectively, for services in the David Calvert and Samuel Gates cases, making a total of $162.34. In the David Calvert case, the utmost farthing Marshal Wheeler was entitled to was $8.50, instead of $81.42 as charged, and in the Samuel Gates case he was entitled to $8 instead of $80.92 as charged; hence of the amount $162.34 charged against the United States, the marshal was entitled by law to $16.50.

Exhibit No. 44 is an affidavit of late Deputy Marshal Crisel, and refers to a charge of $20.30 for one Henry Thornton as a guard in the case of Douglas Darnell, who was arrested by late Deputy G. C. McCord on May 4, 1882. It is shown by this affidavit that Mr. Darnell came in voluntarily, a distance of 4 miles, to McLeansborough, to meet Deputy McCord, and that he was not guarded that distance, and that he (Crisel) does not believe a guard was employed after leaving McLeansborough, and that he knows a guard was not necessary. It is very evident that if it was necessary to have a guard over Douglas Darnell he would not have come in voluntarily and alone 4 miles, and if Deputy McCord had thought it necessary he would not have left the prisoner at home after arresting him.

Exhibits No. 45, 46, and 47 are affidavits of James M. Garvin, John A. Garvin, and E. H. Vice, and refer to the arrest of James M. Garvin for a violation of the United States pension laws. It is shown by these affidavits that Mr. Garvin was subpoenaed to Springfield as a witness, and after his arrival there the United States grand jury returned an indictment against him upon which a bench-warrant was issued and placed in the hands of Marshal Wheeler for service; that Marshal Wheeler did arrest Mr. Garvin in the hall of the United States court-house at Springfield, and Marshal Wheeler told him at the time, if he could not give bond or pay some one to guard him until his friends arrived to go on his bond, he would have to put him in jail, and that he (Garvin) did employ a man selected by Marshal Wheeler and paid $2.50 a day and his board, to guard him for three or four days so as to prevent going to jail. The account rendered against the United States for services in this case shows that the arrest was made by late Marshal Wheeler, but makes it appear that Mr. Garvin was arrested at McLeansborough instead of at Springfield. In his statement, marked Exhibit 52, late Marshal Wheeler swears that he does not recollect the circumstances in this case, but that he is positive he never traveled 197 miles, as charged in the account, to arrest Mr. Garvin, and that if he ever did arrest Mr. Garvin it was in Springfield, Ill. The account against the United States for services in this case amounts to $55.72, while all Marshal Wheeler was entitled to under the law was $2.50.

Exhibits Nos. 48 and 49 are affidavits of R. C. Johnson and William Baldwin, and refer to the arrest of the last-named person at Jacksonville, Ill., on March 4, 1881, by Marshal Wheeler. These affidavits show that Marshal Wheeler did not arrest William Baldwin at Jacksonville, as claimed in his account against the United States, and that he did not transport Baldwin from Jacksonville to Springfield, a distance of 35 miles, and that he did not travel 35 miles to serve a subpoena on R. C. Johnson. The inclosed telegram, attached to the affidavit of R. C. Johnson, which we found among the commissioner's papers, indicates that Mr. Baldwin was arrested without a warrant by R. C. Johnson, who transported him to Springfield, and that the subpoena for Mr. Johnson, if served on him at all, was served on him at Springfield. It is, therefore, very plain why Marshal Wheeler's name was inserted in this account as having made the arrest. It was done for the purpose of fraudulently increasing the fees, for if Mr. Johnson's name had been inserted in the account as the arresting party the accounting officers of the Treasury would not have allowed him to charge $2.10 for traveling 35 miles to serve a subpoena on himself. In this account the amount of $6.20, at least, is fictitious.

Exhibit No. 50 is an affidavit of Deputy United States Marshal James E. Hill. In this affidavit Mr. Hill admits that it has been his practice, when going away from the railroad into the country to take a conveyance and driver, and when he made an arrest to charge the driver in his account as a guard for the distance he drove the team; that it has also been his custom to employ railroad employes, principally brakemen and newsboys on the different trains, to act as guards, and that in cases where he was required to take two or more railroads and employed guards on each train he would charge in his account only the name of one of these persons for the whole trip; that he has always construed the law to be that he was entitled to 6 cents per mile on all writs, from the place of issue to the place of service, regardless of where he got the writ—whether he actually traveled the distance or it was sent to him by mail. He claims that when a writ was sent to him by mail and he arrested a prisoner on it and transported the prisoner to Springfield, that he was then traveling on the writ and transporting the prisoner at the same time, and that he was entitled under the law to 6 cents per mile for traveling on the writ, and in addition 10 cents per mile for himself for transporting the prisoner. He swears positively that it was understood under Marshal Wheeler's administration that deputy marshals were entitled to travel on writs that were sent to them by mail, and claims that Marshal Wheeler knew that mileage was being charged in the accounts on writs that were sent to him by mail.

Exhibit No. 51 is the affidavit of J. N. Reese, formerly office deputy under the administration of late Marshal Wheeler, and refers generally to his connection with the office and the various transactions hereinbefore referred to. He swears positively that the information upon which the accounts hereinbefore referred to were generally made out by him upon the information furnished by the parties who performed the service; that in the several irregular accounts wherein late Marshal Wheeler's name appears as having performed the services he made up the accounts upon the information furnished to him by the marshal; that all accounts were given to Marshal Wheeler and carefully examined by him before they were presented for the approval of court, and that he is not responsible for errors, irregularities, or fraudulent charges in Marshal Wheeler's accounts; that he simply acted as a clerk and made up the accounts upon the information furnished to him by Marshal Wheeler and the different deputies, and that he simply put in the accounts what they told him, and swears positively that he never inserted Marshal Wheeler's name in any account without having first been instructed by him to do so.

Exhibit No. 52 is an affidavit of Jacob Wheeler, late United States marshal, and refers to the various cases in which his name appears in the accounts as having performed services, and also shows many of the fictitious charges made in his accounts for services not performed and expenses never incurred.

Exhibit No. 53 is an affidavit of late Marshal Wheeler, and refers generally to the management of his office, and an arrangement entered into between him and his three principal deputies when he was first appointed. In this he shows that when he took charge of the office that he was entirely unfamiliar with the duties required of him, and that he endeavored, as near as possible, to discharge the duties of the office in accordance with the law, and admits that his administration has been exceedingly loose and imperfect, and that false, fraudulent, and fictitious charges have crept into his accounts against the United States. He swears positively that all such charges were entirely unintentional on his part, and that he endeavored to prevent any charges being made in his accounts, except those which were lawful and just, and that he is willing to refund all moneys which he has collected from the United States on account of the false charges which we called to his attention. In this statement he also swears that he entered into an agreement with Deputy Marshals J. N. Reese, C. P. Davis, and George C. McCord, to the effect that he was to first receive the maximum compensation allowed him by law out of the earnings of the office, and that whatever remained was to be their compensation, and they were to be allowed the maximum compensation for deputy marshals if the earnings of the office would justify it; but that he now sees what an incentive this agreement was for those gentlemen to manufacture fees and to swell the costs against the United States as much as possible, for the larger the accounts were made the larger compensation they received. He further swears that he always instructed his deputies never to charge constructive mileage or for any service not actually performed, and admits that he has not given the necessary attention to the duties of his office, and says that he has relied entirely too much on others, and has not been sufficiently careful in the examination of his accounts and watching the details of his office.

Exhibit No. 54 is a statement of disallowances and suspensions amounting to $2,152.22, which is based upon the exhibits hereinbefore referred to in this report.

In view of the loose and careless manner in which the marshal's office has been conducted during Marshal Wheeler's incumbency, together with the fact that both Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Reese swear positively that they did not know of these irregularities in the accounts until their attention was called to them by us, and for the further reason that they both expressed a desire to appear before the committee and make full explanations, we will refrain from expressing our opinion as to where the responsibility rests, but will leave that for the committee.

It is shown, however, by the affidavits hereinbefore referred to, as well as the court papers, that accounts have been raised and illegal charges made in the marshal's office without the knowledge of the deputies who actually performed the service, and after the writs had been returned by them to the marshals office.

In conclusion, we desire to say that every facility was afforded us by the court, as well as the officers thereof, to make our examination thorough and complete, but we do not wish to be understood as having made a complete investigation of the entire district, for we were recalled to Washington before having traversed but a small part of the southern portion of the district.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully,

JOEL W. BOWMAN.
JAMES A. WINSTON.

EXHIBIT No. 51.—Affidavit of J. N. Reece, late chief deputy in the southern district of Illinois, and refers to the general management of the office and the manner in which he made up the accounts.

Statement under oath, made by J. N. Reece, of Springfield, Ill., on the 11th day of June, 1884, upon examination by Joel W. Bowman, examiner, Department of Justice. Present also, James A. Winston, esq.

J. N. REECE, being duly sworn by Mr. Bowman, did testify as follows:

By Mr. BOWMAN:

Question. Do you desire to make a voluntary statement with regard to your connection with the marshal's office?—Answer. Yes, sir; I would like to make a statement showing the plan under which it was worked.

Q. How long were you chief deputy in Marshal Wheeler's office?—A. I went in there, I think, in July or August, 1880, and went out, I think, in 1883, with them—whatever time it was.

Q. Did you have the entire management of the office; that is to say, did you have the supervision of the accounts?—A. I made up the accounts under the direction of the marshal.

Q. I wish you would just define your duties, general.—A. My duties were these. I had charge of the disbursement of the funds—that is, paying out the funds on orders of the court for witnesses, jurors, prisoners, and so forth. I had, of course, to make up the weekly statements of each week. I had charge of making up the emolument account and the subpœnas I would occasionally send out yet as a rule but occasionally sent out subpœnas. The marshal would send out subpœnas and the deputies would frequently carry them out. When those subpœnas were returned I or some one in the office would enter them up on tabs—tabs like this here [pointing to a book of such, on the table before the examiner]—tabs showing the service and number of persons served. The tabs of the deputies would be made up mostly by the deputies doing the work. They in most cases would make their own returns. Deputies frequently would make up returns for deputies, but it was under their direction and dictation. These accounts as made up by deputies would be kept in a drawer, and when the time came for making up an account they were referred to Marshal Wheeler and he would go through them, examine them, and check them off. If there were no changes to be made he would mark them. They were then placed in my hands or in the hands of some one connected with the office, and copies would be made of them. Accounts would be made up and after the marshal was satisfied they were all right they would be presented to the court.

Q. In a case where you sent a writ by mail, did the marshal send a writ by mail to a point distant from Springfield, which writ was returned while he taxed a regular cost on that?—A. The writ generally would be returned to the marshal. That is, he had charge of all the mail. I never opened the mail, unless in his absence. The mileage, or miles traveled, was generally indicated on the writ when laid on my table.

Q. Was it not a very general custom to send writs by mail in this district?—A. Can't say that it was a general custom—frequently done.

Q. Was it not done very largely, especially so in the case of subpœnas?—A. Well, it was frequently done. I believe I have known a great many instances where they were sent by mail. These subpœnas were very seldom in my hands. Subpœnas and writs were generally taken charge of by the marshal, writs more generally by deputies. They would come in here and be anxious to get work—get control of the writs. I would very seldom see them till after returns were made.

Q. Any effort made by you or the marshal to prevent charging mileage on these writs sent to distant points by mail?—A. Invariably the rule to notify these parties serving these writs that they were entitled to mileage for the actual miles traveled. They would give the miles traveled.

Q. How do you account for the fact that these accounts are full of charges for mileage never traveled; how do you account for the fact that mileage is charged on many subpœnas sent by mail?—A. The only explanation I can make is that when the deputies sent in the subpœnas they must have stated what they had traveled on the subpœnas.

Q. We will take the subpœna in the Gates case—in the case of the United States vs. Samuel Gates, a subpœna served by W. L. Crisel, deputy. In that case he admits he only traveled 15 miles each way; how do you account for the charge in that case, made in your own handwriting?—A. That it is clearly an error, in my opinion.

Q. Can you account as to how you should make such an error as that—right there before your eyes?—A. Not unless the deputies would indicate the mileage from different points.

Q. Well, but Mr. Crisel has indicated there just exactly what he did, and right in the face of that you have added a hundred and sixty miles to the service, apparently without any authority.—A. Well, sir, unless I had some memorandum it is clearly an error. There would be no object in taxing it up for the benefit of Mr. Crisel.

Q. Do you mean to say Mr. Crisel got the benefit of that?—A. He certainly got the benefit of those charges.

Q. How much did Mr. Crisel receive on that—have you any idea?—A. I have no idea; Mr. Wheeler adjusted the account.

Q. What arrangement did you have with Mr. Wheeler when you went into the office with regard to your pay?—A. I was to have $2,000 as clerk, and if the earnings as deputy would justify it I was to have more.

Q. Was there any understanding that anybody else had to be paid before you got your $2,000?—A. There was an understanding that the marshal was to have his salary. The marshal, in making up his returns, would allow himself the full amount.

Q. You mean by that his maximum compensation allowed by law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, if there was only the maximum allowed to the marshal, you received nothing?—A. Well, nothing of that kind was ever discussed. I was to have $2,000 myself as clerk.

Q. Whether the marshal made anything or not?—A. Well, that contingency never was discussed—that point never was raised.

Q. Didn't Marshal Wheeler say to you and Mr. McCord and Mr. Davis, when he took you in the office, that he couldn't say just what he would allow you, but he was going to take $6,000 first—was going to receive his maximum first—and after that he would divide the office fees between you three gentlemen?—A. That was the understanding, of course; he was to have his maximum. That was the understanding when I came in, of course. It was understood the marshal was to have his maximum allowed by law. He said when making up his accounts they would go forward, and frequently $300 or $400 would be cut out, and while it would show that he was getting his maximum under the rule, he actually would not be, because the Department would throw out, and did frequently throw out, $300 or $400 at a time.

Q. They were evidently for services you were not entitled to?—A. I suppose that's true.

Q. What was the custom in appointing special deputies to serve writs; were deputies frequently appointed after the service was performed by them?—A. Not as a rule. There may be some instances of that kind, but I don't remember who nor what they were.

Q. Do you remember of such an instance?—A. I have an indistinct recollection of one instance, and I think it was after the party was brought in; I couldn't say who it was or where it was; I recollect hearing the matter discussed; but as a rule it was not done.

Q. Were you ever instructed by Mr. Wheeler never to make any charge for service that was not actually and necessarily performed?—A. Well, that was the understanding always, that there was no charge to be made unless it was actually and necessarily performed.

Q. Did Mr. Wheeler ever instruct you never to make any charge for constructive mileage?—A. That was the understanding. A writ not traveled on wasn't to be entered—that is, when it was known. Of course, we had to take the statement of the deputies in making their returns when making up the tabs.

Q. It seems to me very strange you would take the statements of the man when you knew you had sent a writ by mail. Why should you allow mileage when you knew you had sent the writ by mail?—A. I have no recollection of taxing any that I knew to be sent by mail.

Q. Now, General, I wish you would look at that—United States against James M. Anderson—in which you charge mileage 115 miles—$6.90. Did you actually perform that travel?—A. If this is the writ—I think it is on parties in Hancock County—I did travel on it once. I was in one county, came down to Bushnell, went from there to Paris, and from there to Carthage. If I recollect, Major Connolly was very anxious to have the thing closed up, and if I recollect right this was a case—

Q. You claim then you actually collected that money?—A. I claim that I traveled and made the demand and made a levy, and I think, if I am not mistaken, it was afterwards paid here. There were one or two cases—

Q. Now, General, there is a subpoena to Martha McCartney which appears to have been served by you on the 6th day of February, 1883. Did you serve that subpoena and travel 127 miles on it?—A. Well, on that subpoena—I was in the east part of the State, and traveled on the subpoena.

Q. From where?—A. Springfield. I was in the east part of the State, over about Paris.

Q. You claim you took that subpoena over with you?—A. I took that subpoena over with me to Paris.

Q. One hundred and twenty-seven miles?—A. Well, it was—let us see—I was going to Paris by way of Tuscola; don't remember now.

Q. Where did you serve the subpoena on that lady?—A. I don't remember. I didn't get service at that time if I recollect right, but I was going to Paris to visit a military company and carried the subpoenas with me.

Q. You didn't get service at that time?—A. It was a counterfeit case. No; I don't think the service was made at that time—my recollection—it seems to me she was away from home.

Q. When you didn't get service you couldn't travel on it?—A. I don't know; that was the custom—our rule—man traveled on a writ—

Q. Whether he got service or not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is even if service was had subsequently?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Charged two mileages, then?—A. When I came in here I was told that could be done. I mean that I could charge mileage whether I got service or not, or when I subsequently got service.

Q. Where was service had on that writ?—A. I think she was notified and came in.

Q. Came in, and then service was made right here in Springfield?—A. I don't remember as to that, but I know she came in and service was actually had on her.

Q. If she came in and you got no service on her—if she was ever served at all she must have been served right here?—A. I can't say positively. I know she lives near Neoga. I was informed she wasn't at home. I couldn't say whether service was had on her there, or where it was.

Q. Have you ever sent any writs to Mr. P. Saup, at Cairo, by mail?—A. I have sent several.

Q. Have you never sent writs or subpoenas in criminal cases?—A. Don't remember.

Q. Why did you put in two hundred dollars—adding so many dollars to that account—subpoena, William Kershaw, served in February, '83?—A. I was instructed to put it in—miles traveled.

Q. By whom?—A. Mr. Saup.

Q. Did he or not travel at all on it, or was it sent to him by mail?—A. I certainly had information that it was traveled on.

Q. Who did you receive it from?—A. Either Mr. Saup or Marshal Wheeler.

Q. What does that cross mean—that runs through the accounts—that cross mark I see in several places?—A. I think a mark made by Mr. Wheeler.

Q. General, you made out that account, didn't you [exhibiting]?—A. Mr. Hill made out that account.

Q. Well, that's an account against the United States for service by Mr. Hill in March, 1883, for the arrest of one Lafayette Hamilton. You recollect, General, that Mr. Wheeler recalled that account to make corrections, and charged twenty miles in there for J. H. Jacobs as a guard?—A. He did make corrections on one of these accounts. I think he reduced the account, if I recollect right.

Q. Why was that raised to $20.60 from $2, which it was originally?—A. I don't know.

Q. That's your handwriting?—A. It is all in my handwriting with the exception of the change. I did not charge the amount. If I recollect right—in a memorandum we had of the earnings of Mr. Hill—I think $80 he had credit for in this case in the book as I entered it up, and he took exception to it and insisted his earnings in that case were over $100. If there is any change it was done without my knowledge or consent. I know I made up the earnings and gave Mr. Hill credit as fixed by Mr. Wheeler after he had made the change, striking out—I don't remember the particulars about it or anything of the kind—know that was done.

Q. You know Mr. Wheeler didn't allow on that to exceed $2 and it was afterwards increased to $20. That was done without the knowledge and consent of Mr. Wheeler?—A. I know in a memorandum I had it was something over $80, as I said, and—

Mr. WINSTON. It shows at the bottom.

A. Yes.

Mr. WINSTON. It appears here in your figures $87.90 and subsequently increased.

Q. Now, General, there is the account for arresting Charles L. Cullins (?) in March, 1883. That account also made out by you?—A. No, sir; by Mr. Hill; made out at the same time the other was made out. Mr. Hill always made out the account where he made any account. I think he had a writ for both those parties, and he invariably made his own return.

Q. Do you swear positively, General, that the data on which you made out this account were furnished by Mr. Hill?—A. My recollection is that he made out the tab himself without my assistance at all, and that this is merely a copy of the original tab.

Q. Well, there is a charge in there for R. C. Johnson, guard, $20.60; do you know whether R. C. Johnson acted as guard?—A. I don't know.

Q. Who told you that he did?—A. I only know as the information was given there by the parties making up the returns.

Q. Now, Mr. Hill seems to have been accompanied on the trip by a man by the name of Clemmens—Cullins; Mr. Cullins wouldn't have given that information. You would have gone to Mr. Hill?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then if there is anything wrong in this account Mr. Hill is responsible for it?—A. Certainly; for he had entire charge of it.

Q. Look at that warrant—arrest of Lafayette Hamilton, Charles L. or N. Cullins; do you know when that deputization was put on there; Deputy Cremmens (?) put in as marshal in that case?—A. No, sir.

Q. You know that was given to Mr. Hill?—A. My recollection is Mr. Hill took that writ.

Q. You never saw W. B. Cremmens but once, and that was when he came back with the prisoner?—A. Don't know that I ever saw him. In that case the tab was made up entirely without my knowledge, and if Mr. Cremmens was here he made his settlement with Mr. Wheeler, and I had nothing to do with it. Mr. Wheeler always made his own settlements with these deputies; something I never had anything to do with.

Q. I notice in your accounts, or in Mr. Wheeler's accounts rather, made up by you, that Mr. Louis Vetter is charged as deputy marshal in attendance before the commissioner quite a number of times. How did that charge come to be made?—A. Always reported by a deputy; I always regard Mr. Vetter as being present.

Q. Didn't you know he was receiving a stated compensation from the United States for his labor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn't you pay him that money yourself every month?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then did you think you had a right to use him as a deputy and charge the Government over again for his service in any other way?—A. Well, I was instructed when I came in here that Mr. Vetter might be used as a guard before the commissioner. These deputies invariably reported him, and it was a matter that I really know nothing about.

Q. What was the character of these prisoners? Were they desperate men as a rule?—A. Well, there were cases where they were understood to be desperate.

Q. But the general run—weren't these men simply small violators of the internal revenue law, and cases of that kind?—A. The majority of the cases were of that kind. But I had no communication with the prisoners and knew nothing about them—never came in contact with them.

Q. Did you think it was necessary to use two deputy marshals to watch these prisoners before the United States commissioner?—A. I couldn't say. I asked the question several times why they were reported, and the answer given was it was necessary to have some one in the room as the deputies were called out frequently. That was the explanation given.

Q. Was it not a general custom in this district to use two deputy marshals in this district at examinations before the commissioner?—A. Yes, sir; I believe it was.

Q. Here is a subpoena said to have been served on Leonidas Walker February 3, 1881, at McLeansborough—197 miles traveled, at 6 cents a mile, making $11.82 cents—while it appears that Mr. Leonidas Walker made that service on himself?—A. That certainly is an error, for the man couldn't serve himself.

Q. It isn't likely he would travel 197 mile to serve himself?—A. No; that is an error.

Q. How do you account for that, general?—A. Well, sir, whoever entered that tab, he just copied the name of the witness.

Q. But this is in your handwriting, general?—A. This part is, of course, but I mean the original.

Q. Isn't that $11.82 in there a fraudulent charge?—A. I couldn't say as to that.

Q. Wasn't that served on Mr. Leonidas Walker by mail, or wasn't it served on him right here in this town?—A. I couldn't say in regard to that; I don't know Mr. Walker.

Q. Mr. Walker is prosecuting attorney—of what county?

Mr. WINSTON. Of Hamilton; McLeansborough.

A. That is clearly an error.

Q. That $11.82 ought not to have been charged?—A. No, sir; unless it was charged by some party.

Q. Don't you understand that one can't travel and another man charge for service, don't you understand the law on that point?—A. That was the understanding when I came in here.

Q. My understanding of the law is, general, that service can only be charged for by those who actually perform it. If you give four or five writs to Tom Smith and let them be charged in somebody else's name, Tom Smith can go all over the State and they can be charged to Tom, Dick, and Harry as so many miles from Springfield, each one. That isn't actual travel within the meaning of the law. The law says this service must be actually and necessarily performed, and the charge must be made by the man who performed the service. Here is an account against the United States for service in arresting Joseph B. Cowl January, 1880. You will observe Mr. Cowl, according to this account, was arrested in Springfield, Ill., and there is a charge there for endeavoring to arrest January 25, 26, and 27—three days—$6—N. B. Ames.

What do you think of that charge?—A. If I recollect rightly, this man Ames claimed that this person was out in the country and he spent that number of days endeavoring to find him.

Q. And finally found him right in Springfield?—A. I think he found him within a mile or two of the town.

Q. Don't Mr. Ames live in Springfield?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He would be put to no expense, then, would he?—A. He claimed he had a horse, or something of that kind.

Q. I wish you would look at this account—charges against the United States for the arrest of James M. Garvin, February 15, 1881, at McLeansborough, Ill., and tell me what you know about that case.—A. I know the man was here under arrest and that the marshal made the arrest.

Q. Where?—A. That's a matter I couldn't say, positively. I know I was directed by the marshal to make out the return on the writ in his name, which I did; and I also made up the account under his direction.

Q. At that time the grand jury was in session. Didn't you know the marshal was right here in Springfield?—A. Most of the time he was.

Q. Didn't you know he was at the time this man was arrested?—A. I couldn't say as to that. Frequently he would be out a day, or two days.

Q. There is the warrant under which this man was arrested. You will observe it is a bench warrant. That return is made in your handwriting, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, general, how could Marshal Wheeler have traveled down to McLeansborough, 197 miles, arrested this prisoner, and brought him up here without your knowing it?—A. It would have been hard to do, though Mr. Wheeler was frequently in and out—absent for one or two days.

Q. This account is made out in your handwriting?—A. This is my handwriting—if this is not a copy—if this is the original it is my handwriting.

Q. You observe there that the Government has been charged $55.72 for service in arresting that man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you obtain the information on which you made out that account?—A. I certainly got it from the person who served the writ.

Q. Well, according to the return on the warrant, which is in your handwriting, Mr. Wheeler served that writ, didn't he?—A. Yes, sir; he served that writ.

Q. Then you must have got your information from Mr. Wheeler?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That, then, is what I am to understand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Wheeler, then, told you he arrested this man at McLeansborough?—A. It must follow.

Q. Told you he traveled 197 miles on that writ?—A. Can't say he actually said he traveled that, but he evidently told me the mileage was 197 miles on writ.

Q. Is there any way possible that you could have made up that account without Mr. Wheeler having given you the information?—A. No, sir; I don't think it is possible. Don't know anything about Mr. Garvin, where he lived or anything about it.

Q. Then if there are any fraudulent items in that account, Mr. Wheeler gave you the information on which such charges were made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What would Marshal Wheeler be entitled to in this case if we show beyond any question that this man was arrested right in the hall of the court-house, right here in Springfield?—A. My understanding is he would be entitled to $2.50.

Q. Then $53.22 of that account is fictitious apparently?—A. Unless the mileage was actually traveled as set forth, it is.

Q. I wish you would look at this case. This is an account against the United States on account of arresting William Baldwin, March 4, 1881. He appears to have been arrested by Marshal Wheeler, at Jacksonville, Ill. I wish you would please tell me what you know about that case.—A. Well, I don't know unless the arrest was made by Mr. Wheeler.

Q. Who told you to make that indorsement on that warrant, general?—A. Must have been by the direction of the marshal. I never made any return without his direction.

Q. I wish you would look at that telegram, general—a telegram from Jacksonville, Ill., dated March 4, 1881, to the marshal, and signed by R. C. Johnson, deputy.—A. I have no recollection of ever seeing that dispatch.

Q. That shows beyond question that Marshal Wheeler did not arrest William Baldwin?—A. Looks like it.

Q. Don't it show positively that he did not arrest him?—A. Yes, sir [picking up the warrant]; that, by J. N. Reece, should not be there. If Mr. Wheeler made the arrest the return on the warrant was made by his order.

Q. Suppose Mr. Johnson made that arrest. Then by whose direction did you make that return on the warrant?—A. Must have been made by Wheeler. I didn't make any return unless instructed by him to do so. It may possibly be an error.

Q. I want to call your attention to an item or two in this account. From that telegram it appears that Baldwin was arrested without a warrant, doesn't it?—A. Looks that way; yes, sir.

Q. And that he came to Springfield with Deputy R. C. Johnson. When he got to Springfield the warrant was sworn out, and was probably served on him here. Now, in the account there is a charge against the United States of $2.10 for 35 miles' travel upon this warrant. This is purely fictitious, isn't it?—A. If it wasn't traveled on it shouldn't be there.

Q. From the evidence before you it is clearly fictitious?—A. From the dispatch I should think it was.

Q. By inserting the name of Wheeler you obtained $3.80 for transporting that prisoner?—A. It is the same with Johnson.

Q. If Johnson's name was where Wheeler's is it wouldn't have cut any figure?—A. Would be entitled to the same.

Q. But if it had been there you wouldn't have charged $2.50 for Mr. Johnson for serving the subpoena in Jacksonville that day?—A. He was a witness, I remember.

Q. Couldn't do it at all, could you?—A. No.

Q. Then that is purely false, fraudulent, and fictitious—that charge, isn't it?—A. According to this dispatch here, and if the man was arrested and brought in without any warrant.

Q. Let me have Mr. Baldwin's affidavit there; that will enlighten the general's mind.

Mr. WINSTON. The warrant couldn't have been issued till the man got here; subpoena appeared to have been served at Jacksonville before he was brought here.

Q. That account seems to have been made out very systematically with a view of getting as many fees as possible; if the facts had been stated as they are those charges couldn't have been made against the United States. (Affidavit of Baldwin read; also the affidavit of Johnson in which 1884 instead of 1881 appeared, and was acknowledged by the examiner to be his own error in drawing the affidavit.) There are the facts in that case.—A. Well, sir, I made up that return by order of the marshal, and this is J. N. Reece should not be there.

Q. Do you claim that you made up this account by order of the marshal?—A. Yes, sir.

(At this point the examiner administered the oath to witness, swearing him to the statements already made, and any that should be made hereafter as true.)

Q. (Exhibiting.) What is that?—A. A subpoena, I think, I traveled on going down there—Effingham County.

Q. Did you serve that man?—A. I can't say positively I did. I met him, but I don't know whether I served him at that time or not. If I recollect right he was the city marshal.

Q. This refers to a subpoena served January 14, 1882, on H. C. Henry, at Mason. Do you claim to have traveled 97 miles and served that?—A. I traveled on the subpoena. I was going to the east part of the State and carried the subpoena.

Q. You noticed the date of that, January 14, 1882. You claim to have served that man at Mason on January 14, and now you will observe a service of H. W. Brown at Altamont on the same day.—A. That may be.

Q. That's physically impossible.—A. Altamont isn't very far from where he resides.

Q. But after you served him at Mason City how could he come down here and get a subpoena and travel 96 miles on it and serve it?—A. I don't understand it. I know I traveled on the subpoena.

Q. Didn't you give Mr. Henry a subpoena for Mr. H. W. Brown at Mason City?—A. I don't remember whether I did or not. Don't think I did; no recollection of doing that.

Q. There is the subpoena which was alleged to have been served by you on January 17, on R. W. Hindman, at Mount Vernon, Ill. Look at that and tell us what you know about it.—A. If my recollection is right I was visiting a military company at Harrisburg in the southern part of the State and had that subpoena with me. I think I was on the Louisville and Nashville train; had time to stop there and left the subpoena, I think, on the train. I don't remember whether I met Mr. Hindman at that time or not.

Q. Who did you leave the subpoena with?—A. If I recollect right I left it with the mail agent on the train.

Q. You didn't stop at Mount Vernon, did you?—A. Not any great length of time. I was there probably ten minutes.

Q. There is a subpoena said to have been served by you on January 17, at Weldon, Ill., on Sophrena Hartford and John Nelson. What have you got to say about that?—A. Well, sir, that's an error.

Q. Did you travel 57 miles and serve that subpoena?—A. No, sir; I didn't.

Q. Where did you serve it?—A. I don't know that I served it. I would have to refresh my memory as to that.

Q. You know you didn't travel 57 miles to serve it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then that charge there is fictitious ($2.42)?—A. It is an error evidently.

Q. I wish you would look at that service of a subpoena on George Dunway, January 19, at Mahomet.—A. At that time I had business with Mr. White, of Hoopstown, about the purchase of some land. He desired to purchase some land of me in Christian County, and I made a trip—went by way of Bloomington, and from there to Champaign, and at Mahomet—I am not positive whether I saw the man or not, but I stopped there a few minutes—went from there to Champaign, and from there to Hoopstown.

Q. Do you recollect of ever having served that man?—A. That man Dunway I think I served. I wouldn't be positive, but I know I traveled on the subpoena. Mahomet I think is in Champaign County.

Q. Whose writing is that; isn't that yours, with a stub pen [exhibiting]?—A. It looks very much like it, but still I wouldn't be positive.

Q. An account against the United States for service alleged to have been rendered in the arrest of Edward Daily, January 13, 1882, at East Saint Louis, Ill.?—A. Mr. Carrigan frequently did work for the office.

Q. Is that account made out in your handwriting?—A. I wouldn't say positively whether it is or not.

Q. What is your impression about it?—A. I don't think it is. (An admitted resemblance to his handwriting.)

Q. Here is a charge of $9.60 for a guard, B. Luddington, in this case; do you know anything about that man?—A. Don't know Mr. Luddington.

Q. Where did you get the information that he was a guard in that case?—A. Got it from Mr. Kerrigan.

Q. If you made out that account you swear positively that you got the information from Mr. Kerrigan, who said he was his guard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Eighty-one dollars and forty-two cents the total amount of that account; I wish you would look at the case—charges against the United States on account of the arrest of David Calvert on January 19, 1882, and tell me what you know about that case.—A. I have no knowledge only as presented by this tab here.

Q. That's in your handwriting, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From whom did you obtain the information upon which you made out that account?—A. From the marshal.

Q. Do you swear positively to that?—A. No other source from which I could get it.

Q. What is the total amount?—A. The total footing is $81.42.

Q. If that man was arrested right here in Springfield, how much is the office entitled to on that account?—A. If he was arrested here the office would be entitled to $8.50.

Q. I wish you would look at this account against the United States for the arrest of Samuel Gates in January, 1882, and tell us what you know about that.—A. I know nothing only as it is shown by the tab there.

Q. By the tab you mean the account?—A. The account; yes, sir.

Q. That account is in your handwriting, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you get the information on which you made up that account?—A. The only source I could get it from is the marshal.

Q. Do you swear positively, then, that you got the information on which you made out that account from him?—A. There is no other source from which I could.

Q. I wish you would look at that warrant for the arrest of Samuel Gates. Isn't that indorsement in your handwriting?—A. This Wheeler is in my handwriting; 27th of January is in my handwriting; that is not.

Q. You don't know where that man was arrested, you say?—A. No, sir.

Q. All you know about it, then, is what Marshal Wheeler told you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the total footing of that account?—A. Eighty dollars and ninety-two cents.

Q. If Mr. Gates was really arrested in Springfield, how much would the marshal be entitled to?—A. He would be entitled to charge $8.

Q. Then the difference between $80.92 and $8 is fictitious?—A. If those are the facts, it is.

Q. I wish you would look at this—alleged service of P. D. Tyrrell in arresting one Thomas Andrews, January 30, 1882. Tell us what you know about that.—A. I know Mr. Tyrrell brought the man—I think that was the case—brought him from Belleville and made that return. I recollect in that case of Mr. Tyrrell he acted rather mysterious about it, of course, and I asked him some questions, and the impression was left on my mind that he was using this man Andrews in some counterfeit cases he was working up and had him confined in jail; and, if my recollection is right, Mr. Wheeler paid him $10 at one time. He didn't want to take it, and I don't think there was any receipt given for it.

Q. Yes, there was, and that receipt accompanies the emolument return, too. Who furnished you the information on which this account was made out?—A. Mr. Tyrrell.

Q. Positive of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sure he told you Patrick Kerrigan was guard on this occasion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Swear positively to that, do you?—A. My best recollection—satisfied Kerrigan was here at the time.

Q. I wish you would look at the case of an account against the United States for service on account of the arrest of James Carlin, January 31, 1882, and tell us what you know about that?—A. I have no knowledge, only as gained from the tab. In that case Mr. Crisel made his return and dictated the account.

Q. Do you swear positively that Mr. Crisel gave you the information on which you made out that account?—A. Yes, sir; no other way of my getting it.

Q. Are you positive Mr. Crisel told you he traveled 197 miles to arrest that man?—A. I can't say he said he traveled 197 miles, but the mileage to be charged was 197.

Q. Didn't Mr. Crisel tell you when he arrested James Carlin and brought him in A. I have no recollection about the case at all. It strikes me that this man Carlin here, that he arrested him at a place called Williamsville, 12 miles from Springfield?—I heard Wheeler and Crisel discussing the point, I think—had made a trip to McLeansborough for this man Carlin, and he wasn't there. My recollection is, they were standing at my desk, and that I was busy writing, and when they got ready to make the tab, I took a tab out of my drawer and made it out as directed by Mr. Crisel, and the mileage as given was 197.

Q. Let me have Crisel's statement in the Carlin case. I want to read that to you [reads the affidavit of Crisel].—A. Well, that information certainly came from Crisel. There was a conversation held there. It seems to me this warrant had been issued before that and some one had made a trip on it to McLeansborough and failed to find the party. I think this is the case.

Q. Then do I understand you to admit that you were aware this man was arrested 12 miles from here?—A. No, sir. I heard that conversation about traveling to McLeansborough, 197 miles, on the writ, and I made up the tab as shown here from data given by Mr. Crisel. I had no knowledge of this.

Q. Look at the warrant for the arrest of James Carlin. Isn't that indorsement in your handwriting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you swear that Mr. Crisel signed that after it was made out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Swear to that positively, do you?—A. I do most assuredly.

Q. How much of that account is correct, if this man was arrested at Williamsville, as Mr. Crisel says he was?—A. Would be entitled to $11.92.

Q. Out of $80.92?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sixty-nine dollars incorrect. Look at this account for the arrest of Samuel Proting on February 2, 1882. That in your handwriting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you obtain the information on which you made out that account?—A. From Mr. Kerrigan.

Q. Do you swear positively that Mr. Kerrigan gave you the data?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you swear positively that Mr. Kerrigan told you he had a guard named P. D. Tyrrell in that case?—A. He certainly did, for I had no other source of information.

Q. (Reading the affidavit of Kerrigan.)—A. The account was made up in the way it was given.

Q. Is that on the warrant in your handwriting?—A. Yes, sir. He brought it in and asked me to make out the return—stood right there—got his tab taken to the marshal, and Mr. Kerrigan got his money.

Q. I wish you would please look at this account, General, against the United States for the arrest of William Grady, February 2, 1882, and tell me whether or not you know anything about that?—A. I know nothing only as shown there by the return.

Q. Who did you obtain the information from on which you made out that account?—A. Obtained it from the marshal.

Q. Are you absolutely positive about that?—A. Yes, sir; as I stated, I have no other way of getting the information.

Q. What is the amount of that?—A. Thirty-two dollars and ten cents.

Q. If that man was arrested in Springfield what would the marshal be entitled to?—A. Eight dollars.

Q. Eight dollars out of $32.10?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now look at this account for the arrest of Henry Winters, February 20, 1882.—A. That is in the same category with the rest.

Q. That account is made out in your handwriting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you get the information on which you made it out?—A. Got it from the marshal.

Q. Isn't the indorsement on the warrant in your handwriting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sixty-two dollars and twenty-two cents taxed there, isn't it?—A. That's merely from information in the clerk's office—taken from this.

Q. Isn't that taxation of fees in your handwriting?—A. Don't think it is. That's merely the footing of this tab here.

Q. If that man was arrested in Springfield, what was the marshal's proper fee out f that?—A. Eight dollars.

Q. Eight dollars out of $61.22?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made out this account on information furnished you by the marshal?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Absolutely positive about that?—A. I have no knowledge of the case other than that which was given to me by the party serving.

Q. I wish you would look at this account for the arrest of James Martin, March 9, 1882, and tell me whether or not that account is in your handwriting?—A. Yes, sir; I think it is.

Q. Where did you obtain the information on which you made out that account?—A. Obtained it from Mr. Crisel.

Q. Did he tell you he had a man by the name of James Randall as a guard in that case?—A. He certainly did. These accounts are made up simultaneously with the making of the return; the deputy would take the tab to the marshal and the marshal would settle with him on the basis of this account.

Q. (Reading affidavit of Crisel.)—A. Mr. Crisel gave the data and took the tab to the marshal's desk, and he would settle with him for the work done, as shown by that tab.

Q. (Reads an affidavit in the Walker case—Charles Walker.) I wish you would please look at this account for the arrest of Elisha E. Fox, May 20, 1882, and tell us what you know about that.—A. I have no knowledge only as presented by this tab.

Q. Who furnished the information on which you made out this account; it is in your handwriting?—A. Yes, sir; the marshal gave the data.

Q. The marshal must have told you he arrested this man at Jacksonville, according to your statement?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Isn't the return on this warrant in your handwriting?—A. Yes, sir; but the return was made by the direction of the marshal.

Q. How much would the marshal be entitled to on this case if that man was arrested at Springfield?—A. Six dollars and fifty cents.

Q. Out of $17.60?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please look at this account for the arrest of William J. Wyatt, June 3, 1882, and tell me whether or not that is in your handwriting.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made out this account?—A. Yes, sir; it is in my handwriting.

Q. Where did you obtain the information on which you made out that?—A. That was given me by the marshal or Mr. Johnson in that case.

Q. Do you say this information was given to you by either the marshal or Mr. Johnson?—A. Yes, sir; I think Mr. Johnson gave me that information.

Q. Now, I wish you would please look at the indorsement on that warrant and see if that Jacksonville has not been changed to Springfield.—A. It has.

Q. That is in your handwriting, isn't it?—A. Don't think that's my handwriting.

Q. This Springfield is what I am talking about.—A. Don't think it is my handwriting.

Q. Before that change was made on that warrant this indorsement was correct, wasn't it?—A. Receiving the warrant at Jacksonville?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. I couldn't say.

Q. Mr. Johnson says so, don't he?—A. I don't know.

Q. Right here.—A. He says he received it at Jacksonville.

Q. The account shows received it at Springfield—charging $2.80 travel—Jacksonville scratched out and Springfield inserted in order to put that in?—A. That would be the inference.

Q. I wish you would look at this account for the arrest of Charles H. Fox, June 7, 1882, and tell me what you know about that case?—A. I know nothing only as I see on the tab.

Q. The account is made out in your handwriting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you obtain the information on which you made out the account?—A. From Mr. Johnson.

Q. Absolutely positive about that?—A. I have no other means of getting the information only from Mr. Johnson.

Q. Please look at this account for the service of a subpoena on Robert Huston, September 20, 1882, and tell me whether or not you served that subpoena?—A. I traveled on the subpoena to Braidwood, but can't say positively whether I served the subpoena at that time or not.

Q. Why did you go to Braidwood?—A. One thing was to serve that subpoena.

Q. Did you stop at Braidwood?—Yes, sir; five or ten minutes.

Q. Just while the train would stop?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were on your way somewhere else, were you?—A. At that time I made a stop at Joliet.

Q. Was that on public or private business?—A. Hardly either—ran up there and made a stop and came back.

Q. On pleasure, then?—A. Well, no; on a little matter of private business.

Q. You didn't serve this subpoena at that time?—A. I don't remember whether I did or not; don't think I did.

Q. Here is a subpoena at Sauneman, on the Wabash, served September 25, 1882. You actually traveled on that subpoena?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Served it?—A. On one of the parties.

Q. Which one?—A. I think on Cording.

Q. General, there is an alleged service of a subpoena—a grand jury subpoena—by you on November 23, 1882, upon H. C. West and W. W. Redman, at Ashland. Did you serve that?—A. I served Mr. West.

Q. Where?—A. I think at Ashland. I made two trips on that.

Q. You claim that you actually traveled on that subpoena?—A. Actually traveled on it and made two trips. It was in the case of a man named Harry West.

Q. No, it was a grand jury subpoena.—A. Wanted in that case.

Q. Did you know M. A. Sullivan, a member of the legislature, in March, 1883?—A. I know there was a Sullivan.

Q. Do you know of his ever having been arrested?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who made out the account for the arrest of Mr. Sullivan, in March, 1883?—A. In my handwriting, but I know Wheeler made out his own tab.

Q. This information, then, was furnished you by young Wheeler—L. E. Wheeler?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you swear the information as you have it there was received from him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a system did you have in the office while you were chief deputy marshal?—A. In what particular?

Q. In regard to the management of affairs in the district—what sort of system did you have, or did you have any?—A. I don't know; I just followed the system as I found it when I came in there.

Q. Don't you think the office was very loosely managed?—A. I think it was; might have been improved. I think it was improved the last year and a half.

Q. Are you not satisfied from what you have seen that many fraudulent and fictitious charges have crept into the accounts?—A. Well, judging from this information given me to-day it looks that way. I wasn't aware of it before. In making up these accounts it was always the rule to have the marshal go over them carefully, and he did revise them carefully, scrutinized the accounts with a view to strike out any irregularities if there were any.

Q. Is it possible that these accounts, where marshal Wheeler is the party who performed the service, could have been submitted to the Department for payment and sworn to by him without his having seen them?—A. No, sir; it was not possible—never was an account made or entered without Wheeler's going over it carefully.

Q. Then do you claim that Mr. Wheeler examined every account before it was presented to the court for approval and to the Department for payment?—A. I claim that before any account was made up Mr. Wheeler would go over them carefully and examine them.

Q. I don't understand what you mean by made up.—A. These tabs or accounts as made up by the deputies. They would lie in the drawer sometimes three or four or five weeks. When the time came to make up accounts, these tabs made by the deputies would be taken up and arranged in their order, and then would be submitted to Mr. Wheeler. He would carefully inspect them, and if they were all right he would so declare and then turn them over and have copies made of them—duplicates or triplicates—most of them triplicates. Then he would go over them again and inspect the accounts. This is the modus operandi in making up the accounts. They would be made up probably two or three times in the six months. That's what I mean by making up—arranging them in a shape so abstracts would be made.

Q. How is it possible, then, that these accounts in Mr. Wheeler's name, where he admits himself that he did not perform the service, have been presented to the Department?—A. That's something I can't explain.

Q. He must have known it, must he or not?—A. I don't see how it is possible for a person examining the accounts—it would seem he would certainly examine—understand that the accounts were there.

Q. You invariably submitted to Mr. Wheeler every account you made up with his name on it, for his examination and approval?—A. Yes, sir; never presented an account to the Government but what passed through Mr. Wheeler's hands to my knowledge—that is, after I came in. The point is right here: Mr. Wheeler was in there some eight months before I was, with Mr. Dresser, one of the best deputies in the county. Mr. Wheeler was careful to study all these accounts. After I came in, Dresser remained a while, and I received my instructions from Mr. Dresser and the marshal, they having had an experience of eight months before I had anything to do with it. In making up these accounts, of course I was very careful to submit them.

Q. Did Marshal Wheeler devote much personal attention to the office?—A. In the office most of the time.

Q. Did he supervise, manage, scrutinize the papers?—A. Yes, sir; there never was a warrant, I think, ever went out but he knew about it, and where it went—I will say this, unless there was a custom among these deputies of coming in—they had information that warrants would issue, of course, and it would be desirable among themselves to get hold of these warrants; in that way warrants may have gone out that Mr. Wheeler knew nothing about.

Q. Then Mr. Wheeler didn't run his office, but the deputies?—A. Well, that part. It was frequently the case that warrants were received and served by the deputies before the marshal or anybody in the office knew.

Q. Mr. Wheeler, then, acted as a sort of figurehead; he was a fellow to get $6,000 a year, no difference how it was made?—A. He did a good deal of work. He was around the office—no, I couldn't say he was a figurehead.

Q. Then, if he wasn't a figurehead, he worked—examined and scrutinized these papers?—A. Scrutinized the papers, yes; examined them.

Q. Did you ever notice him examining these accounts?—A. These tabs?

Q. Yes, sir. Did he examine them with a good deal of care?—A. I so understood it; went over them in detail—that is, each tab.

Q. Each item?—A. So I understood.

Q. Did he ever call your attention to any particular item?—A. Yes, sir; I have had my attention called to particular items in there. He would want some information on some particular point. I would give him what information I had on the point. My time during the session, of course, was devoted principally to taking care of the pay-roll and disbursement of the funds.

Q. Nevertheless, you had general supervision of the office?—A. Certainly.

Q. You were the man Mr. Wheeler looked to for the performance of this service?—A. Of course, I was to make up the accounts as given to me, and I did make them up as furnished—not on my own information or knowledge that I had myself. In conclusion I desire to add that I am in no way responsible for the errors, irregularities, or fraudulent charges in Marshal Wheeler's accounts. I simply acted as a clerk and made up the accounts upon information furnished to me by Marshal Wheeler and the different deputies. I simply put in the accounts what they told me to put in. I swear positively that I never inserted Marshal Wheeler's name in any account without having first been instructed by him to do so.

I, James A. Winston, hereby certify that I was present when the questions were asked and the answers given by J. N. JAMES A. WINSTON.

EXHIBIT No. 52.—Affidavit of Jacob Wheeler, late United States marshal for the southern district of Illinois, in relation to various irregularities and false charges in the accounts rendered by him.

Personally appeared before me, Joel W. Bowman, examiner Department of Justice. JACOB WHEELER, who, upon being first duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

I reside at Springfield, Ill., and am at present collector of internal revenue of the eighth Illinois district. I was formerly United States marshal for the southern district of Illinois. I recollect the case of Walker Hammon, who I transported to the Joliet, Ill., penitentiary in February, 1880. I actually transported this prisoner to the penitentiary. I employed C. F. Gross to act as guard over this prisoner, and he did so act from Springfield to the penitentiary. I recollect the case of Samuel H. Murdock, who I arrested at Havana, Ill., in March, 1880. I arrested and actually transported this prisoner to Springfield.

In the case of John Robinson, arrested July 1, 1881, and Ruben Young, arrested July 2, 1881, I recollect these cases. I had nothing whatever to do with these arrests. The charge of $12 for travel by me on the John Robinson warrant is false. I did not travel any distance on this warrant. The charge of $20 charged for me in transporting John Robinson 200 miles is false. I did not transport John Robinson any distance. The charge of $4 for endeavoring to arrest John Robinson is wrong. I did not endeavor to arrest him at all. The facts in these cases are as follows: These warrants for the arrest of Robinson and Young were delivered to Deputy Marshal G. C. McCord, who in connection with C. C. Wilson effected the arrest of the parties and brought them to Springfield. I had nothing whatever to do with the cases, and remember when they returned with the prisoners to Springfield that McCord wanted credit for the fees in both cases, but I only allowed him the fees in one case. The returns on the warrants for the arrest of Robinson and Young are in the names of G. C. McCord and C. C. Wilson, and bear out my statement that I had nothing to do with the cases.

I have no recollection of having served a subpoena on C. F. Luizie at Du Quoin, Ill., in December, 1882. I know I never traveled 138 miles to serve this subpoena, and if I ever did serve it, I served it in Springfield, or sent it to him by mail.

I have no recollection of having served a subpoena on Silas Fannington at Grafton, Ill., in December, 1882. I know I never traveled 95 miles to serve this subpoena. If I ever served it, I served it in Springfield or sent it to him by mail. I don't know anything about the case of William Baldwin who appears to have been arrested at Jacksonville, Ill., March 4, 1881. If I ever arrested William Baldwin at all, I arrested him in Springfield, Ill., but I do not think I ever had anything to do with the case. I am positive that I never traveled 35 miles to serve a subpoena on R. C. Johnson. I have no recollection of having served a subpoena on L. O. Norton at Du Quoin, Ill., in July, 1882. I know I did not travel 138 miles to serve this subpoena, and if I served it I did so in Springfield, or I may have served it by mail. I have no recollection of having served a subpoena on Joseph Halluistein at Altamont, Ill., in January, 1882. I did some work at Altamont, but I do not remember exactly what it was. My impression is, however, that I actually performed this service. I do not remember having served a subpoena on Thomas A. Mathews at Saint Louis, Mo., in January, 1882. I do not think I performed this service. If I did serve this subpoena I either served it in Springfield or served it by mail. The 96 miles' travel on this subpoena is incorrect.

I have no recollection of having served a subpoena on Patrick Kenigan at East Saint Louis, Ill., in February, 1882; I never served Mr. Kenigan at East Saint Louis in my life. If I ever served this subpoena on Mr. Kenigan I served it on him at Springfield, Ill. I do not positively recollect whether or not I served a subpoena on Patrick Kenigan at East Saint Louis on February 14, 1882. I know on one occasion I went to East Saint Louis to serve Mr. Kenigan, and when I got there he passed me on another train, and I came back to Springfield and served him at Springfield. This may or may not be the case; I am not positive.

I do not know whether I served a subpoena on W. M. Crissel on February 15, 1882, or not, but if I did I served it on him in Springfield. I am positive that I did not travel 197 miles or any other distance to serve this subpoena.

I do not recollect anything about the arrest of Michael O'Donnell at Edgewood, Ill., on January 6, 1882. I am not positive, but my impression is that I performed this service. I do not know anything about the arrest of David Calvert, who appears to have been arrested by me at McLeansborough, Ill., on January 19, 1882. If I ever arrested David Calvert at all I arrested him in Springfield, Ill.

I do not recollect anything about arresting Samuel Gates at McLeansborough, Ill., on January 27, 1882. I know I never made this arrest at McLeansborough. If I ever arrested Samuel Gates, I arrested him in the city of Springfield, Ill. I am not absolutely positive about the case of William Grady, who appears to have been arrested by me near Manito, Ill., on February 2, 1882, but my impression is that I arrested Grady at Springfield. He was here at that time as a witness. If I arrested him at all, I arrested him in Springfield.

I do not recollect that case of Henry Winters, who appears to have been arrested by me at McLeansborough, Ill., on February 18, 1882. I may have arrested him, but if I did I arrested him in Springfield. I know that I never arrested this man at McLeansborough.

I do not recollect anything about the case of Elisha E. Fox, who appears to have been arrested by me at Jacksonville, Ill., on May 20, 1882. I know I never traveled to Jacksonville to serve this warrant. If I ever arrested Elisha E. Fox I arrested him in the city of Springfield, Ill.

I do not recollect having arrested Jonathan Vanoy, on an attachment, near Atlanta, Ill., in July, 1882. I don't remember anything about this case. I may or may not have made this arrest. I don't remember anything about the case.

I don't recollect the circumstances in the case of James M. Garvin, who appears to have been arrested by me at McLeansborough, Ill., on February 5, 1881. I am positive that I never traveled from Springfield to McLeansborough on this warrant; nor did I ever arrest Mr. Garvin at McLeansborough. If I ever arrested Mr. Garvin at all I arrested him at Springfield.

I recollect the arrest of Christopher Solderman at Hopedale, Ill., on July 26, 1883. I actually arrested and transported this prisoner from Hopedale to Springfield, Ill.

JACOB WHEELER.

I, James A. Winston, hereby certify I was present when the foregoing statement was made, and that I saw the above-named Jacob Wheeler carefully read over the same and sign and swear to the same voluntarily this 10th June, 1884.

JOEL W. BOWMAN,
Examiner, Department of Justice.

EXHIBIT No. 53.—Affidavit of Jacob Wheeler, late United States marshal for the southern district of Illinois, relative to the general management of the duties of the office during his incumbency.

Personally appeared before me, Joel W. Bowman, examiner, Department of Justice, JACOB WHEELER, who, upon being first duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

I want to make this general statement in regard to the management of affairs in this district during my incumbency. I was entirely unfamiliar with the duties appertaining to the position when I was appointed marshal, and I endeavored, as near as possible, to discharge the duties of the office as well as I could. I now see that my administration has been exceedingly loose and imperfect, and that false, fraudulent, and fictitious charges have crept into my accounts. I wish to swear positively that this was entirely unintentional on my part, and that I have endeavored to prevent any charge being made in my accounts except those which were lawful and just. I wish to say that I am perfectly willing to refund all moneys which I have collected from the United States on account of these false and fictitious charges, which my attention has been called to since this investigation commenced. I agreed with Messrs. Reece, Davis, and McCord, three of my deputies, when I took charge of the office, that I was to first receive my maximum compensation before any allowance was to be made to them. I will, however, add that if I had it to do over again I would not make any such arrangement, for I can now readily see what an incentive this was to cause my deputies to manufacture fees and swell the accounts against the United States as much as possible, for the larger the accounts were made the larger compensation they received. I have, however, always instructed all my deputies never to make any charge for constructive mileage, or for any service except where they actually performed the services charged for. I admit that I have not given the necessary attention to the duties of my office, and that I have relied entirely too much on others and have not been sufficiently careful in the examination of my accounts and watching the details of my office. In examining my accounts I gave more attention to looking to see as to whether or not excessive mileage was charged, and that no duplicate charges were made.

JOEL W. BOWMAN,
Examiner, Department of Justice.

I, James A. Winston, hereby certify that I was present when the foregoing statement was made by Jacob Wheeler, and that I saw him carefully read over the same and sign and swear to it this 10th day of June, A. D. 1884.

JAMES A. WINSTON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 25, 1884.

ROBERT M. DOUGLAS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. I am thirty-five years of age; I reside at Greensborough, N. C.; since the expiration of my commission as marshal I have been principally occupied in attempting to close up my official matters.

Q. How long have you been in the Government service?—A. I was in the service of the United States from, I think, March, 1869, until November of the same year, as assistant secretary to President Grant. About November, 1869, I was appointed private secretary to the President, and remained in that position until the 4th of March, 1873. I was appointed United States marshal under a commission dated April 19, 1873, and held it by successive appointments until the 27th day of February, 1883.

Q. You were marshal in North Carolina?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have addressed a letter to the chairman of this committee; please state whether the facts set forth therein are true, and such as you desire to have placed upon the record as your statement.—A. Yes, sir. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that this statement is not so full as I might make it. It was written after the receipt of your dispatch, and with the view of appearing before your committee at some future time, perhaps during the next session of Congress, and answering any questions that the committee might desire to ask me, with the expectation that in that way a great deal would be brought out which, if put into my written statement, would perhaps make it longer than would be desirable.

Q. You have mentioned the fact that you filed in the Department of Justice, on the 14th or 15th of February last, your answers to the report of Mr. Forney, and to the report of Mr. Bowman and Mr. Weigand. State whether the papers now shown you are the papers so filed by you in the Department of Justice, and which you desire to have made a part of your statement here.—A. (Looking at the papers.) These are copies that were made for me by my former chief deputy from the letter-press copies of the originals.

Q. Then these are copies of the answers that you filed in the Department of Justice to the reports made by the examiners as the result of their investigation into the conduct of your office as marshal?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are the statements made in these two papers produced here by you correct?—A. The statements made in those two papers are correct and true, to the best of my knowledge, information, and belief.

Q. You were the marshal, and the figures herein contained were obtained from the books of your office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From the best attainable sources of information?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any other statement that you desire to make?—A. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in Mr. Forney's report he has made a great many disallowances which, as far as I can ascertain from the copies of the exhibits furnished me by the Department of Justice, are based on no proof whatsoever, except on the fact that the deputies in those cases had the same opportunities of committing frauds that were possessed by Deputies Haney and Kilpatrick, who were subsequently indicted. There are some matters concerning my treatment by the Treasury Department, such as the delay, which seems to me unreasonable, unjust, and oppressive, in the settlement of my accounts; but, as it would require a great deal of time to fully explain that, and as my statement would be based on a large number of official documents, I will not speak of it further at present.

Q. State whether your accounts are still unsettled at the Treasury Department.—A. Yes, sir; I have a great many unsettled accounts. I have stated that in my letter to you.

Q. You are still seeking a settlement?—A. Yes, sir; I am still seeking a settlement, and I hope to obtain one shortly, if I can rely upon the promises of the accounting officers.

WASHINGTON, June 25, 1884.

JOEL W. BOWMAN recalled and further examined.

By Mr. DOUGLAS:

Question. Please state whether any frauds were discovered, or alleged to have been discovered, in the accounts of any other deputies, except Haney and Kilpatrick.—Answer. My recollection of that is that the only frauds discovered were in the accounts of Haney and Kilpatrick. I have an indistinct recollection of something in connection with your former chief deputy, Gretter, but just what that was I do not remember.

I think it was that he claimed not to have received his salary as clerk, while you claimed to have paid it. But I do not know that that could be regarded as a fraudulent charge. There was a difference of opinion between you; you claiming certain offsets, and he claiming that he had not received the money.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Gretter claimed that I was owing him, and on my books there appeared a balance in his favor; but he had failed to account for certain funds which I had placed in his hands for disbursement, for the payment of jurors, witnesses, and miscellaneous expenses, for which funds I was personally responsible to the Government. I wrote to Mr. Gretter several times and asked him to come and close up this old matter and account for all the moneys which I had placed in his hands. He promised to do so, but postponed the settlement from time to time, until finally his sudden death ended the matter. A subsequent examination of the books disclosed beyond any doubt whatever that, taking into consideration the sums which he had retained, or failed to account for, he was in my debt. There is an allusion to Colonel Dick in the report of the examiners. I would like to add to what I have already said that Colonel Dick died of the illness from which he was suffering when the examiners were there. He has been dead now nearly a year.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who was Colonel Dick?—A. He was a clerk in my office, and formerly my chief deputy. He was my wife's uncle.

Q. Was he related to Judge Dick?—A. He was a brother of Judge Dick, the district judge. I told Mr. Bowman when he was in Greensborough investigating my office that Colonel Dick was threatened with paralysis, and that if there were any personal charges against him and he was to be called on for an explanation I feared that the excitement might injure his health, or perhaps endanger his life, and Dr. Hall gave a certificate to the same effect. Colonel Dick never recovered from the disease under which he was then suffering, and before his death he became perfectly helpless, a fact which would appear to justify the opinion which I expressed at that time, and to which the doctor certified. I have alluded to the opinion of the court in the Ebbs case, and also to a letter written by C. C. Lancaster, and if the committee desire it I will file the opinion in the Ebbs case, and also present the original of the Lancaster letter and permit it to be copied for your record.

The CHAIRMAN. You may present it, but we do not care to put it in our record.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have also a copy of the official correspondence in relation to the books and papers alluded to by Mr. Cameron, which I will hand to the committee for their information.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you ever withheld your books from inspection by the proper officers of the Government?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would like Mr. Bowman to answer that question.

The WITNESS. Never to my knowledge. When I was in Greensborough Marshal Douglas gave me every facility for making the investigation thorough.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I further gave Mr. Bowman a letter addressed to all my deputies, requesting them to talk with him freely about their affairs, and I am not aware that I have in any way, at any time, hindered the investigation or attempted to conceal anything from the examiners.

The WITNESS. There is no imputation of that kind in our report.

On the contrary, we acknowledge that we were given every facility to make the investigation thorough.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think that Mr. Weigand's testimony was exceedingly unjust; and, if he intended to say what his testimony apparently says, it was also utterly untrue. As Mr. Bowman knows, my terms of court ran from the spring to the fall, and vice versa. Court process would be issued to the marshal from the term of court that was held in April, returnable in October; that process would not be returned until October, and hence the marshal would have no knowledge of the service rendered by the deputy until the return of the process. But the regulations of the Department require the marshal to render his emolument returns within thirty days after the expiration of the half year, and the Department nearly always required me to render the returns before they would grant a requisition for any of my courts. Hence, in making up those returns in August or September, I knew of only a portion of the fees earned on the processes which were returnable at the October terms at Greensborough and Statesville, the November term at Asheville and the December term at Charlotte. I have always included in my emolument returns all fees of which I had any knowledge, or of which I could have any knowledge, from the records of my office at the time when the emolument returns were rendered.

I may add also that the office of marshal, while sometimes apparently affording a compensation of $6,000 a year, is not a lucrative office, because there are a great many expenses forced upon the marshal by virtue of his office for which the Government makes no allowance whatever; such, for instance, as the loss by exchange, trips that the marshal may be required to make to examine into the correctness of accounts, or into the condition of affairs in his district, the expense of frequently coming to Washington at the suggestion of the Attorney-General, or to obtain either the allowance of his requisitions or the settlement of his accounts, the employment of attorneys to obtain the settlement of accounts, which, I regret to say, has been forced upon the marshal by the action of the accounting officers. All these expenses are to be deducted from the income of the office. I may add further, that frequently when the marshal fails to receive his maximum, he has still to pay all his expenses for clerk hire, stationery, &c., out of the gross fees. I am satisfied that I never made any deduction from the compensation of my clerks on account of any failure on my part to obtain proper compensation for myself.

The CHAIRMAN. From your experience in the office of United States marshal, what is your opinion as to the comparative merits of the fee system and the salary system of compensation?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have repeatedly urged upon the Attorney-General to recommend to Congress the payment of marshals by salaries, as my written reports will show. I think the marshal ought to be paid by salary. I think he should have no interest whatever in the compensation of his deputies, but should remain as a disinterested party between them and the Government. Furthermore, I think that all questions of fees should be ultimately decided by the Attorney-General. Formerly the Secretary of the Interior (who, before the creation of the Department of Justice, was the official superior of the marshals) had a right to review the decisions of the Comptroller in relation to their accounts. When the transfer was made to the Department of Justice, the Attorney-General decided that, through some omission, the transfer did not convey to him the right formerly exercised by the Secretary of the Interior to decide upon appeal, and hence the decisions of the accounting officers are without appeal, and in that way great hardships arise. If the Attorney-General had the right to decide appeals in such cases, besides creating uniformity in the allowance of accounts, his opinions would be written out, and could be furnished to the marshals for their information and guidance; whereas the accounting officers frequently disallow an item as not being authorized by law, without giving the marshal any information as to how it contravenes the law.

I will further add that there are charges disallowanced in my accounts, which have remained under suspension for years, of a character that are habitually allowed and paid in the cases of other marshals. As I stated to the Attorney-General, there is but one law common to all marshals (except certain marshals on the Pacific coast and in some of the Territories, who are allowed double fees), and all that I ask now from the Department is that I shall be permitted to take the accounts of certain marshals which have been promptly settled, lay them down and have my accounts adjusted in accordance with the rules followed in the adjustment and settlement of those accounts. If I can be allowed to do that I shall be satisfied.

The following are the letters and papers identified to in the foregoing testimony of Mr. Douglas:

Mr. Douglas to Mr. Springer.

GREENSBOROUGH, N. C., June 23, 1884.

SIR: I have just received your telegram of to-day, saying that the committee cannot hear me during this session. I exceedingly regret this condition of affairs, as I am unwilling that any reflections, however slight or indirect, upon my personal or official character should go unanswered.

I have always been able in the past, and am preferred now, to defend myself against all charges of any nature coming from any source whatever.

In 1875 an investigation of my official conduct as marshal, by the committee of which you are now chairman, resulted in my complete vindication.

Again in 1879, after an exhaustive investigation by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate of all charges that had ever been preferred against me, I was unanimously confirmed. The charges preferred by Special Agent Lancaster, in 1880, were so successfully answered by me, that Mr. Lancaster himself, now a practicing attorney, has written to one of my deputies, M. E. Haynie, many of whose accounts he had himself suspended, offering to undertake the allowance of his accounts for a fee of 20 per cent.

In spite of all opposition, personal as well as political, I held the office of marshal for nearly ten years, and ceased to be marshal only upon the expiration of my last commission. I then filed recommendations of the strongest character from prominent gentlemen of both political parties, and especially of the bench and bar. After the appointment of Mr. Keogh, I was distinctly informed by the President that his failure to reappoint me did not in any way arise from a dissatisfaction with my late administration.

On the 6th day of last February I wrote to you inclosing a printed copy of the official correspondence in relation to the books and papers alluded to by Mr. Cameron, and suggesting that you should obtain my written answer to Mr. Bowman's report, and examine it in connection with the report itself. I think that, in justice to me, the examiners should have presented my answers along with their reports, so that the questions at issue could have been fairly judged. As it is, their reports have gone to the world apparently unanswered. Under the impression that I could appear before your committee at any time, I have waited for all the examiners to testify, presuming that Mr. Forney would appear in explanation of his own report and conduct.

Under the circumstances, I earnestly request that you will cause this letter and my answers, the originals of which are on file in the Department of Justice, and copies herewith inclosed, to be printed with the testimony accompanying your report. I will then appear before your committee at any time, during this or the next session of Congress, that you may designate.

The testimony of Mr. Cameron is capable of misconstruction, and consequently does injustice to both Judge Dick and myself. I have a letter from Mr. Cameron dated November 28, 1882, in which he says, "I beg to express my appreciation of the manner in which you co-operated with Examiner Joel W. Bowman, of this Depart ment, while recently at Asheville, N. C., as a witness of the United States before the grand jury, in the case of United States vs. Haney and Kilpatrick, your late deputies."

My only connection with the trial of Haynie was as a witness for the United States, summoned at the instance of the examiners, who well knew what would be the substance of my testimony. The court charged in substance that on the trial of an indictment under section 5438 of the Revised Statutes, for presenting a fraudulent claim, knowing such claim to be false, fictitious, and fraudulent, the burden of proof rested upon the United States to show the guilty knowledge. Haynie had a fair trial and was acquitted. Kilpatrick has not yet been tried.

Mr. Bowman in his report unreservedly conceded my reputation for strict integrity, and in his testimony admitted that I had given him every facility to make his investigation. Among his more serious errors is that of stating that Judge Dick decided that Haynie's action did not constitute a valid arrest, as the judge's decision, a printed copy of which is herewith inclosed, was directly to the contrary. On page 2, the judge says: "The action of the deputy marshal in this case, and the submission of the defendant to the control of the officer, constituted a valid arrest." Mr. Wiegand's testimony, given on the second day, when I was not present, was exceedingly unjust. If he intended to intimate that I had willfully omitted any fees from my emolument returns that ought to have been included, he was guilty of falsehood. I had fully explained in my answers, as well as in my personal examination, that my failure to include certain fees arose from the fact that those fees had not been reported by the deputies when the emolument return was rendered. In spite of my protests, the Department of Justice always insisted upon a prompt rendition of my emolument returns; and I was compelled to make them out to the best of my knowledge, information, and belief. Many of those fees have never yet been paid. Mr. Wiegand's entire testimony was the more remarkable as he had already previously sworn that he "thought that in my district the arrests were actually made and the prisoners actually transported, and, as a rule, the guards were actually employed." (See page 268.)

My failure to pay my deputies in full was well known to arise from the fact that the Government had not, and has not, paid me. On their face, my accounts show a net balance due to me of over forty thousand dollars. Of course any disallowances made must be proportionately charged to the deputies, and would to that extent reduce my apparent indebtedness to them.

I have now been out of office nearly sixteen months, and yet in that time none of my fee accounts have been adjusted by the accounting officers, except some explanations filed by me in February, 1879. Some of my accounts have been lying in the Treasury over eight years, and are still unsettled. I have employed counsel, and have used every proper effort to obtain a settlement, but as yet without avail.

As showing some of the difficulties under which marshals labor, I would call your attention to the following extract from page 9 of the official report of Attorney-General Brewster, for the year 1882:

"UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

"The investigation of the accounts of these officers is placed under the supervision of the Attorney-General. The appropriation for prosecution of crimes enables him to supervise each office and investigate its management. The experience thus obtained leads to the conviction that the present fee-bill might, with propriety, be revised. It has served for the expenses of the courts since February 26, 1853, and its subsequent amendment, approved August 16, 1856. Since then new legislation has enlarged the business of the courts and severely tested the adequacy of the provisions of the bill. Conflicting interpretations have been made by the accounting officers. Different opinions have been rendered by the law officers, the controlling force of which has also been disregarded; the courts have disagreed as to its meanings and applications, and the perplexed officer has been forced to present his accounts in different ways in different years. Thus confusion has arisen, and sometimes injustice has perhaps been done."

Again requesting, as a matter of justice to myself, that this letter and inclosed copies of my answers may be printed with your report, I remain, sir,

Very respectfully,

RO. M. DOUGLAS.

Hon. WM. M. SPRINGER,

Chairman Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Douglas to Attorney-General Brewster.

GREENSBOROUGH, N. C.,
February 14, 1884.

SIR: In answering the report of Messrs. Joel W. Bowman and E. B. Wiegand, examiners of the Department of Justice, who recently made an investigation into the management of my office, I shall confine myself as closely as possible to the allegations contained in the report.

Certain allegations of the report are based on apparent evidence, while others are only the opinions of the examiners themselves.

To the latter class belongs the first charge. I naturally feel some hesitation in speaking of myself. I am glad that my reputation for personal integrity is admitted; but I can scarcely feel gratified at the estimate placed upon my capacity. However, in view of the flattering indorsements of my efficiency lately received from those best qualified to judge, especially from the bench and bar of Western North Carolina, I am willing to let the matter rest; the more so, as the examiners themselves concede my exceptional knowledge of the law and the rulings of the Departments.

It is true that I have had Mr. James W. Dick in my employ since I first became marshal until about the middle of last August, when his health compelled him to quit the office permanently. He is not my brother-in-law, being my wife's uncle. I do not know what significance the relation can have, especially as it did not exist at the time of his first employment; but if mentioned at all, it should have been stated correctly. It is true that both Dr. Hall and I told Mr. Bowman that Colonel Dick was not able to undergo any great mental excitement, such as would naturally be caused by calling upon him to answer personal charges, which Mr. Bowman stated was his object in wishing to see him. I did not intimate that they could not rely on any statement he might make; but stated in substance that his memory was somewhat failing, and that in his present feeble condition, his examination would necessarily be unsatisfactory.

He is now almost helpless, having no use whatever of his right leg or arm. The fact that he was seen riding on the street may seem strange to the examiners, but I fail to see its importance. If by this any intimation is meant to be conveyed that I exaggerated his condition with a view of preventing his examination, I can only say that any such statement, intimation, or insinuation is utterly false. I will freely admit that his health has for more than a year seriously interfered with the discharge of his official duties, but his intimate knowledge of my accounts, and especially of those now under suspension by the accounting officers, rendered him invaluable to me, and I now seriously feel his loss.

The fact that I have had no surplus for a year, and that his pay came entirely out of my own compensation, should be sufficient evidence that I considered his services necessary. I have been absent a great deal, partly in attendance upon the courts, but principally at Washington, endeavoring to obtain a just and legal settlement of my accounts. Colonel Dick did not have charge of my office during my absence. Mr. John B. Gretter, though not commissioned as such, acted as my chief deputy, which fact was well known throughout my district.

The examiners may have no doubt in their minds of my failure to give the proper attention to my office, but this opinion, coming from gentlemen claiming no personal knowledge of the fact, and having but little acquaintance with the duties of a marshal and the law and regulations governing his conduct, is contradicted by the records of your Department and of my office. My "exceptional" knowledge of the "law and rulings" could only have come from close attention, while the large number of letters and other papers in my own handwriting conclusively prove that I have given to my office an amount of personal labor and attention unusual among officials of my rank. I would refer you to my official letters and reports on file in your Department, and to my checks and accounts in the Treasury. In presenting Exhibit No. 2 the examiners might, in justice to me, have stated that Mr. J. B. Gretter was a bitter personal enemy of mine, and an aspirant for the marshalship, facts which could have easily been ascertained by inquiry. Even he, however, admits that he had no personal knowledge of any failure on my part to give the proper instructions to my deputies. As he was in my office for over four years and five months, he would probably have known of such failures had they happened. You will notice that Mr. Gretter's answer to the second inquiry is evasive, tending rather to a denial. I am somewhat surprised that Mr. Gretter should have complained that the correspondence of the office was neglected, as to him was assigned the particular duty of attending to it. As to my flight to breakfast through the window of the Eagle Hotel, I have no particular recollection. The only occasion that I can now recall when I went with Mr. Deaver to Beaucatcher was one Sunday morning about two or three years ago. It does seem that so grave a crime as refusing to see people on business on Sunday morning before breakfast should be made the subject of judicial inquiry before it is barred by the statute of limitations. On this subject I would here refer to my replies to the written interrogatories asked by the examiners, which I wish to make part of this answer. These replies were made in entire ignorance of the exhibits in the possession of the examiners, and even of the special acts constituting the charges against me.

As to the occurrence mentioned by the anonymous gentleman, who so long stood listening at my door, I of course know nothing. I do not know what Mr. Hildebrand meant by getting satisfaction. The usual printed instructions were sent to him soon after his appointment; and I have endeavored on all reasonable occasions to give him such further information as he desired.

His affidavit is full of absurd statements. He first states that I would never talk to him on business, and then alleges that the only information he ever did obtain from me (which he has already stated never was obtained) simply confounded him. He further states that I would get in my room, and refuse for days at a time to see my deputies, and yet would talk to him for hours at a time on any subject that might happen to suggest itself, except business. In their affidavits Messrs. Hildebrand and Setzer should have done me the justice to state that, in addition to the money received from me, they had retained large amounts collected on executions which I was compelled to make good. The affidavit of Mr. Setzer is similar to that of Mr. Hildebrand, and is answerable in the same manner. These two deputies worked together, and gave me a great deal of trouble.

Exhibit 5. This exhibit, and others referring to my indebtedness to my deputies for services rendered, will be answered when I reach the paragraph of the report dealing more particularly with this matter.

It is of course impossible within the limits of this answer to exhibit in detail the account of each deputy, which would be equally useless.

In reference to Exhibit 6, affidavit of Robert Powell, the examiners state that "Mr. Powell could not have had any instructions from Marshal Douglas, for he swears that he did not even know what he was going to be allowed for his services." This statement is not borne out by Mr. Powell's affidavit.

He says: "I never had any understanding with Colonel Douglas as to what amount of the fees earned by me should be retained by him." My Exhibit A, copy of a press copy of the letter transmitting Mr. Powell's commission, shows that Circulars Nos. 30, 31, 34, 38, 39, and 40 were then sent to him. You have copies of these circulars on file in your Department. Your attention is especially invited to Circular No. 40, which distinctly states the proportion of fees allowed to the deputy. The fact that Mr. Powell received his money by a sight draft on me, instead of a check from me, has no apparent significance.

The examiners make the broad assertion that I am indebted to almost every deputy in the district. This can be definitely ascertained only by final settlement; and it should be borne in mind that the affidavits of my deputies apparently sustaining it, are based on the accounts as rendered by them, and not as adjusted by the Treasury Department. So material a fact should perhaps have been mentioned by the examiners. No one can feel more keenly than I the hardships to which my deputies, in common with myself, have been subjected by the unjust and oppressive action of the accounting officers. I have been for years endeavoring to obtain a settlement of my accounts on a just and legal basis, incurring great personal expense, besides the annoyance and loss of time. I have no hesitation in saying that the action of the Treasury Department has not only been oppressive towards me, but also obstructive of public justice.

I would here refer you to my letters to your Department, dated March 17, 1874; April 18, 1874; September 25, 1876; May 22, 1877; June 8, 1877; April 9, 1880; June 29, 1880; December 15, 1880; May 30, 1880, and March 9, 1882; and to the following letters addressed to Mr. Brewster Cameron, the general agent, May 30, 1882, August 15, 1882, and November 14, 1882. I would invite your attention to the letters written by your predecessor requesting the early settlement of my accounts.

As you have the originals of the above letters written by me, it is of course unnecessary to inclose copies.

This correspondence shows conclusively that I have persistently sought for an early adjustment of my accounts, and that the delay is not properly chargeable to me. I will treat this subject more fully when answering the report of the representative of the Treasury. I will only add that I can find no reason given in Mr. Forney's report for delaying the adjustment of some of my accounts nearly two years after they had been reported on by a special agent, especially as the Comptroller's statement of differences was but little more than a copy of the agent's report.

It moreover seems very unjust in the examiners to censure me for not paying my deputies in full, when they themselves in the same report, in effect, recommend the disallowance of a large part of the accounts rendered by those deputies. How the charges of a deputy can be fraudulent, and yet constitute a valid claim on me, is not sufficiently explained by the examiners. The proportion of accounts allowed by me to my deputies may not have given them sufficient compensation; but that proportion was well known to your Department, as will be shown by Circular No. 40.

The logic of a report seems questionable which complains that the compensation of a deputy is already too small to be consistent with his honesty, and then further reduces his compensation, presumably to make him honest. I herewith inclose my Circular No. 65. On and after the first of last January, the deputy will be paid the entire amount charged for actual expenses endeavoring to arrest allowed by the Comptroller in the adjustment of his accounts.

It should be borne in mind that a marshal's compensation is made up almost entirely from the share he retains of the fees of his deputies, and that from this source must also come all the expenses of his office, including clerk hire, office rent, and stationery. The regulations and customs of the Departments compel a marshal to perform by himself and clerk a great amount of labor for which he receives nothing.

The marshal must retain a sufficient amount at least to cover his expenses, and should be entitled to a reasonable compensation for the labor and pecuniary responsibility involved in the duties of his office. If his gross fees are too small to enable him to be liberal to his deputies as well as just to himself, the fault rests with the fee bill and the rulings of the Comptroller. If instead of useless criticisms of the past, the examiners had suggested some remedy for this defect in the future, it would have been better for all concerned.

In the words of one of the sages of the law, "Blessed be not the complaining tongue, but blessed be the amending hand." I would here renew my recommendation that marshals be paid by stated salaries, and that they have no interest whatever in the fees of their deputies.

I must enter my earnest protest against the remarkable principle laid down by the examiners, that it is fair to presume the guilt of a man who has never even been charged with crime.

The system of accepting the drafts of my deputies, payable when I received funds to their use, arose during the fiscal year 1880, when no appropriation had been made for the fees and expenses of marshals. Had it not been for some such arrangement the deputies could not have served the processes placed in their hands, and I have no hesitation in saying that the administration of justice in this district is largely indebted to Mr. Sluder. He bought these drafts in the open market, taking the entire risk of their ultimate payment, as the large majority of my deputies are not worth the exemptions allowed by law. It was then intended that these drafts should be paid out of the first funds coming into my hands to the use of the maker, I only stipulating that I should, on the ground of public policy, have the right to make such advances as might be required to protect the interest of the Government in the service of process. As I have received but little more than half the amount really due me for fees during the fiscal year 1880, I could not pay all the outstanding drafts.

These remaining drafts would under the original understanding have become a lien on the funds received to the use of the makers during the ensuing fiscal year, subject, of course, to the original restriction. This was my first view of the matter, which has since become greatly changed, especially since seeing the opinion of Secretary Folger.

I now doubt whether an officer can assign that in which he has no present interest; that is, his prospective compensation for services not yet rendered.

My refusal to pay my deputies was attributed to the want of available funds; that is, funds coming to their use. I am glad that the examiners "failed to procure" any evidence that I was interested in Mr. Sluder's purchase of these drafts, as such evidence would necessarily have been purely fictitious.

The so-called impression that I favored Mr. Sluder is not shared by Mr. Sluder himself.

As far as the supposititious case in which B and C are made to suffer for the escape of A, I can only say that such charges would be unjust to B and C, but would in no way affect the liability of the Government.

The deputy is entitled to his actual expenses, not to exceed two dollars per day, endeavoring to arrest any one; and it makes no difference to the Government who the person may be, provided he is charged with crime.

The mere fact that a deputy is endeavoring to arrest more than one person on the same day does not lessen his right to his expenses.

The impression which the examiners state was prevalent among the deputies, that it was necessary to resort to deceit to obtain their just dues, speaks badly for the reputation of the Treasury Department. The information of the examiners as to the payment of the two dollars per day is grossly inaccurate, especially as their fellow examiner, representing the Treasury, recommended that all actual expenses endeavoring to arrest when no arrest was made should be disallowed.

In the logic of the report, Does not this offer a strong inducement to the deputy to charge his expenses on the parties who are caught? As to the employment of guards but little can be said, as Judge Dick's ruling undoubtedly lays down the law correctly. The guard must necessarily attend; but as to that necessity the deputy must determine. If you take this discretion from the deputy, you cannot hold him responsible for the safe-keeping of the prisoner. The matter of supplemental emolument returns has been fully explained in my answers to the examiners. I have always objected to rendering my returns until my accounts were adjusted, as will be shown by my letters; but your Department, while admitting that nothing could be done with them until the accounts therein embraced were settled, generally insisted upon their prompt rendition. On one occasion, however, the officer in your Department having charge of them returned them to my attorney, Mr. Falls, on the ground that he could not adjust them until vouchers were furnished, which, of course, could not be done until the accounts were settled and paid.

In rendering an emolument return I have invariably included everything of which I had any knowledge at the time. You will notice that in nearly all, if not all, of my emolument returns I have added some interlineation to the affidavit restricting it to my knowledge at the time. Having complied with the wording of the law and regulations, I did not feel called upon to render a supplemental return until my accounts were adjusted. The law never intended the emolument return to be rendered until the marshal's fees had been settled and paid to him, as the statute says, that no marshal shall be allowed to "retain" of the "fees and emoluments," &c (See section 841.) A marshal cannot retain that which he has never received. Section 844, Revised Statutes, requires that "Every marshal * * * shall, at the time of making his half-yearly return to the Attorney-General * * * pay into the Treasury, or deposit to the credit of the Treasury," &c., any "surplus of fees" shown to exist.

The law certainly never intended to force a marshal to account for fees or pay money which the Treasury Department had not paid him and never intended to pay him.

The examiners greatly err in stating that in the emolument returns rendered by me for the calendar year 1881 I take credit for $1,200 as having been paid to Mr. J. B. Gretter for clerk hire. Mr. Gretter's name is not mentioned in those returns as a clerk. I simply claim the allowance of $3,000 already made to me by the Attorney-General for clerk hire, without rendering any vouchers or stating even to whom it was due.

I fully explained to the examiners the condition of Mr. Gretter's account and the efforts I had made to obtain a settlement from him. Your attention is invited to the copies of our correspondence herewith inclosed showing that Mr. Gretter was considerably overpaid. Mr. Gretter's death has made me unwilling to reflect upon his memory in any manner not absolutely demanded for my own protection.

The failure to include all fees earned from individuals arose from the fact that such had not been reported to this office at the time the emolument returns were rendered, and hence were not within my knowledge. I am perfectly willing to account for these, and all other fees, which are finally allowed.

I retained deputy marshal Watson because I believed him to be innocent of any criminal conduct, and that his prosecution was commenced as an attack on me, and not in the interest of justice.

Your attention is invited to my letters to your predecessor on the subject of the loss of the whisky. The cases of Haynie and Kilpatrick are now before the court. My connection with those cases is perhaps sufficiently explained in my written replies above referred to. It would have appeared superserviceable to have notified the Department of Justice or of the Treasury to hold up these accounts when each of them had then more evidence than has ever come into my possession. I promptly struck out of the accounts all charges which then appeared incorrect. I regret to say that the interviews referred to between Col. Lusk and myself were more in the nature of altercations. A calmer and more dispassionate discussion of the subject would, perhaps, have led to different results. That Col. Lusk does not now attach any blame to me for my conduct is shown by his recent letter recommending me for reappointment, in which, speaking of me, he says: "He is a sterling Republican, an honest man, and a faithful officer."

I regret that the examiners should have seen fit to reflect upon my motives in so harsh and unjustifiable a manner; but I trust that my own emphatic denial will be deemed sufficient, especially in the absence of any proof to the contrary. I will admit that several investigations have been made in this district resulting in unfavorable reports; but I may be pardoned for saying that I am induced, perhaps by my prejudices, to believe that the accounts of my deputies will bear favorable comparison with the reports of the examining agents.

In conclusion, I may add that certain evidence, seemingly material, but necessarily ex parte, has been omitted in accordance with a suggestion from your Department.

Trusting that this answer may be entirely satisfactory, I remain, sir,

Very respectfully,

RO. M. DOUGLAS,
United States Marshal.

Hon. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Douglas to Attorney-General Brewster.

GREENSBOROUGH, N. C., February 15, 1883.

SIR: In answering the report of Mr. P. W. Forney, an acting examiner of the Department of Justice, dated October 14, 1882, I shall be as brief as possible.

In view of the bad personal feeling existing between Mr. Forney and myself, which was known in your Department as well as in that of the Treasury, I regret that he should have been selected as one of the examiners in this investigation. I have, however, endeavored not to permit our personal relations to influence me in answering his report; but I must insist that all of his allegations must be considered only so far as they rest upon proof or are admitted facts. As Haynie and Kilpatrick have been indicted, it seems proper that I should say but little, especially as false and malicious reports have been circulated by some one that I am trying to shield these deputies from the legal consequences of their acts. Yet some of the allegations of the report vary so far from the evidence that I must call them to your attention.

Mr. Forney says that, "In every instance where the defendants were interviewed, they made affidavits that they * * * were not away from home the extra days charged to arrest them." An examination of the affidavits filed by Mr. Bowman will show that such is not the case.

Many of the affidavits make no allusion to the days charged for endeavoring to arrest, while in one, the affiant (Henry Frisby) states distinctly that he "kept out of the way of the deputy." Many others could have been found to swear to the same thing, but such testimony was evidently not desired by the examiners. I would here call your attention to the indorsement on the affidavit of W. A. Melton, which is as follows: "Melton does not desire to go to Asheville as a witness. I do not think he would make a good witness. J. W. B." In the report occurs the following passage, "The legal fees in these cases are about as follows:

"Serving warrant	$2 00
"Mileage to serve, 30 miles at 6 cents	1 80
"One day endeavoring to arrest	2 00
"Attendance before Commissioner	2 00
"Releasing defendant	50
"Total	8 30

"This compensation is based on the services actually and necessarily performed, as required by the express language and intention of the fee bill."

It does seem strange that an examiner of the Department of Justice should be guilty of the gross injustice of recommending the total disallowance of certain fees which he says are legal and charged for services actually and necessarily performed. Such disallowance must be considered either as a refusal to pay the just dues of an officer, or as a punishment of an offense for which he has not yet been tried. In either view, such action is violative of every principle of justice, and subversive of the most sacred rights of the citizen. The statement to the effect that all the items stricken out by me were objected to by the defendants is untrue. As the duplicates of these accounts have been taken out of the district, contrary to the express directions of the judge, and in violation of the promise of one of the examiners, I cannot now tell in what particular cases the items were stricken out by me. The statement of Colonel Lusk is alluded to in my answer to the report of Messrs. Bowman and Wiegand.

Mr. Forney speaks of the dissatisfaction of the Treasury Department with my accounts. I was not ignorant of this fact, nor of the "radical change" which some of the accounting officers have been so long endeavoring to force upon your Department. "Expenses to arrest in cases wherein no arrests are made." The law as laid down by the examiner with regard to these items appears to be correct. If his premises were equally so, his conclusions would be undeniable; but as his allegations are lacking in the essential element of truth, his disallowances are equally devoid of justice. I do not regard the $2 as a fee, nor do my deputies.

In reading the affidavits given by the deputies to the examiners, I do not recall a single deputy who admitted that he considered this charge simply as a fee. On the contrary, nearly all of them state in substance that their actual expenditures, excluding the use of their own horses would average $2 per day. Of course a reasonable allowance for the use of their own horses would increase this amount at least 50 per cent. These affidavits having been taken by the examiners themselves, and transmitted to you in proof of their report, cannot now be questioned by them.

In this connection I would invite your attention to the bills rendered by the examiners for expenses incurred during this investigation. I am informed that the sum of $4 per day was allowed to each of the examiners for subsistence alone, exclusive of all other expenses. Traveling in the same section, by easy stages on public roads, their expenses should not have exceeded, if they equaled, the expenses of a deputy marshal in the service of process. As to the approval of the commissioners, I cannot say whether they actually signed the taxation on the warrant, but this they were not required to do. When a deputy marshal taxes his fees in the presence of the commissioner without objection, it becomes a taxation by the commissioner, especially so if the commissioner reports the gross fees so taxed to the court. The Comptroller, in his letter of August 3, 1881, especially referring to such charges, says: "Where there is a taxation of costs by the commissioner, it will be taken as prima facie evidence that it is correct." The statement of the examiner that my portion of the disallowances "is HARDLY in excess of the excess" of my maximum compensation (which, in fact, is an admission that it is in excess), becomes significant. If in the emolument returns already rendered I have charged myself with an amount greater than the accounting officers now find due me, why should I be compelled to charge myself with additional amounts which they never intend to pay?

I would here refer you to my answer to report of Messrs. Bowman and Wiegand: The statement that I was unable to produce any receipts whatever is incorrect; I have a great many receipts as well as drafts and other evidence of payment. It was impracticable for me to take receipts in the prescribed form until the vouchers of the deputy were settled, as I did not know what amounts would be allowed in each half year. In consequence of heavy disallowances, I find that several of my deputies are already over-paid.

I have not answered this report as fully as I would otherwise have done, for the reason that so much has been substantially answered in my reply to the report of Messrs. Bowman and Wiegand, to which you are respectfully referred.

I remain, sir,

Very respectfully,
(Signed)

RO. M. DOUGLAS,
United States Marshal.

HON. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

P. S.—Since coming to Washington, I have been informed that the duplicates of the accounts of Deputies Haynie and Kilpatrick have been returned to the clerk by your Department, a fact of which I had no previous knowledge.

Very respectfully,

RO. M. DOUGLAS,
United States Marshal.

EXPENDITURES

IN THE

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

THE STAR-ROUTE CASES.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1884.

TESTIMONY RELATING TO THE STAR-ROUTE CASES.

WASHINGTON, March 5, 1884.

THOMAS L. JAMES sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your residence.—Answer. I reside in the city of New York.

Q. At what time were you in the public service of the United States as a member of the Cabinet?—A. From the 7th of March, 1881, to the 4th of January, 1882.

Q. In what capacity?—A. As Postmaster-General.

Q. Please state to the committee all matters that came within your own knowledge during that time in reference to frauds upon the Treasury, growing out of the star route mail service, and the efforts of the Government to prosecute persons who were supposed to be guilty of those frauds.—A. With your permission, I will read a statement that I have prepared.

[Reading.]

In common with most citizens who took a lively interest in public affairs, I had read the comments of the daily papers on the alleged "star route" irregularities; had watched the developments of the Congressional investigations of 1878, 1879, and 1880, and had discussed the subject with various postal officials, but my attention was first specifically called to the matter by ex-United States Senator George E. Spencer, of Alabama, and other well-informed gentlemen. It was their belief that millions of dollars had been wasted on unnecessary "star" service—service much of which had never been performed and which was procured by improper means. It was also maintained that an honest, thorough investigation would render practicable retrenchments without detriment to the service, which would not only make the Post-Office Department self-sustaining, but would yield a respectable revenue to the Treasury.

That I entertained such views was more or less well known. The publicity given to them, added to the fact that, while postmaster of New York, when asked by Stephen W. Dorsey to certify, in my official capacity, to a large number of papers connected with the contract office of the Post-Office Department, I refused to do so, may account for the bitter opposition to my appointment to a Cabinet position which developed in certain quarters.

I went to Washington on the night of the 2d of March, in answer to a telegraphic dispatch from Mr. Whitelaw Reid, which I understood to represent General Garfield's desire. On the 3d I called on him at the Riggs House, in company with Mr. Reid, between 9 and 10 a. m. After shaking hands, and talking for a moment, Mr. Reid said in substance, addressing General Garfield, that he had asked me to come on as he (General Garfield) had desired ; and had told me it was in reference to some suggestion of my name for Postmaster-General ; that I had said that if the Treasury Department was likely to come to New York I did not want to be in the way, and that he (Reid) had assured me that was now settled. General Garfield, addressing me, said : "That is absolutely settled ; the Treasury Department cannot go to New York." Mr. Reid, continuing, said he had told me that General Garfield expected to get on satisfactorily and without friction with both the factions in New York, and hoped my appointment, if made, would help to that end, but wished to know whether, in case controversies should be forced upon him, he could be sure, if I were made Postmaster-General, that my political affiliations in New York would not interfere with my hearty support of his administration. General Garfield said, "Yes ; that is about it ;" and I then replied, "Such a contingency, in my judgment, will not arise, but if it should, if I accept your nomination, I must, as a gentleman, either be loyal to the President or resign." General Garfield said, "That is satisfactory," and the conversation then turned to the work of the Post-Office Department. I said that if I went into it I should like to carry out a plan I had already formed of going abroad to finish up a study of the London methods for city free-delivery service, and the General replied that he would arrange that. He then said that from what he kept hearing he was afraid there was something very wrong in the Department itself ; that if so, he expected me to find it out, and then put the plow in to the beam, and after that to subsoil it. He asked what I knew of the frauds. I replied that my knowledge was derived from the newspapers, from the investigations which had taken place, and from hearsay. The only persons present at the conversation were the President, Mr. Reid, and myself. I left for New York in the afternoon train with my friend, Charles E. Smith, of Philadelphia. Mr. Dorsey was not present at this interview, nor did I see him ; neither did I call on nor meet Senator Conkling or Vice-President Arthur.

On the 9th of March, after my appointment as Postmaster-General, the President sent for me and brought up the subject of the "star-route" service. He said he was satisfied that there had been willful waste of the public money and gross corruption ; that while he did not wish to have mail facilities necessary to the welfare of any community curtailed, all unnecessary and extravagant service must be relentlessly cut off ; that the service should be regulated and conducted with strict regard to actual public requirements, and not with a view to serving private interests ; that the proposed investigation must be aimed at a system, and not at men ; but that if the inquiry should disclose the fact that any person or persons had been guilty of corruption or fraud, that person or those persons must be handed over to the Department of Justice. He instructed me to pursue this investigation until there were no more facts to ascertain, and asked, "How do you propose to proceed?" I replied that, with his approval, I should telegraph P. H. Woodward, of Connecticut, formerly chief special agent of the Post-Office Department, and a man of character and integrity—who, while in the Department, had rendered great service to the Government in breaking up the practice of "straw bidding" in connection with star-route contracts—to come to Washington, and that I would place the investigation in his hands. The President said that this met with his entire approval.

On my way back to the Department, I met Senator Hawley and Governor Jewell, of Connecticut. At my request both these gentlemen telegraphed to Mr. Woodward to accept the position of inspector. In reply to my telegram, Mr. Woodward met me in New York on the 12th of March, when I asked him to become my confidential agent in the investigation of the star-route frauds. He accepted, accompanied me to Washington, and was commissioned as an inspector on the 14th of March. I notified the President of Mr. Woodward's arrival. He said that he was much annoyed in regard to certain large post-offices in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia; that he did not wish to make mistakes in appointments in this connection; that only men fit to be postmasters and those having the confidence of the people should be appointed, and that as Mr. Woodward had formerly lived in the South he thought it would be well to place all the applications for appointment in his hands and let him visit the cities in which these offices were located, inquire into the fitness and character of the applicants, and recommend the person best equipped for the place. These suggestions were carried out, and in consequence very little progress was made in the star-route investigations until the 1st of April. During Mr. Woodward's absence I visited New York, and was then informed by Mr. David F. Nelson, a clerk in the New York post-office, that Mr. John Swinton, one of the editors of the New York Sun, would, if so desired, place me in communication with a gentleman who would materially aid me in the impending investigation. I sent word to Mr. Swinton that he would confer a favor upon me by so doing. This resulted in Mr. A. M. Gibson, formerly connected with the New York Sun as its Washington correspondent, calling on me at the Department, making valuable suggestions, and placing in my hands evidence of great importance bearing upon star-route matters and methods.

With the imperfect instrumentalities at hand, and in the face of the most serious obstacles, a plan of operations was adopted, and the preliminary investigation was undertaken in earnest. All sources of information at command were made available. Steps were taken to authenticate specific cases of abuse, long-suppressed reports of inspectors on doubtful service were exhumed and consulted, and where the originals were not discoverable in the contract division of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's office, copies were procured from those who made them, and inspection of the doubtful service by experienced and trustworthy agents of the Department was immediately ordered by telegraph. The state of affairs thus revealed was truly appalling. Affidavits of contractors, upon which increase of service and expedition were unhesitatingly ordered, were freely accepted when even the most superficial inquiry on the part of an inspector, procured at a small cost, would have saved untold thousands to the Department. Inspectors designed by law to jealously guard the interests of every branch of the service, and advise the Postmaster-General of any abuses or irregularities which might at any time or in any place fall under their notice, were peremptorily forbidden to trench upon the "star-route" domain by a power which appeared to be greater than that of the head of the Department, and whose unspoken word was obeyed as law.

This vast and important service, stretching for thousands of miles "east, west, north, and south," in regions of country infested by bands of hostile Indians or desperate outlaws, and often accessible only by "buck-board" or on horseback, was relegated to the care of one man, borne upon the rolls of the Department as an assistant superintendent of railway mail service, and who occupied a desk in the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. Manifestly there was method in all this, the motive of which was not far to seek. Swift and sure came the conviction that the personnel of the Department, and of some branches of the service, was intensely hostile to the new order of things, and must be purged. No sooner had this work begun than bitter and malignant attacks appeared in the columns of "star-route" organs on the President, the Attorney-General, the Postmaster-General, and whoever else was suspected of a disposition to promote clean, honest, and business-like methods. Swarms of contractors, their attorneys, and beneficiaries raised a deafening clamor, and made common cause against the Administration.

In the early part of April, fortified with facts and figures laboriously and carefully collated, Mr. Woodward and myself called on the President and exhibited a comparative statement of the most corruptly manipulated routes. He displayed great surprise, and wished to know if the figures had been verified by the records. He also added that he had been providentially saved from falling into a trap which had evidently been set for him, and seemed to be contemplating some peril which he had escaped. He asked whether the papers had been shown to the Attorney-General. I replied no, when he requested me to call with that official and Mr. Woodward the next day.

In conformity with his request we called the next afternoon and a lengthy consultation ensued. In answer to my suggestion as to whether it would not be wiser to institute civil suits for the recovery of the money obtained through dishonest contracts rather than to commence criminal proceedings against the implicated parties, he said "No." "One moment, Mr. President," said the Attorney-General; "consider whether or no the Postmaster-General is not right. Before a final decision remember that these proceedings may strike men in high places; that they may result in changing a Republican majority in the United States Senate into a Democratic majority; that it may affect persons who claim that you are under personal obligations to them for services rendered during the last campaign—and one person in particular who asserts that without his management you could not have been elected. Look these facts squarely in the face before taking a final stand, for neither the Postmaster-General nor myself will know friend or foe in this matter." The President walked across the room, reflected a moment, and said, "No; I have sworn to execute the laws. Go ahead regardless of where or whom you hit. I direct you both not only to probe this ulcer to the bottom, but to cut it out." This closed the conversation. Shortly after the conference above referred to, ex-Senator Dorsey called on me at the Arlington Hotel, and, in the presence of Mr. Woodward, denounced Mr. Brady, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, with great bitterness, and urged that he be immediately removed.

On the 19th of April, Inspector Woodward addressed me a communication strongly urging that the interests of the pending investigation and of the Department demanded the retirement of Thomas J. Brady from the office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General. The same evening Woodward and myself called upon the President, to whom I referred the letter. He at once directed Brady's dismissal. I explained to the President that Brady had previously told me that whenever his place was wanted his resignation was at the President's disposal; that my relations with the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, official and otherwise, had always been of a friendly character; that this was a most painful duty, and that I hoped he would allow me to ask for his resignation. He declined, and directed a letter prepared, which I signed, asking the President for Mr. Brady's instant removal. Early the next morning the President sent for me and said he had reflected on what I had urged, and, realizing my embarrassment, was willing I should ask for Brady's resignation. I accordingly gave to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General the following letter:

April 29, 1881.

SIR: I am directed by the President to request your resignation of the office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General, to take effect immediately.

Very respectfully,

THOMAS L. JAMES,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. THOS. J. BRADY,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Brady at once resigned. The position was subsequently filled by the appointment of Richard A. Elmer, of New York. About this time Mr. Woodward recommended that Mr. Gibson, on account of his knowledge of the star route cases and the immediate service he could render, should be retained by the Attorney-General. This was done. On the earnest appeal of Mr. Gibson, William A. Cook, esq., a member of the Washington bar, who had had large experience in criminal trials, was also retained. I was credibly informed that Mr. Cook had been tendered a large fee by the defense, but had declined. Simultaneously with the consideration of the star service, much attention was given to the steamboat service. A commission, consisting of B. K. Sharretts, one of the oldest and most successful of the inspectors; R. C. Jackson, division superintendent of railway mail service, and Henry R. Gibson, inspector, was sent to Memphis to investigate the river service converging at that point. Still another commission, consisting of John Jameson, assistant superintendent of railway mail service; Timothy Griffith, inspector, and L. M. Terrell, division superintendent railway mail service, proceeded to New Orleans for a similar purpose. The services rendered by these gentlemen were of positive advantage to the Department.

In order that the work of cutting down unnecessary and extravagant service might be intelligently performed, and that a full and true understanding of the facts might be arrived at, a number of the oldest and most experienced inspectors were called to Washington for consultation. Several of the alleged fraudulent contracts were assigned, and they were ordered to make a thorough examination of each and to report exactly what they found. The Attorney-General, who was present, added that "an inspector generally brought back what he was sent to get, but that in this case they were sent for no such purpose; that both the Postmaster-General and himself would prefer that the service be found necessary and the charges of corruption unfounded; but what was most wanted were the facts just as they existed." The inspectors left that night, and renewed the labors already well begun on many of the routes in question.

The outcome is well known. Large and expensive increases were found to be unnecessary, and the methods by which they were worked up fraudulent. Many of the affidavits upon which enormous expeditions were based were shown to be rank perjuries. The "cases" of particular routes, as fast as made up, were submitted to me, and the service was in most cases ordered to be cut down. The aggregate reductions made in star service from March to June 30, 1881, were $655,832; in the steamboat service for same time, $289,009.

From the moment the table of the famous 93 star routes was given out, through the medium of the Associated Press, and the public, more fully informed by the startling array of supplemental facts and figures, began to realize the enormity of the offenses committed, Mr. Dorsey began to actively engage in efforts to shield himself, to bring the investigation to naught, to disturb the relations of the President with his Cabinet, and to convince the country that "persecution" was the primary motive of the Department and the Administration. The most brazen effrontery and reckless prevarication were freely indulged in, despite the most direct and convincing documentary and oral evidences which abounded on every hand.

In the early part of June ex-Senator Powell Clayton, of Arkansas, called on me at the Department and said that he had been visited by Montford C. Rerdell, clerk and superintendent of the Dorsey combination, who, he said, desired to make a "clean breast" of his relations to ex-Senator Dorsey and the star-route contracts. I suggested that the Attorney-General was the proper person for Mr. Rerdell to see, but was informed that Mr. Rerdell preferred to see me. As he did not wish to visit the Department, I was asked if he could call at the Arlington, to which I replied, "Yes, I will see him, in company with a third person." Mr. Clayton came to the Arlington with Rerdell that night about 8 o'clock. Mr. Woodward came in shortly afterward. In course of the conversation, Rerdell evidently went further than it was originally his purpose to go. Many of his statements were substantiated by papers then produced. The following is substantially the statement as Mr. Rerdell made it. He said that he had come to the conclusion to make a clean breast of his connection with star-route contracts; that he was secretary to Mr. Dorsey, of Arkansas, while Dorsey was Senator; that he prepared the proposals; that they were sent in bulk to the West, and after being partially filled up were brought back to be executed; that after the proposals were accepted he attended to getting up influence, petitions, &c., for expedition, and after the contracts were expedited he managed the business of the combination, which consisted of S. W. Dorsey, John W. Dorsey, Miner, Peck, and Boone, the last named being frozen out to make room for Vaile. He showed me transcripts of the books, and said that during the Congressional investigation he shammed sickness for fear of being summoned before the Congressional committee. During the time of this feigned sickness a book was copied from the original, with the exception that the money charged in that book to the fictitious names of Smith and Jones was there entered under the head of profit and loss. Smith represented Brady, and Jones Turner, of the Contract Office. Brady received 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. as his share of the expedition for one year, and 50 per cent. of the remissions of the fines and deductions.

The next day Rerdell called upon the Attorney-General and made a similar statement to him. A day or so thereafter I met Rerdell on the night train for New York. He told me he was going over for the ledger of the accounts, which would verify what he had alleged, and which was in Dorsey's office in the Boreel building. The next morning I was met at Jersey City by Postmaster Pearson, of New York, and Inspector Newcomb. I requested Newcomb to "shadow" Rerdell. I left New York on my return that afternoon by the 3.40 train. Rerdell came back in the same car with me. He said he had the ledger, and showed me a package wrapped up in a newspaper which contained it; that he had met Dorsey, and had been charged by him with treachery; that he advised him to become a witness for the Government, and that after a stormy scene he left. When we arrived at Trenton, the conductor came in with a couple of telegrams, which he handed to Rerdell. Shortly afterward Rerdell gave them to me. The first one was a request from Dorsey for him to leave the train at Philadelphia and return to New York; the next was a piteous appeal, on account of Dorsey's wife and children, to come back—that they must not quarrel. These dispatches were either signed Dorsey or S. W. Dorsey. Rerdell added that he was not going back; he was ticketed through, and was going through. He came to Washington with me; as he said there was a member of the star-route combination watching him, our conversation was limited. The report of Inspector Newcomb confirmed Rerdell's statement as to the places he visited in New York.

A few days later on ex-Senator Spencer reported that about 1 p. m. of Sunday, the 12th of June, while he was conversing in his room at the Everett House, New York City, with the Hon. S. B. Elkins, of New Mexico, Stephen W. Dorsey came in unannounced; that he (Dorsey) was terribly demoralized, smoked incessantly, and drank deeply; that he said his clerk (Rerdell) had "squealed" and betrayed him, and had shown his papers to the Postmaster-General and the Attorney-General and others; that he begged them both to help him, and made the most abject apologies for harsh things said of them in the past.

According to Mr. Spencer, Dorsey called at the Everett House again on Thursday evening, the 16th of June, but was then in a state of great exhilaration, asserting that everything was all right after all. Subsequently he exhibited to Mr. Spencer a long affidavit of Rerdell's, in which he recanted the statement previously made to Mr. Dorsey, explained that James W. Bosler, of Pennsylvania, had been on to Washington, gotten hold of Rerdell, had sat up all night with him, and extorted from him the affidavit in question.

On the last Monday of June I returned with President Garfield from Elberon to Washington. In the car between Baltimore and Washington he showed me a copy of the National Republican containing a bitter personal attack on him. He asked why Messrs. Cook and Gibson had been so slow, and requested me to see the Attorney-General and call at the Executive Mansion with him that evening. On inquiry I found that that official was out of town, and so advised the President. On Wednesday he telegraphed me that if the Attorney-General was not in the city to bring up Mr. Cook. In the evening Mr. Cook, Mr. Woodward, and myself went to the White House. As we entered, the attendant said: "Go right upstairs to the Cabinet room; the President is there. As we started to go upstairs I asked: "Who is with him?" He replied: "Senator Dorsey and Colonel Ingersoll." We went into the Red Room, and I sent word to the President that we were there. He came in shortly, and I introduced Mr. Cook to the President. This was obviously the first time they had met. Colonel Cook explained what had been done by Mr. Gibson and himself. The President suggested that they were too slow; that they should be more earnest in their work, and that they should have the accused parties indicted and tried. Mr. Cook promised that no time should be lost. On rising to leave the room he said: Mr. President, you know I am a criminal lawyer, and that my associations are not always with angels. I hear a good deal about what is going on, and I feel that it is my duty to say, from knowledge which has come into my possession, that something dreadful is about to happen. I do not know what it is, but think I can learn during the coming week.

During June, July, and August picked inspectors continued their labors on the frontier. Early in August, from information of a creditable nature, I became satisfied that Thomas A. MacDevitt, of Philadelphia, if he would tell what he knew, might be made a valuable witness for the Government. I accordingly directed Inspector Woodward to go to Philadelphia and interview him. Mr. MacDevitt was not in the city, but a week later he came to Washington and saw Mr. Woodward. I let it be known that wherever the ends of justice would be served by minor offenders telling the whole truth I would accept and act upon any recommendations which Mr. Woodward might make. I regarded it as important that the Government should enlist in its interest those of the lesser offenders whose services would be useful. MacDevitt's first statement was not satisfactory to the Attorney-General. A statement made a few days later was accepted. This evidence was regarded as valuable against the Salisbury combination.

Toward the close of August, at a meeting at the house of the Attorney-General, at which Messrs. Woodward, Cook, and Gibson were also present, the question of additional counsel was discussed. The Attorney-General said he had concluded to retain the Hon. Benjamin H. Brewster, and that he would retain any other person whom I would suggest. I asked that the Hon. George Bliss, ex-United States attorney for the southern district of New York, be retained. This was done.

The inspectors' reports on star routes were examined by Messrs. Woodward, Gibson, and Lyman as fast as they were received, and orders reducing the service were at once issued. The amount of the reductions by months was as follows: July, 1881, $384,397; August, $122,647; September, $111,056; October, $83,451; November, $145,327; December, $210,831.

The total amount of the reductions of star and steamboat service from March 1, 1881, to December 31, 1881, was $2,004,550. My connection with the Department closed on the 5th of January, 1882. It is proper that I should bear witness to the fidelity, energy, and intelligence with which I was supported by Inspector Woodward, Chief Clerk Van Wormer, Chief Clerk Lyman, and by Second Assistant Postmaster-General Elmer. Without their earnest co-operation, this great work, which placed the Department on a paying basis and paved the way for cheaper postage, could not have been performed; and so thoroughly and justly was their labor done that this great reduction was accomplished with very little friction, most of the complaints reaching the Department being evidently manufactured in the interest of the contractors. It is, perhaps, not improper for me to add that Mr. Bliss's action seemed to me to fully vindicate my choice in his selection. What I have said about these gentlemen connected with the Post-Office Department I also say about Mr. Gibson. Without the matter that he furnished the Government the investigation would have been delayed two or three months.

In conclusion, I desire to say to the committee that I gladly avail myself of the opportunity afforded by their summons to present to them and to the public this statement of the essential facts of my connection with the star-route proceedings. I deem it due to the truth of history and a matter of justice to myself, and still more of justice to the memory of the late President Garfield. His conduct in the whole affair was honorable and courageous in a high degree, and was inspired by a lofty sense of the duties of his office. If he had taken a lower view of his obligations as Chief Magistrate and as an honest man, it is my firm belief that he would not have fallen a victim to the assassin's bullet.

Q. Have you a statement from any official report made to Congress, or to the President, of the action of the Department in reference to the 93 expedited routes to which you have referred in your testimony?—A. That may be found in the report of Mr. Gibson to the Attorney-General.

Q. You refer to the report made by Mr. A. M. Gibson to the Attorney-General, dated October 31, 1881?—A. Yes, sir. That report contains the history of the famous 93 routes.

Q. That report was transmitted by you to Congress with your annual report in 1881?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether that report contained the first official information transmitted by any executive officer of the Government to Congress in reference to the star-route frauds.—A. Yes, sir; during my administration as Postmaster-General.

Q. Well, it was the first during any administration, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the statement which you have just made here you have referred to a conversation in which you, the Attorney-General, and the President took part; did you state that in that conversation something was said by the President in regard to some one who had materially aided in his election?—A. The conversation, as nearly as I can recollect, was exactly as I have stated it here.

Q. To whom was reference had in that remark?—A. That you will have to ask the Attorney-General.

Q. It was the Attorney-General who made the remark?—A. Yes, sir; I have given the conversation as I remember it.

Q. I believe you have said that it was at your instance that Mr. William A. Cook was employed in connection with the star-route cases?—A. Not at my instance; at the instance of Mr. Gibson and Mr. Woodward. I did not employ Mr. Cook; he was employed by the Department of Justice.

Q. But you joined in Mr. Woodward's and Mr. Gibson's recommendation to the Attorney-General that Mr. Cook should be employed?—A. I did.

Q. What did Mr. Cook say to you, if anything, with regard to the fees which he had been offered by defendants in the star-route prosecutions?—A. I think that information came to me from Mr. Woodward or Mr. Gibson. I don't think that Mr. Cook said anything of that kind to me.

Q. I believe you have stated that the appointment of Mr. George Bliss, as an attorney for the Government, was made upon your recommendation?—A. Upon my sole recommendation.

Q. Please state to the committee your reasons for recommending that appointment?—A. Mr. Bliss and I had for many years been very intimate. I knew that he was a man of great legal learning and of wonderful detective ability; I knew that he had convicted the defendants in one conspiracy case, and I knew that he was very earnest and very devoted to his work, and I felt safer after Mr. Bliss was employed than I did before.

Q. Did you take any part in arranging as to the fees which he should be paid for his service?—A. Not the slightest.

Q. You had nothing to do with that?—A. I had nothing to do with that.

Q. Nor with arranging as to the length of time during which he should be employed?—A. No, sir.

Q. You simply recommended him as a suitable person to be employed in that business?—A. Yes, sir; I stated that I would be satisfied with Mr. Bliss—not only satisfied, but gratified—if he should be retained to aid in the prosecutions.

Q. You spoke about commissioners having been appointed to visit Louisiana.—A. Yes, sir; to visit New Orleans and Memphis.

Q. State the reasons for the appointment of those commissioners and the object of their visit and their proceedings.—A. There was a great clamor in the Memphis papers regarding alleged unnecessary and wasteful service on the Mississippi and the rivers running into the Mississippi, and to ascertain whether those allegations were true or not, I sent out this commission, consisting of Mr. Sharretts, Mr. Jackson, and Mr. Henry R. Gibson. They devoted a great deal of time to the subject, and made an exhaustive report, which is in the files of the Post-Office Department, recommending that a great deal of the service be cut off, which was done. The same is true with regard to the service in Louisiana.

Q. Before you left the office of Postmaster-General, had inspectors been sent West for the purpose of investigating various star routes?—

A. Yes, sir; they were sent West in the latter part of April, I think.

Q. Who were appointed for that purpose?—A. They were the original Post-Office inspectors.

Q. Can you give their names?—A. Mr. John B. Furay, of Omaha, was one; Mr. Siebold; Mr. James E. Stewart, of Chicago, was another; Mr. Sharp, of San Francisco; and Mr. McCoy, and—I cannot remember them all, but there were several inspectors sent out on those star routes.

Q. Did they make reports to the Department before you left?—A. Yes, sir; it was upon their reports that this service was cut off. Their reports were submitted to Mr. Gibson and Mr. Woodward, who went over them carefully and then referred them to Mr. Lamb, the chief clerk, and the service was relentlessly cut off.

Q. When were those inspectors sent out?—A. I think it was in the latter part of April, 1881.

Q. When did they return?—A. Their reports were coming in all summer.

Q. How many routes did they examine?—A. I cannot tell you that; I don't know.

Q. Do you know whether those are the reports that have been recently transmitted to Congress by the present Postmaster-General?—

A. I don't know it, but I suppose they are.

Q. Did you make, or cause to be made, any investigation as to the amounts which would be due the Government for excessive payments to star-route contractors—amounts to be recovered in civil suits?—A. I don't think that that table was made up in my time as Postmaster-General. I remember writing to Mr. George Bliss and asking him if the time had not come to commence civil suits, and I remember that his reply was that he thought the time had nearly arrived, and that he would look into the matter. That, however, was some time in December.

Q. Was anything done so far as you know during the time you were in the office as Postmaster-General to institute civil proceedings against persons who were alleged to have received excessive payments from the Government as star-route contractors?—A. Nothing more than what I have stated.

Q. I believe you have said that you had no further official transactions in reference to the employment of the attorneys than what you have stated?—A. Nothing.

Q. That matter all rested with the Department of Justice?—A. It rested with the Department of Justice.

Q. You simply furnished the reports of the inspectors and such facts as you had been able to obtain through them for the information of the attorneys employed by the Government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you consulted from time to time with regard to the prosecution of offenders?—A. Do you mean by the Attorney-General?

—Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the indictments found during your term of office?—A. The indictments, I think, were not found during my term; there was a proceeding instituted for an information; which failed.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Had the investigation of the facts been concluded at the time you left the office?—A. Not the investigation of all the facts.

Q. So that the preparation of the various cases was not fully matured at the time you left?—A. I cannot say about that.

Q. That belonged to the Department of Justice?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HEMPHILL:

Q. Who was the inspector that you have spoken of in your statement who had the supervision of these star routes?—A. The assistant railway mail superintendent.

Q. In your statement you have said that all of these star routes were under the supervision of one man?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Ray P. Eaton.

Q. What became of him?—A. I removed him.

Q. Do you know whether he is in the public service now or not?—A. He is collector of customs in Maine; so I have been informed since I have been here.

Q. What did you remove him for?—A. I removed him upon the report of Mr. Woodward, that his being in the Department would be a disadvantage to the Government—a disadvantage to the Department.

Q. Was there any proof showing that he (Mr. Eaton) had knowledge of these frauds?—A. That I cannot recollect. Mr. Woodward would be a better witness than I upon that subject.

Q. Was his removal in any way owing to difficulties growing out of these star-route prosecutions? You went out before the President was shot, I believe?—A. Oh, no; I went out in January, 1882.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know what the specific charges were, if any, against Mr. Eaton?—A. I cannot exactly recollect; it seems to me that Mr. Woodward told me that Mr. Eaton was at least negligent, if not worse.

Q. Did Mr. Woodward exhibit any proof to that effect?—A. There was so much that transpired during the ten months I was Postmaster-General that I would not undertake to be very definite on that point; I knew the general facts.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. The official relation of this Mr. Eaton to the star route service had no reference whatever, had it, to the establishing of the routes or to the rates of compensation? His duty was merely to superintend the service as established by the Post-Office Department?—A. And, if any complaints were made, to report upon them.

Q. To report upon complaints made as to the inefficiency of the service as established by the Department?—A. Yes. Whether the question of the necessity for the service was ever presented to him, I do not know.

Q. He was merely a subordinate executive officer, I suppose?—A. Yes.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Look at the paper I now show you [Ex. Doc. 100, 48th Congress, 1st session], and state whether the reports there mentioned are the reports of the inspectors who were sent out by you as Postmaster-General.—A. [After inspecting the document.] Yes, sir; those are the reports.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Is not the result of these reports summarized in Mr. Gibson's report, which accompanied your report as Postmaster-General?—A. Partially, I think.

Q. Were these reports submitted after Mr. Gibson's report was made?—A. No; I think not. They were transmitted to Congress afterwards, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. I will state for the information of the committee that these are the reports transmitted by the present Postmaster-General to the House of Representatives in response to the resolution of the House which was adopted on the 20th of February, 1884.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You may state generally, if you please, the nature of those reports to which I have called your attention.—A. They are reports on star-route service in the Territories and in the Western States, service which had been increased and expedited. The contracts had been referred to the inspectors for examination and these are their reports upon the necessity of the service, and upon the service as they found it.

Q. Upon the receipt of those reports what action did you as Postmaster-General take in reference to those star routes?—A. I referred the reports to Mr. Gibson and Mr. Woodward, and upon their report to me I ordered the increases and expedition to be cut off and the service restored to the original contracts. Mr. Woodward suggests to me that I did that all through the contract office, which is the fact.

Q. Then upon the receipt of these reports each of those routes was revised?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And where the report showed that there had been expedition not justified by the facts as found by the inspectors and set forth in these reports, the expedition was set aside and the routes were set back to the original contracts?—A. Yes, sir; and the increases were cut off.

Q. What was your statement a while ago with regard to the general result; the aggregate result of such reductions?—A. It was a little over $2,000,000.

Q. On those ninety-three routes?—A. No; the entire reduction in both steamboat and star service.

Q. Were you Postmaster-General when the deficiency bill was passed in the Forty-sixth Congress to cover this extraordinary mail service?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. You have spoken about an investigation that was made by a committee of Congress in reference to these star routes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You referred, I suppose, to the investigation made by the Committee on Appropriations in the Forty-sixth Congress?—A. Yes, sir; I think so. Governor Hawley was one of the members of that committee, was he not?

Q. Yes. Mr. Blackburn was chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which made that investigation?—A. Yes; I remember that he was.

Q. That was one source from which you obtained information in regard to the excessive charges on those routes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state more particularly the conversation you had with ex-Senator George E. Spencer with regard to the star-route service.—A. I have stated substantially the conversation that I had with Mr. Spencer.

Q. You have mentioned two occasions when you had conversations with him. Were there more than two?—A. Oh, yes; I talked with Mr. Spencer oftener than that. He was very earnest in denouncing this service, very indeed. After I became Postmaster-General he came into the Department one day and desired to look at the papers on a route which he said he was absolutely familiar with—I think it was from Pioche to Eureka, but I may be wrong about that; I know he lived at Osceola. He said that the contract called for daily service, and that the service was really rendered only twice a week, I think. I sent to the contract office for the papers, and he looked them over, and he satisfied me that the service called for was daily service. My impression is that we telegraphed for an inspector to go over that route, and that he found the service to be exactly as Mr. Spencer had stated, and the contract was abrogated, I think, at once.

Q. Did Mr. Spencer give you the source of his information with regard to this fraudulent mail service?—A. The source of his information in that case was himself; he had the information. He lived at Osceola, in Nevada.

Q. And he was personally cognizant of many of the facts about that route?—A. Yes, sir; he had personal knowledge of the service.

Q. Will you please state again the substance of the conversation which took place between you and him when he referred to the visit that Mr. Dorsey had made to him?—A. I prefer to read it as I have already stated it.

Q. You have given it in your written statement and I remember what you stated there. Is that all that occurred between you at that time?—A. Yes, sir; that is all that occurred.

Q. Did he state what Mr. Dorsey had told him with regard to his connections with the star-route frauds or cases?—A. I say here [reading]—A few days later ex-Senator Spencer reported that about 1 p. m. of Sunday the 12th of June, while he was conversing in his room at the Everett House, New York City, with the Hon. S. B. Elkins, of New Mexico, Stephen W. Dorsey, came in unannounced; that he (Dorsey) was terribly demoralized, smoked incessantly, and drank deeply; that he said his clerk (Rerdell) had “squealed” and betrayed him, and had shown his papers to the Postmaster-General and the Attorney-General and others; that he begged them both to help him, and made the most abject apologies for harsh things said of them in the past.

Q. Did he state what Mr. Dorsey said had been “given away” by his clerk; did Mr. Dorsey make any confession at all in regard to the matter?—A. I cannot say about that.

Q. You did not ask him, then, what Dorsey had said about that?—A. No; I don't remember that. As I said before, there was so much that transpired within a short period, that I cannot be very positive about many of the details.

Q. Did Mr. Spencer proceed to relate the matter in detail?—A. He merely came in and said that Mr. Dorsey had been to see him and had said so and so, as I have already stated it here.

Q. Did he say to you at any time anything in reference to his having witnessed the payment of money by Mr. Dorsey to Mr. Brady?—A. Yes, sir; he said that he was present in Mr. Dorsey's room—that was before my incumbency as Postmaster-General—and that card was sent up, and Mr. Dorsey said that he wanted him (Spencer) to see the way that he did business, and he took some money out of his pocket and put it in an envelope, and when the party came up Mr. Dorsey handed him the envelope, which he took and put in his pocket and went away.

Q. Where was it that Mr. Spencer stated this to you?—A. He told me that in New York; he told it here, too, for that matter.

Q. Whom do you say Spencer said Dorsey paid that money to?—A. Mr. Brady.

Q. How much was it?—A. My impression is that it was $5,000 or $6,000.

Q. Mr. Spencer said that Mr. Dorsey told him that he would show him how he did business?—A. Yes.

Q. And he placed $5,000 or $6,000 in an envelope and put it on his table?—A. Yes.

Q. And after a while Mr. Brady came in and Mr. Dorsey handed him the envelope, and he put it in his pocket and went away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the substance of the statement of ex-Senator Spencer to you?—A. Yes, sir. I wish to add that the information that Senator Spencer gave me about these star-route matters was most valuable.

Q. Did you find his statements to be pretty true with regard to these matters?—A. Always correct, as far as I can recollect.

Q. Have you had any conversation with Mr. Spencer since with regard to this matter?—A. Since the trial?

Q. Since the first time he mentioned it, or since the last time to which you have referred here?—A. Yes; I have had conversations with him. I don't know that that case has come up, though.

Q. What I desire to know is, whether, in any subsequent statement made to you by Mr. Spencer, he modified the first one which you have stated here?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he say where this circumstance took place?—A. I don't remember whether he said it was at a hotel in Washington or in New York; but it was one or the other.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Why do you state, as you do, generally, in the statement you have made here, your belief or impression that the assassination of President Garfield was in consequence of this star-route business?—A. I did not say that, governor.

Q. Won't you please read again what you did say about that at the conclusion of your prepared statement?—A. [Reading] "His conduct in the whole affair was honorable and courageous in a high degree, and was inspired by a lofty sense of the duties of his office. If he had taken a lower view of his obligations as Chief Magistrate and as an honest man, it is my firm belief that he would not have fallen a victim to the assassin's bullet."

Q. Well, I think that language conveys the impression, or would convey the impression, to the public (and this will be made public), that in some way the act of the assassin was directly a consequence of the President's action with reference to the star-route prosecutions. Now, if you do not mean that, I wish you would explain it, because that is the impression I got when you read it.—A. I mean just this: Taking the warning given by Colonel Cook, and the clamor raised by these people at this investigation, together with the fact of the newspaper clippings that were found in the pockets of the assassin, I think that his head was turned by these assaults upon the President.

Q. Not that he was instigated by anybody connected with the star-routes?—A. I have no right to say that, because I do not know it.

Mr. STEWART. I think it is well that your explanation on that point should be explicit.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Were the clippings to which you have referred from the Washington Republican the same articles which you read with President Garfield on the train? Were those the clippings that were found upon Guiteau?—A. I am not sure whether that article was the one found upon Guiteau.

Q. But there were some articles found upon him which commented severely upon the President's administration?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many days before President Garfield was shot was it that Mr. Cook made this statement to him which you have told us about?—A. I think it was the Wednesday night before.

Q. What day of the week was the 2d of July, the day on which the President was shot?—A. Saturday.

By Mr. HEMPHILL :

Q. Can you state whether the clippings found in the pocket of Guiteau had relation to the President's action with reference to star-route matters, or to his administration generally?—A. I am not certain about that; I think to both; but I won't say that, because I am not certain. I withdraw that.

Q. But they contained severe reflections upon his administration of the office of President?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Was there any effort made, while you were Postmaster-General, to bring about a compromise of the civil suits with these defendants by their paying any sum of money?—A. I do not recollect any such effort.

Q. You have spoken about President Garfield's co-operation in the matter. Did you have any conversation with him with regard to any prosecution of Mr. Dorsey particularly?—A. No more than of any of the other defendants.

Q. I believe you have said that Mr. Dorsey remonstrated with the President with regard to the treatment he was receiving?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEWART. You did not say that.

The WITNESS. Well, I say it now. I said that Mr. Dorsey attempted to raise trouble between the President and his Cabinet.

The CHAIRMAN. That was your statement, and I supposed you meant that the attempt was made on account of these prosecutions. Can you explain in what way the effort was made?—A. He took this Rerdell's affidavit, this recantation, to the President and demanded the removal of the Attorney-General and myself on the ground that we were attempting to suborn a witness.

By Mr. STEWART :

Q. Was that at the time of this visit by Mr. Ingersoll to which you have referred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any interview with Mr. Dorsey during the progress of the investigation?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I think it would be well for you to explain in further detail, if you can, the efforts made by Mr. Dorsey to thwart the investigation.—A. Yes, and that will answer in full Governor Stewart's question, too. Mr. Dorsey wrote me an open letter demanding a separate investigation—that we should lay aside everything else in the Department, I suppose, to give him a separate investigation. He came to the Department in company with his counsel.

Q. In what manner did he desire that investigation; by the criminal prosecution?—A. No; simply an investigation through the Department.

Mr. STEWART. That is a matter of public history?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; that is history. He came with his counsel, and they accidentally met the Attorney-General there with me, and, after listening to Mr. Dorsey, the Attorney-General advised me to treat him as everybody else was treated—not to give any one a separate investigation; he said that the ends of justice would not be attained by doing that, displaying all the papers in one case and giving everything away; and we declined to do it.

Mr. STEWART. The Attorney-General was right.

The WITNESS. Of course he was right; he always is right.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. At the close of your prepared statement, you connected the death of President Garfield with the star-route cases, as I understood.

The WITNESS. No; I have explained that.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 5, 1884.

WAYNE MACVEAGH sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your residence and occupation.—Answer. I reside in Philadelphia, Pa.; I am a lawyer by profession.

Q. When were you appointed Attorney-General of the United States, and when did you cease to fill that office?—A. I was nominated by President Garfield, as Attorney-General, to the Senate on the 5th of March, 1881, I think, the day after the inauguration, but did not come to Washington until after I was confirmed, and my recollection would be that a Sunday intervened; that the Cabinet was confirmed on a Saturday and that I came here on Monday morning early, which probably would be the 7th or 8th of March, 1881. I really do not remember when I took the oath of office as Attorney-General. I left the office on the 14th of November, 1881.

Q. Please state and explain in your own way your action while you were Attorney-General in reference to the prosecution of offenders against the law in connection with the mail service.—A. Well, I would hardly know whether in what I would say upon that subject I would meet the views of the committee—that is, give them the information they desire. I would be very glad to put them in possession of any information I have upon the subject from the beginning to the end, but, considering the lapse of time and my constant engagements since in other matters, I am not sure that I could recall, perhaps, even the most important matters. I have no statement of any kind to offer to the committee, because I have no wish to give them any information except that which they really desire. If you think I had better begin now and state according to my present recollection just what occurred about the star-route matter, I will do that, if the committee will, by their questions, subsequently, fill in any gaps that may appear in my statement; because I really supposed I would be questioned and would have to answer questions.

The CHAIRMAN. We would prefer that you should first make your own statement as far as you can in relation to those cases, and then questions may be suggested on particular points.

The WITNESS. My recollection now is that I knew nothing whatever about the matter until the President himself one day, not long after I had come here, mentioned the subject to me, and said that while it would be a matter mainly in the Post-Office Department and with which, certainly, at that stage of it, I would have properly nothing to do, he would himself feel more satisfied if I would allow him to send the Postmaster-General to me, with the statement that I would cheerfully listen to anything he had to say about it, and advise with him from time to time as he went on with the investigation into these supposed irregularities or frauds. Of course, I assented to that, as to any other proper request that the President would make of me, and, in accordance with it, the Postmaster-General called upon me, as I now remember; but I ought to say that I kept no memoranda whatever, but transacted this as a part of the current business of my office, and that, therefore, I may be mistaken as to details in any particular matter, and of course may possibly be mistaken as to essentials. But, if that was the order, as I think it was, then the Postmaster-General called upon me at my department, and I went over with him to see the President, and the President there repeated substantially what he had said before, that this was a matter which needed immediate looking into, and as it involved irregularities amounting to very gross frauds, if they existed at all, he would feel better satisfied if I was in a position to give constant heed to the Postmaster-General and to give him advice as he needed it. I then said, either to the President or to the Postmaster-General, that we must first find what the facts were in some intelligible form, and I was very soon thereafter confronted with a tabular statement of what has since been known as the "93 routes," to which allusion has been made in the examination this morning. I had been familiar with the general system of laws passed by Congress and with the multiplied safeguards (as I had had occasion more than once in my profession to examine them) thrown around the lettings of mail contracts by Congress in the way of securing competition by advertisement, and I was familiar with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in which those safeguards had been commended as intended to prevent fraud and favoritism and undue waste of the public moneys. Therefore, when the facts appeared to me in this sufficient number of cases to show the system pursued in evading those laws, I was measurably satisfied, of course, that certainly very great wrong had been done to the public treasury. I remember very early seeing one case which was perhaps a fair sample, and which had a very considerable influence on my mind, because I found it multiplied in a number of other cases, substantially. I asked that the papers in some typical case should be laid before me, that I might take them home and carefully look into them. A case was brought to me by the Postmaster General, or by his authority, and the entire bundle of papers confided to me, and I took them home. It was a route out in the Territory of Arizona and in Nevada, running from one into the other, I think; at all events, it was certainly in the extreme unsettled portion of the Government territory. I found that theretofore the entire route had been traversed one way, say from one Monday morning to the next Monday morning (if I am right as to details), and then traversed back over the same line the following week ; that the contract had been let, in the previous contract term, to a resident upon the route, for which he had been receiving about $6,000. On satisfying myself of that, and that up to that time no demand, so far as I could see, had been made for any change, or even any suggestion of a change, I then looked at the advertising for the lettings of that route in the contract term under examination, and I found that the service had been changed and the time shortened. I found, also, that the successful bidder was not a resident of the western country, as theretofore, but was Mr. John W. Dorsey, who gave his residence as at Middlebury, Vt. While that in itself was not very important, it was suggestive to my mind, and I found that this man coming from Vermont had undertaken to do the service for one-half what the man had been paid for doing it who lived in the Territory. Then I looked at the bonds, and I found names of which I had some public knowledge, and which did not tend to dissipate the impression which the remoteness of the residence of the contractor from the route had made upon me. However, I found that the contract had been awarded to him as the lowest bidder, in accordance with the act of Congress, and that, apparently, the Government was saving $3,000 per annum, in round figures, by giving it to him rather than to the resident bidder. I then found that Mr. Dorsey did not himself propose to perform this work, but had immediately transferred it to a man, who has been mentioned here by Mr. James, named Rerdell. I further ascertained that the contract going into effect, according to my recollection, on the 1st of April, Rerdell, in July, after repeated remonstrances from some of the officers of the Department, and demands for an explanation of why no service had been put on the route, wrote a letter explaining that the Congressional investigation, to which allusion has been made this morning, had detained him here, and stating that service would be put on. Then there came what seemed to me a fair shower of sublettings and withdrawals of this contract, and authority assumed to deal with it by Mr. Miner, I think, whose name, up to that time, had nowhere appeared in connection with it, and then again by Mr. Rerdell, as attorney for Mr. John W. Dorsey ; then that contract would be withdrawn and something else would be substituted, and, in short, everything seemed to be doing about the contract except the straightforward thing of carrying it out. Later on, however, I did find a contract made with a man living out there, the husband of a postmistress on the route, and to my surprise I found that Mr. Dorsey, or Mr. Rerdell for him, had agreed to give this man living on the route twice the amount, substantially, that he was to get from the Government for performing the service ; so that while the Government apparently saved $3,000 a year, Mr. Dorsey seemed to be losing it. But, in this contract, as in all of them, I found a stipulation contemplating that increases would be made, and in this contract with the man living on the route I found a double provision of that kind, one saying that if the mail should be ordered to be carried three times a week, then the carrier should have $12,000 per annum for the service, and if it should be ordered to be carried six times a week, then he should have $28,000. Then I found that subsequently petitions had been presented, or papers were on file, requesting an increase of the service on that route to three times a week—some asking that it should be increased to twice a week and some to three times a week—and that it had been ordered to be carried three times a week and the pay had been raised to $22,000; so that the contract, which began by being a losing one to the contractor to the extent of $3,000 per annum, had now become a profitable contract to the extent of $10,000 per annum. I found, also, that not long thereafter daily mail service had been ordered on the route, and that then the compensation had been fixed at $52,000; so that it now became a profitable contract to the gentleman holding it to the amount of $24,000 a year. Well, of course, no one of these things alone would perhaps have created in one's mind anything but a very violent suspicion, but when they all came together they were very persuasive to my mind. Then, I found in that bundle of papers another very extraordinary coincidence. But before I mention that I ought to say that there had been two or three letters written by residents along the route (one of them by a gentleman who described himself as a young lawyer, and who wrote certainly a very intelligent letter and a very earnest one) protesting against these increases and protesting against the expedition (for the service had also been expedited), and one of these letters stated that some blockhead in the Department (using that or some equivalent expression) had evidently allowed himself to be imposed upon, because these expeditions and increases were in no sense a benefit to the public service, but were merely a cover for taking money from the Treasury. But there were also petitions on the other side, such as they were, the signatures to which and the appearance of which, according to my recollection, did not impress me very strongly. Still, those petitions were there asking for these increases, and there were affidavits made either by Mr. Dorsey or Mr. Miner or Mr. Rerdell (whoever for the time being was the subcontractor on record), stating that if this change in the service was made it would oblige him to employ so many more men and so many more horses, so that there seemed to be, on paper at least (and one ought to give that presumption to a public officer), some reason, such as it was, for the increase. But then I found that when a committee of Congress was authorized to investigate these star routes and to send for persons and papers, and after they issued subpoenas for the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, as I recollect, or for somebody in the Department, to bring the papers, there had been an entire wiping out of all that had been done in relation to this route, and the $52,000 daily mail contract was reduced, at one stroke of the pen, back to a weekly service at $3,000 per annum. Then, after some little time, and, I think, the intervention of some other papers, it was jumped back again half way, the service being made three times a week at $22,000 per annum, and there it remained at the time I looked at the papers, the route having at that point been turned over to Mr. McKibben, I think, or to somebody, as the agent of one of the other combinations of contractors. When I got through with this examination of the papers it was supplemented by a pamphlet, which was put in my hands by somebody from the Post-Office Department, either Mr. Woodward or Mr. Gibson or the Postmaster-General himself, giving Mr. Rerdell's testimony before the Congressional committee, in which he had alluded to this contract among others, and in which he had stated that while this multiplicity of names appeared on the record the real parties in interest were S. W. Dorsey and James W. Bosler, and that while Mr. Jennings, which was the name of the subcontractor, had done all the work that had been done on the route, as a matter of fact very little had been done, and, what with fines and penalties for not doing the work, Jennings had received hardly anything, and the other gentlemen had not received near so much as they had expected; only, I think, in all about $20,000, or something like that. But I remember that Rerdell's testimony was very distinct and positive to the fact that those two were the two gentlemen who were really interested in the contract. Of the 93 cases I examined some half dozen others, not so carefully or thoroughly as I examined this, but the examination of them, some of them, being very much larger in the changes and figures, allowed my mind, rightly or wrongly, to reach a very settled and definite conclusion that there was a gigantic robbery of the public Treasury; unless, I ought to add, the ordinary indications of such things were at fault in these cases, and what I had discovered was due to the general looseness and irregularity with which things were done in the contract division of the Post-Office Department; because, in going along with these examinations you sometimes ran across various evidences of very gross irregularity, to say the least, so that wherever you touched the matter it seemed to ooze something that elsewhere would certainly be called crime. If you began with the bonds you found that they were certified without the slightest regard to facts; that the oaths were taken without the slightest regard to facts; that false bonds were put in by postmasters and certified by notaries public, without in any manner purposing to give the Government the slightest protection for the performance of the contracts for which they were demanded as security.

One of the very first cases of that kind was a little nest uncovered in my own city of Philadelphia, for which the parties were prosecuted, convicted, and punished. We all agreed that, having this condition of things upon the record here, the next step was to find out what the actual truth was about the service. I ought to say that in these increases I was struck by the absence of any attempt to protect the Government in the way of security, as the price and the obligation of the contracts went up. There was a perfect network of provisions on the subject by Congress, which are elaborately treated in an opinion by Mr. Freeman, of the Post-Office Department, given some time in 1880, which recited, for the instruction of the Department, the various provisions of law enacted on the subject, and illustrated the great care Congress had taken to see that there should be competition, real, genuine, bona fide competition for these contracts, and that whoever contracted to do anything for the Government must give security that he was going to do it. In the particular case to which I have alluded, as in all the other cases without exception, I believe, while security of a certain kind, or pretended security, was taken for the performance of that contract of $3,000 per annum, and while competition had been exacted, and large sums spent in advertising to secure competition for that contract, no competition was contemplated or had, nor any advertising whatever, nor any bond taken, when that contract was multiplied by seven and raised to $22,000, nor when it was multiplied by seventeen and raised to $52,000. All the advertising that had ever been done to invite competition had been on the smaller contract and on the longer time, and the only bond that had been taken had been a bond upon the $3,000 contract. If, however, the service had really been performed, then again it was reasonable to suppose that these might have been errors of judgment and merely a part of the general looseness that prevailed in the administration of the Department; and therefore it seemed to me, as it did to the Postmaster-General, indispensable to send men in whom the Department itself had confidence to examine the routes in question and to ascertain what, as matter of fact, had been done. If, as matter of fact, this service had been performed, though it might not have been necessary, then there would be some reason to suppose that it had been an

Il-judged exercise of discretion, and nothing more. Accordingly, the Postmaster-General, with such assistance as he could get, selected inspectors, and, at his invitation, I met them in the Post Office Department before they started, and explained to them just what we wanted them to do. I told them that there was no prejudgment (there had been a good deal of newspaper controversy upon the subject), and no disposition to have any; that we wanted them simply to go there as agents of the Post-Office Department and ascertain the exact facts, as nearly as they could, and embody them in official reports; and I told them that they had been selected because they were believed to be trustworthy and competent men, and we wanted such reports from them; wanted their reports thorough and complete; and as well substantiated by the evidence of parties resident who could give testimony one way or the other, as it was possible to have them, so that we might, by laying those facts alongside of the record in each case, ascertain what the true history of that particular route had been. That is the outline, or the basis rather, on which we proceeded; and it was upon the records here, and such reports as we got from these inspectors, that I proposed to form my own opinion about this matter and did form it; and it was upon those records and those reports that I relied from the beginning to end, in case any prosecution was instituted against these parties. I say that because from the beginning to the end I placed very little reliance indeed upon, and attached very little importance to, any pretended confessions or declarations by any of the implicated parties, or upon any such testimony against them as we might gather in the city of Washington or elsewhere. It became, however, necessary, at an early day, to furnish Mr. Woodward, who was conducting the matter under the direction of the Postmaster-General, with assistance; and Mr. Woodward had written a letter to the Postmaster-General declaring that he wished assistance; that he wished some person who was already very familiar with the cases to be employed by the Department of Justice, and to represent that Department in the investigations being conducted in the post-office building. He said that Mr. Gibson possessed in a high degree the qualifications he sought in an assistant, and had information of very great value, which he freely gave him, and that he was sure Mr. Gibson could be of inestimable service in the further preparation of these cases and the elucidation of the facts regarding them, and he asked that I, as Attorney-General, should appoint Mr. Gibson for that service as an assistant in the star-route cases. Mr. James, the Postmaster-General, cordially indorsed that letter, and upon it I submitted the matter to the President and received his authority to employ Mr. Gibson, which I did. That, according to my recollection, was in the latter part of April. Those gentlemen, so far as I knew, were very assiduously and constantly engaged in their work at the Post-Office Department, in collating these records and in framing instructions for the inspectors who were to go out, and in ascertaining what routes were most urgent for examination. As the matter went along, Mr. Woodward and Mr. Gibson united in a request to the Postmaster-General, who concurred in it, that Mr. Cook should be associated with them, to supervise the preparation of the cases for the criminal court-, and, upon their joint recommendation, the same course was pursued in that matter, and Mr. Cook was appointed. As his duties were to be more in the courts and Mr. Gibson's more in the Department, Mr. Cook was commissioned as an assistant district attorney for the District. I ought to say, in that connection, that Mr. Corkhill wrote me a letter declaring that the duties resting upon him in other cases were such that there ought to be an assistant appointed in this District for these star-route cases, and Mr. Cook was accordingly appointed an assistant district attorney for the District of Columbia, and his commission was placed upon record, with the view that he should be in communication, of course, with the attorney for the District, but should act with special reference to these cases, he being supposed to have special knowledge of their details.

I do not know anything else that I need state in connection with these matters, until the wounding of the President. There was certainly nothing with reference to the employment of counsel by the Department of Justice.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you cognizant of the employment of Mr. Bliss?

The WITNESS. That came later; much later. I employed Mr. Bliss. When I saw the President, shortly after his wounding, on the floor of the depot, I was profoundly impressed, as everybody then was, that his death was a question of a very little time. I was continuously in Washington from that moment until we took him to Elberon, where I remained with him continuously until his death. In all that time it was a matter of newspaper comment that I was the gloomy member of the Cabinet. It was my misfortune to think each week, and almost each day, that the President was rapidly nearing his grave, and I therefore regarded it as only a question of a very little time when the duties of my office would cease, technically. To a very great extent, they had been already paralyzed by the wounding of the President; and I felt that it was undesirable, and, indeed, from my standpoint of duty, it would have been grossly improper, for me to complicate these cases by any action I could avoid when I knew I was not to be responsible for their final conduct. Whatever was necessary to be done in the interest of public justice I did, but I desired to do nothing that was not necessary, because I desired that the President who, I was firmly convinced, was to succeed at a very early day to the Presidency, and my successor in the Attorney-Generalship, should come to the cases as little embarrassed by any commitments of mine as was possible. It was no longer possible for me to consult with President Garfield, and the cases had been so completely carried on with his constant knowledge and sympathy, as far as my information went, that I felt a like course was due to his successor, and that I ought to keep them in as good condition as possible for him and my successor to deal with when the time came. I lived through those months in constant expectation that the time was at hand. I undervalued the President's vitality, but I did not mistake the character of the injury. The autopsy, whatever else it did, settled that I had judged that rightly. Shortly before the President died, it was felt by the gentlemen having charge of the matter, all of them—Mr. James, Mr. Woodward, Mr. Gibson, and Mr. Cook—that something ought to be done in the way of selecting the leading counsel to represent the Government. By that time it was known that many eminent counsel had been employed by the various defendants, and it was felt that we ought no longer to postpone the selection of counsel on our side. I then stated, as I believe the Postmaster-General stated this morning in my hearing, that I proposed to ask Mr. Brewster to come into the cases, and that as Mr. James did not know Mr. Brewster, I would be very glad to associate with him any lawyer of competent position in the profession whom Mr. James might suggest. It was impossible to consult with the President, and we had to act on the best light we had. I thought then, and I think still, that it was my duty to select members of the profession, if I could find them of proper professional standing, who had heretofore maintained cordial personal and political relations with Mr. Arthur. That is the way I should have wanted a man in my place to treat me. I knew that Mr. Brewster had for many years sustained such relations. He had been attorney-general of my State and had discharged the duties of that high post with honor to himself and to the profession. I knew him to be a man of courage, and, so far as I could judge of the qualities needed, he possessed the other qualifications which I thought extremely desirable. I therefore invited him into the cases, and he came. Mr. James suggested Mr. Bliss, and I accordingly invited Mr. Bliss on that suggestion. That was very shortly, and by shortly I mean a few days only, before the President died, and at a time when each hour I was expecting his death.

Immediately upon the accession of President Arthur, I told him of my convictions of public duty. I told him that I thought it would be unbecoming in every way for me to remain in my place and injurious to the public interests, according to my judgment, but that, of course, I was not only willing but anxious to do everything in my power to relieve him from any embarrassment, and would cheerfully stay thirty days or sixty days, if it was necessary for him to take so long a time to select my successor. Thenceforward, really I had very little to do with this matter. I went, of course, with President Garfield's body to Cleveland, and on my return President Arthur, very naturally and properly, wished that I should say to the country that my leaving the Cabinet was my own act, and accordingly the agent of the associated press was kind enough to allow me to make a statement to the country, in which I took the entire responsibility for it, and stated the reasons for it. Subsequently the President asked if I could reconsider the matter, and I told him that I could not; that I would gladly talk it over at any time, but I was profoundly convinced that my usefulness was ended, and that my remaining longer in office would be an injury to the public justice, and that I would have to act, as each man must, upon his own convictions of duty. Finally, it resulted in my leaving the office. I stated, through the associated press, and by the courtesy of its representative, my determination to withdraw, and I gave the reasons for it very explicitly and fully, and on the 14th of November I turned over the office to the Solicitor-General, who, under the act of Congress, becomes the Acting Attorney-General under such circumstances, and he retained charge of the office for some time afterwards.

Mr. STEWART. Did you have any conference with President Arthur specially, with reference to these star route prosecutions?—A. Yes. Well, I ought to say I had several conferences with him as to the general subject of the prosecution of those cases, as to my own view of the cases, and what was necessary to be done in them.

Q. What desire did the President express about that?—A. The President expressed the desire that I should remain and continue responsible for the prosecution of those cases; first, as Attorney-General, and subsequently as leading counsel for the Government. That statement, however, both in justice to him and to me, I ought to premise by giving the history of it. After my return from the funeral of President Garfield, and my announcement through the Associated Press of the position I occupied, which I read to the President, which seemed entirely satisfactory to him, and which is in the public prints of the day—

The CHAIRMAN [interposing]. What is the date of that announcement?—A. I should say it was September 27, 1881. After that the President asked me to allow the matter to rest until his return from Yorktown, where there was to be a celebration, and upon his return he stated that he had selected my successor, but had some difficulty in communicating with him; and he was kind enough to confide to me the name of the gentleman whom he had selected. At a subsequent interview he stated that, owing to some representations which had been made to him, he had changed his mind in that respect, and had decided to ask another gentleman to take the place, at least for a month or two, and said that the name of the latter gentleman would go to the Senate at the same time with the name of the new Secretary of the Treasury. It is part of the public history of that immediate time that ex-Governor Morgan, of New York, was offered the Treasuryship, and that he was in doubt whether his physicians would allow him to take the place, and they finally decided against it, and subsequently Judge Folger was selected. The President thought that on a certain day, however, he would be able to send in the names of both the new Secretary of the Treasury and my successor, and accordingly, with his authority, I fixed the day when I would close my house here and go home to Philadelphia. I did go home, and while in Philadelphia I received a message from the President's private secretary, asking me to meet the President at the depot while the limited express stopped there. As that was only a few minutes, and as I had to talk with the President upon the step of the private car in which he was traveling, lest we should be moved out of the station, it was an unsatisfactory interview; but I gathered from what he said that he would like me to reconsider the question of taking the responsibility of these star-route cases upon myself. I answered then just as I had before, but suggested that we could not talk of a matter of that consequence upon the steps of a car liable to move at a moment's warning, and that if he wished I would go to New York to see him about it; and he subsequently wrote me, asking me to come over, and I went over. I found him, then, strongly possessed with the idea that I ought, either as Attorney-General or as leading counsel for the Government, to continue my responsibility for those cases. I explained to him, at the time, how comparatively slight my relation to them had been; how, as matter of fact, it had never entered my mind that I was to prosecute them in person; that as a political officer, as well as the professional representative of the Government, I thought it was impossible for the Attorney-General to undertake to try questions of that character in the criminal courts, and that there were perfectly apparent reasons, reasons to my mind of overpowering force, why it would be fatal to the cases if I assumed responsibility for them. I had previously written him the same views, and I again expressed them in conversation at this time when I went over to see him in New York. I then came back on the train with him and Judge Folger, probably on the 10th or 12th of November, and immediately thereafter resigned my office, leaving Mr. Phillips in charge of it.

Without concluding the examination the committee adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 6, 1884.

WAYNE MACVEAGH recalled and further examined.

The WITNESS. After I left the stand yesterday I found, Mr. Chairman, that your persuasive manner of asking me to go on and make a general statement had led me into doing so without any adequate thought beforehand about it. When I took the witness chair I was really like Mr. Canning's knife-grinder, "I had no story to tell"; and if I went on as I did I was sure, after the great lapse of time, to do what I probably have done—state some things which were unimportant and which probably were not within the line of what you wanted to know, and possibly omit other things which you would be glad to know. My only desire is to tell the committee anything within my knowledge that they wish to know, and not to volunteer information. Not that there is anything that I would not be glad to put them in possession of, but because I really cannot tell its comparative value to them, and if you would indicate even generally what you would like to know, I will then answer, not confining myself to your questions, but answering in perfect good faith as to everything relating to it. I was only sorry upon reflection that I did not ask you to pursue that course with me yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. Your statement was such a one as the committee desired to have you make, and was in response to the general question put to you.

Mr. STEWART. If you will allow me to suggest, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the scope of our inquiry under the resolution bears upon two points, and perhaps upon only two points: First, generally, whatever the late Attorney-General knows in reference to expenditures, or contracts for expenditures, in connection with the star-route prosecutions; and secondly, whatever he knows as to the good faith and fidelity of those who were employed by the Departments. It seems to me that these are the two points and the only two that are really of any special interest to us as a committee. Am I right?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the general scope of the investigation, but we are also to determine whether proper efforts have been made to secure the conviction of those who have been guilty of frauds upon the Government. It is all embraced in the general subject.

Mr. STEWART. I understand that the term of office of the late Attorney-General had expired before those matters were taken up by the Department, so that that information would come more properly from some other witness.

The CHAIRMAN. The machinery was in great measure set in motion during Mr. MacVeagh's time as Attorney-General.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. MacVeagh went out of office in November, and the indictments were not found until afterward.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. He investigated the facts upon which the indictments were predicated.

Mr. STEWART. He has stated what investigation he made, and he has stated also that during the remainder of his term of office after the assassination of President Garfield, not being able to communicate with the President, there was to some extent a paralysis of action in his Department, especially in reference to these matters; as everybody can see would very naturally happen. So that I do not see that Mr. MacVeagh can give us any further light except as to expenditures or contracts for expenditures which were made during his administration, or as to whether the gentlemen who were employed with him were reasonably diligent and faithful while he had charge of the office—unless he knows something about the subsequent conduct of the prosecutions.

The CHAIRMAN. I desire to ask Mr. MacVeagh to explain the conversation to which Mr. James referred yesterday as having occurred between the President and Mr. James and the then Attorney-General, Mr. MacVeagh. That conversation, as testified to by Mr. James, was to the effect that he and Mr. Woodward called upon President Garfield on one occasion and laid before him the facts which had been developed by their investigations with reference to the persons who were to be prosecuted in connection with the star-route matter, and the nature of the prosecutions generally; that the President inquired whether the Attorney-General had been consulted, and Mr. James replied that he had not, but proposed to consult the Attorney-General at once; that on a subsequent day Mr. James and the Attorney-General called on the President in reference to these matters, whereupon, as Mr. James states, the Attorney-General, Mr. MacVeagh, proceeded to inform the President of the nature of the evidence that had come to his knowledge, and suggested to him to consider whether, in view of that evidence, he still desired that the prosecutions should be instituted. Do you remember that conversation, Mr. MacVeagh?

The WITNESS. I cannot say that I distinctly remember that conversation; but that answer would not be correct unless I added to it that I do remember substantially a conversation of that kind with the President. As practical men, we all knew these cases would present themselves to anybody's mind—they did to mine certainly—as possibly having certain very grave political complications. One of the gentlemen accused had been a United States Senator, and had been an active agent of the Republican party in the then recent canvass which had resulted in the election of the President. Another gentleman whose name was a subject of common rumor in connection with this matter I believe was then a United States Senator and a Republican Senator, and at that time, according to my recollection, the Senate was Republican by only one majority. In addition to that, there was a perfectly well marked and universally known division of opinion in the Republican party. I cannot say that I recall the particular identical conversation to which General James refers, for I knew nothing of what he would state here until I read it last evening in print, but I certainly do remember explaining very fully to President Garfield, in the presence of the Postmaster-General, the very great gravity of the initial steps of these investigations. I explained that at first appearance the figures were so startling and the uniformity of evidence of mismanagement was so absolute wherever we touched the matter, that it seemed to me that the President, as Chief Executive, ought to consider well, before taking any step from which retreat would be impossible, what the consequences of that step would be; that if I was joined to those cases and started upon them, there was no way to stop them short of an exhaustive examination through the judicial machinery of the country, before grand juries and petit juries, except, of course, the resource he always had, of dispensing with my services; but that also might become embarrassing, and that therefore it was of very grave consequence to everybody that the matter should be well considered before we started. I was induced perhaps, partly, to state this view more fully than I otherwise would have done, because of allusions appearing in the public prints to certain relations that had subsisted between these gentlemen and General Garfield, certain letters said to be in their possession, and to which allusion had been made, and various such things about which I knew nothing, but which caused me to feel it my duty, as a confidential adviser of the President, to lay this matter before him in the way I did lay it before him.

Q. Did you give him the name of the Senator whose prosecution was contemplated?—A. I cannot remember; but certainly he knew everything that I knew from time to time, and must, therefore, have known, either from the Postmaster-General or Mr. Woodward, or myself, the names of all the people accused. More than that, I think it was a subject of newspaper comment. Of that, however, I am not sure.

Q. Did you give him the name of the other distinguished gentlemen?—

A. Of course that remark would refer to ex-Senator Dorsey and to Mr. Brady, who was at that time, I suppose, or had just been, a very distinguished official here, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, in charge of this great business of the Contract Bureau, and who had been also more or less prominent in political affairs.

Q. Has the term of the Senator to whom you referred in that conversation with the President expired?—A. The Senator to whom allusion was made was Senator Kellogg. The case has since become matter of judicial investigation. Of course, nobody presumed at that very early stage to pass upon the guilt of those people. All that was said was that such accusations were made, and that the investigations would involve very disagreeable work, indeed, if they were undertaken.

Q. Were any efforts made during your term of office to secure the indictment of any of those three gentlemen?—A. No, sir. It seemed to me that one of the misfortunes of the cases was that the magnitude of them, the extent of territory over which the evidence extended, the period of time it covered, and the character of the testimony, made it absolutely impossible, in my judgment, for any intelligent presentation of them to be made within the time which some gentlemen seemed to suppose was sufficient. I explained that fully in the interview with Senator Dorsey and his counsel, to which Mr. James has alluded. I stated that we had then no charges to formulate against anybody; that we were not in a position to formulate charges, but that we had found certain records in the Department which upon their face were exceedingly unfortunate, it seemed to me, and very persuasive of guilt; that we had started, or proposed immediately to start, trained and competent examiners to investigate the facts in distant States and Territories, and that it was only when their reports were collated with these records, and carefully and skillfully collated, that any person would be in a position to form a really reliable or valuable opinion upon the facts. I never expressed any opinion upon them for publication anywhere. Such opinions as I did express were expressed to the President and the Postmaster-General, and to them only, and I never furnished for publication in any shape or form any opinion in relation to those cases. I never tried them in the newspapers to the slightest degree.

Q. State to what extent you investigated the facts, to learn whether it was probable that prosecutions must be instituted against the persons you have mentioned.—A. Well, I had no doubt whatever from the records, that unless there was something to be produced to change the impression those records created, it would be necessary to proceed against those gentlemen by indictment, and I stated to Mr. Dorsey at the time to which I have referred that the matter had gone so far that it would be perfectly useless to attempt to settle it by any other than a judicial investigation; that any other kind of investigation would be of no value to any accused person; that behind us was the President, and behind him was an aroused public opinion and the press of the country, and that it would be quite impossible to give any value to any investigation conducted in the Department itself, or conducted otherwise than through the ordinary judicial channels, where every innocent person, as I pointed out, had every possible opportunity to establish his innocence. I pointed out that an acquittal in court which commended itself to the intelligent public judgment would be valuable to the persons accused, whereas any investigation made by Postmaster-General James at that time, or made at all in the Department itself, which was under investigation, would be comparatively valueless.

Q. State what efforts were made to induce the Post-Office Department, or the Department of Justice, or the President to institute an investigation outside of court of the charges against ex-Senator Dorsey and others.—A. I don't know. I only know that it was by mere accident I found myself in the Post-Office Department on the occasion that has been mentioned here. I went there on a call from the Postmaster-General, without any knowledge whatever that I was to meet Mr. Dorsey or his counsel, or else I went there accidentally—I am not sure which; but I did meet them and I then understood——

Q. [Interposing.] Who were present on that occasion?—A. Colonel Ingersoll, Mr. Dorsey, the Postmaster-General, and myself.

Q. Proceed with your statement of the interview.—A. I understood from something which was said at this interview with Mr. Dorsey and his counsel that it was supposed that that method of investigation was feasible. Whether that was attributed to the Postmaster-General or to the President I am not sure, but my impression is that in that conversation it was stated by somebody that such a method of investigation was supposed by the President to be feasible. However, I do not recall the particulars of that very distinctly, but I do remember very distinctly having stated to the President just the views I had expressed at this interview with Mr. Dorsey and his counsel, and that they received the President's cordial approval. Of course it would not be telling the whole truth to be silent upon the fact that these prosecutions were a source of very great anxiety, and I might almost say, at certain stages of them, of distress, to President Garfield. It would be very strange if it had been otherwise; and I have no doubt that at times gentlemen may have felt that there were other methods of correcting these wrongs than the methods which General James and I were pursuing, though I have no knowledge of that; I never was present when such a thing was said. All that I asked of the President was that he would permit us to keep him fully advised of every step taken, and I assured him that no step would be taken of a positive nature as to the filing of indictments or the issuing of warrants of arrest without his knowledge, because I wanted him to be cognizant of each step of really grave importance taken.

Q. Did he express a desire to be so informed?—A. He expressed assent to that view, and thought it would be well that he should be so informed.

Q. Were any extraordinary efforts made by Mr. Dorsey or his counsel to have the President take these investigations out of the ordinary judicial channels, and institute a special investigation?—A. I only know that from what was stated at this meeting at the Post Office Department. My impression is that at that meeting Mr. Dorsey asked me if I proposed to disregard the "orders of the President" or the "wishes of the President," and that I answered that I had no knowledge of any wishes or orders of the President which I was contravening.

Q. You understood the President's orders to you to be to follow the ordinary course of judicial proceedings in investigating and prosecuting these cases?—A. Yes, that was my understanding; that was certainly what I stated to him in the most explicit manner, and what he approved.

Q. What was the result of that interview which you had in the Post-Office Department with ex-Senator Dorsey and his counsel, Mr. Ingersoll?—A. Nothing whatever came of it.

Q. It was decided, then, to proceed in the ordinary course?—A. Yes.

I ought to state that in the latter part of June, or perhaps the middle of June, of that year, I went to Amherst College and to Harvard University, and while absent I received, from somebody associated with the star-route matter here, very urgent telegrams demanding my immediate return, to counteract an effort that Mr. Dorsey and others were making to have me turned out of the Cabinet. If I replied at all, and I think I did, I certainly replied that that was not an object sufficiently near to my heart to induce me to shorten my stay in New England, that I had only a few days' vacation, and proposed to spend them where I had expected to spend them, and that in the mean time if I should find myself relieved of official cares it would not diminish my own enjoyment. Therefore I did not come back until the time when I had intended to come. When I came back, I was told, I think by the Postmaster-General, or by some of the gentlemen associated in the matter, that a vigorous effort had been made in my absence to have me turned out, and that evidence, or papers purporting to be evidence, had been laid before the President of very gross and very base conduct on the part of General James and myself, going to the extent, I think, of suborning witnesses and engaging in a plot to steal papers. I was interested in only one phase of that matter, and that was to know whether the President had seen fit to receive charges of that character about me in my absence, and upon asking him about it he said he had declined to receive any such paper whatever and had answered that if it was left with him the only action he could take upon it would be to have the man who had made it immediately arrested for perjury.

Q. Who had made these charges?—A. It was Mr. Rerüell who had made the charges.

Q. Was he one of the persons charged with offenses in connection with these star-route cases?—A. Yes, sir; he is the person alluded to by Mr. James.

Q. Was that the affidavit of so-called retraction?—A. Yes, sir; the retraction which was subsequently re-retracted on the trial.

Q. Who had presented that affidavit to the President?—A. Mr. Dorsey. Mr. Ingersoll had gone with him, but I don't know that he made himself responsible for the affidavit.

Q. Then the efforts to remove you came from those who were implicated at that time in the star-route frauds?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, so far as you know, those efforts to have you removed were made for the purpose of preventing the prosecution in court of those star-route cases?—A. Well, I ought not to impute motives to those gentlemen. I prefer just to give their acts and to let the committee judge of their motives. Of course they would say that they wanted to get me out because I was a bad man.

Q. And that they were working for the public good?—A. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. They were not disposed to kiss the rod.

The WITNESS. No. Now, in that connection, it is perhaps not improper, if the committee will indulge me, to call attention to the fact that these efforts were, as I was told, also urgently supported by the newspapers representing those gentlemen, notably their newspapers here and the Commercial Advertiser, Mr. Hugh Hastings' paper, in New York.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. They urged the propriety of your removal from the Cabinet?—A. Yes; they urged my unfitness for the place of Attorney-General and the necessity for my removal. Those efforts had been progressing ever since I had been associated with the cases, as I was told. I have had a life-long habit, which has been a source of some comfort to me, of reading only the agreeable things that are said about me. I know those are true and I know that the others are untrue [Laughter], and therefore I have not burdened my life with them. But some of the other gentlemen associated with me were not so wise, I think, and they occasionally told me that I was being abused in their company as violently as they were, and while I was in New England I did, quite incautiously, read in one of the Boston papers an extract from an article published here which gave me a new view of my own character and career. But, as soon as President Garfield died, as I had been opposed to the view of the parties accused while he lived, I then thinking it was my duty to remain in the Cabinet, and they thinking it was my duty to go out and doing what they could to put me out; so, as soon as the President died, the parties accused, with most wonderful unanimity, saw that it was my duty to remain, and again I was at odds with them, because I then thought it was my duty to go out, and the difference of opinion was quite as loud and pronounced in the last case as in the former, and was even, if possible, more bitter in expression on their part. So that I have never found myself happy in agreement with them from first to last.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What efforts did they make after the death of President Garfield to have you retained in the cabinet of President Arthur?—A. They poured upon me a torrent of abuse for declining to remain, and when I went out they insisted that I should return, and they kept it up day after day for months, and as at that time, as ever since, the country was very properly disposed to be kindly toward President Arthur, who had just entered upon his duties under such very sad circumstances, and who merited and received the sympathy of all right-thinking people; so other newspapers (to whose Washington correspondents these gentlemen had access, perhaps—or, perhaps, on public grounds alone) joined in the demand that I should remain and become responsible for these prosecutions. They represented that the prosecutions were being left naked and defenseless, and that I was running away from them; when, as a matter of fact, as you now know and as I knew then, there were four special counsel employed in the cases—Mr. Brewster, Mr. Bliss, Mr. Cook, and Mr. Gibson—quite as many as could be useful to the Department of Justice, and also Mr. Woodward, representing the Post-Office Department, so I thought I was leaving the cases in perfectly safe and competent hands.

Q. Did you assign in your own mind any reason for this change of policy on the part of the gentlemen to whom you have referred?—A. Oh, yes. It was perfectly apparent to me. I was known to have been in very ardent political sympathy with President Garfield. On all the questions about which the Republican party was so strenuously divided—almost into two hostile camps at Chicago—upon every one of those questions I had been in as hearty accord with him as I had been in strenuous opposition to President Arthur. Mr. Arthur was well known to entertain and to have given expression to a very poor opinion of “sentimental” politicians, of whom I was supposed to be one, and I was known to have long entertained and frequently expressed a very poor opinion of “practical” politicians, of whom he was supposed to be one; and these gentlemen certainly must have seen that the President who had called me here, and who had sustained me under great abuse and obloquy in these prosecutions, being now dead and buried, I was in no position whatever to bring to them the requisite moral support. Then, too, they were complicated by the other fact that the feeling of hostility between the two divisions of the party had been intensified by the New York nominations, so that the papers edited by Mr. Gorham and Mr. Hastings, and other gentlemen in the interest or in sympathy with the defendants in these cases, had, from that divergence between President Garfield and the other gentlemen from New York, taken the side espoused by Vice-President Arthur at that time, and had steadily supported him, and as steadily assailed us. They were his ardent supporters, and while Mr. Gorham and Mr. Hastings could hardly find adequate language to express their contempt and poor opinion of President Garfield, of Postmaster-General James, and of myself, they very properly passed as ardent eulogiums upon the gentlemen whose supporters they were. That continued down to the very morning of the shooting of the President, and, to a very considerable extent, it continued after the shooting, and when the death occurred, and I came back here, I found President Arthur not unnaturally—quite naturally and inevitably—in close political relations with Mr. Gorham and Mr. Hastings and other gentlemen who had taken but one view of my course in the star route cases, and that the most unfavorable view possible. Now, when you add to this the peculiar character of the District of Columbia as an arena for such a strife, I think you will see why, as the Attorney-General of a dead President and a past administration, I felt it would be a betrayal of the public justice for me to continue in any manner responsible for prosecutions against gentlemen so wealthy, of such political power and repute, and so entrenched as those defendants were. I think also that the committee will be able to see why it was my duty in selecting counsel to take charge of these cases to select gentlemen on whose fidelity to him the incoming President could have absolute confidence.

Q. You stated yesterday that President Arthur desired you to continue in the Cabinet, or in the position of chief prosecutor of the star-route cases?—A. Yes. I would say that a change occurred, according to my best judgment, in the President's view upon that subject. I certainly want to do him full justice in everything I say here. I do not think the President felt at first that I ought to continue. It had been my duty as well as my pleasure to keep him informed during the summer of my view of President Garfield's condition, and to insist that he must hold himself in readiness at any time to take the great office which would devolve upon him, and it had been my duty and my pleasure when the sad event occurred at Elberon to make everything in my power as little unpleasant as the awful tragedy itself permitted, and so in his coming here. I think the President felt at first precisely as I did about our future relations, and, as I have said, when I published through the Associated Press what I did publish, taking the fullest responsibility for my course, I certainly had no reason whatever to suppose that it met anything but the cordial approval of the President. But after the President made a visit to New York, I thought there was some change in his view; I thought he then began to suppose that I should remain, but he did not urge that view strongly, and I certainly had no reason at that time to suppose that he did not think that I was the proper judge of that question. Subsequently, however, he became more convinced that I ought to remain, and that, as I have already stated, was after he had seen his way clear to offer the place of Attorney-

General (according to his statements to me, which I have no doubt were entirely correct) to two other gentlemen, and after I had left Washington. And here I ought to state that these newspapers in Washington had imposed upon newspapers throughout the country, and had induced them also to publish statements about unkind relations existing between the President and me, which were as absolutely without foundation as if your name, Mr. Chairman, had been substituted for mine.

Q. Do you mean the relations between you and the present President?—A. Yes; President Arthur; and one pretended scene at a Cabinet meeting, where, it was represented, the President had taken me to task and used very peremptory language to me, which was sent out and published all over the country. This was absolutely manufactured—manufactured without the slightest shred or pretense of truth or foundation in anything that had occurred. There was nothing but the utmost kindness and the utmost friendliness between the President and myself. This, of course, was embarrassing to me, because these gentlemen who were instrumental in publishing and in commenting very savagely upon these things, Mr. Gorham being one of them, were, very properly, in intimate relations with President Arthur, and when I say in intimate personal and confidential political relations, I speak not only of what is a part of the history of that time, but I myself was brought into constant contact with at least one of those gentlemen when I went to see the President.

Q. What reason did the President assign to you for desiring you to continue responsible for the prosecutions in the star-route cases?—A. That I had been, in the public mind, associated intimately with them from the beginning, and that any failure to remain associated with them would be misunderstood by the country.

Q. Did he say anything about desiring the responsibility to rest with the former administration and desiring to avoid responsibility in the matter himself?—A. No; he never did to me.

Q. Did he say anything about desiring to have you continue in the same work that President Garfield had started you in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you understand to be his position on that subject?—A. I understood the President's position to be that the cases should go on just as they had been started, and should go on in the same hands in which they had been started. He failed to agree with my judgment that that would inevitably create the impression in the District of Columbia that those cases were treated as a legacy of the dead President, and that I was merely administering upon his estate.

Q. Was any suggestion of that kind made to you?—A. No, sir; that suggestion was made by me, and made by me from the first as the reason why it was impossible for me to do justice to those cases. Another illustration of it was the case of the district attorney here, Mr. Corkhill. I have no knowledge that justifies me in saying anything about Mr. Corkhill, except that he and I had a very unfortunate difference of recollection about a very important matter; but I will say that it seemed to me in these cases from the beginning that it was not only a question whether you might not do injustice to some person then in office, but whether if an officer was generally supposed in this District to be in sympathy with the defendants, an administration prosecuting men of this rank and wealth and position, could afford with one hand to prosecute them and with the other to retain in important official positions gentlemen known to be, or believed to be (which was the same thing for the purposes of the trial), in very ardent sympathy and in close relations with them. Now, almost upon the inception of the proceedings I was told that Mr. Corkhill had not the confidence of the gentlemen engaged in the investigation; but, on the contrary, was supposed to have favored General Brady in a previous investigation into his Department, and to be in friendly, cordial, sympathetic relations with the parties who were involved in this business. Whether that was true or not I had no means of ascertaining, but I made up my mind that it was quite impossible for us to conduct the cases hopefully without a change in that office. Colonel Corkhill had himself written me a letter on the 1st of June declaring that a special assistant ought to be appointed to take charge of these cases in the District, and under the recommendations of the Postmaster-General and Mr. Woodward and Mr. Gibson, Mr. Cook was appointed. Colonel Corkhill's letter pointed out what the duties of such a person would be; that he would be a district attorney for these cases, and would be familiar with the details of them. When I was starting to Long Branch, according to my recollection, Colonel Corkhill met me at the foot of the stairs of my Department and asked me when I thought these star-route cases would be ready for the grand jury. I said that in my anxiety for the President I had not lately been concerning myself about the details, but that of course his own special assistant, appointed for that purpose, could give him any information he wished. Mr. Corkhill's recollection of that conversation is that I said that when the grand jury was needed for the star-route cases he would be informed of it. Mr. Cook's commission, however, had been filed in the records of the court here, and while I was at Long Branch in consultation with Mr. Bliss, Mr. Brewster, Mr. Cook, Mr. Gibson, and Mr. James. Mr. Cook returning here to prepare one of the cases for the grand jury, was told at the depot that Colonel Corkhill had adjourned the grand jury without his knowledge or any consultation with him. The night before President Garfield was shot the subject of a change in the district attorneyship here having been several times discussed, and then coming up again, he explained to me his wish, if I could see my way to approve it, to appoint Mr. Riddle of this District, a long-time friend of his, he said, and one whose appointment he had endeavored to secure from President Hayes at the time when Mr. Corkhill was appointed, and as I knew Mr. Riddle and his character well, I cordially concurred in that wish of the President, and the next morning before the shooting occurred I had written a note to Mr. Riddle asking to see him on a matter of business. I did not see him until that night at the White House, and I then told him what the object had been, but stated to him, of course, that it had been suspended by the shooting. Of course I did not then assume any longer to interfere, but I believe that everybody concerned in the prosecution of the cases thought that Mr. Corkhill ought to be removed, and I earnestly expressed that wish of everybody concerned to President Arthur; but, as was very natural and very proper, he took a different view of it. The President thought that it would not do to remove Mr. Corkhill until Guiteau was tried, he having found the indictment. I, on the other hand, endeavored to point out that having, with the President's consent, selected Judge Porter, of New York, and Mr. Walter Davidge, of this bar, to conduct that prosecution for the Government; and the case being such as it was, I thought the Government could dispense with the services of Mr. Corkhill at once, and that it was very important, if possible, to have that done now, as his presence in that office would, in my judgment, be continually detrimental to the prosecution. The President, however, as he had a perfect right to do, thought it would be better to retain Mr. Corkhill, and he was retained until his term expired.

Q. What reason had you to believe that Mr. Corkhill would not faithfully perform his duty in the prosecution of the star-route cases?—A. Well, that I could only say from the unfortunate impression that had been made by him in another prosecution which had been instituted and had come to naught some time before, a result which the gentlemen investigating these matters believed was partly due to Mr. Corkhill's conduct; and the fact that the people I spoke to, who seemed to me to be in earnest about these cases, were all of one opinion about Mr. Corkhill and about the misfortune of having him in that office. I had no knowledge on the subject myself, and, as I say, that opinion may have been unjust, but it was so strong that even after I retired he never was intrusted with anything connected with the star-route cases. So that the anomaly was presented of having a district attorney in the District in which these defendants were to be prosecuted who never was allowed to know anything about the prosecution, or to take any part whatever in it. That may have been all right, and I am bound to presume that it was; but that was not my view at all. I only use this as an illustration to show how it was impossible for a person diametrically opposed, as I was, on so many points of political methods and standards to President Arthur, to avoid running into differences as to persons. Then, too, I have always held the view that the President's official family should, in justice to him, be composed of persons in whom he had implicit confidence as to their personal and political fidelity to him and to his views.

Q. Did you have any reason to suppose from the facts you have stated that you would not be earnestly supported by other branches of the Government in the prosecution of the star-route cases if you continued in charge of them?—A. I could not see how I could hope to have any moral support in the cases, and it was moral support alone in this District for which I cared. The record evidence, when laid alongside of the evidence furnished by the inspectors, was, rightly or wrongly, so conclusive to my mind, so absolutely conclusive, that nothing more could be desired in that direction. The question, then, was of the accidents of criminal jurisprudence, such as, first, getting the majority of a grand jury (a body which sits in secret, which need give no account to any one for its doings, and each individual of which is protected from any responsibility for his findings) to indict; and, in the second place, if you escaped that difficulty, to get twelve men selected from the panel in this District to convict. What was needed was not that there should be anything done affirmatively, but that the negative influences in this District should be removed. Of course, I could not go on with any hope of success with the Administration organ (as it at once came to be called, very properly and naturally) edited by Mr. Gorham, while Mr. Gorham entertained, and was in the habit of frankly expressing, the very poor opinion he entertained of me and of these prosecutions, their motives, their methods, and their results. In other words, there would have been a steady outpouring upon this community every morning and every evening and every Sunday, from what were ostensibly Administration sources, of abuse of the prosecutions being conducted by the Government! In addition to that, I knew perfectly well that very soon the President would very naturally and properly find it come in the course of his sense of duty to select for public honor and favor gentlemen to whom the public opinion of this District ascribed sympathy, and ardent sympathy, with the defendants. That was inevitable, and those appointments all followed just as I had expected they would follow, and as they properly followed, so far as I am concerned. I have nothing to say about that. I only say that they were appointments which I foresaw, not as to individuals but as to character, and which, in my judgment, were certain to be fatal to any prosecutions in those cases in this District.

Q. Do you know whether the influences used to retain Colonel Corkhill in office came from those who were suspected to be implicated in the frauds?—A. I have no knowledge at all upon that subject; not the slightest. At the time the President thought it was his duty to retain him in office until the Guiteau case should be at an end, that was the limit he stated to me of his purpose in that regard. Afterwards he changed his mind, for a perfectly proper reason as he saw it, I have no doubt, and all I say is, I wish the committee to bear in mind, and not to lose sight of the fact, that I am looking at these things from the standpoint of my political standards and views, while the President was necessarily looking at the same things from the standpoint of his political standards and views.

Q. You have spoken of an interview of the President on the steps of a car in the depot at Philadelphia; did that interview have reference to retaining you in office as Attorney-General or to employing you as chief prosecutor in the star-route cases?—A. I don't remember whether at that time the matter was broached of my accepting a retainer from the Government as leading counsel or not, but it certainly was in the subsequent interview at New York. That was a very hurried and unsatisfactory talk in the depot, because that train stops in Philadelphia but a few minutes.

Q. You have stated that you caused the Associated Press, about the 27th of September, 1881, to make a publication with regard to your views; did you also bring those views to the attention of the President in person?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You told him that you could not remain in the service?—A. Yes, sir; I shall be very glad if you will allow me to refer to that publication which I made through the Associated Press.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

The witness read the dispatch as published in the New York Tribune of September 28, as follows:

Attorney-General MacVeagh stated, this evening, when approached on the subject of the Cabinet, that he had no objection to speaking frankly as to his own position. He said he recognized, to the fullest extent, the propriety of President Arthur selecting as his confidential advisers gentlemen who had heretofore sustained relations not only of personal good will, but also of political sympathy with him. Indeed, he did not think any administration could be strong if there was any ground for suspicion or distrust among its members. As soon, therefore, as the President had taken the oath of office, Mr. MacVeagh said he had tendered his resignation in writing. He had also assured the President that the resignation was not a form, but a fact, and that he hoped it would be convenient to designate his successor by the time the Senate met in special session. Mr. MacVeagh added that on public grounds he felt no difficulty in pursuing the course his feelings dictated. The only political work to which he attached any importance at this time was the work of administrative reform, including, of course, the exposure and relentless pursuit of all plunderers of the public Treasury. If President Arthur engages heartily and thoroughly in that good work, as he hoped and believed he would, then he was entitled to the credit of doing it with an Attorney-General of his own selection, and not with one inherited from President Garfield. The Attorney General spoke very kindly of President Arthur, and said he was sure the country would judge him not only fairly, but generously, and not by the selection of one person or another for his Cabinet, but by the general policy of his administration.

Q. The interview of which that dispatch gives an account is the one to which you have heretofore referred in your testimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is correctly stated there?—A. Yes, sir; correctly stated.

Q. And it explains your position as you have already stated here?—A. Precisely.

Q. This date to which you have referred was, I believe, immediately after the funeral services of President Garfield at Cleveland?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, as to your successor, there seems to have been some difficulty about choosing him. You spoke, yesterday, about a gentleman having been first selected, and the selection afterwards abandoned; who was that gentleman?—A. I beg to suggest to the committee that they do not care to go into that. I only mentioned the fact that the name had been confided to me by the President, to show the kindly relations which we were then sustaining towards each other.

Q. The failure to nominate that gentleman had no bearing, you say, upon star-route cases?—A. Yes; it had some bearing upon the star-route matter. That is, he was not nominated at that time, as I understood it, because of the bearing his selection might possibly have upon the star-route cases. I do not know that there can be any objection to going so far as that, but I don't care to go further than that. The gentleman was subsequently made a member of the Cabinet, given another Cabinet place, and the change was justified in the President's mind by public considerations entirely.

Q. Is there any further statement that you desire to submit in regard to that Associated Press dispatch?—A. No.

Q. Did you have any correspondence with the President with regard to your continuance in office?—A. I wrote him a letter about it which was published some time ago, a full letter, which was made public at the time of the removals in this District on the demands of Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster.

Q. What was the date of the publication?—A. I cannot give that now, but I will hand you a copy of the letter.

Q. Is that all the correspondence that passed between you?—A. That is all I now recall that I wrote him.

Q. You state that you asked Mr. Brewster, the present Attorney-General, to accept employment in the star-route cases; was that before the death of President Garfield?—A. Immediately before his death.

Q. And after his wounding?—A. Oh, yes; within a week of his death, when his death was, to my mind, only a question of a few days certainly, possibly of a few hours.

Q. You also state that you employed Mr. Bliss on the suggestion of Mr. James; state, if you please, what contract, if any, you made with those gentlemen with regard to the compensation they were to receive in those cases; state first with regard to Mr. Brewster.—A. If you will allow me, I would rather go back so as to include my entire relation with that matter, so far as I have been able to ascertain it.

Q. I would prefer that you should state it all.—A. I remember very distinctly the employment of Mr. Gibson as an assistant of the Department of Justice in this District, with special detail to the work of the star-route cases. I know it was made about April 22, because I have found a letter of Mr. Woodward in the Department of Justice, indorsed by the Postmaster-General, earnestly requesting the appointment of Mr. Gibson, as of that date. I assumed, of course, that Mr. Gibson's appointment had been conveyed to him in proper form, because his appointment was made a subject of immediate comment in the newspapers, and was generally known in the District; but subsequently I discovered that that had been omitted, and I then wrote a letter rectifying the omission. Mr. Gibson entered upon his work at once, so far as I remember, and I suppose it must have been about the 1st of June that Mr. Cook was appointed, because I find that Colonel Corkhill's letter asking for an assistant is dated June 1. I judge that the first communication with Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster on the subject of these cases was about the 10th of September, and they probably were first brought into active work in connection with the cases about September 15. It seems that no letter of appointment was written to Mr. Gibson, but to Mr. Cook, Mr. Brewster, and Mr. Bliss, as appears from the Department's files, letters were written in the usual form. I assume that, from the statement of Mr. Phillips, when Acting Attorney-General, in a letter which I find he sent me, in which he says that they are to be employed at a compensation to be fixed by the Attorney-General, "when the cases are ended" I think is the phrase; but whatever the formal phrase was, it was followed. As I say, I left the Department not expecting to return except with my successor, whom I was to join on the train at Philadelphia and accompany here and introduce to his Department. I left here October 25, according to my recollection, not expecting again to return or to have any further charge of the Department officially, and that was the condition, as I understand it, of the record when I left. While I was in Philadelphia I was in consultation with Mr. Brewster and Mr. Bliss about their fees. I do not recall what had been said before, or what was said then, but I am very sure I must have said, or I ought to have said, and therefore I presume I did say, that the cases were of very great importance, very great difficulty, and very great magnitude in a financial sense, and that therefore these gentlemen would be decently and honorably compensated according to the character of the services required of them and their own standing at the bar. After I had left the Department in charge of Mr. Phillips as Acting Attorney-General, but before my formal resignation, each of these gentlemen, with my hearty concurrence, my hearty unofficial concurrence, and, so far as I had any right to give it, my hearty official concurrence, asked $2,500 on account of their services in these cases, and it was paid to them upon the approval of Mr. Phillips as Acting Attorney-General.

Q. To whom was that payment made?—A. To Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster each. I thought it reasonable and proper, and cordially approved it.

Q. Was that estimated upon a per diem basis, or was it just a payment on account?—A. It was a payment on account of services. The subject of a per diem had undoubtedly been talked over, and, according to my recollection, had been the subject of one letter from Mr. Bliss to me—the payment of $100 per day and expenses; but I also remember, I think, that I had pointed out that it was impossible for the Acting Attorney-General, or the Attorney-General himself, to make a contract of that kind.

Q. Have you a copy of that letter?—A. I do not think I have. At any rate, I wrote a letter to Mr. Phillips (I will open the bundle directly and see just what I have got in it) unofficially, saying that I cordially approved the payment to each of those gentlemen on account; and as I was technically still Attorney-General, of course that would persuade Mr. Phillips to make it, and would answer every purpose; and if I am not responsible for that payment, I should be glad to be. Then my technical relation to the Department terminated on the 14th of November, 1881; but, according to my recollection, about New Year Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster consulted me again in Philadelphia about making out their bills, or, rather, Mr. Brewster consulted me about the settlement of his account, it being then publicly known, or at least known to me, that he was to be the Attorney-General. He expressed a natural desire that I should give, unofficially, my opinion about the value of his services, because he did not want to sit in judgment on his own bill in any way, and Mr. Phillips would feel less hesitancy about acting in the matter if I would express an opinion upon it. He told me that he intended to present a bill for $5,000, crediting the Government with the $2,500 which had been paid him, and that Mr. Bliss, who had been more constantly engaged, and, indeed, I believe had been engaged at that time every day possibly from the 10th of September to the 1st of January, if I am correct as to the dates, in continuous labor, proposed to make his bill $6,000, crediting the Government with the $2,500 which he had received. In the mean time the information here had been prepared and elaborately argued, and the other work had been progressing in the preparation of the indictment, and these two gentlemen had been, as far as I could judge, very industriously and continuously employed about that work. I said that I had no right, of course, to interfere officially in such a matter, having now severed even my technical connection with the office, but that it seemed to me the charges were reasonable, and that if an expression of that opinion from me, while I disliked exceedingly to give it, would relieve a brother lawyer in any way I should be glad to take upon my head any responsibility that could be put there about it, and I said in this letter to President Arthur, as I had said to him personally over and over again, that the termination of my official connection with the star-route cases must not be understood as indicating any unwillingness to be of service unofficially in the matter, and that, without limit and without reward, I would be glad to put any knowledge or any assistance that it might be in my power to give at the service of anybody interested in prosecuting those cases. I said, too, in these letters that I would be glad to take any responsibility that I properly could about the cases. I wrote to the Acting Attorney-General, Mr. Phillips, that I, if in his place, would see no difficulty in paying Mr. Brewster $5,000 for his services to the first of the year, and in paying Mr. Bliss $6,000 for his services from the middle of September to the 1st of January, according to my recollection of the dates; and Mr. Phillips accordingly ordered those bills to be paid. I ought not to assume even that he relied upon my letter, but I thought it right to write the letter, and did so.

Q. Did you understand that the $6,000 paid to Mr. Bliss and $5,000 paid to Mr. Brewster were in full for their services from the beginning of their employment up to the 1st of January?—A. That is my recollection, but I am not sure that the date was the 1st of January; it may have been up to Christmas day; I know it was in the holidays.

Q. Did the payments to Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster include any bills for expenses?—A. I will open this bundle and see what light these letters throw upon the subject. Here is a letter appointing Mr. Brewster, dated Department of Justice, September 29, 1881.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, September 29, 1881.

SIR: You are hereby appointed special assistant United States attorney for the District of Columbia, to aid in the prosecution of certain persons charged with being concerned in frauds on the United States in connection with what is known as the "star route" investigation, at a compensation to be determined by the Attorney-General when the suits are ended.

This appointment to take effect from the 15th instant, at which time you were orally engaged by me.

You will take the oath prescribed for district attorneys, and transmit the same to this Department.

Very respectfully,

WAYNE MACVEAGH,
Attorney-General.

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER, Esq.,
Philadelphia, Pa.

I assume that a similar letter was sent to Mr. Bliss, but I do not find a copy of it among the papers furnished me. Now, I find a letter from Mr. Brewster, dated October 28, 1881, which I will read:

706 WALNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA,
October 28, 1881.

MY DEAR SIR: After we parted last night, Mr. Bliss advised with me as to our fees in the star-route cases, as you said we should do.

We have arrived at the following result, and agreed that I should promptly communicate it to you; so that we may have your immediate action, while you have the authority to act.

First, we now request you to pay us each $2,500 for the services thus far given.

Second, that your successor may be informed of the understanding between us, and be prepared to fulfil your engagement with us.

I repeat here what was expressed last night, as to the rate of compensation to be allowed us while we are in charge of these cases; and that was, we are to be paid, each, $100 a day while occupied in the cases, either out of court in the preparation of them, or in court in the trial and argument of them, together with our expenses.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER.

To Hon. WAYNE MACVEAGH,

The Attorney-General of the United States, &c., Philadelphia.

Here is what is furnished me as a copy of my letter to Mr. Phillips in relation to the letter of Mr. Brewster which I have just read:

402 WALNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA,
October 31, 1881.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to inclose you a letter I have received from Messrs. Brewster and Bliss, special counsel in the star-route cases. Considering the professional standing of these gentlemen, I have no doubt you will agree with me in thinking it proper to pay them the fees they now ask; but they are doubtless aware that you cannot bind the Government to any contract in the matter which would control the action of my successor when appointed.

I think, however, it would be proper for you to say that you recognize fully the gravity of the cases in their charge, the very great amount of labor connected with their prosecution, and the entire reasonableness of their expectation that the Department will compensate them fairly and justly for the industry, zeal, and ability it knows they will devote to the matter in question.

Of course, I only offer these suggestions for your consideration and decision, for you are acting Attorney-General, and I am only awaiting the appointment of my successor, but I thought you would be glad to know my views on the subject.

Sincerely, yours,

WAYNE MACVEAGH.

Hon. SAMUEL F. PHILLIPS,

Acting Attorney-General.

Indorsement (in the handwriting of Sol. Gen. Phillips): The Atty. Gen'l, Nov. 1, '81. Answered, Nov. 1, '81, saying that I would carry out the contract, referring to the clause "at a compensation to be determined," &c., &c.; see letter appointing the gent.; that I was indisposed to do more than pay them $2,500 "on acct. of services in general," & say nothing of the $100 per day, &c. See Mr. Brewster's note to the Atty. Gen'l, inclosed & dated Oct. 28, 1881.

Q. You meant by that letter that you were not to be responsible for any fees that might be paid after the expiration of your term of service?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you expressly disclaimed any responsibility for contracts after that time?—A. Certainly. Now, I have here a letter of December 31, 1881, which I wrote Mr. Phillips in relation to the bills of Messrs. Brewster and Bliss:

402 WALNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA,
December 31, 1881.

MY DEAR SIR: I have been shown the bills of Mr. Brewster and Mr. Bliss for services in the star-route cases to this date, and I have no doubt you will cheerfully approve them so that they may be paid.

I have, of course, no right to express an official opinion, but unofficially I venture to say that if in your place I would certainly approve them.

Sincerely yours,

WAYNE MACVEAGH.

Hon. SAMUEL F. PHILLIPS.

Q. Are those the only bills for attorney's fees that you approved even in an unofficial way?—A. They are the only bills of those two gentlemen. That must have been the last letter that I was asked to write upon this subject, because it was then a month and a half after the termination of my official relation with the Department, and I could not have gone on writing letters of that kind.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. When did you first communicate with Mr. Bliss after the request of the Postmaster-General that he should be employed?—A. I should suppose it was at the time I communicated with Mr. Brewster, that is September 10, but Mr. James may have been in communication with Mr. Bliss. I think I saw Mr. Bliss at Elberon several days before Mr. Brewster was able to get there, because he was engaged in a case in the interior of Pennsylvania, and could not get to Elberon so soon, and it may have been a day or two before the 10th of September.

Q. Do you know whether you communicated with Mr. Bliss first by writing, or in a personal interview?—A. It must have been in a personal interview.

Q. At Elberon?—A. At Elberon.

Q. Was the subject of his conversation a matter of compensation between you at that time?—A. I think not at all.

Q. Let me ask you whether, in view of the magnitude and importance of the cases, the great sum of money involved in them, their difficulty, and the professional standing of Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster, the amount charged per diem by Mr. Bliss (I don't know that Mr. Brewster charged a per diem) is, in your judgment, unreasonable?

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. That is a very broad question.

Mr. STEWART. I intended it to be broad. It is a direct question and a fair question.

The WITNESS. I don't know that I am familiar with the matter of a per diem charge running over a very great length of time. I certainly would not think such a charge unreasonable within a limit of time, but whether for a year's service or two years' service one would charge a per diem or charge a gross sum I hardly know. My own charges have uniformly been upon the other basis, but I certainly do not think that for taking a person of Mr. Bliss' standing at the bar from his office in New York and obliging him to remain here away from it, $100 per day was an excessive charge according to the standard of charges at that bar. I ought to say, however, that the standard of charge at that bar is higher than at my own bar and always has been.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I desire to call attention to the account against the United States rendered by Mr. Bliss and set forth in Ex. Doc. No. 40, first session Forty-eighth Congress, page 15. Please look at it, and state whether you recognize that as the one which you approved?—A. [After looking at it.] I have no knowledge that is the one, but I have no doubt it is. The amount is the same and the rate is about the same.

Q. What is the amount of that account?—A. $2,500. There is the same amount charged as paid to Mr. Brewster.

Q. The date of the approval of that account in the office of the Comptroller was November 10, 1881, so far as Mr. Bliss is concerned, and in Mr. Brewster's case the approval in the First Auditor's office is on November 8th, 1881. I desire also to ask you to look at the accounts of Mr. Brewster and Mr. Bliss, set forth on page 21, in reference to the remaining portion of the account.—A. [After looking at the document.] I don't remember that I saw the itemized account of Mr. Bliss or his bill for expenses. I may have done so, but I have no recollection of it. I have a recollection of the total of $6,000 and also of the total of Mr. Brewster's account, $5,000.

Q. As you see stated in these two papers?—A. Yes, sir; they are the same, and those are the dates to which my unofficial letter to Mr. Phillips, which I have read, applies.

Q. Was your attention then called to the expense account of Mr. Bliss?—A. I could not say whether it was or not; of course, at that time I would not scrutinize such accounts, because I had no right to do so, and no reason for doing so.

Q. What I desire to know is, whether your approval was simply of the charge of $6,000, or whether you had your attention called at the same time to Mr. Bliss' expense account?—A. I do not recollect that; but the practice there has been to file the expense accounts with the other accounts, if there have been any expenses. I see that Mr. Brewster has no expense account attached to his bill.

Q. No, Mr. Brewster has not filed any expense account; but Mr. Bliss, in addition to the $6,000, has an expense account amounting to $388.83.—A. Yes.

Q. I see a note appended to this signed "W. L., Comptroller," which is as follows:

Statement of account of George Bliss, special U. S. district attorney, D. C. Sum allowed on the sole ground that the Attorney-General has approved, and his approval is conclusive as to this office.

Did you understand that to be the case, that the approval of the Attorney-General in regard to fees in the Department of Justice was conclusive upon the Comptroller?—A. I have never looked at that question; my own judgment was that Mr. Lawrence did not think anything was conclusive on him.

Q. I think this decision has been referred to as justifying the Comptroller in approving accounts subsequent to your time as Attorney-General; but what I wish to ask you now is whether your responsibility for the amounts which these attorneys were to receive ceased with the approval of those two accounts to which your attention has been called?—A. Which two?

Q. The two accounts of Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster?—A. Of course; my official responsibility really ended with the payments to those gentlemen of the two sums of $2,500 each.

Q. I know you ceased to be Attorney-General about that time; but what I desire to know is whether you had made any legal contracts in relation to the fees of these gentlemen?—A. My letter to Mr. Phillips speaks for itself; it states that no contracts were made. Their letter was a request that such a contract should be made, and my answer on that point to Mr. Phillips was that they were “doubtless aware that you cannot bind the Government to any contract in the matter which would control the action of my successor when appointed.”

Q. You speak of the reasonableness of the charges in the two cases, $5,000 by Mr. Brewster and $6,000 by Mr. Bliss, for the periods which those charges respectively cover?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And for nothing else?—A. For nothing else.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. That reflected upon the value of the information that they had obtained or its probable value in the future conduct of the cases, and had reference to that, as well as to compensation for the time that had been in its procurement?—A. No; I really thought that that time, say from the 10th of September to the 1st of January, three months and a half, devoted by such lawyers to the service of the Government, in such a cause, was fully worth what they asked, and that the sums for which the accounts were rendered were simply reasonable, decent professional compensation. Of course, that is only my judgment, and I may be wrong about it.

Q. Did you at any time understand, or do you now understand, from the construction you give to the letters which passed between you and these gentlemen and the Department, and from your recollection of all that occurred in connection with the matter, that you ever undertook to allow them a per diem of $100 and expenses for any indefinite length of time that they might be connected with the cases?—A. Oh, certainly not. But, just as I answered a question of Governor Stewart, and as I stated in my letter, I did expect that whoever succeeded me would compensate them fairly and justly for their services in that matter, having due regard to its magnitude and difficulty; and, for days actually spent here, away from their offices and business, it does not seem to me that, within limits, $100 a day is excessive compensation, especially to a member of the New York bar.

Q. Please explain what you mean by “within limits.”—A. I simply mean this: that I think, as between men of business, a lawyer being on one side and a business man on the other, if he is going to require your services elsewhere than at home, for a considerable length of time, it does not naturally occur to either of you that the compensation will be a per diem, but rather you will be asked how much you will render the service for; or rather, when it is done, you will present your bill, stating the length of time occupied and the time having a very close relation to your bill; but, after all, the bill is not controlled by that; whereas if you are away only a week, the time has a still closer relation to the compensation, because you put a certain pecuniary value upon your time in your profession in your own office, at your own bar.

Q. If the time occupied was fifty days you think that would be a provident arrangement, but if the time extended to 150 days, do you think that arrangement would be a provident one?—A. Well, even for 150 days I am not sure that it would be an improvident arrangement. I do not know how long Judge Porter was here in the Guiteau case, but I should not think that Judge Porter's services in that case, considering the responsibility and the disagreeableness of it in every way, would be more than fairly compensated by a fee of $15,000, if he was 150 days away from his office, and that time was devoted to that business here. Such fees are rare in the history of the profession, but I think they are fairly earned when half a year of one's life, and all that that implies, is given to such service in such a case.

Q. What I am trying to reach is your view as to where a per diem compensation should cease and a gross compensation be substituted?—

A. That, it seems to me, it is quite impossible to answer as an abstract proposition, or even as a concrete proposition. It may be that gentlemen would differ about that. There are counsel, undoubtedly, who make that the rigid rule by which their compensation is fixed. I have never done it myself, but there are counsel at every important bar in the country who do it, and if they adhere to a rigid rule of that kind, without respect to persons, why it is because they find it satisfactory to them, and satisfactory to their clients; and I think you have to take the facts of the case, and the actual time given to it, into account, in each instance, in order to judge properly. There certainly are lawyers in New York, and I trust there are some in Philadelphia, who, as a mere matter of professional gain, would not find it to their advantage to break away from their business at home and to devote six consecutive months of working days to a cause out of their own jurisdiction, and away from their own offices, without the possibility of maintaining their professional relations at home, even at a compensation of $100 a day.

Q. During the time you were Attorney-General, and when these matters were under review, was it talked over, or discussed, or advised about, that an information should be filed in these cases instead of a formal indictment?—A. Yes. In the first place, while I was absent in New England, among other things that happened was a procession into court by the defendants, and a demand, which was telegraphed all over the country, that they should have an immediate trial, because they were assailed in the newspapers; and they offered as conclusive proof that the Government had no case whatever, and that the prosecution was a pretense, the fact that we were not then immediately ready to go on and give them the public hearing which they claimed was necessary for their vindication.

Then immediately after came the shooting of the President, and then a case was selected to be got ready for the grand jury, in order to meet the demand of these parties, and what seemed to be the public demand, and what had been the importunity of the President himself that some active steps should be taken in the matter. While that case was being prepared for the grand jury, through the occurrence about which the recollection of Colonel Corkhill and myself differs, the grand jury was adjourned. It was, I believe, thought that the statute of limitations would have run before that case could be presented to the grand jury, and as the defendants had been demanding an open, public opportunity to vindicate themselves before the court, it occurred to these gentlemen that they would be only too eager to accept an information (which was only the basis for a trial), without going through a secret hearing before the grand jury, to which they could not be a party, and which, therefore, could not be of any benefit to them in the way of a vindication. Mr. Bliss, who had had very large experience in these matters, having been district attorney of such an important district as that of southern New York, thought that possibly a proceeding by information might hold, and he looked into the matter, and while at first doubtful about it, his view became stronger as he went on, and finally he satisfied himself that there was reasonable ground to believe that such an information could be maintained, even if assailed, and I think there was a general feeling that it would not be assailed at all, but that the defendants, having this opportunity of a public trial at an early day, would seize it and go on in accordance with their professions. At that time the whole matter had been turned over by me to Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster, and I gave cordial consent to any conclusions that they reached—the formal consent that they desired, if they desired any, and I do not remember that they did. I was no party to the matter in any shape or form, but I cordially approved whatever they thought was right to be done.

Q. That proceeding by information was not based upon your judgment at all?—A. Not at all. I never looked at the question of the information, or examined it at all. I did not think, however, that it could do any serious harm. I surrendered the cases to the judgment of Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster, and took no part in the examination of the law or in the argument.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. As to the expense account rendered by Mr. Bliss, did that meet your approval?—A. I have always understood that expense accounts are rendered almost universally in connection with the charges of attorneys employed by the Department of Justice, and that is my experience; and, therefore, if the items of expenditures in the account were correct, I should see no reason why they should not be paid by the Government instead of by the counsel. But I never looked into that matter, as I had no right to do.

The CHAIRMAN. I desire to call your attention to the fact that the date of the approval of this last account is January 4, 1882, which tends to corroborate your view, that the bill was for services up to the 1st of January, 1882.

The WITNESS. Yes. I think my letter on the subject speaks of the account as for services “to this date,” and the date was December 31, 1881.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I believe you have stated that you yourself suggested the employment of Mr. Brewster?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was before you had any knowledge of his probably succeeding to the office of Attorney-General?—A. Oh, yes; entirely before.

Q. Do you know any further than you have stated any fact which led to the employment of Mr. Bliss?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether any efforts were made by persons outside to secure his appointment?—A. I do not.

Q. No one came to you?—A. No, sir; and I should be surprised if there were any. I felt that it was due to the Postmaster-General that he should be represented by a lawyer in whom he had entire confidence, and all I asked (in which he cordially agreed) was that the lawyer selected should, by his past relations, political and personal, be in no manner an embarrassment to the incoming President.

Q. So far as you know, then, the suggestion of the employment of those two gentlemen, Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster, came from those who desired the earnest prosecution of the cases?—A. I think so; undoubtedly.

Q. And not from the gentlemen themselves?—A. Not at all; I have no doubt that in both cases the employment was entirely and absolutely unsolicited. In Mr. Brewster's case, I know it was, and I have no reason to doubt that it was equally so in the case of Mr. Bliss, though I have no knowledge, of course, on that subject.

By Mr. HEMPHILL:

Q. Can you assign any reason why Mr. Brewster's services were not worth as much as Mr. Bliss's?—A. In the interval, you mean?

Q. I mean from their first employment.—A. During the time for which I have spoken of their compensation?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes; Mr. Brewster had not given as much time to the matter as Mr. Bliss. I could not state the difference in figures in any portional way, but I know it was considerably less, and that Mr. Bliss had been very much more constantly engaged in the cases. My own impression was, and still is, that Mr. Bliss was substantially constantly engaged in those cases from the 9th or 10th of September to the 1st of January, and that Mr. Brewster, while giving every service required of him in the matter, had still not been as constantly or assiduously engaged in it as Mr. Bliss.

Q. Does not the compensation of attorneys, as a general rule, depend, not only upon their standing at the bar and the time and labor they give to a case, but also in some measure upon their success?—A. Yes; undoubtedly. As a general rule, the compensation of counsel is affected in many cases by the consideration of success or failure when the final settlement comes to be made; but in very many other cases it is quite independent of such considerations. Still, I think the average lawyer always feels like charging his client more when he has gained something for him, and less when he has failed.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You may proceed now to the statement you were about to make with regard to the employment of Mr. Gibson and Mr. Cook, and their fees.—A. My recollection of it would be that I was asked to give Mr. Brewster, after he had entered upon his duties as Attorney-General, my friendly counsel as to what I would do if I were in his place about the bills of Mr. Cook and Mr. Gibson, and that, my good nature again getting the better of my prudence, I gave him my view of the matter, and, according to my recollection, it was that, if, as I supposed to be the fact, those gentlemen had been assiduously and constantly employed upon the cases between seven and eight months, and had been faithful in the performance of their duty, the sum of $5,000 would be reasonable compensation for each of them, and that if I were in his place I should not hesitate to pay it. I find in this package a letter from me to the Attorney-General relating to that very matter, marked "Compensation of Gibson and Cook," and while it need not go upon the minutes in its full form—because there may be some personal points in it—I will read the whole letter. I suppose there was a letter from Mr. Brewster, to which this was my reply.

[The letter recites the circumstances of the appointment of Messrs. Gibson and Cook, and the character of their services, and concludes: "If in your place, however, and I was acting with the lights I now have upon the subject, I see no reason why I should hesitate to approve payments to each of five thousand dollars. Perhaps Mr. Cook may be entitled to some addition to cover expenses, but of that you can judge."]

Q. You have referred, I think, to some other letter which passed between you on that subject?—A. No; I do not think there is anything else in relation to that. I think that what I have given the committee covers my whole connection with that matter, as far as I remember.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Please state whether, in your judgment, while you had any official or personal knowledge of the condition and management of those star-route prosecutions, there was any neglect on the part of the officers of the Government to investigate and push the cases to a conclusion?—A. There certainly was nothing of the kind during my time here, and it is, of course, only with reference to that time that I would be competent to answer.

Q. My question relates only to that.—A. Well, from the time those cases were brought to my knowledge until I left the Department, I do not know of any negligence on the part of anybody representing the Government, or any failure on the part of such persons to do their duty in the matter.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is there anything else that you desire to add in relation to the fees of these attorneys?—A. There is this indorsement, which I find in the handwriting of Solicitor-General Phillips, referring to my letter of suggestion to him as Acting Attorney-General: "Answered November 1, 1881, saying I would carry out the contract, referring to clause, at a compensation to be determined, &c. See letter appointing these gentlemen—that I was indisposed to do more than pay them $2,500 on account of services in general, and say nothing of the $100 per day, &c.," which was, in substance, just my letter over again.

Q. Then, if I understand you, all that you had to do with regard to the compensation of any of the attorneys in the star-route prosecutions was your approval of the accounts of Mr. Gibson and Mr. Cook for $5,000 each. You made no agreement with them beforehand?—A. No, sir; I would say the commendation of their accounts, not the approval of them, for that is a technical word.

Q. You made no contract with them during your term of service, but, on the request of the Attorney-General, you simply——? A. [Interposing.] Expressed my opinion.

Q. In favor of paying $5,000 in each case?—A. Yes; one for eight months' service and one for seven months.

Q. What you have stated covers your connection with that matter?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, with reference to the employment of Mr. Brewster and Mr. Bliss, your responsibility ceased with their accounts for service up to January 1, 1882?—A. My responsibility ceased, I suppose, with the first payment to them of $2,500 each.

Q. But you did not, directly or indirectly, as Attorney-General, contract with them, or approve any account of theirs, extending beyond those two payments of $5,000 and $6,000?—A. I cannot suppose that I did. I cannot believe that I did, and I have no recollection of having done so. I asked the chief clerk of the Department of Justice, upon my promise to return them to him, for such letters as he could find that had passed from me to the Department in reference to the matter of the compensation of these gentlemen, telling him that I would testify from memory first, and then refresh it by the letters, so that the committee might get the exact truth; but I do not think there is any other letter that I could have written on this subject, though I had no recollection of these letters. I have, however, recollection of my attitude in the matter.

Q. So that any compensation paid Mr. Bliss after the 1st of January 1882, was not bottomed upon any agreement made with you as Attorney-General?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor any contract?—A. No, sir. I may have expressed the opinion, in talking to Mr. Bliss, that his bill as presented was reasonable, and that may or may not have been upon the basis of $100 per day. I do not think his charge was a per diem up to the time I went out; but however that may be, he certainly must have seen my letter to Mr. Phillips as Acting Attorney-General, in which I distinctly stated that he could not make such a contract to bind my successor.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. I suppose, after these gentlemen had notified the Department of Justice that they expected $100 a day for their services, unless the charge was disapproved in some express terms, they might reasonably expect that that would be the basis of their compensation, might they not?—A. I suppose they might; but it would appear that they hardly took that view, because Mr. Brewster, one of the gentlemen, made no bill for a per diem at all.

Q. But he very soon came into office as Attorney-General?—A. Well, I am speaking of the only bills that were presented at that time, and I assume that those gentlemen must have seen and known of my letter to Mr. Phillips, in which the idea of such a contract was disclaimed. I do not think this matter could for a moment rest upon any misunderstanding as to contract. I think it must rest upon reasonableness; for this reason, that while those gentlemen asked in their letter that some such contract should be made, I inclosed that letter to the Acting Attorney-General, and wrote to him declaring (what had been talked over between us, and was understood) that he was doubtless aware that he could not make any contract in the matter which would bind my successor, and in that letter I say: "I think, however, it would be proper for you to say that you recognized fully the gravity of the cases in their charge, the very great amount of labor connected with their prosecution, and the entire reasonableness of their expectation that the Department will compensate them fairly and justly for the industry and ability it knows they will devote to the matter in question. Of course, I only offer these suggestions for your consideration and decision, for you are Acting Attorney-General, and I am only awaiting the appointment of my successor," as they knew. On that letter the Solicitor-General made the indorsement that he would "carry out the contract at a compensation to be determined, &c. (see letter appointing these gentlemen), that I was indisposed to do more than pay them $2,500 on account of services in general, and say nothing of the $100 per day, &c."

Q. That is a memorandum made by the Solicitor-General?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you a copy of the letter to which he refers?—A. I have not. I do not know to whom the letter was sent, but the bills were not approved on the per diem basis I think; in other words, that the matter of these payments must have rested in the mind of the Attorney-General upon what was a reasonable and just compensation for the services of these gentlemen. But of course I knew nothing about that. He may have erred and supposed that there was some contract relating to it, but there certainly was none in that sense.

The CHAIRMAN. For the purpose of settling the question whether these bills for services up to the end of December, 1881, were on a per diem basis or otherwise, I call attention to Mr. Bliss's account, which shows that it was not, because on the per diem basis the account would have amounted to much more. There is a note at the bottom of the page which reads: "September 14 to December 25, constant services in New York between these dates, other than those occupying an entire day, or when absent, as above, $6,000."

The WITNESS. I thought it was not on a per diem basis. I thought Mr. Phillips had declined to allow that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time covered by the account would be about 93 days. Now, during the time that that bill covers Mr. Bliss's services, at the per diem rate, would have amounted to about twice as much as his bill, would they not?

The WITNESS. Yes; if the figures which you have shown me are correct.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You made an incidental reference to some suits in Philadelphia in connection with star-route matters. Will you please state what those suits were?—A. I referred to those merely as an illustration. They were, according to my recollection, suits for making fraudulent bonds in connection with star-route mail service.

Q. What were known as "straw-bail" cases?—A. Yes. They were a branch of the general division of the frauds known as straw bond and bail cases.

Q. Who were the defendants in those cases?—A. There were several—Black, McDevitt, Carson, Arbuckle, and I do not remember whether there were any others or not.

Q. Was there any consultation among the attorneys in the star-route cases in regard to the propriety of prosecuting any of those parties at that time?—A. I would not be able to recall the details of any such consultation.

Q. Do you remember whether anything was said in consultations of the star-route attorneys, with regard to the propriety of granting immunity to any one of those defendants in order to use him as a witness?—A. No, I do not specifically. I know that the Postmaster-General and Mr. Woodward had general charge of that subject, and whatever they thought wise to do would have been, as far as I was concerned, unhesitatingly approved, unless it had met some sufficient objection.

Q. You do not know whether you recommended giving immunity to any person there?—A. No, sir; I do not, to any particular person.

Q. Do you remember the case of McDevitt?—A. I remember his case. I do not have a distinct recollection that at any time his statements were sufficiently satisfactory to my mind to induce me to take that action. I do remember that at one stage they were not satisfactory, and I do not remember that they subsequently became so. The Postmaster-General and Mr. Woodward would both probably be able to recall such a circumstance, but I do not. It is a matter in which, of course, I would depend upon them, because they were familiar with the details and I was not.

Q. You do not remember, then, whether any of those defendants were suggested as useful witnesses in the prosecution?—A. Oh, I remember that Mr. Woodward thought that McDevitt would be a very useful witness indeed, and that he was disposed to give a great deal of valuable information pertaining to some one of the combinations; I remember that Mr. Woodward had frequent interviews with him on the subject, and that Mr. Woodward's views were shared by the Postmaster-General, but I do not remember that I assented to them or that I dissented from them. That, however, would not be important one way or the other. Whatever the Postmaster-General and Mr. Woodward concluded on that subject would probably have been carried out, as I would be disposed to yield my judgment to theirs, because of their greater familiarity with the subject.

Q. State whether, during the time you were Attorney-General, and before the death of Mr. Garfield, or before his wounding, you made any recommendation with regard to the arrest of any of the star-route defendants.—A. I do not think I did. My relation to the cases from first to last was generally as a quasi political officer of the Government, as well as a legal adviser.

Q. I think I have seen it stated in the press that there was at one time a general movement to arrest a number of these parties. Do you remember that?—A. No, I think not. I do not think there was anything contemplated but what was done at the time.

Q. Have you a copy of your letter of resignation of the office of Attorney-General?—A. I believe I have.

Q. That explains your reasons for retiring from the Cabinet?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Please leave a copy of that letter with the committee.

The WITNESS. I will do so.

The letter is as follows :

PHILADELPHIA, November 8, 1881.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Your letter has just reached me, and I will come to see you and talk over once more the subject of which it treats in the same spirit of conciliation in which we have heretofore discussed it. I will telegraph you in advance of my coming, which will be just as soon as I can free myself from engagements here.

In the interval I wish you to consider again the reasons why I cannot share your opinions upon this subject. As I have already told you, I knew comparatively nothing about the star-route frauds until President Garfield called my attention to them. He spoke very earnestly of his duty to have them thoroughly investigated, to remove all persons who ought to have prevented them, and to see that all persons were prosecuted against whom reasonable grounds for such a course were developed by the investigation. He said he had explained to the Postmaster-General the same views, and also why he wished him to consult me rather than the district attorney of the District. The Postmaster-General called upon me, and we went together to the President. He was quite as emphatic as before in the expression of his own opinion upon the subject. He spoke of the frauds as unparalleled villanies, as a loathsome ulcer on the body politic, needing to be cut out, with all its roots, no matter where they extended. He stated that while it did not belong to my Department, certainly not at all at that stage of the matter, yet he wished to associate me with the Postmaster-General to the extent of having the latter feel at perfect liberty to consult me at any time about it. He said he intended to remove General Brady as soon as the Postmaster-General could find a satisfactory successor. At a subsequent interview he regretted the delay in that matter, and urged his immediate removal, as he held him principally responsible for the great frauds which he evidently was convinced had been committed.

As soon as General Brady's resignation had been demanded, his newspapers, not unnaturally, began abusing President Garfield, the Postmaster-General, myself, and everybody in any way connected with the investigation. On this subject I speak without the slightest personal warmth, for thenceforth I ceased reading them, and I only know what I have been told by others or read in other newspapers. President Garfield subsequently expressed regret that he had exposed me to such attacks by connecting me with a matter not necessarily part of my duty; but I told him that I regarded it as an honor to be abused in his company. I added the general proposition that in these days the abuse of thieves is the only decoration in our public life worth the winning or the wearing, and is the surest possible passport to the good opinion of honest men.

In this spirit and in this companionship I went on advising with the President and the Postmaster-General as occasion arose. My functions were slight and infrequent. Mr. Woodward was the special agent of the Post-Office Department, best acquainted with these frauds and most zealous in their investigation. He not only possessed the entire confidence of the Postmaster-General, but had been commended to me personally by Senator Hawley as a man of excellent judgment, and not only of undoubted but of aggressive honesty. When, therefore, Mr. Woodward thought it desirable that he should have the assistance of Mr. Gibson and the Postmaster-General coincided in that opinion, I went with the latter to President Garfield, explained the matter to him, and received his directions to employ Mr. Gibson. When subsequently Mr. Woodward and Mr. Gibson agreed in requesting the employment of Mr. Cook, precisely the same course was pursued with the same result. Whenever they brought me any person supposed to possess knowledge of these frauds I advised him to tell the truth, and whenever I received letters suggesting sources of information I wrote to the parties indicated expressing the desire of the Government to obtain any knowledge or papers relating to the subject under their control; and whatever responses were received I, of course, turned over to the gentlemen charged with the inquiries which were progressing. I also insisted from the first and upon all proper occasions that there was no possible vindication for anybody accused except an open trial before a court and jury or a frank abandonment of the cases by the Government if the evidence did not, in the opinion of the President, justify a prosecution. That was my whole connection with the cases up to the wounding of President Garfield, except that the day before he was shot he repeated to me his efforts to have Mr. Riddle appointed district attorney of the District by President Hayes, and directed me to see Mr. Riddle, offer him the place in his name, and if he accepted it to advise him by telegraph and he would reply, asking me to request Mr. Corkhill's resignation. I wrote Mr. Riddle, asking to see him, but he did not see me until the night of the day President Garfield was wounded, and when we were expecting him to die very shortly. I then told Mr. Riddle, in one of the upper rooms of the White House, what had occurred.

As you had the best of reasons for knowing I never expected President Garfield to recover, and as I did not for a moment entertain the idea of remaining in the Cabinet after his death, I supposed such connection as I had had with the star-route cases was substantially ended, and that any further relation which the Department might have with them would devolve upon my successor. As, however, President Garfield continued to live, I continued to do whatever was needed and necessary, but nothing more. When we were considering the removal of the President to Long Branch, Mr. Corkhill asked me if I knew whether any of these cases would be ready for the grand jury. I told him I knew nothing of the details of the cases, and that of course Mr. Cook, his own special assistant in the cases, was the person to give him any information he desired.

As I felt sure the responsibility of the Government would devolve upon you at an early day, I desired to do nothing which I could avoid to embarrass or commit you or my successor. I therefore postponed the selection of leading counsel until I was assured by the gentlemen in charge of these matters that it ought to be delayed no longer. Thereupon the Postmaster-General and I met and discussed the subject. We agreed that in view of the circumstances, we ought to select from the leaders of the bar gentlemen not only of the highest ability and character, but gentlemen also whose personal and political relations would very probably be not only cordial but confidential with you and with my successor, so that you should approach these cases with every possible advantage. It was in this spirit we selected Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster, and with the selection of those gentlemen I considered my relation to the star-route matters as ended.

As soon as President Garfield died I informed you of my determination to leave the Cabinet as soon as you could conveniently appoint my successor, and a few days afterwards I made a public announcement of that determination. After your return from New York you kindly asked me to reconsider it, and I as kindly explained to you why I could not do so. You then decided upon my successor, and upon your assurance that he would be nominated to the Senate not later than Wednesday, October 26; I left Washington Tuesday afternoon, October 25, having made my adieus, and leaving the Solicitor-General, with your approval, in charge of the Department. On Tuesday last at the depot you explained to me why you had not been able to do as you expected, and why you had decided to leave the Solicitor-General in charge until the meeting of Congress. I really think therefore the first thing in order is your acceptance of my resignation.

And assuming that to have been done I will restate why I was convinced that it was desirable on public grounds alone. If the star-route cases are tried they must be principally tried in the District of Columbia, and the jurors must be selected from its residents. Now, in that District, I am assured, twice each week day and once on each Sunday, a newspaper is published and circulated among the people from whom the jurors are to be selected, filled with abuse of everybody connected, during President Garfield's lifetime, with these investigations. That is said to have gone on constantly as to President Garfield up to the day he was shot and as to all the rest ever since, and the influence of such a steady outpour upon a community of jurors is sure to be very great. It is very true that the New York Times in this case, as in the Tweed case, has printed very many of the records, and, with the aid of the press generally, has doubtless carried conviction to the general public; but among the public of the District of Columbia the papers, controlled by Mr. Brady and edited by Mr. Gorham and others, circulate I have no doubt greatly in excess of newspapers published elsewhere. Now, while these newspapers have been abusing me they have been as steadily praising you, and to such an extent that they are sometimes foolishly mistaken for and called your organs.

Then, too, you will have observed that, both before and since I left Washington, all kinds of falsehoods concerning our relations have been published, purporting to be semi-official, and if not inspired at least not discouraged. Of course I know how absolutely untrue all this is, but it serves the purpose of leading the people of the District to suppose that you are very hostile to me, and it is useless to close our eyes to the fact that Mr. Gorham's relations with some of your most influential friends gives these pretensions very considerable weight with unreflecting people. I do not mention these tactics of the accused parties to make any complaint of them. Quite likely they were to be expected in such circumstances as have surrounded these cases. Indeed, I foresaw to some extent that such methods would be employed, and successfully, and I have therefore always believed, but never so firmly as to-day, that my remaining in office after President Garfield died, or assuming any special responsibility for these cases in any shape, would be construed, in the District itself, as notice that you were not in sympathy with the prosecutions, and that you intended President Garfield's administration and not yours should be responsible for the further conduct of them. If I had needed any additional evidence that I was right in this conclusion I would have found it in the frantic demands of the accused parties themselves that I should continue responsible, and their loud prophecies that you would not accept my resignation unless I agreed to continue such responsibility. They know, as well as you and I know, that the five gentlemen now in charge of the cases, are all that can be either usefully or beneficially employed in them, and that they will do all which can be done to bring them to a successful conclusion; but they desire to point to my supervision of them as proof that they are controlled by influences to which you are hostile. In the District of Columbia that consideration would certainly be very powerful and might be fatal.

I have written you a long letter, but it is because I recognize the gravity of the subject and because I wish you to look into my mind upon it as through an open window. In this matter, as in all others, however much I desire to oblige you, I must stand upon my own convictions of duty, and I cannot therefore do as you wish, because I believe it would be wrong. If, however, there is any other way open in which I can serve you, I will gladly do it. If you wish to satisfy yourself of the utter and shameless iniquity of these transactions by a personal examination of the records I will cheerfully come to Washington and assist the Postmaster-General in laying them properly before you. A dozen typical cases can be fully examined in a few hours. If, then, you can consistently give public expression to the conviction that the Government has been shamefully robbed, and that the men engaged in trying to bring the wrong-doers to justice have your hearty approval, you will, in my opinion, do far more towards securing a just result than is possible in any other way. Meanwhile, whatever service I can render which is calculated in my judgment to help, and not hinder, the good cause, I will gladly render without stint and without reward. I will consult and advise to the best of my ability with you or with my successor, or the gentlemen in charge of the cases, or anybody whom you may suggest, for in that way, if I am of little use, I will at least be sure I am not doing harm. And now I have given you once more my deliberate opinions upon this whole matter, and a full statement of my connection with it.

Sincerely yours,

WAYNE MACVEAGH.

Q. It has been stated in the public prints that previous to the wounding of President Garfield he had contemplated removing you, on account of the pressure brought to bear upon him by persons implicated, or supposed to be implicated in the star-route frauds. Do you know anything about that?—A. I only know that I came into the Cabinet, as I knew, and as the President was kind enough to say, of his choice. That is, I never allowed any zealous friends (and everybody, I suppose, has such friends) to ask the President for any appointment for me, but, on the contrary, I prevented that from being done, and took abundant means to make him know that I did not seek or desire a Cabinet place, and when he surprised me by tendering it to me, he knew, and it was perfectly and frankly understood between us, that I came because he wished me to come, and not because I wished to come. I cannot believe that he contemplated any such action as your question suggests. Of course, I can only speak of the fact that I never knew of any such intention or desire on the part of the President; but, as it is a matter of public history, I may add that at one time I made it very easy for him to dispense with my services. He made a nomination in my Department which was irreconcilable with my sense of public duty, and it was perfectly well known at the time that, unless he could see his way to substantially change his views upon that matter, I must go out of my own accord; and I inferred from his action then that his desire was that I should remain; and the fact that I had made it so very easy for him to dispense with my services—had tendered my resignation and pressed it upon him, and that he had declined to listen to it—leads me to suppose that he would have had no difficulty in speaking to me on the subject, if he had had any wish that I should retire. But, on the contrary, the night before he was shot, when he was about to leave on his New England trip, and when I was to remain here to devote myself to the duties of my office, he was even exceptionally kind and cordial. And, in short, from the moment I entered his Cabinet until the moment immediately before his death at Elberon, I never had any reason to doubt that I had his confidence and regard to the fullest extent.

Q. You knew, of course, that there was great pressure from some source to secure your removal?—A. Undoubtedly; and at the time when I was obliged to embarrass the President in this painful manner with regard to the appointment which he had made in my Department in my absence, I suggested my resignation as a convenient way of relieving him of any embarrassment that he might experience on my account, saying that he knew that if I remained I would go straight on, and that here was a fortunate time and an easy opportunity for him, if he wanted to make a change, because it would be my own work.

Q. Did he accede to your wish about that appointment to which you refer?—A. Yes, sir; fully and unreservedly; and that induced me to remain and to suppose that he desired me to remain; and he never intimated anything to the contrary from first to last.

Q. You have every reason to believe, then, that up to the hour of his death he intended the earnest prosecution of these cases?—A. I have every reason to believe so. I have already stated that in many stages of these star-route cases they were a source of anxiety, and even of distress, to the President—inevitable anxiety and distress—from his relations to some of the parties affected, and from the political complications which arose out of the cases.

Q. When you made the statement to the President, which has been referred to here, with regard to these prosecutions changing the majority in the Senate of the United States, had you examined any evidence implicating the Senator alluded to?—A. I had not; I do not remember, exactly, that expression which you attribute to me, but it is quite likely I used it, because it was part of the common knowledge of the cases that accusations were made of a very grave character against a Senator; but I had not examined the matter, and, as I remarked, I believe, in my testimony yesterday, whatever was said upon such an occasion as that must be always taken with the qualification that there was at that time no adequate basis for a judgment as to results. It was only possible results that were pointed out to the President in anything that I ever said to him on that subject, and I always took abundant care to protect my own mind, as well as his, from basing any judgment as to the guilt of any party upon anything that I said.

Q. You have stated, I believe, that President Garfield desired to be fully advised as to every step that was taken in the cases?—A. Yes; and I desired to so advise him.

Q. You desired to advise him that these prosecutions might implicate a Republican Senator, and so might change the majority in the Senate?

—A. Yes, sir; I spoke of the serious political aspect of the matter. I am not sure that anything more than that was said. My recollection would not go further than to say that the general character of these accusations was stated, and the fact that they reached very high places, and the Senate was used as an illustration, to show that when we started nobody could tell where the matter would end.

Q. Do you know, as a matter of fact, whether an indictment has been found against the Senator to whom reference was then made?—A. I do not.

Q. Is it not a matter of history that such an indictment has been found?—A. I do not know; I thought it had not been.

Q. There is such an indictment pending; do you not know that fact?—A. Yes, that is so; I do know that.

Q. And do you not know that the gentleman against whom that indictment is pending was the Senator to whom you referred in that conversation with the President?—A. Yes; that is the gentleman I referred to at that time.

Q. The indictment of Mr. Dorsey, and of Mr. Brady soon after, is, of course, a matter of history?—A. Yes. I would like to say to the committee, in conclusion, that I have testified simply from general recollection of these matters, after a considerable lapse of time, and when other active pursuits have pushed them more or less out of my mind; and if it shall appear at any time that I have in any matter been mistaken (though I think it will not so appear), I shall be very glad to correct any error into which I may have fallen, or to furnish any additional information that I have, if I have any, or if any future testimony shall induce the committee to think that I have any.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 7, 1884.

GEORGE E. SPENCER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your present residence and occupation.—

Answer. I reside in White Pine County, Nevada; my post-office is Osceola; my occupation is mining.

Q. You were formerly United States Senator from the State of Alabama, I believe?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During what period?—A. From 1868 until the 4th of March, 1879.

Q. Since that time have you held any official position under the Government?—A. No, sir; except that I was one of the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad for a time, but I never performed any official service and there was no pay attached to the office.

Q. In the testimony of ex-Postmaster-General James before this committee the day before yesterday he stated that you had given him some valuable information with regard to frauds perpetrated upon the Government in connection with the star-route mail service; please state the nature of that information.—A. Well, I had better give you the history of my connection with Mr. James in the matter.

Early in January, 1881, I came from Nevada to New York on business. After being there a few days I met Mr. James on Broadway, and he asked me to come up to his office—he was then postmaster of the city of New York. I did so. He told me he was anxious to go into President Garfield's Cabinet as Postmaster-General, and asked me to render him all the assistance I could. He said I could render him valuable assistance, and having known him for a number of years, and known him quite well, I told him I would do so, and I did render Mr. James a good deal of assistance in securing the position of Postmaster-General; he thought so at the time, and I thought so. After he had been appointed Postmaster-General, I said to him that he had an opportunity such as few men had in their lives to make a great reputation for himself; that he could make the Post-Office Department self-sustaining in the first year of his administration, and that the second year he could reduce letter postage to two cents. He wanted to know how it could be done; he thought it was rather wonderful. I told him by breaking up the star-route ring. He wanted to know what I knew about it. I went into rather a lengthy talk with him, telling him what I did know about it, first taking from him a pledge that what I said on the subject should be strictly confidential, and that under no circumstances, come what might, should I be known in it. I told him that I was now in private life, and did not want to play the role of an informer before the country, and that I lived in the West, and that some of the men connected with this business were almost neighbors of mine. Before doing anything about the matter I also went to President Garfield (who was then alive), and I received from him a pledge that any information I should give him on this subject should be strictly confidential, and that my name should not be connected with it.

Q. Did he give you assurance to that effect?—A. He gave me the same assurance that Mr. James had given me. It was at my suggestion that Mr. Woodward, who is now present, was selected to take general charge of the business of getting up information. I say at my suggestion, because I was in Mr. James's room in the Post-Office Department one day, when Mr. Tyner, who was then First Assistant Postmaster-General, insisted that Mr. Woodward should not be appointed to a place. He was very bitter on Mr. Woodward. He said that he had once before been in the Department, and had made a great deal of trouble, and after Mr. Tyner got through I said to Mr. James that I thought Mr. Woodward was the best man there was in the country to take hold of this matter, and Mr. James did detail him for that purpose, and Mr. Woodward had for months, and I guess has up to the present time, charge of all the papers and the taking of all the testimony. I gave Mr. Woodward the names of different people to send for, and he had the general direction of the whole investigation. During the winter of 1881, after January 1, I remained in New York at the Everett House, and I used to meet Mr. A. M. Gibson there quite often. He was stopping at the hotel, and he told me of a table of 93 routes that he had compiled, showing what the contracts were originally let for, showing how much the increase of service had been, how much expedition there had been, and how much pay the contractors were getting at that time. It was a very valuable compilation, and saved a great deal of labor. I suppose it was a week after Mr. Woodward got to work here—it could hardly have been that long—that I was passing the Western Union Telegraph office in this city and saw Mr. Gibson there. I went in and told him that I was very glad to see him; that I had been intending to look in the Directory to find out where he lived, and go to see him. I persuaded him to go with me, and we went to Woodward's room, on Thirteenth street, where Mr. Gibson gave Mr.

Woodward a general idea of his work, and afterwards brought to him the tables and other papers concerning the expedition of those routes. I remained here in Washington most of the time for about three months, giving my time and attention very largely to the getting up of evidence concerning the frauds in the star routes. A great many of them I knew much about from living in the West. It was a matter that used to be freely talked over in the far West before this investigation commenced—a matter of public notoriety.

Q. You may state the general information that you obtained with regard to increase and expedition of service and unnecessary or fraudulent mail service in the West.—A. Well, one case came under my attention at Osceola, where I was living. The Government was paying for service on that route seven times a week, and we were receiving the mail only three times a week. Until I got here to Washington, I was not aware that the Government was paying for seven times a week; but one day I went into the contract room and looked, and found out that they had been for two or three years, I think, paying for carrying the mail seven times a week, when, as I say, it was really carried only three times a week. That had gone on for quite a long time; but I will not undertake to state the length of time. That was one of the first cases that I told Mr. James about. This was before Mr. Brady was removed from the Post-Office Department, and I suggested to Mr. James that, without the knowledge of Mr. Brady, he had better send some reliable inspector out there to investigate that route. Mr. James said it was impossible that the service could be in that way. I think he talked with Mr. Brady about it—he told me he did—and Mr. Brady said, “It is no such thing; the service is being performed.” Mr. James did send Colonel Sharpe out there to inspect that route. I remember who he sent, because I read the report afterwards, and I remember that Colonel Sharpe reported the facts as I had given them.

Q. What was the amount of the original letting and the amount actually paid?—A. That I cannot tell. That ought to appear by the record; I have forgotten. It was the route from Eureka to Pioche, in Nevada. I have an indistinct recollection that there was a steal, or whatever you might call it, in that route of about $7,000. Some time in June ex-Senator Clayton, of Arkansas, came to Washington and came to see me—I do not remember whether he came to see me or whether I met him in the street—but we met, and he said, “If this star-route investigation that is going on is in earnest, Rerdell has been to me and has told me his story, but I think Rerdell is a very bad man; I do not place any confidence in him.” And then he went on and told me the story that Rerdell had told him. I said to him, “You had better go with me and see Mr. James, the Postmaster-General, and tell him that story.” After considerable persuasion he agreed to go. Then I took him to Mr. Woodward, and he told Mr. Woodward the same story. The story, if it was true, and I had not any doubt at the time about its being true, would make a conviction positive and absolute.

Q. To what route did this information or evidence refer?—A. This evidence of Rerdell's referred to all the routes that Dorsey, Vaile, and that combination had—to their general business. Mr. Clayton took Rerdell to Mr. James's room. I did not go, because I did not want to be known in the thing; I did not want Rerdell or any one else to know that I knew anything about it. Mr. Clayton took Rerdell to Mr. James's room, and he made his full statement there. They neglected, however, to take his affidavit, and a few days afterwards Mr. Dorsey found it out in some way or another, and he persuaded Rerdell to make an other affidavit retracting his proposed one. That made his testimony practically valueless. I remained in Washington up to the time that General Garfield was shot. By that time I had made up my mind that, beyond the reformation of the service—beyond the saving to the Government of two or three million of dollars a year—the investigation in other respects would be a failure. I made up my mind that they had accomplished one thing: that the service had been thoroughly reformed, but there was no testimony obtained by which conviction in court could be had. I left and went back to Nevada, and remained there until fall, and then came back and spent the winter in New York, and part of the time in Washington, but I paid little or no attention after that to star-route matters. I was receiving no pay in the matter, I was not employed by the Government, and the cases had passed largely into other hands from those in which they had been originally, the only man still connected with them who had been engaged from the beginning being Mr. Woodward. Mr. Bliss or Attorney-General Brewster never asked me any questions concerning the business, and I did not care to volunteer information, and paid little or no attention to it. In the latter part of March, 1882, I went back to Nevada and remained there until June. Whilst I was there the United States marshal was out there subpœnaing witnesses to come before the grand jury on cases in connection with some of the Salisbury routes. I saw the officer—somebody had told me that they were going to subpœna me as a witness; I don't remember who had told me that—but I saw the officer and asked him if he had any subpœna for me. He said he had not. I had business taking me to Boston, and I took the stage from Cherry Creek, in company with two or three witnesses who were coming to Washington. We traveled together as far as Ogden, in Utah. I came on to New York, and having been in New York about twelve hours, if my recollection serves me right—it was less than twenty-four hours—a subpœna was handed to me by Mr. Newcomb, an inspector of the Post-Office Department, to come to Washington as a witness in the Dorsey-Brady case. I felt very much incensed about it, as I thought it was bad faith on the part of the officers of the Government. I thought it was a mean trick to subpœna me at New York and not at my home, thus keeping me out of the mileage which as a witness I was entitled to; but I especially thought it was bad faith for them to make me a witness at all. I came to Washington, however, and remained here for two weeks, from the 15th of June until the afternoon of the first day of July. I stopped at the Arlington, and had a room adjoining that of Mr. Bliss. I asked Mr. Bliss for an interview. I said, "I would like to talk to you about this matter; I want to know what you want to prove by me." Said he, "I am very busy to-day; I will give you an interview to-morrow." My recollection is that that was Saturday. I asked him what time. He said, "About two o'clock; to-morrow is Sunday." I staid in the house all day, and sent my card to his room two or three times; but he kept out of his room. The next morning he apologized; he said he was very busy and had been unable to keep his engagement with me, but that he would later. It ran along for about a week, and Mr. Bliss gave me no opportunity to speak to him, unless it was in the dining-room or some public place. I went to Mr. Chandler, who was then and is now a member of the Cabinet, and told him I wanted to see Mr. Bliss, and I wished he would go with me, as I thought I was being treated in a very shabby manner. Mr. Chandler did go with me. We went to the hotel, but Mr. Bliss was not there. We went over to the President's house. As we got to the steps of the President's house we met Mr. Phillips, the President's private secretary, coming out.

We asked him if Mr. Bliss was there; Mr. Phillips said no; that he seldom came to the White House. We walked back to the hotel, and concluded we would wait for Mr. Bliss to return. About 11 o'clock he came in. This was in June—very warm weather—and we were sitting in the bar. Mr. Bliss came up to Mr. Chandler, and said, "I found your card (mine was in the box also); you want to see me." He called him "William." They went out in the passage-way, and talked there for as much as two hours. I interrupted them several times, and each time they told me that they did not want to see me—that Mr. Bliss did not want to see me. When the interview ceased, Mr. Bliss went up stairs without giving me an opportunity to speak to him. Mr. Chandler and I went out, and Mr. Chandler told me, in substance, what Mr. Bliss had said—that Mr. Bliss did not want to talk to me before putting me on the stand as a witness; that if I did not swear to what he expected I would swear to, he would ask the court for the privilege of cross-examining me; that he did not propose to have any consultation with me until I was on the stand. I remained here until the afternoon of the 1st of July. The court adjourned over the 4th of July. On the afternoon of the 1st I went to New York and called on Senator Conkling, and showed him my subpoena. Mr. Conkling turned to the Revised Statutes and said, "This is not a legal subpoena; it is an illegal subpoena; it is not in conformity with the Statutes, and the courts would so hold and decide. If I were in your place I would go off and attend to my business." I asked him if my going over to Washington and staying there two weeks had not waived my rights in the matter. He said no, that it had not; and he was very decided in telling me that there was no necessity for my staying any longer unless I chose to do so. I regarded his legal advice as very good advice, and I followed it. I went back to Nevada, and there never was a service on me after that.

Q. You did not appear at the trial thereafter?—A. I did not appear at the trial thereafter. I did not return to Washington until the United States marshal brought me here this winter.

Q. What was the defect in that subpoena?—A. It was a subpoena used in civil cases in the District of Columbia, not in criminal cases—so the judge decided. They had used the wrong blank; I suppose that was the fact about the matter.

Q. Where were you subsequently served with any process by any officer of the Government?—A. I never was served with any process on the part of the Government until the 21st day of November last, when a bench-warrant was served on me at Austin, Nev.

Q. What was the nature of that process?—A. It was a bench-warrant, a warrant for arrest.

Q. An attachment?—A. Yes; an attachment.

Q. You obeyed that service?—A. Yes; I obeyed that service, and came on here, and the case was tried before Judge Wylie and dismissed.

Q. Do you state that Judge Wylie decided that that subpoena which was served on you in New York was illegal?—A. He decided that the subpoena was not legal; that the service was illegal, and that the attachment was illegal also. He decided that all the papers in the case of every sort and description were illegal, and I was discharged.

Q. Have you a copy of the affidavit that was made in the trial of the star route cases for a continuance, on the ground of the absence of yourself as a material witness?—A. I read it in the newspapers afterwards. I might as well state here—I have to state it somewhere—that I knew no material fact of my own knowledge that would be admitted as evidence in any court which would tend to convict either one of the defendants.

Q. Did you state that fact to Mr. Bliss, or to any of the counsel for the Government?—A. Mr. Bliss did not give me an opportunity to do so; but I stated it to Mr. Chandler, and he stated it to Mr. Bliss.

Q. Had you at that time seen the reports of the inspectors who had examined these routes in detail?—A. Yes, sir; I had read the large majority of them. I had read the reports of the inspectors who had been sent to examine routes up to the shooting of President Garfield. I think I had read almost every one of them. They were generally handed to me to read; Mr. Woodward, or Mr. Van Wormer, or Mr. Lyman, or some of those gentlemen, would hand them to me, and I suggested sending the inspectors to examine the principal routes. I was the first to suggest that.

Q. Is there anything further of an historical character that you desire to state?—A. I don't remember anything further that I need state, unless you draw it out of me by asking questions, which I am perfectly willing to answer.

Q. Have you read the testimony of Mr. James, given here?—A. Since I came into the room I have read it, as it has been published in the newspapers.

Q. Have you any statement to make to the committee in regard to his testimony, so far as it related to you?—A. No; except that I want to say very positively that I never saw Mr. Dorsey and Mr. Brady together in any room, and never saw Mr. Dorsey pay Mr. Brady any money. That is an erroneous statement on the part of Mr. James. He is mistaken about it in some way—mistaken about what I originally said. We have talked so much together about the star-route business, or did in the spring of 1881, that he may have got things mixed.

Q. Mr. James stated here that you had told him that, in a room in this city or in New York, you and ex-Senator Dorsey were together, when a card was sent up, and Mr. Dorsey said he would show you how he did business; do you remember that?—A. No; that is a mistake; Mr. James is mistaken about that; I never saw Mr. Dorsey and Mr. Brady together in a room in New York in my life, or in a room here; I don't know that I ever saw them together anywhere, though I may have seen them together in a public place.

Q. Do you know whether you made any statement of that kind to Mr. James or any one else?—A. I have no recollection of making any such statement, and he was certainly mistaken about what I did say.

Q. Do you remember to have made that statement to any other person, or a similar statement?—A. I do not remember to have made it at all; if I made any such statement, I must have been drunk when I made it, and I am not in the habit of getting drunk; it is not true.

Q. He said, also, that you informed him with regard to an interview you had had with Mr. Dorsey, when he explained to you the matter of Rerdell's statement?—A. Yes; that was on a Sunday in June; I don't remember the date; I think he gives the date as the 12th of June, 1881, and probably that is correct; I was sitting in my room in the Everett House in New York, and Major Clark was in the room with me, and a rap was heard on my door, and Mr. Dorsey came in; it was about 1 o'clock; as he came in he spoke to Major Clark, whom he knew, and said, "Major, I want to see Spencer alone; I wish you would go out." He had come up without sending a card; I was very much astonished; it was the first time I had seen Mr. Dorsey for some considerable period; he was very much excited and worried; he had heard that Rerdell had, as he termed it, "gone back" on him, had turned informer to the Post-Office Department, and had tried to give up his books, papers, and memoranda. Mr. Dorsey was very much excited, and he stayed there until about 6 o'clock in the evening. Whilst he was there Mr. Elkins came to see me; that was the first time that Mr. Dorsey and Mr. Elkins had met for some months; Mr. Dorsey was very much worried and excited, and was very anxious about the matter, and he had come to see me to ask me what I knew about it; I told him I did not know anything, and if I did know anything I was so situated that I could not tell him.

Q. Then, what Mr. James stated here as to what you told him had occurred between you and Mr. Dorsey on that occasion was substantially correct?—A. Was generally correct; yes.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Did you make any statement to the Postmaster-General of an interview with Mr. Dorsey, where he had said anything about money, or the payment of money, or anything of that sort?—A. I do not remember to have made any such statement.

Q. Then I understand you to say that what Mr. James said you said to him on that subject is a statement made out of whole cloth?—A. I have no recollection of ever making any such statement. I certainly never saw Mr. Brady and Mr. Dorsey together in my life in a room alone, and I never saw Mr. Dorsey pay Mr. Brady any money, or give him any envelope with any money in it.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. Dorsey say that he had paid Mr. Brady any money on account of these matters?—A. I don't remember to have ever heard him say that. I do not think I ever did. I know that Mr. Dorsey, at one time, was very bitter on Mr. Brady. Mr. Dorsey was anxious for Mr. Brady's removal from the office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is there anything else that you desire to state with reference to this matter?—A. I don't know that there is anything particular that I desire to state further. I always felt that they took the most complicated case they could find to try, and I felt that they were masquerading before the public. If I had been going to take a case to try, I should not have taken the case that they took. I never could see why they should take a complicated case like that, and leave a case that was not complicated, like the Venita and Las Vegas route.

Q. Had you knowledge of other fraudulent expeditions than the one to which you have referred in your testimony, the Eureka and Pioche route?—A. I had no absolute, positive, personal knowledge that I could swear to, but, generally, I had. This was a matter of public notoriety in the West, and had been for some time.

Q. You have spoken of the Las Vegas and Venita route?—A. Yes.

Q. Who were the beneficiaries of the contract on that route?—A. I would not profess to swear to that, but my recollection is that Mr. Parker was.

Q. Was he prosecuted?—A. The records will show. I don't think anybody was prosecuted but the Dorsey combination.

Q. Do know what percentage of the expedited routes the Dorsey combination held?—A. I examined that question once, but I have forgotten the exact proportion. My recollection is that it was about 15 per cent., but I am not sure.

Q. Who were the beneficiaries of the other routes, so far as your knowledge extends?—A. The Parkers were large beneficiaries; the Salisbury combination were large beneficiaries, and I think Sanderson was more or less. Then Kearns and Roots had some routes, though I think the contract was originally made with Chidester.

Q. Do you know who the persons were who composed those various combinations interested in expedited star routes?—A. Generally, I know who they were.

Q. Just state the several combinations as far as you know them, and the persons interested in them.—A. Well, there were the Parkers; I think there were two brothers, but I am not sure.

Q. What percentage of the expedited routes had they?—A. That I will not undertake to say. I once figured it up, but I have forgotten. There is a table which was printed at the time in the newspapers, giving the expeditions on 93 routes.

Q. So far as you know, were the prosecutions in the star-route cases confined to what is known as the Dorsey combination?—A. The prosecutions, I should say, were entirely confined to the Dorsey combination.

Q. And the Dorsey combination represented but 15 per centum of the expedited routes?—A. I would not like to swear that it was as large as that, but my recollection is that it was about 15 per cent.

Q. Who were the persons in interest in the Dorsey combination?—A. Mr. J. W. Dorsey, Mr. Vaile, Mr. Miner, and Mr. Peck.

Q. And Mr. Rerdell?—A. I don't know. He had been Dorsey's clerk; his relations were rather peculiar. I do not think he had much of an interest, but he may have had a small interest.

Q. In what combination was Mr. Bosler?—A. Mr. Bosler was a partner of Senator Dorsey in these same routes.

Q. Who constituted what was known as the Salisbury combination?—A. Mr. Gilmer and the two Salisburys—Monroe Salisbury and O. J. Salisbury—and J. T. Gilmer.

Q. Do you know where they reside?—A. Mr. Gilmer resides at Salt Lake City. I think O. J. Salisbury also resides at Salt Lake City, and Monroe Salisbury resides in San Francisco.

Q. Who constituted what was known as the Parker combination?—A. Mr. Parker, and, I believe, his brother. I do not know who his partners were. He resides at Atchison, Kans., I believe.

Q. How much of the expedited routes did the Parkers control, or were they interested in?—A. That I will not undertake to say now, but my impression is that it was about 30 or 35 per cent.

Q. How much was the Salisburys' interest?—A. About the same; I think the Salisbury interest was the largest, and Parker's the next.

Q. What other combinations were there that you have not spoken of?—A. I think the Sanderson combination was another.

Q. How much did they own?—A. I figured it up at one time, but I have forgotten; my impression is, however, that the smallest of the large interests was held by the Dorsey combination, and that it was not to exceed 15 per cent.

Q. You have spoken of still another combination?—A. There were several other small combinations; the Patricks had some routes, but I always counted them in the Salisbury combination; then there were one or two people in New Mexico that had some excessively bad routes.

Q. Who were they?—A. There was a sort of a preacher out there—I cannot remember his name just now—yes; it was J. D. Colgrove.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Do you recollect what denomination he preached to?—A. I don't know that I am right in saying that he was a preacher, but I got the impression that at one time he had been a preacher; I do not know to what denomination he belonged.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who else was in the combination with Colgrove?—A. I do not know whether he had a partner or not; Mr. Woodward is more familiar with that than I can be possibly.

Q. You spoke of Mr. Roots?—A. When we commenced examining that matter, my recollection is that Kearns and Roots had one route, but it was not in their name, the Black Cañon route. Did they have any other, Mr. Woodward?

Mr. WOODWARD. I think Kearns had gone out.

Q. Those combinations which you have named constituted, you say, the principal beneficiaries of the star-route contracts?—A. Those that I have mentioned constituted the principal beneficiaries.

Q. And you state that the public prosecutions were confined to the members of the Dorsey combination, which had about 15 per centum of the contracts?—A. Yes, sir; about that.

Q. Did you ever learn how it happened that Mr. Sanderson was not indicted?—A. Mr. Sanderson was originally indicted; then his name was dropped out, and I was told at the time that it was on account of his initials. I don't know the reason. There is some scandal about the reason, but I have no knowledge on the subject.

Q. What is your information as to the reason of his having been left out of the second indictment?

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Before you answer that, let me ask you if you have any information on the subject?—A. I have no information in the world that is testimony.

Q. Do you know anything about it?—A. Personally I do not.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know from others?—A. Well, as I have said, there is some gossip and scandal about it, but I do not like to repeat gossip; I don't think it is fair to people to do it.

Q. Do you know whether any money was paid by any parties that were interested in star-route contracts to secure immunity?—A. I do not.

Q. Can you give us the names of any witnesses who can throw light upon that question?—A. Now that would be very difficult to do. I cannot give you the names of witnesses that could probably throw any light upon it.

Q. Were you here during a portion of the time, or from time to time, while the so-called proceeding on information was pending?—A. Whilst that proceeding on information was pending I was in the West.

Q. Did you return here subsequent to that time?—A. I went West shortly after the shooting of President Garfield and returned late in the fall, and whilst I was West that information proceeding had been tried and the court had not sustained the information—I don't know what you call the decision legally.

Q. Did you learn anything with regard to efforts that were made to compromise the suits outside of legal proceedings?—A. I did.

Q. State what you know about those efforts.—A. I think it was Mr. Elmer (Mr. Brady's successor as Second Assistant Postmaster-General) who told me that an agreement had been made to compromise those cases.

Q. Did you learn the nature of that agreement?—A. Yes; I learned the nature of the agreement at that time. He told me, I think, that the larger contractors or combinations that had not been indicted had proposed to the Government that they were willing to arbitrate, and agreed that if the Government could prove that they had got any money from it that they ought not to have had they were willing to pay it back, and that there had been an arbitration agreed upon; that the Government was to select one man, and the contractors one man, and the two a third.

Q. Do you know who were selected for that purpose?—A. I think Mr. Elmer told me about it first, and told me that he was selected on the part of the Government, and Mr. Ingersoll on the part of the contractors, and the third I believe they had not at that time agreed upon. I told Mr. Elmer that if I were in his place I would have nothing to do with it.

Q. Do you know who the third party was that was finally selected?—A. I did know who the third party was, but I cannot tell you now.

Q. Was it Mr. Bliss, so far as you know?—A. I have got an impression that it was Mr. Bliss.

Q. Do you know whether that arbitration board ever met and performed any duty as such?—A. I understand that it did not. I had several talks with Mr. Elmer about it. I talked more with him than with any one else; I am under the impression that it never met and never did any duty. I think they found that it would be entirely illegal and that they could not do it. But you want to recollect this, that from the 1st of July until the 2d of November I was not in Washington, and consequently there was a long time when I did not know anything that occurred here excepting as I read it in the newspapers.

Q. Do you know who had authorized the creation of the board of arbitration?—A. No; I do not.

Q. Do you know whether it was agreed upon on the part of those representing the Government as well as those representing the contractors?—A. I suppose it was agreed to by both. The truth is that after the shooting of President Garfield I went away, and when I came back Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster had charge of the cases and I never knew anything of them afterwards. Those gentlemen never asked me any questions and they did not act as though they wanted to consult with me in any particular about the matter, and they never did, and consequently all I knew about it was what Mr. Woodward would tell me sometimes, or Mr. Elmer, or Mr. Lyman, and I did not trouble myself to make any inquiries; so that my actual knowledge of the matter extends only from the time when Mr. James became Postmaster-General up to the shooting of Mr. Garfield. I have no particular knowledge about it after that time. What occurred up to that time I knew very well.

Q. Have you conversed with any of the contractors or subcontractors with regard to the result of that compromise—as to whether they paid any money in pursuance of it, or of any compromise with the Government?—A. No; I have never conversed with any of the contractors on the subject, with the exception of Mr. Parker. I met him on the train some time in 1882, and he told me they were going to have such a compromise. That was after I had heard of it in Washington. It was the only time in my life that I ever saw Mr. Parker.

Q. Do you know whether any sum or sums of money were raised from the contractors or subcontractors on account of any compromise wanted to be made with the Government?—A. No; I do not.

Q. Has any contractor informed you that he has paid any money on any account growing out of these prosecutions?—A. No; I have never talked with any of the contractors except Mr. Parker, as I have already said.

Q. Or any of the subcontractors?—A. No; but I think there are some subcontractors that might give you some information on that point if you could get hold of them.

Q. Will you furnish the committee the names before you leave the room?—A. I will give you a name privately.

Q. Did any of those subcontractors say anything to you about having been required to pay any sums of money?—A. Well, I have not talked for two years with any of the contractors or subcontractors; for three years, in fact. I have not talked with any of them since the star-route investigations commenced except, as I have told you, once on the cars with Mr. Parker.

Q. When you did talk with any of the subcontractors did they give you any information in regard to any payment they had been required to make on account of these prosecutions or growing out of them?—A. Three or four years ago the contractors and subcontractors used to talk about these things very publicly, but after the investigation commenced they quit talking, and would not talk any more, and since my connection with the matter has been known they have always been enemies of mine, and consequently have not talked with me.

Q. What did any of those contractors say with regard to the sums that they had been required to pay in connection with the prosecutions, or to get immunity?—A. It was the general understanding—I cannot give it to you in the shape of evidence now, nor I cannot tell you who told me—but it was the general understanding when this star-route investigation was going on in 1881 that they had to pay $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. for expedition and increase of service. However, no one ever told me that in any shape that I could swear that he told it to me or that it was a fact, but it never had any doubt in my own mind but that it was a fact. Still, I do not know it in the shape of evidence. I think Mr. Rerdell corroborated that, however, in his first statement.

Q. That was a sort of an open secret among the contractors, was it?—A. It was a sort of an open secret. It was in the air. There are a great many things, you know, in the air that you cannot grasp. It was generally talked of that any one who wanted expedition and increase of service had to pay that. The plan was this: These contracts were originally let at very low rates, with a long schedule of time. They were principally once-a-week service, with not more than two or three miles, or perhaps two miles and a half, an hour. Then the service was increased from once-a-week to three-times-a-week, or to seven-times-a-week, and then the schedule time was increased to four, five, or six miles an hour, and one route that was let originally for $2,700 was afterwards expedited and increased up to, if my recollection serves me right, as high as $52,000.

Q. These subsequent increases were made without advertisement, were they not?—A. Yes, sir; I think they were made without any advertisement, and it was in the air that the contractors had to pay $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent.; but whether they did or not I do not know. I never had anybody tell me of that so that I could swear to it.

Q. Do you know how that $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. was to be applied?—A. Certainly not. I was not in their secrets.

Q. But you say it was understood so far as general information went that persons obtaining expedition were required to put up $33\frac{1}{3}$ per centum of the increase in order to obtain the expedition?—A. That was the general understanding when we were trying to break up this star-route ring, that that was what they were doing. I had heard it often before, and Rerdell when he made his statement confirmed that part of the general understanding.

Q. That $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. was to go to some person of course?—A. It was supposed to go to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Q. Do you know whether the subcontractors of the beneficiaries, the principal contractors, were assessed on the amounts of their contracts with a view to the payment of that $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent.?—A. I think they got that differently from an assessment; they would let the subcontract for so much, and then when they would get it increased they would make another bargain with the subcontractor.

Q. The subcontractor would not be required to pay anything, then, on account of the expedition?—A. Well, I say the contractor would make another bargain with the subcontractor. Mr. Jennings used to tell very fully how it was. He stated that the original contract price he got on his route was $3,000, and after it was increased to $52,000 he received $28,000, and the rest was profit.

Q. Profit to the person who had obtained the contract—the principal contractor?—A. Yes; profit to the principal contractor.

Q. The principal contractor obtained the contract at a specific sum, and then got the service expedited and made a contract with the subcontractor to perform the expedited service for a stated sum, and the balance of the contract price was retained by the original contractor, who performed no service whatever?—A. Yes, sir; who performed no service whatever.

Q. Can you state what interest a gentleman named Hinds had in those contracts?—A. Mr. Hinds had no interest; Mr. Hinds was interested with Mr. Walsh in a route from Santa Fé to Prescott, and was a failing contractor, and they took his route away from him, I think.

Q. In the New York Tribune of February 12, 1876, I see a letter which is dated at Nashville, October 9, 1867, addressed to Mr. Hinds, and signed by you. Do you remember anything about that letter?—A. I might remember it by reading it. [After looking at the letter as published.] That is a letter which I wrote at that time to Mr. Hinds. He was a man who had been a captain in my regiment during the war, a man that I had a great liking for and have a great liking for to-day. He was a man who at that time had had very little experience in business, and he had come to Washington and got a large number of mail contracts in Alabama. He had employed Judge Embry, and the judge was complaining about Mr. Hinds not being able to pay him, and told me something about his having to pay something to Judge Hood, who was supposed to be a friend to Postmaster-General Randall, and on that subject I wrote that letter to Mr. Hinds. I had forgotten all about it; I did not know it ever had been published. I wrote the letter to Mr. Hinds telling him to keep his engagements. Mr. Hinds was for a number of years a mail contractor, and lost a good deal of money at it, and was finally prosecuted here once for straw bonds.

Q. Who is Judge Embry that you mention here?—A. He is a gentleman who is still here in Washington, an attorney and a very respectable man, Mr. James H. Embry. He has an office somewhere in town here.

Q. Then this letter of yours was simply advising Mr. Hinds to keep his contracts with his attorney, Judge Embry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Hinds was a failing contractor?—A. At that time I do not think he was a failing contractor, but it is so long ago that the matter has entirely passed out of my mind. It was long before I was in public life, you see, away back in 1867. I know I met Judge Embry and he made these complaints and I wrote to Mr. Hinds to keep his engagements with Judge Embry, whatever they were. Judge Embry told me he had done a good deal of work for Mr. Hinds here and that Mr. Hinds had not paid him as he had agreed to, and that he, Embry, had had to pay Judge Hood. Judge Hood was then a lawyer, practicing here principally in the Post-Office Department, but he has been dead several years. At that time I did not know him.

Q. You had no interest in it?—A. I had not the slightest interest in it, except writing to a young man who had just started out in life, telling him it was better for him to keep his engagements than to break them, no matter what they were; even if they were foolish engagements, to stick to them.

Q. Was there any suggestion in regard to a change in the postmaster-generalship mentioned in your letter?—A. Well, I certainly had not much to do with the Postmaster-General at that time. It is so long since I wrote the letter that I had forgotten that I had ever written such a letter; but I know I wrote to Mr. Hinds on account of what Judge Embry had said, because I was out of politics, and did not know any more, at that time, about what was going on in Washington than I know of what is going on now in Saint Petersburg. I want to say that for a number of years Mr. Hinds had been a contractor here, and I thought he had been very badly treated by the Post-Office Department; very badly indeed. I got a good deal of information myself concerning star-route cases from Mr. Hinds; perhaps more from him than from any other one individual; and I thought he had been very badly treated; and I took an interest in breaking up the star-route ring which Hinds had been fighting, as much to vindicate him as for any other one reason. I regard Mr. Hinds as an honest, square, true man; a little wild and visionary about some things, perhaps, but I thought he had been very badly treated, and I was very anxious to see some of those men who had been persecuting him come to grief, as I thought they ought to. Mr. Hinds is now living at Decatur, Ala., and you can get him as a witness at any time by sending for him. He was here a week ago but has gone home now. He is a son-in-law of Dr. Bliss.

• WASHINGTON, D. C., March 8, 1884.

A. M. GIBSON sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your occupation and residence.—Answer. I am a member of the bar. I reside in Washington during the winter.

Q. State whether you were employed as special counsel by the Government in the star-route cases.—A. I was, on the 22d of April, 1881.

Q. Did you hear the testimony here of Mr. James and Mr. McVeagh in regard to your appointment?—A. I heard that of Mr. James; I did not hear Mr. McVeagh's.

Q. State the circumstances which led to your employment as special counsel in those cases.—A. Well, Mr. Chairman, what I suppose you want to know is how much I was paid and whether I earned it. On page 25 of Executive Document No. 40 you will find that I received $5,000 for my services. Now, I will endeavor to show the committee, first, that I earned that money, and, second, that in comparison with others I was poorly paid. In 1872 I began to make a special study of the Post-Office Department, and during the years that intervened between that and 1881 I became quite familiar with the methods of business in the Department and with the parties engaged specially in mail contracts. I made it my business at each of the lettings to get the lettings on the principal routes in the Western Territories and States, and from time to time I caused my clerks to make transcripts of the allowances that were made for increased service and expedition on those routes. During the winter of 1880-'81 I was not in Washington except over Sundays and probably Mondays. In the early spring of 1881, I think about the 1st of March, I came to Washington and was here at the inauguration, and, I believe, shortly after that went back to New York. I knew nothing about Mr. James's intentions. I had met Mr. James but once, and that was at the Chicago convention. I did not see him when he came here nor for some time afterwards. I was standing in the Western Union telegraph office here one day, I think in the latter part of March, when Mr. Spencer came in and said he had been looking for me and wanted to see me. He said that there was going to be an investigation of the Post-Office Department with reference to the star routes, and he wanted to know if I would not give them some assistance. I told him I hadn't any desire to engage in it; that I had other business. He insisted, and finally I went with him to Wormley's Hotel to see Mr. Woodward. I found Mr. Woodward in a room and had some talk with him. I think at that time he had taken a statement of a man named Jennings, which, he said, was about the only thing that he had done. That resulted in my taking to Mr. Woodward quite a mass of stuff, being tabulated statements of a number of routes, from which a table of 93 routes had been made up, giving, in each case, the date of the contract, the original pay, and the subsequent increases for expedition and increased trips.

Q. Can you identify that table [showing witness a printed table of routes]?—A. That is not the table; that is a table that was subsequently made, which goes somewhat more into detail than the original table. My recollection of the amounts aggregated in that table is that they are somewhat different from this [referring to the one in the book]. Of course, you understand that these tables differ at different periods; there would be changes. For instance, there would be reductions made on a route, or there might be, possibly, some additions; this is made up as of a certain date; that one was made up as of the date January 1, 1880. I think that original table showed an increased expenditure for increased trips and expedited services of about $2,000,000 over and above the contract price. That table caused some commotion, because it made a very remarkable showing, and that was the table that was taken to Mr. James, and to Mr. MacVeagh, and to the President. Of course, I do not know what the President said about it, but I heard what Mr. James testified to. It is a little remarkable that it should have excited so much surprise on the President's part, because I have a distinct recollection of showing him the same table in 1880.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Was that before the election?—A. That was before the election; in January or February, probably, 1880. Then I was asked to take part in an investigation, and I, on account of some things which had occurred in the past, did not propose that I should be employed without the approval of the President. I made the condition that he should be advised of it and his approval obtained. While in New York I received a telegraphic dispatch to come here; I came here and met Mr. James and Mr. Woodward at Attorney-General MacVeagh's house on Rhode Island avenue, and had some talk with them there. I believe that is the first time I had met Mr. James; I am quite certain that I never called on him at the Department, nor ever made any exhibit to him of any papers or statements. The conference at Mr. MacVeagh's house lasted for some time; and subsequent to that, probably in a day or two, I called upon Mr. MacVeagh at his request at the Department, and came up with him to the Capitol, and remained here while he disposed of a case in the Supreme Court.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Is all this detail material?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. This relates to his employment.

The WITNESS. I have no desire to go into any detail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is as to the value of Mr. Gibson's services, and he started out by saying that he had been paid $5,000, and he is proceeding to show that it was only reasonable compensation for his services.

Mr. STEWART. Has anybody questioned the value of Mr. Gibson's services?

The WITNESS. It has been questioned.

Mr. STEWART. It was approved by the Attorney-General, and if the chairman of the committee does not question the propriety of the charge, it seems to me better not to waste any time in justifying it.

The CHAIRMAN. It was a subject of comment at the time, I remember.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. How many interviews did you have with these gentlemen before you were finally employed or instructed to proceed?—A. I think two, sir.

Q. When did you receive those instructions?—A. Some time about the 22d of April.

Q. And from that time you commenced investigations in addition to those that you had been making previously on your own account into the conduct of the Post-Office Department?—A. I brought with me the result of investigations which I had made, particularly of the services for the contract term beginning July 1, 1878.

Q. And that was in substance what you had on a former occasion exhibited to Mr. Garfield while he was a member of the House?—A. I had exhibited to him the table of ninety-three routes, which was a summary of a good part of it, which gave a concise view of it.

Q. Did your summary of the 93 routes disclose the relation which Dorsey occupied to the increased pay?—A. Only as some of Mr. Dorsey's routes were included. I will state, for the information of the committee, that you cannot tell who is the real party in interest as it appears upon the books. Gentlemen who are engaged in carrying the mails do not always bid in their own name, and the contracts are not always in their own names. Therefore it requires some person who has some knowledge of people engaged in the business to know who are the real parties. A man may have half a dozen people who bid and the contracts are made of course in the name of the accepted bidder. I went to the Post-Office Department when Mr. MacVeagh told me that my services were needed, and I began and organized the investigation. Having these exhibits already made it was a comparatively easy matter, and after some days' looking over the matter and talking it over, I recommended that a number of routes be selected and inspectors of the Post-office Department sent out to examine them, and a number of the inspectors of the Department were summoned here from different points, and I drew up the instructions for them. The object was that reliable men should go over the routes, ascertain the character of the country traversed, the number of people, approximately, at the intermediate points, and how the service was performed, whether it was carried upon horseback or buckboard, or in a stage-coach, the number of men employed, and the number of horses used. These gentlemen came here and they were furnished with these instructions, with a map of the routes, abstracts from the route books giving the terminal and intermediate points, and the various orders that had been made upon the routes, and a copy of the oath made by the contractors, and they went out to make their examinations. In the mean time the Attorney-General sent for me one day and I went up to his office. He took me to one side and said that Mr. Dorsey had made a written statement of his connection with the mail contracts, accompanied by some exhibits which had been shown to the President and to Mr. Windom (Secretary of the Treasury), and that that statement had made an impression favorable to Mr. Dorsey and that some answer had to be prepared to it, and he gave me the paper and instructed me to make an answer to it. I examined the paper. It was a very able and very ingenious statement. I began very soon to make the necessary preparations to answer it. At the same time a number of persons had been engaged in bidding for routes, usually small routes in the different States, East, North, West and South. Mr. A. E. Boone was the principal party, he having been a clerk in the Sixth Auditor's office who had subsequently engaged with Mr. Dorsey in the original bidding, and I found upon examination that these different parties had a great many routes and that there were uniformly the same bondsmen. I called upon the Postmaster-General for two inspectors to make an examination of these bondsmen and ascertain whether they had any property. Mr. Shallcross and Mr. Tidball were directed to make that examination.

Q. Who were the bondsmen?—A. Oh, there were quite a number of them. Another clerk, Mr. Finley, I set to work to make a schedule from the papers in the contract office of the number of routes and the bonds in which the same bondsmen appeared. That required a great deal of time and attention. This work ran along until the President was shot. I had made some progress on the answer to Mr. Dorsey's statement. At the same time I had taken up route 40101, from Santa Fé to Prescott, and San Antonio to Corpus Christi, and another route in Texas, which I considered the strongest cases that I had discovered up to that time, and they were prepared and made ready for such proceedings as might be determined upon. After preparing those particular cases, I was directed by the Attorney-General to prepare a general report upon the star-route service, which involved a great deal of work, examination of the work of the inspectors, as well as of all the records in the Department, and it was finished about the 1st of November. Meantime, the Attorney-General had gone with the President and the other Cabinet officers to Elberon, and I think about the 15th of September, or probably a little earlier than that, he telegraphed me to meet him there with Mr. Cook. Upon calling upon Mr. Cook I learned that he had received a letter from the Attorney-General, and that the object was to meet Mr. Bliss to confer with him. I took along the papers in the case of route 40101, from Santa Fé to Prescott and San Antonio to Corpus Christi, and the papers in the Dorsey case. We had a two-days' conference there, and the result was a determination to proceed in the case of route 40101 by submitting it to the grand jury. Mr. Cook returned immediately to Washington for that purpose, and I was delayed a day or two longer. When Mr. Cook reached here the grand jury had been adjourned. It was then determined to proceed by information, the statute of the District of Columbia allowing process by information. The matter was examined very carefully by Mr. Brewster, and Mr. Bliss, and Mr. Cook, and Colonel Cook and myself proceeded to prepare to change the indictments into an information, and that was filed. In the meantime my report on the general subject of the star-route service was completed about the time Mr. MacVeagh retired. He had left very soon after the President's funeral, and he came over some time in the latter part of October or early part of November and sent for me, and I met him at Wormley's Hotel. He told me that he had come over to take formal leave of the Department and turn it over to the Solicitor-General. He asked about my report, and I told him I had practically finished it, and proposed to bring it to him. He said no, he was going out, and to make the report to the Postmaster-General by his direction, which I did. Mr. James, I believe, a little after that, went to New York and was gone some time. He returned here and remained a week or ten days to complete his annual report previous to going to Florida on a trip. I obeyed the instructions of the Attorney-General, and submitted the report to the Postmaster-General, and he directed that it should accompany his annual report to Congress. I left and went to New York.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE :

Q. It was published in Ex. Doc. No. 1, part 4, Forty-seventh Congress, first session?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. This is the report to which you refer?—A. Yes, sir. This had been put in type; but while I was in New York, Mr. Finley telegraphed me that there was some trouble about it, and I came back here and found that quite a tempest in a teapot had been raised about this report. It had led to some complications, to a dispute with the Solicitor-General, and to publications in the newspapers, which were inspired by officers of the Department of Justice, to the effect that I had no connection with the Department whatever, the practical effect of which was that the Department of Justice was arrayed on the side of the accused persons. Practically my connection with the cases terminated at that time. I had something to do subsequent to that with the preparation of some indictments, and appeared before the grand jury in one case.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. What date was this?—A. This in regard to the report was some time in the latter part of November.

Q. Was that the time that your services terminated?—A. My services terminated formally—I resigned some time in January, 1882, I think.

Q. What time did your services commence?—A. On the 22d of April, 1881.

Q. What did you say about the Department of Justice being on the side of the accused?—A. I said that on account of the row that was raised about this report of mine on the general subject of the star-route service, officers of the Department of Justice caused publications to be made in the various newspapers to the effect that I had no connection with the Department of Justice, and was not authorized to make any such report; the effect of which was, so far as the public was concerned, to array the Department of Justice on the side of the accused.

Q. What do you mean by "so far as the public is concerned?"—A. The general public.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Do you mean to say that in the estimation of the public, or that in fact, the Department of Justice was arrayed on the side of the accused?—A. I mean to say that the effect of the publications was to lead the public to suppose that the Department was arrayed on the side of the accused.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. They were intended to have that effect on the public mind?—A. Undoubtedly they were intended to have that effect.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Who raised this row?—A. Well, Mr. Woodward was the originator of it.

Q. What did the row consist in? What was it? What kind of a row was it?—A. Objections to the report. Mr. Bliss requested me to change the report and address it to the Solicitor-General, and to send the Solicitor-General a proof-slip of it, stating that he (Mr. Bliss) had had a conversation with Mr. Phillips, and that that was all that would be necessary. I had occasion to go to New York, and I left on the same afternoon that the proof-slip was sent to the Solicitor-General, and the chief clerk of the Department of Justice declined to receive it. That led to a correspondence between the Solicitor-General and myself; but I have no desire to go into anything of the kind here. The records of the Department speak for themselves. It resulted also in Mr. MacVeagh writing two letters, which I will put in evidence here.

LAW OFFICE OF WAYNE MACVEAGH, GEO. TUCKER BISPHAM, 402 WALNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA,
December 2, 1881.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose you a copy of a letter I have just written to Mr. Phillips, in reply to his request for information on the subject of your appointment, which I trust will be satisfactory.

I have not yet received a copy of the exhibits annexed to your report, but the report itself is certainly most admirable. To my mind it is a clear, forcible, unanswerable statement, enabling any person of ordinary intelligence to understand the origin, the methods, and the results of the star-route robbery.

In view of the appalling records they have themselves made, and of the white light in which you have placed them, so that "a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein," they do well in trying to shift the public attention from them and their frauds to the men who have brought them to the notice of the honest people of the country.

For myself, it is a dull day now when the thieves or their apologists do not invent at least one new falsehood about me. As, however, I have only done my duty, they do not even annoy me.

Very truly, yours,

WAYNE MACVEAGH.

To A. M. GIBSON, Esq.

The following is a copy of the copy of the letter to Mr. Phillips inclosed with the above:

PHILADELPHIA, December 2, 1881.

MY DEAR SIR: It goes without saying that you could no more desire to embarrass Mr. Gibson in his work than I could. Such an idea could never enter your head about me or my head about you. The story of Mr. Gibson's appointment is briefly this: Mr. Woodward and the Postmaster-General represented to me the necessity for the constant presence at the Post-Office Department of a representative of the Department of Justice who would work in entire harmony with Mr. Woodward, and under the supervision of the Postmaster-General, in the investigation and preparation for trial of the star-route cases. Mr. Woodward recommended Mr. Gibson very warmly, and the Postmaster-General as warmly indorsed the request. Their request seemed to me to be entirely proper, and as the cases were to be tried in the District of Columbia, it seemed to me equally proper to appoint the person they desired an assistant attorney of the District. The result was that, after obtaining the approval of the President, I informed Mr. Gibson that he was appointed at the request of and for the purposes mentioned by the Postmaster-General and Mr. Woodward, and directed him to devote himself to the work in question.

I certainly supposed the usual formalities had been observed, but it seems those formalities were omitted. Mr. Gibson's appointment was, however, matter of public notoriety. It was, I feel sure, very generally published at the time, and I remember to have been told that it was made, for a considerable period, the ground of accusations in the star-route organs against the Postmaster-General and myself.

I was therefore surprised when, before leaving the Department, I learned that there was no formal record of Mr. Gibson's appointment, and I hastily wrote him the note to which you allude. That is the whole story so far as my recollection about it now serves me, but if anything else occurs to you I will be very glad to give any further aid I can to place the matter upon a proper basis.

Very truly, yours,

WAYNE MACVEAGH.

Hon. SAMUEL F. PHILLIPS,
Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

The letter from Mr. MacVeagh to Mr. Phillips satisfied the latter, and my report was received. Mr. Phillips was simply mislead in the matter.

Q. What were the formalities which had been omitted? You were not commissioned and sworn?—A. The formality is a letter stating that you are employed.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. If I understand you, I gather from what you say that there was some difficulty which arose between Mr. Woodward and yourself as to some point of official etiquette. Was not that about it?—A. I knew nothing of it.

Q. Do you know what Mr. Woodward's complaint was?—A. He never made any complaint to me.

Q. That is not the question whether he made any to you, but whether you know what his point was?—A. Oh, after I came back from New York Mr. Woodward complained about it, and I assured him that I had no intention whatever.

Q. I am only trying to get at the fact.—A. Oh, you are under a misapprehension if you understood me to say anything of the kind.

Q. Well, you have intimated that Mr. Woodward made some trouble about it, and the point I was getting at was that it should, in justice to him, appear that there was some difference as to some point of official etiquette.—A. I understood, but Mr. Woodward did not say to me that he thought this ought to have been a joint report. You understand that I was simply obeying the instructions of the Attorney-General to make the report. The report was read at various times to Mr. Woodward, but, as he stated, he did not understand the general purport of it, and that may have been very likely, as he was engaged in other matters at the time.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Was the first official report made to any Department of the Government in regard to these frauds?—A. Yes, sir; on the general subject.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. You said you were asked to change your report; do you mean the substance, or simply the address of it?—A. Simply the address of it. The report was addressed to the Attorney-General originally. Mr. MacVeagh leaving at that time (although his resignation had not been accepted, and the claim was made then, and for some time afterwards, that he was really the Attorney-General), and determining to close his relations with the Department, formally took leave of it, and directed the Solicitor-General to act under the statute. He stated to me the complications he was in at the time and requested me to address this report to the Postmaster-General by direction of the Attorney-General.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. In the preparation of this report, did you have the benefit of the reports made by special agents of the Post-Office Department to the Postmaster-General?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you examined the reports that were transmitted recently to the House of Representatives, and are published in Ex. Doc. No. 100?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were these reports examined by you previous to making your report?—A. Such of them as were received previous to the date of that report.

Q. Your report was dated when?—A. The date of my report is the 31st of October, but the exhibits were not completed at that time.

Q. It was transmitted to Congress at the session beginning the 1st of December afterwards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the inspectors, whose reports appear in Ex. Doc. No. 100, those whose appointment you had suggested, and to whom you had given instructions?—A. Yes, sir; these gentlemen acted under my instructions. In some of the reports you will find that they refer to the instructions. They were quite minute. I directed them what to do and how to do it.

Q. State the names of those inspectors who were acting under your direction.—A. They were not acting under my direction.

Q. I mean under the instructions which you had prepared.—A. All the names are here in the document: Messrs. Stuart, Sigbold, Furay, Sharp, and Mr. Henry R. Gibson. Previous to that I had the Attorney-General detail A. B. Newcombe, an agent of the Department of Justice, and the Postmaster-General gave Mr. J. J. Hinds a commission as inspector, and they went to New Mexico and Arizona and gathered some evidence and made some reports upon routes there. Mr. Brewster Cameron was one of the inspectors.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. What led you to commence investigation of the Post-Office Department in 1872?—A. That was the time of the investigation by the House of Representatives into straw bidding. There have been two systems of fraud in the Post-Office Department of recent years; first, what was called straw bidding. A number of persons would take their stablemen, drivers, and other employés, and they would bid in the names of those persons very low, while they would put in half-way up, and at the top, running up the scale, bona fide bids of their own. The proposal of the lowest bidder would be accepted. Then he would fail to make a contract and then under the law, the Department went up the scale, and if anybody came in the way they would be bought off.

Q. Did you go into that investigation by direction of any Department of the Government, or the House of Representatives, or voluntarily?—

A. Oh, I was a correspondent of the New York Sun here at that time, and I have written volumes on the subject.

Q. You did that for your paper?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, do you claim that you should have pay for your services, on account of the information which you brought to the Department which you had gathered prior to the time when the Department employed you?—A. I have no claim at all, sir. I was paid up to the 1st day of January, and I did not think it worth while to put in a bill for the remainder of the services.

Q. I did not mean that you put in any specific claim. I understand that you were paid $5,000.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you claim that that was no more than just payment for the services you rendered?—A. Yes; during the time I was employed by the Department of Justice.

Q. That is what you say about it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Irrespective of the information you brought?—A. Yes. That was ex gratia.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. That you gave to the Government?—A. I gave that to the Government.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. How much of the time were you actually employed after you commenced?—A. From the 22d of April until some time in November.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You gave your whole time?—A. Yes, sir; night and day, about fourteen hours a day, with Sundays also.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Certain cases were selected by the Department for prosecution; first, under the information, and afterwards by proceedings through the grand jury. Were those cases selected by the Department of Justice in conformity with your view and recommendation?—A. Not all of them.

Q. Were any of them?—A. There were indictments obtained in several cases which have never been tried—no disposition made of them whatever—and I think some of those I recommended proceedings in. The case which I desired to have presented to the grand jury, and concerning which I wrote to the Attorney-General urging that course, was the case of the route from San Antonio to Corpus Christi in connection with route 40101, from Santa Fé, New Mex., to Prescott, Ariz.; being a simple case involving but few details, and in which the evidence was pretty direct and positive.

Q. Who were the parties?—A. J. B. Price was the contractor.

Q. Were indictments found in those cases?—A. They were in the latter part of 1882, and I think one of them in the spring of 1883.

Q. Are they still pending?—A. Yes, sir; they are pending.

Q. Were you consulted with in reference to the indictment against Mr. Dorsey and Mr. Brady?—A. I made a report upon that subject so far as the record disclosed at that time. That was one of the subjects upon which we met at Elberon to consult about. After Mr. Bliss had examined the case there he stated that it was a case about which he had grave doubts, and was not as strong a case as he had been led to expect. And I am frank to say that I agreed with him. It was a case that involved a great many routes and a great many persons, and there was this difficulty about it: There were two parties who were mortal enemies of each other, and had no connection except such connections as are necessary in conducting the business of the Post-Office Department. The contractor is recognized through the term of service. The contract is in his name and the regulations of the Department require certain communications to be made in his name. It varies; sometimes it is the subcontractor, but the rule is the contractor. The result was that a number of persons were indicted for conspiring with each other, when in fact they had not been on speaking terms and were as separate and distinct as day is from night.

Q. Did you make any distinction between this Dorsey and Brady case and the other cases as to your judgment of the infraction of the law in the carrying out of those schemes?—A. I do not catch on exactly.

Q. Did you have any doubt about the guilt of those parties?—A. Oh, my report speaks for itself on that subject.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. That is the Dorsey combination?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. In your conference there as counsel for the Government, was not the fact recognized, and did not that have a very important bearing upon the ultimate determination of the Department to prosecute Mr. Dorsey and Mr. Brady, that the charge against them had become public and notorious, and that Mr. Dorsey had demanded a trial; and did not that have some effect upon the officers or upon you in your conference?—A. It did not have upon me, because I insisted that the case 40101 should go on, and I succeeded in carrying my point in that, and the information was filed in that case; I insisted afterwards that that case should be submitted to the grand jury. In that I was overruled.

Q. By whom?—A. Mr. Bliss.

Q. Was any evidence submitted to the grand jury in that case?—A. No, sir.

Q. I thought you said indictments had been found in that case?—A. In a collateral case.

Q. Do you think the Government under the circumstances could very well have refused to proceed against Mr. Dorsey after what had transpired?—A. The Government was under no obligation to proceed. It is the business of the Government to take the best case it has got and try to secure a conviction.

Q. That depends. That is your judgment about it?—A. Certainly. In a series of cases like these, where it is very difficult to get a jury to comprehend a complicated system, it was the business of the Government, and those representing the Government, to take the case that was the simplest.

Q. Did the Attorney-General and the other gentlemen concur with you in that matter?—A. Mr. Brewster gave no attention to those cases. He took Mr. Bliss' judgment.

Q. You mean to say that he gave no attention to them?—A. I mean to say that he stated to me that he must rely upon Mr. Bliss; that the duties of his office were so engrossing that he could not give matters of this kind an examination which would enable him to determine anything about them.

Q. That was after his appointment as Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was in the cases before that?—A. He was in the cases before that simply to argue as to the legality of filing an information instead of proceeding by indictment.

Q. Do you say he had nothing further to do with those cases prior to his appointment as Attorney-General except as to the legality of the information?—A. To make an argument in that case. That is all he charges for.

Q. You are mistaken about that. That is not his charge. He charges $2,500 for his services.—A. Five thousand.

Q. No, I am speaking about the $2,500 that he was paid under the direction of the Attorney-General. Afterwards he was allowed something else, amounting to $5,000 altogether, before his appointment as Attorney-General, but as a matter of fact that was his service.

Q. Was he present at the conference at Elberon before the death of the President?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. United States, debtor to Benjamin Harris Brewster to services as counsel in United States vs. Thomas J. Brady, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and in certain other matters known as the star-route cases, $2,500; and then the next charge is "to professional services unpaid for, and incidental expenses in the star-route cases, $2,500," making $5,000 in all. This is the way he renders his bill. You state, however, from your knowledge that his service was confined entirely to making an argument in the information matter.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. He may have been consulted with, however, about the Philadelphia cases. I would not speak definitely about that.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. When and to whom did you recommend the indictment of parties who were contractors in what was known as the Corpus Christi route, and also in the Santa Fé and Prescott route, to which you have referred?—A. Some time in the early part of 1882. It was before I resigned. I called upon the Attorney-General, Mr. Brewster, and stated to him this fact. The grand jury was in session. It was a most admirable grand jury. The foreman of it was a man of character and large intelligence.

Q. What was his name?—A. Jesse Wilson. I stated to Mr. Brewster that I had had several interviews with the foreman of the grand jury and he had stated to me that they had plenty of time to hear witnesses in other cases; that if necessary they would meet at 9.30 o'clock in the morning and sit until 4 in the afternoon, and would sit continuously; and in reference to the case of route 40101 from Santa Fé to Prescott, and these other cases (from San Antonio to Corpus Christi was the other one that I meant). I stated to the Attorney-General that the grand jury could hear witnesses in those cases and that they could go along side by side. In the case of route 40101 (from Santa Fé to Prescott) the statute of limitations was about to run. We proceeded by information originally because the statute of limitations was about to run in regard to one of the parties. Subsequently, we discovered the payment of money and that extended the statute until some time in the spring of 1882, and I was very anxious that that case should be heard by the grand jury before the statute ran. I had this personal interview with the Attorney-General and he asked me to put it in writing, which I did.

Q. Have you a copy of that writing?—A. I have, but not here.

Q. Can you furnish it for this record?—A. I can.

Q. State what was done then.—A. The case 40101 was not submitted to the grand jury. The case of the route from San Antonio to Corpus Christi was, some time in 1882, placed before the grand jury, and an indictment found, so far as A. B. Price was concerned and Thomas J. Brady; very much to my surprise, an indictment against no other person was found, although the evidence was positive and direct.

Q. Who were the other persons that were included in the recommendation for indictment or implicated by the evidence?—A. I don't know that there was any recommendation.

Q. Who were implicated by the evidence in reference to that route?—A. William Pitt Kellogg.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. At that time he was still in the Senate?—A. He was.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you call the attention of Mr. George Bliss to that case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what your interview with him was in reference to bringing that case to the attention of the grand jury.—A. Well, some time while I was still at the Post-Office Department building, Mr. Bliss in looking over one of the papers connected with this case of 40101—I had prepared them all together, because in trying one case you necessarily would have had to try the others partially; I had left purposely the statement as to some matters relating to the route from San Antonio to Corpus Christi (route No. 31148) blind—Mr. Bliss in reading it over of course noticed that, as any person would who was familiar with all the circumstances. He asked me who that referred to. I wrote on a slip of paper and handed it to him, "William Pitt Kellogg." That was the first information that he had with regard to it.

Q. When was this?—A. This was some time in October, 1881.

Q. State, before you proceed, what was the original letting of that route, and how it was expedited?—A. The number was 31148, from San Antonio to Corpus Christi, 148 miles; the original time was 48 hours, two trips a week, $2,733. It was subcontracted to J. J. Ellis for $8,199. On August 26 four trips a week were added and the pay increased $5,466. July 15 the running time was reduced to 29½ hours, and the pay increased $20,204, bringing the pay up to $28,403.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Was that part of the service that was discontinued by the Postmaster-General?—A. Oh, yes; this service was discontinued.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What did the evidence show that the contractor who actually performed the service received for his pay; what was the profit to the beneficiaries of the contract?—A. I see here—I do not think it can be an error, either—that he sublet it to J. J. Ellis for $8,199. That is over $5,000 more than he was getting for it originally.

Q. That must have been the subletting on the increase.—A. No; that was the original letting. The contract went into effect July 1, 1878, the first order adding trips was made August 26, 1878; that is, one month and twenty-six days after the contract began to take effect, September 12, to the beginning of the next quarter; so that he was running at a loss the first quarter, and the addition of four trips brought it up to just about what he was paying the subcontractor.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you explain to Mr. Bliss the evidence that was accessible in those cases?—A. It was set out in my papers. I have no papers at all. I left everything there when I left the Department, even those that I took there when I went in, and haven't seen them since. My recollection is that I set out in great detail all the circumstances connected with that route; the payment by the contractor of $20,000. I am not positive that it is set out in writing, but my recollection is that I did so set it out.

Q. But the fact is nevertheless the same?—A. The fact is nevertheless the same, and was stated to Mr. Bliss. Mr. Price gave five drafts, known as postal drafts, drafts drawn against future pay on a route, for $3,000 each, and he gave a note drawn by Hugh White and indorsed by Monroe Saulsbury for $5,000.

Q. To whom were those payments made?—A. The evidence submitted to the grand jury subsequently showed that Mr. Price had given those drafts. Mr. Price himself has made an affidavit in which he swears that he gave William Pitt Kellogg the five drafts for $3,000 each, and a note for $5,000. Mr. Walsh testified that Mr. Kellogg gave him the drafts and the note for collection. Mr. Walsh was at that time a banker doing business at 914 F street, I think.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. That he gave them for collection?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In behalf of whom?—A. Mr. Kellogg; one-half to be placed to the credit of Mr. Brady and one-half to Mr. Kellogg; that is the evidence. I do not state the fact as of my own knowledge; I simply state the evidence.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was that evidence brought to the attention of Mr. Bliss at the time you speak of?—A. At the time I originally speak of I did no more than write on the slip of paper, as I have stated, but subsequently it was all stated to him in great detail, not only by me, but by the witness, Mr. Walsh.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. About what time?—A. Before the filing of the information, in 1881.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did he give any reason for not having indictments found in those cases at once?—A. Just let me think a moment, now. I do not know whether Mr. Walsh in 1881 stated that to him or not. I prepared a statement of what Mr. Walsh had told me, and reduced it to writing, and Mr. Walsh called upon Mr. Bliss and read it to him, and stated that that was his statement. Now, that related probably to only route 40101. What he stated to him in addition to that at that time I do not know. But while the trial of the case against Brady and Dorsey and others was going on, Mr. Merrick called upon me. I was sick at the time, and had been for some six weeks, and the case was going on. The first day that I got out I drove down to the city hall, and I met Mr. Merrick coming out, and told him that he was or had been misled, that he didn't know what he was about, that he had taken the wrong case. I had some more conversation with him, and that evening he called upon me at my house, and I told him to send for certain papers to the Post-Office Department, which he did. Their case was about being laughed out of court, and Mr. Merrick was very much concerned about it, and he came to me again, and at his request I had Mr. Walsh brought here—not brought here—I had him come here; I wrote to him to come, and he came. Mr. Merrick told me that he had tried to get Mr. Bliss to find him or have him found, but could not succeed, and Mr. Walsh came here and met Mr. Woodward, and through Mr. Woodward arranged a meeting between himself and Mr. Merrick, as he subsequently told me.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. When was this?—A. During the progress of the first trial of the Brady and Dorsey case.

Q. I have forgotten that date; can you state when it was?—A. The grand jury for the June term had been adjourned. It was not organized. It had been adjourned by the court until after the summer holidays, so that this was some time in June or July, 1882. The result was that Mr. Walsh, very much against his own inclination, consented to be a witness in that case, and as Mr. Merrick has informed me subsequently, and as he will tell you, saved the case from being thrown out of court.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. The Brady case?—A. Yes, sir. The Brady-Dorsey case was on trial, and I state upon general information, and upon the authority of Mr. Merrick, that their case was practically beaten; they had not been able to make out a case. They believed that the court would rule that they had not established a conspiracy and could not connect the different parties. And although Mr. Walsh had a suit then pending in the supreme court of the District of Columbia against Brady, and I was acting as his counsel, against my inclination and against his own he consented to be a witness in that case as to collateral matters not connected with the case at all. It was a great injustice to him to compel him to be a witness in that case.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. You say that his testimony saved the case?—A. Yes, sir; I have no hesitation in saying that.

Q. It did not secure a verdict, I believe?—A. No, sir; but it saved the Government the mortification of being laughed out of court.

Without concluding the examination of the witness, the committee adjourned until Monday, March 10, 1884.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 10, 1884.

A. M. GIBSON recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. When the committee adjourned on Saturday you were about to make a statement with regard to the testimony of Mr. Walsh in the trial of the star-route cases, or had you completed all that you desired to say upon that subject?—Answer. I think I had.

Q. Can you state from recollection the names of the persons who were embraced in the information proceedings against certain parties charged with frauds upon the Government in the star-route mail service?—A. Thomas J. Brady, S. P. Brown, John L. French, and William H. Turner.

Q. Was Sanderson one of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who advised the bringing of an information instead of an indictment against those parties?—A. At the conference at Elberon, at which Attorney-General MacVeagh, Mr. Bliss, Mr. William A. Cook, and myself were present, it was determined to proceed in the case of the route from Prescott, Ariz., to Santa Fé, N. Mex., and Mr. Cook came to Washington for the purpose of submitting that case to the grand jury. When he reached here he found that the grand jury had been adjourned; and inasmuch as the statute of limitations would run very soon as to one of the parties, as our information then was, after consideration by the Attorney-General, Mr. Brewster, Mr. Bliss, and Mr. Cook, they determined to proceed by information, and the information was accordingly prepared and filed.

Q. Were the parties you have named those who were interested in the Santa Fé and Prescott route?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that the only route embraced in that information?—A. The only one.

Q. Against whom was it supposed that the statute of limitations would run?—A. Mr. S. P. Brown.

Q. When was the first indictment found in the cases?—A. The first indictments found, I believe, were against F. B. Lilley and George Brott; that is my recollection.

Q. Have those indictments been tried yet?—A. No, sir.

Q. What routes were those in relation to?—A. I do not recollect the routes.

Q. Who were those parties?—A. Fred. B. Lilley was deputy sixth auditor.

Q. Who was Brott?—A. Mr. Brott was a contractor.

Q. Was it a charge of conspiracy?—A. I think it was a charge of payment of money to an officer—I forget, though, exactly what it was. It has been quite two years ago, and I did not give much attention to it. I appeared before the grand jury, and that was all I had to do with it.

Q. Do you know why that case has not been prosecuted or disposed of?—A. I do not.

Q. What was the next indictment they found?—A. It would be better to go by the record in reference to things of that kind. Those matters are of record. My recollection is that the next indictment was that against Thomas J. Brady, Stephen W. Dorsey and John W. Dorsey, Vaile, Miner, Peck, Rerdell, and J. L. Sanderson.

Q. Those parties belonged to what was known as the Dorsey combination?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. Was that the indictment that was tried ?—A. No ; they were not tried on that indictment.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. What became of it ?—A. I don't know whether it was ever formally nolle prosequied or not. It was abandoned by the Government.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. Was it abandoned before or after the trial of Dorsey ?—A. It was abandoned before the trial.

Q. Do you know why ?—A. Yes ; I think I do. Mr. Ker, who drew the indictments, included Sanderson and Rerdell by their initials only, and of course they pleaded to the indictment. Sanderson did not ; he was not here ; he was here when the indictment was found and left the same evening, but Rerdell entered his plea and the case was dismissed, so far as he was concerned.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. On the ground that his initials only were given ?—A. Yes ; that it was not certain.

Q. And so with Sanderson ?—A. No ; there was no plea as to Mr. Sanderson's case as I recollect. There may have been.

Q. Was there any effort made to obtain a second indictment of the same parties ?—A. There was an indictment found of the same parties with the exception of Sanderson.

Q. His name did not appear in the second indictment against those parties ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who drew the indictments ?—A. W. W. Ker. I see, October 26, Mr. Merrick charges for consultation as to new indictment which was found in No. 14336, Vaile et al. Rerdell was indicted by his initials only, a very curious thing, because his name in full, Montfort C. Rerdell, was in the City Directory.

Q. Was his name given correctly in the second indictment ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the case that was tried ?—A. Yes, sir. The first time the jury disagreed and the second time they acquitted him.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. Who were the defendants in the case that was tried ?—A. Stephen W. Dorsey, John W. Dorsey, John R. Miner, Mr. Vaile, Montfort C. Rerdell, Thomas J. Brady, and William H. Turner. The case as to Turner was abandoned and Rerdell and Miner were convicted on the first trial.

Q. And as to the others the jury disagreed ?—A. Yes, sir ; and the court granted a new trial.

Q. A new trial as to all the parties ?—A. As to all the parties.

Q. Was that new trial granted upon the petition of the Government or of the parties who were convicted ?—A. The Government asked for a new trial.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Who appeared before the grand jury in reference to procuring the indictments against those parties, do you know ?—A. That I only know by reputation.

Q. Did you appear ?—A. I did not.

Q. You have stated that you appeared before the grand jury in the case against Brott and Lilley.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did not appear in the other case?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you appear about that time, or while you were in the service of the Government in connection with the cases, before the grand jury in any other case?—A. No, sir; I was out of the cases before the indictments against Mr. Brady and Mr. Dorsey were found. I appeared only as a witness.

Q. In what cases did you appear as a witness?—A. In the cases of Brott and Lilley.

Q. Any other cases?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not appear before the grand jury as special counsel in the management of any of the cases?—A. No, sir.

Q. Can you explain why it was that the name of Sanderson was omitted from the second indictment?—A. No, sir; I cannot explain. I know nothing about it. He was there improperly in the first place. He had no connection with the case whatever. He had sublet a route to John R. Miner, I believe; and, as I stated to you on Saturday, when a man sublet a route he paid so much money for the contract.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. He was a subcontractor?—A. In a sense he was a subcontractor. There is no other way that you can get the routes except by a subcontract or power of attorney.

Q. He was not the original bidder?—A. He was not the original bidder.

Q. He got the contract from some one who had got it by bidding?—A. Yes, sir; but whoever the original contractor was, he had nothing more to do with the route thereafter.

Q. You say that Sanderson was improperly included in the first indictment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was not that a good reason for not including him in the second indictment when that was ascertained?—A. I thought so.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Why was no subsequent proceeding instituted by indictment against the parties embraced in the information?—A. That you will have to ask somebody else. It is a conundrum that I cannot answer.

Q. Was there any subsequent proceeding instituted against those parties?—A. No, sir.

Q. The information was never determined upon the merits of the case at all, but only technically?—A. It was stricken from the records.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Was there any decision of the court as to the legality of proceeding by information?—A. There was. The court decided that the statute required proceedings of that kind to be commenced before the police court. Mr. Cook and myself proposed to proceed before the police court and follow the form prescribed by the court in its decision, but we were overruled.

Q. By whom?—A. By Mr. Bliss. We proposed to submit the same to the grand jury.

Q. Had this case that was tried already commenced when you were overruled?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know what the nature of the evidence was that was in possession of the Government counsel against the parties that were embraced in the information?—A. That was of record.

H. Mis. 38, pt. 2—6*

Q. But I understand the information was not tried upon its merits at all.—A. No, sir.

Q. Where is it of record, then?—A. In the Post-Office Department.

Q. It was not produced in court?—A. It could not be produced in court, you know, under the ruling of the court.

Q. Did you examine that evidence that was in the Department at the time the information was filed?—A. Yes, sir; I prepared all that evidence.

Q. Did you submit it to Mr. Bliss?—A. Oh, yes, sir. It was submitted to him at Elberon.

Q. Was that evidence deemed by you and Mr. Bliss and the others who examined it sufficient to sustain the indictments on trial, or the information on its merits?—A. I do not suppose that Mr. Bliss would have consented to file an information if he had not believed it was.

Q. That does not quite answer the question. In your opinion it was sufficient?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. What route was that?—A. From Prescott, Ariz., to Santa Fé, N. Mex.

Q. And the parties you have mentioned were those in interest on that route?—A. Those were the parties included in the information.

Q. Do you remember what was the original letting for that contract, and how it was advanced or expedited?—A. Oh, there was a double-barreled arrangement. It was originally worked up and let, and then knocked off and relet. It is a long history, which is on record in the Department, but it is more than two years since I have seen it and a long while since I have thought anything about it, and of course I cannot carry those things in my head.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Was that route 40101?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that the case you thought ought to be tried instead of the one that was tried?—A. Yes, sir; that and the cases that I spoke of as being collateral to it.

Q. Who were the defendants in that case?—A. Do you mean 40101?

Q. Yes; the one that you thought ought to have been tried.—A. S. P. Brown, Brady, French, and Turner. Brady was Second Assistant Postmaster General; Turner was chief clerk, and French was a contract clerk or corresponding clerk.

Q. It did not include Mr. Dorsey?—A. Oh, no; he had nothing to do with it.

Q. What was the other case that you thought ought to be tried?—A. The case of the route from San Antonio to Corpus Christi.

Q. Who were the defendants in that case?—A. James B. Price was the contractor, and an indictment was found against Price and Brady in 1882. In 1883 an indictment was found against Brady, and an indictment was found also against Mr. Kellogg.

Q. Who was Price?—A. The contractor.

Q. He had no connection with the Government otherwise than as a contractor?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did any other of those cases include Dorsey?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Can you state from recollection or from any data you have before you, what was the amount of the original contract on the Santa Fé and Prescott route, and how much it amounted to after having been expedited? Have you the first and the last amount?—A. It was originally let for $13,313; three trips a week; four trips were added, the price was increased $17,750.66, the running time was reduced, and the pay increased $43,486.34, making total pay $78,661.33. Then it was reduced to the original price. Then it was let at $18,500; three times a week service. The running time was reduced, and $39,735 allowed therefor. Four trips were added, and $77,700 was added to the price.

Q. Making what amount at last?—A. Bringing the price up, I believe, to about $105,000 per annum.

Q. Can you explain why proceedings in that case were not continued by indictment?—A. I cannot.

Q. Do you know of any reason why they should not have been?—A. I do not know of any reason.

Q. You were not in the service of the Government at the time they should have been proceeded in?—A. Here is a letter that I wrote the Attorney-General, which I may as well put in here as at any other place. It is dated January 24, 1882:

SIR: As I stated to you on yesterday, I deem it of the utmost importance that the case in which the information was filed should be brought before the present grand jury. You will probably recollect that that case was the United States vs. S. P. Brown, Thomas J. Brady, John L. French, and William H. Turner, and that the defendants were charged with having conspired to defraud the United States out of large sums of money in connection with the carrying of the mails of the United States on a long mail route, No. 40101, from Prescott, Ariz., to Santa Fé, N. Mex. It was believed at the time of filing the information in this case that the statute of limitations would run as to S. P. Brown on October 2, 1881. Since that time, however, the Government has obtained conclusive evidence to prove that Brown received a large sum of money in connection with and on account of the increase of service on mail route 40101 as late as April, 1879.

The present grand jury expires on the first Monday in March, which practically leaves but one month longer in which to accomplish a great deal of work. The case 40101 is quite simple and there are but few witnesses to be examined in connection with it. Some of those witnesses, however, are not here, and it will require a week or ten days to bring them.

There have been so many delays heretofore in organizing the grand juries and getting to work on the star-route cases, that I did not believe it would be safe to allow the present grand jury to expire without having considered the case of 40101. The statute of limitations will certainly run in Brown's case early in April, and inasmuch as two months of the present grand jury's existence has expired without any of the star-route cases being considered by it, I greatly fear that some unforeseen accident may prevent the grand jury of the March term passing on 40101 before early in April.

The case of 40101, you will recollect, was thoroughly prepared before the information was filed in September last. It unquestionably is the strongest case the Government has. I regard the evidence as absolutely conclusive as to Brady and Brown. Moreover, there are collateral cases of bribery and fraud of public officials, and perhaps other misdemeanors, which the consideration of those cases by the grand jury will develop.

I have reason to believe that delay in this case has already been very detrimental to the interest of the Government, and I greatly fear that further delay will result in the loss of witnesses whose evidence is of the utmost consequence.

The foreman of the grand jury assures me that if necessary he will cause their sessions to begin at 9.30 a. m. and continue till 4 p. m., in order to accommodate us and facilitate the hearing in any of our cases. He also assures me that they can readily have before them, as unfinished business, several cases at the same time. As the jury is a very intelligent one, I can see no reason why the consideration of the straw-bond cases, the Dorsey case, and that of 40101 could not be proceeded with at the same time.

Inasmuch as I have only been charged with the preparation of these cases and not with the duty of bringing them before the grand jury, I have not felt at liberty to take any steps in that direction. If you will direct me I will cheerfully undertake the duty, and have no doubt of the result being entirely satisfactory.

Very respectfully,

A. M. GIBSON.

Assistant Attorney for United States.

To B. H. BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Did you receive any reply to that letter?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was that letter sent by mail, or was it delivered by you in person to the Attorney-General?—A. I forget.

Q. You are sure that it reached him?—A. Oh, I have no doubt of its reaching him. I either mailed it or sent it by messenger.

Q. You state in this letter that there were collateral cases.—A. Yes; that was the case of the route from San Antonio to Corpus Christi, and another route from Corpus Christi, which I forget now. It was a Texas case; it was from Indianola to Corpus Christi.

Q. That was a case, you say, which would have been developed by the testimony in this other case?—A. Yes; the grand jury could not have heard one case without bringing out evidence in regard to the other.

Q. What would have been the nature of the evidence brought out in regard to the Indianola route?—A. The payment of money by Price, the contractor, to obtain increased trips and expedition.

Q. To whom was that paid?—A. He states in his affidavit that he paid it to Mr. Kellogg. I dislike to testify about these things in this sort of way. The record in the Department shows it all.

Q. Do you refer to the reports or briefs that you made up in these cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Explain what those were.—A. The brief in the case 40101, from San Antonio to Corpus Christi, and from Indianola to Corpus Christi.

Q. Did you prepare briefs in those cases and submit them to the Attorney-General or to Mr. Bliss?—A. I did.

Q. Were the statements of fact in the briefs to which you refer based upon information obtained through official sources and through the investigations instituted by the Department for the purpose of ascertaining all the facts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom did you present those briefs?—A. I forget whether I submitted them formally to Mr. MacVeagh while he was Attorney-General or not. If I did not I told him all about them. I had all of them with me at Elberon, I think. It is pretty difficult, you know, to carry in your mind the details of what occurred two years ago. I remember what I told Mr. Merrick, as I said on Saturday. He called to see me about it, and I told him to send and get the papers, and he sent and got them, and he was so thoroughly convinced of the importance of proceeding in those cases that he insisted upon having the grand jury reconvened, and wrote a letter to the Attorney-General, or at least it was published in the newspapers that he had written to the Attorney-General demanding that the grand jury should be reconvened. So far as that is concerned, I speak from what I saw in the newspapers.

Q. Did you have any consultation with Mr. Bliss with regard to instituting proceedings by indictment in the cases which you have just referred to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say with regard to procuring indictments?—A. Oh, Mr. Bliss published in the newspapers an interview in which he said that he was not going to be forced against his judgment to take up cases; that he was acting upon his own judgment and upon his own responsibility.

Q. Where and when was that interview published?—A. It was published in the Cincinnati Commercial some time in 1882.

Q. Do you know whether the facts in relation to the cases to which you have last referred were ever brought to the attention of the grand jury?—A. The grand jury found indictments.

Q. In which case?—A. In all except 40101.

Q. You refer to the indictments in the Corpus Christi route?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But was any effort ever made to procure an indictment in the case 40101?—A. No; the statute of limitations ran against that case.

Q. And there were sessions of the grand jury intervening between the time of the information and the time that the statute ran?—A. I saw the foreman of the grand jury myself and gave him a copy of the information, and told him it was his duty to proceed independently of anything on the part of the Government, and he made some inquiry and was told that the Government did not want to proceed in that case.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. I understand that the grand jury was in session at the time this letter was written in January, and the statute would not run until the April following.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who told him that?—A. I do not.

Q. Who was the foreman of the grand jury?—A. Jesse Wilson.

Q. He was told that the Government did not want to proceed in that case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you know that?—A. He told me.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You presented to him a copy of the information which set forth all the facts, and asked him to proceed independently?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he informed you that the Government had informed him that it was not desirable to proceed against those parties?—A. No; I did not say against those parties——

Q. Well, in that case?—A. In that case.

A. And you yourself know of no reason why proceedings were not instituted in that case?—A. No. The fact of no answer being returned to that letter of mine to the Attorney-General, and also the fact that I could get no answer to a bill which I had rendered to the Government for services, led me to write to Mr. MacVeagh. Mr. MacVeagh came here, and I saw him after he had had an interview with the Attorney-General. My bill was originally rendered for $7,500, which Judge Black told me was one-half less than I should have asked for. Mr. MacVeagh informed me that I could only get my account settled by assuring the Attorney-General that I would resign. He said that they wanted me out of the cases, and were afraid to ask for my resignation.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Who wanted you out of the cases?—A. The Attorney-General and Mr. Bliss.

Q. So your disconnection with these cases and your resignation were not quite on amicable terms between you and the Government?—A. Well, I called upon the Attorney-General, of course, immediately after receiving information of that kind. As soon as Mr. Brewster was nominated as Attorney-General I went to Philadelphia and saw him. I was the means of his being employed in the cases originally, through Judge Black, and I went and saw him and told him I did not want to continue in the cases at all; that I could see a great many reasons why I should not do so; that my relations with the Government would not be perhaps satisfactory to many people; and he assured me that I must remain; that they wanted me. A short time previous to Mr. MacVeagh's coming here Judge Black was in Washington, and of his own motion called upon the Attorney-General, and the Attorney-General assured him that he could not dispense with my services, and would not think of doing so. Of course I was very much surprised when Mr. MacVeagh told me they wanted my resignation. I immediately called upon the Attorney-General and said to him that I would tender my resignation. He said he could not take the responsibility of accepting it. Then I wanted to know why he had told Mr. MacVeagh that if I would resign my account would be settled, and the relation would be pleasant thereafter, and so on. He asked me if Mr. MacVeagh had told me that; I said he had. Then he said he would accept my resignation of course; and I sent it.

Q. Why did Mr. Brewster, the Attorney-General, and Mr. Bliss desire your resignation?—A. I don't know, further than that it was supposed that I was not of the same politics.

Q. Of the same politics as whom?—A. The gentlemen in power.

Q. Were not gentlemen of both political parties engaged in the trial of those cases?—A. They were, but at that time I was the only one supposed to be on the other side.

Q. What were the politics of Mr. Merrick?—A. That was subsequent.

Q. Then it seems, if they wanted to get rid of you on account of your politics, that they afterwards concluded to employ other men as counsel of the same politics as yourself?—A. Well, they were rather guessing at my politics anyhow, and I think that afterwards they thought it would be well enough to have a Democrat of Mr. Merrick's standing to shoulder some of the responsibility.

Q. That is your opinion—what is it founded upon?—A. General information.

Q. Have you any knowledge about it?—A. No personal knowledge. I have stated it as my opinion.

Q. Now did the Government find any fault with you?—A. None whatever.

Q. Did anybody connected with these cases who were Government officials raise any questions as to your fidelity to the Government?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Was it never intimated to you by any of them that they thought you had in any degree "given away" the cases to the other side?—A. Oh, no, not at all.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What did Mr. MacVeagh say was the reason they desired your resignation?—A. Well, they wanted everybody out of the cases that had been connected with him in any way.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Did Mr. MacVeagh say so?—A. Yes, sir; that was one of the things he stated to me.

Q. That who wanted them out?—A. The Government.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Do you mean that he told you that Mr. Brewster told him that?—A. Oh, no.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Mr. MacVeagh, you say, was of the opinion that the Attorney-General and Mr. Bliss—A. (Interrupting.) Oh, I don't know that he said that.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. What do you mean by the Government?—

Mr. FYAN. I understood the witness in testifying on that point to state that Mr. MacVeagh came to him after an interview with Mr. Brewster and told him that he could only get his claim allowed by tendering his resignation. Now I do not know whether in that connection Mr. MacVeagh made this declaration which the witness has just stated.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Did Mr. MacVeagh tell you that they wanted you out and everybody else that was connected with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it in that connection and at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he say it as coming from Mr. Brewster?—A. No; he did not.

Q. Did he say "the Government"?—A. He said "they." I am not pretending to give Mr. MacVeagh's exact language, but at this interview, which occurred at the Arlington Hotel in his room, Mr. Cook was present, and he will tell you the same story.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What did Mr. MacVeagh say?—A. Well, he said that they had placed upon him the responsibility of approving these bills. He said, "If you will reduce your bill to $5,000 I will approve it. I would approve it for the whole amount—I think you have earned it, but you had better get what money you can out of this, as they want you to resign—want you and Cook to resign and go out of the cases."

Q. Whom did you understand him to refer to?—A. I understood him to refer to the Attorney-General and to Mr. Bliss, who represented the Government.

Q. Did you ask him why they desired you to resign?—A. No. I knew perfectly well why they did.

Q. State, then, why they desired you to retire.—A. They wanted to manage the cases and control them themselves, and they wanted no interference from anybody else. They didn't want other people volunteering their advice; didn't want such letters as those I have read. They wanted to pursue their own course; which they had a perfect right to do.

Q. Mr. Bliss was in the cases from the time the information was filed?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Had Mr. Bliss found any fault with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had he or the Attorney-General stated to you or given you to understand that you were an annoyance to them by interfering in the manner which you have described?—A. On the contrary they had both indicated their desire to have me remain in the cases.

Q. Then why do you say that you were dismissed?—A. Because gentlemen do not always mean what they say.

Q. Then you mean to say that the Attorney-General and Mr. Bliss, when they said to you that they wanted you to remain, simply lied?—A. I do not use that harsh language.

Mr. MILLIKEN. You may as well call things by their right names. We are not here for the purpose of smoothing things over.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you any reason to believe that this was the result of a change of policy on the part of those conducting cases for the Government,

Mr. Bliss and the Attorney-General?—A. Mr. Bliss said that he was going to run these cases in his own way.

Q. When was it that he said that?—A. Along about that time. He did not say it to me. He said it in writing.

Q. Have you any reason to believe that there was any change in the attitude of Mr. Bliss towards you and Mr. Cook pending the proceedings?—A. Of course there was a purpose.

Q. State, if you can, when and how long you were working together harmoniously, and when, so far as you know, they changed their minds and desired you to retire from the cases?—A. Well, as long as this information was pending, until after my report was made—up to that time.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. Did you find any fault with the manner in which those cases were conducted except so far as the letter which you have put in here might be considered fault-finding?—A. I never found fault. I am not much of a fault-finder. Then, too, I had a feeling, as you do sometimes feel without much being said, which satisfied me that Mr. Bliss was going to pursue his own course in the prosecutions, which he had a right to do.

Q. Did you disagree with Mr. Bliss's course except as to the fact that you thought he ought to have tried this case, No. 40101?—A. Yes; the ground of my difference was that I thought a simple case, a case involving one or two routes at the farthest, should be selected and tried and not one involving 134 routes.

Q. That was a matter of opinion and you and the other parties, Mr. Bliss and the Attorney-General, did not agree about it. Now did you disagree in regard to any other matter? Did you disagree as to the method of trying the case that was tried?—A. I hadn't anything to do with that. I went out of the cases before an indictment was found in that case.

Q. Did you urge the Department to proceed, or not to proceed, in that case that was tried?—A. I made no recommendation about it whatever.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Upon whose recommendation or advice was that case tried?—A. I was out of the cases then.

By Mr. FYAN :

Q. Did you collate the facts and make a report upon this case that was tried?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you submitted that to the Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your report was the basis of the prosecution, was it not?—A. You must have misunderstood me. I said I was out of the cases before the indictment was found and had nothing to do with the trial.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. But you prepared the evidence?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. FYAN :

Q. The case as presented and tried was based on the facts collated by you, was it not?—A. Partially.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Why was that case that was actually tried the most complicated of the cases that came within your knowledge?—A. Because it involved one hundred and thirty-four routes.

Q. Was that the reason the indictment was so long?—A. Yes. They did not take all the routes, but they took some twenty-seven or thirty of them, and one hypothesis they proceeded upon was that due regard should be had to the productiveness of a route. That was all nonsense. That was the original law of 1792, but it was amended at various times, and by the legislation of 1851 it was wiped out entirely, and thereafter the Government had no reference whatever to the productiveness of a route. The law does not require them to have.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. But did not this case which they tried include more defendants of an important character and connected with the Government in such a way as to make their crime a more heinous one if they had committed it at all, than the case which you wanted tried?—A. No, sir. There are no degrees in heinousness. The character of the defendants had nothing to do with the matter.

Q. Did not this case which they tried include a larger number of important and prominent defendants than the others?—A. No, sir; it did not.

Q. Did it not include both Brady and Dorsey?—A. Yes; it included both Brady and Dorsey.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. The other case included Mr. Brady and Mr. Kellogg?—A. Yes.

Q. Had Mr. French anything to do with it?—A. Yes. He was in the information. That is another case entirely. Now, if you want to get my theory about all this business, the philosophy of it, I can give it to you.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Give it to us then.—A. In the first place, when this investigation began the main object seemed to be to spread out as much of it in the newspapers as possible. The result was that an expectation was created in the public mind which it was never possible to realize. Mr. Dorsey having been connected prominently with politics, made a great deal of disturbance at that time, and owing to the fact that the gentleman who became President by the death of General Garfield had presided at a banquet at Delmonico's and made a speech in which Mr. Dorsey was eulogized, the Administration felt incumbent upon itself, I suppose, to proceed against Mr. Dorsey, and I think that was the reason that case was taken and pushed.

Q. That did not preclude the possibility of proceeding in the other cases also?—A. Oh, not at all. I am not saying that that case ought not to have been proceeded with; I simply give it as a matter of judgment it should not have been tried first. Look at the time occupied in the trial. Where will you find a case in the criminal history of the world that stretched over as long a time as that?

Q. How long a time was it?—A. Well, several months.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Is it your judgment that the Government felt compelled by public sentiment to proceed in that case because Mr. Dorsey was connected with it?—A. Yes; the question of the salary that the gentlemen who tried the case were receiving may have had something to do with it. I would not say that it had; but when men are getting as high as $208 a day and their expenses paid, it is not in human nature to abbreviate the time; time was of the essence in that case, certainly.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have stated or intimated that counsel got as high as $200 a day; please explain to what you refer?—A. By referring to Ex. Doc. No. 40, first session Forty-eighth Congress, page 15, I find that Mr. George Bliss got a retainer of $2,500 on November 8, 1881; on page 21 of the same document it appears that he rendered a bill as of January 1, 1882, for $6,000. He had been fifty days in the service of the Government up to that time, including two days making a contract with the Government at Elberon; that is, at the rate of $170 a day. Then he charged for his expenses at the rate of $$7.77\frac{33}{100}$ a day. On page 29 of the same document it appears that he rendered another bill of $5,200 up to March 4, which is at the rate of $108.75 per diem, with expenses in addition at the rate of $8 a day.

Q. Were any of the cases tried between those dates?—A. No, sir. May 28, 1882, he rendered another bill for \$6,800 and expenses, making a total of \$7,444.55; forty-three and one-half days, at \$156.32 per day, and his expenses at the rate of \$14.82 per day; September 29, he rendered a bill of \$15,000 and expenses \$863.51; that was for seventy-one days' service in this case, being at the rate of \$211.26 per day. His expenses in addition to that were \$12.15 per diem; he rendered another bill for services between September 13, 1881, and January, 1883, for \$4,000, and for expenses, \$356.35. In that case he served thirty and one-quarter days; his per diem was at the rate of \$133.33, and expenses at \$11.86 $\frac{2}{3}$ per day.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Can you tell, from that or any other source, the entire amount of Mr. Bliss's fee and how much it averaged per day for the whole service?—A. Probably I will before I get through.

Q. That is the gist of the whole matter.—A. I have not calculated that. To March 16, 1883, he was employed fifty-one days, making, at $100 a day, $5,700. He drew $1,700 additional on the 7th of June, 1883. There was no expense account at that time. He rendered a bill November 19, 1883, for $9,200, which is still pending. He received in all $57,732.15.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. For the days he was actually employed, how much does that amount to per day?—A. The average is something over $150 per day, I believe.

Q. Have you computed the average of his expenses?—A. Not accurately, but they run over $10 a day.

Q. Does that $57,732.15 include expenses?—A. Yes, sir; that includes expenses.

Q. That includes the whole amount of payments to Mr. Bliss?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what compensation Mr. Ker received?—A. He received $31,914.77, and all the time that he was in the employ of the Government was two hundred and thirty-four days, as his expense account shows.

Q. How much does that make his fee on an average per day?—A. About $120 a day. He makes one of the most remarkable charges I think that anybody ever heard of. He charges for preparing the indictment in star-route cases and straw-bond cases $10,000. On page 85, of Ex. Doc. No. 40, first session Forty-eighth Congress, appears this charge: "Preparing indictment in star-route cases, and straw-bond cases, $10,000." One of the indictments was thrown out, and Mr. Merrick charges for consultation in regard to——

Q. (Interposing.) What case was that that was thrown out?—A. The first indictment found in the Brady-Dorsey case.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. The one you have spoken of before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that $10,000 constitute a part of his $31,914.77?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. What was the nature of Mr. Ker's services to the Government?—

A. He was employed as an attorney to prepare the indictments and to assist in the trial.

Q. Was it especially with a view to the preparation of the indictments that he was employed?—A. So Mr. Brewster said—that he was an expert at that. I should judge that he was from the charge he made. Allowing him two hundred and sixty days, which is more days than he was occupied, he received $117 per day.

Q. Did that comprise this $10,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that without including the $10,000 he would receive less per day, of course?—A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything else you desire to say on that point? Have you computed the whole amount paid for attorneys' fees in these cases up to the date of that report?—A. The Government paid for counsel fees, including my own, for cases in Washington, $144,146.92.

Q. To whom were those sums paid?—A. To Mr. Brewster, the present Attorney-General, $5,000; Mr. Bliss, $57,732.15; Mr. Merrick, $37,500; Mr. Ker, $31,914.77; Mr. Cook, $7,000, I believe, I am not certain about that; Mr. Gibson, $5,000; total, $144,146 92.

Q. Can you state anything about the amount of fees paid in the star-route cases in other places than Washington?—A. No, I do not know anything about that.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. You say you received $5,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that an exorbitant fee?—A. No; I think it was a reasonable fee.

Q. Was it any more than you would have earned in your profession by the same amount of services?—A. Oh, I would have been doing very poorly if I had not earned more money than that. I was occupied from the 22d of April until after the 1st of January; but I was not at work all the time after the 1st of December.

Q. So that whatever the Government may have done in regard to other counsel you do not think they were extravagant in paying you?—A. No; they paid me all I finally asked. I rendered at first a bill for $7,500. I never rendered a bill for expenses, although there were some considerable expenses attending my services.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. You say you consulted Judge Black with regard to the value of your services?—A. I did.

Q. He was a competent judge of such services, I presume?—A. Yes, sir; he had had very large experience of the pay for such services?

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. When you consulted him your bill was $7,500?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he thought you had charged one-half too little?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have stated that you had something to do in securing the appointment of Mr. Brewster as special counsel?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. MacVeagh asked me to see Judge Black and I wrote or telegraphed him and he came here. There was some talk about employing ex-Senator Henderson, of Missouri, and different other persons, but Judge Black strongly urged the employment of Mr. Brewster.

Q. Then it was partially on the recommendation of Judge Black that Mr. Brewster was employed as a special counsel in the cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any employment of this kind tendered to Judge Black?—A. No, sir. I suppose he thought the Government could not afford to pay for his services.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Do you mean Judge Black?—A. Yes, sir. I suppose he thought so at that time.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. He certainly would have been willing to have been retained on the basis of the fees subsequently paid?—A. Well, I do not think he ever received many such fees, although I am not quite familiar with the fees he did receive.

Q. Are you familiar with the fees charged by attorneys in important cases?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether any of the persons who were special counsel for the Government in the star-route cases appeared as counsel in Washington for private individuals at the same time they were charging for services to the Government?—A. Mr. Bliss did.

Q. In what cases?—A. On behalf of the national banks.

Q. State what services he performed in that line, and at what time.—A. I do not know what services he performed. I simply know that he was attorney for the national banks, and that he appeared before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in their behalf. The question was whether the banks should pay taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, a question involving $4,500,000.

Q. Under the repealing clause of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the "tariff law"?—A. Yes.

Q. You say he appeared for the national banks in that case?—A. Yes, and won his case too.

Q. That was, resisting the collection of taxes between the time the act took effect and the 1st of July thereafter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was about $4,000,000 involved?—A. I think so.

Q. Do you say that during that time he was also employed as special counsel by the Government in the star-route cases?—A. He charges for his services.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Rendered at that time?

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What bill that he has rendered covers that period of time?—A. The star-route trial was going on in June, 1883. It closed some time in that month, and Mr. Bliss was employed in the star-route cases at that time.

Q. Was that the time he made the argument before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?—A. I don't know what time he made the argument. You can get that from the Department.

Q. Is there any other fact that you desire to state in connection with your services to the Government in the star-route cases?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Do you think Mr. Brewster's fee was a reasonable fee?—A. I think that was a reasonable fee. He came here and spent considerable time, and delivered an able argument. I think it was quite a reasonable fee.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What have you to say about Mr. Cook's fee of six or seven thousand dollars?—A. Mr. Cook ought to have had more money, I thought.

Q. You did not think he was extravagantly paid?—A. Oh, no; he lost money by the operation.

Q. He could have had a fee on the other side, I believe?—A. I do not know anything about that.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 11, 1884.

WILLIAM A. COOK sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your name, age, and residence.—Answer. I am about fifty-nine years of age; my residence is Washington City, D. C.; my occupation is that of a lawyer, and has been since 1847.

Q. Were you employed as a special counsel for the Government in the star-route cases?—A. I was.

Q. Please state the circumstances which led to your employment, the services which you rendered, and the compensation which you received therefor.—A. Yes, sir. On the 10th of May, 1881, I received from the then Attorney-General this note:

DEAR SIR: I wish you would call here, as there is a matter about which I desire to see you.

Sincerely yours,

WAYNE MACVEAGH.

W. A. COOK, Esq., 402 Sixth Street.

When I called in response to this note he stated to me that it was concluded to employ me as an attorney in the prosecution of the star-route cases. I said to him that it was somewhat surprising to me, and that it would require some time for me to consult and determine what I should do. I consulted with some special friends and finally concluded to accept the position tendered by the Government. In some mode peculiar to the press it was ascertained that I had been sent for for the purpose of being placed in temporary charge of the star-route cases, and the result was that a number of the defendants personally and otherwise called upon me and desired to retain me. They offered me fees at least double any that the United States would give me; but I finally declined their offers and informed the Attorney-General that I would accept the appointment.

Q. Did they offer you a specific sum as retainer in defense of the cases?—A. Yes, sir; they did.

Q. Have you any objection to stating the sum?—A. I presume not. I was informed by one gentleman that I could obtain a retainer of $25,000.

Q. What gentleman made that proposition?—A. That proposition was made by Col. William P. Wood, acting for some of the defendants, whose names he did not mention at the time. I was offered money by——

Q. (Interposing.) You certainly knew whom Mr. Wood represented?—

A. Not definitely, Mr. Chairman. I did not ask him. I had a conjecture as to whom he represented. I think probably he represented all who were prominently involved, including Mr. Brady and others, at that time.

Q. Did he state the nature of the services that would be required of you?—A. It was simply a defense of those who might be indicted for star-route transactions. And I ought, perhaps, to state that, prior to that, a gentleman who is present, Mr. A. M. Gibson, called upon me and stated that there would unquestionably be an application made to me to accept service for parties who might be indicted, and that he hoped I would not accept any such engagement, at least not until I had seen him, and I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed with your statement.

The WITNESS. I received my appointment, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, June 1, 1881.

SIR: You are hereby appointed special assistant United States attorney for the District of Columbia to aid in the prosecution of certain persons charged with being concerned in frauds on the United States in connection with what is known as the star-route investigation, at a compensation to be determined by the Attorney-General when the suits are ended. You will take the oath required of district attorneys and transmit the same to this Department.

Very respectfully,

WAYNE MACVEAGH,
Attorney-General.

WILLIAM A. COOK,
Washington, D. C.

On receiving the appointment I filed a copy in court and took the oath of office.

Now, although it is somewhat personal and perhaps egotistic, yet in view of what I may hereafter state perhaps I should say, with your permission, that when that appointment was announced the Evening Star, the character of which you all understand, published this editorial:

The selection of William A. Cook, concededly at the head of the criminal bar of the District, as special assistant attorney-general to take charge of the star-route investigation, shows that the Government means business in the prosecution of those cases.

I should perhaps also state that I had at the time a very large civil as well as considerable criminal practice. In a calendar of five or six hundred cases I had perhaps about one-seventh, and was constantly engaged in my profession. I am a Republican. In 1869 and 1870, when we elected Mr. Bowen as mayor of the city, I became the attorney of the city, and when the new government was formed I was the attorney of the District from 1871 to 1874, by which I acquired a more than usual knowledge of the citizens of the District and of their true character, which was always beneficial in the selection of jurors.

I at once entered upon consultations with Mr. A. M. Gibson, and together we arranged a plan of selecting the papers in the Post-Office Department, classifying them, obtaining reports from individuals who had been sent out to inquire into alleged accusations against different persons. The papers were largely scattered. We separated the various papers and placed them in envelopes so that they could be easily handled in an investigation. Immediately afterwards I called upon the President of the United States, Mr. Garfield. I saw him, by arrangement, early in the morning, perhaps between 8 and 9 o'clock. When it was discovered that there would probably be a prosecution of the star-route cases a contest arose, on the one hand, to prevent that, and on the other, to press it on. That contest existed sharply, and was pressed upon the attention of the President. In the interview that I had with him he made this statement: That the case was a delicate one; that it involved many who had been his special friends; that there was no small degree of antagonism in relation to it, and that while he expected me to act chiefly under the directions of the Attorney-General, he wished me to remember that he was at the head of the nation—the President—and primarily responsible to the people, and that I should take no final action without consulting him, but from time to time to make careful and condensed reports to him of the facts, and that for that purpose he would see me at any hour. I complied with his request. When I was leaving he added that he would prefer that I should regard the conversation between us as entirely confidential and I did so.

Q. That conversation related to the star-route cases?—A. Yes, sir; exclusively. He stated that he wished me to make a most thorough, impartial, and fair investigation of all the facts, and wherever they might conduct me to go, irrespective of persons. Shortly after that, in June, before we had prepared any cases, either by information or indictment—before there had been time to do it, as you will observe, because it occurred on the 23d of June—the attorneys of Mr. Brady and others went clandestinely into court and made a motion that the court order that the cases be taken up and proceeded with at once. That was on the 23d of June, 1881. My appointment had been made on the 1st of June. It seemed, afterwards, that they had given notice on that morning to Colonel Corkhill, then the district attorney, but who had no connection with the cases whatever, and who had formally so announced. Now, in reply to their letter and motion, I made this statement in open court:

Now, if your honor please, let me say in behalf of myself, in behalf of the Attorney-General, and in behalf of my brother Corkhill, and in behalf of the President of the United States, this: They occupy, at least the President and the Attorney-General, high and dignified positions. We intend to act in harmony with them. The President of the United States has assumed this position, and it may be regarded as authoritative, if it will be pleasing to my brothers to hear it, that the investigation into supposed crimes and offenses against the postal laws of the United States must be pursued carefully, cautiously, and impartially; that no one must be presented to the grand jury for its consideration or investigation only after the most careful and thorough investigation, tending to show, when it is completed, that there has been probable crime committed. No rumors, whether in newspapers or elsewhere, must be accepted, but everything must be based upon what appears to be facts, and that in this investigation, so impartially conducted under the supervision of the President and Attorney-General, no one must be prosecuted from any personal motives; no one must be protected, on the other hand, because of any feeling of friendship, affection, or favor. Indeed, the high position of the President and the Attorney-General is this: that the United States cannot, must not, will not present any evidence before the grand jury until, after the most cool and tranquil and impartial examination, it appears to be requisite to do so to maintain the purity, the welfare, and the stability of the United States. If, after such an examination, it becomes necessary to present the most exalted citizens of the United States, or the humblest and the poorest in the walks of life, they should be equally presented.

That statement was made at the request of President Garfield, that I would embrace the earliest opportunity that might be afforded to state the true position of the administration in relation to the cases. About the time of this motion he had gone to Long Branch. In connection with James Croggin, of the Star, I sent these proceedings to him, and upon his return he approved them fully and warmly.

Q. Approved your remarks to the court as representing his views?—

A. Yes, sir. I have now placed him in his true position, so far as I was acquainted with it.

Q. This was just preceding his wounding?—A. Shortly before. This was on the 23d of June. I sent this paper to Long Branch. He had perused it there, and on his return I saw him. He sent me a message that he intended to go North in connection with the schooling of his children, and shortly afterward——

Q. (Interposing.) Before you proceed to that narrative will you explain more fully what you mean by the “clandestine” effort of the defendants to have an investigation or trial?—A. It was this: You will observe that I have stated that immediately after receiving my appointment I went into open court, Judge Cox presiding, and spread my appointment on the record, so that there was a formal record of my appointment. I then stood practically alone, except as I was connected with the case when this motion was made. Although the fact of my appointment was on record from the 2d of June no notice was given me of it at all. I was passed by, and, except for incidental information which reached me, the motion would have been taken up and presented and discussed probably in my absence.

Q. What was the object of that motion?—A. It was to compel the Government to proceed at once and carry the case before the grand jury and have it disposed of.

Q. That was the Dorsey case?—A. Yes, sir; that was the Dorsey case. In other words, its apparent object was to force the Government before the grand jury prior to its being properly prepared to present any case.

Q. How did the defendants know that you were not ready?—A. They could only infer that from the fact that I had said to some of them—said generally whenever spoken to in relation to it—that as soon as Mr. Gibson and myself had the facts in any one case thoroughly and properly prepared for presentation to the grand jury I would endeavor to lay them before it.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed now with your statement in your own way.

The WITNESS. I proceeded at once to make myself acquainted with the cases, and devoted my time, in connection with Mr. Gibson, chiefly, in the Post Office Department and in my own office, to the case down to the time of the shooting of the President. That necessarily suspended temporarily our labors, but after the first shock had passed away, in the course of a week or two, as far as we could we renewed them and continued to prepare the cases as fully as we could for presentation to the grand jury.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How many interviews had you with the President prior to the shooting?—A. I think four.

Q. Was Mr. James, the Postmaster-General, with you at any of these interviews?—A. At one of them.

Q. Which one?—A. The one immediately preceding the shooting of the President.

Q. When was that?—A. That was on Wednesday prior to the shooting.

Q. Can you state what occurred at that interview?—A. The President had sent me a message—whether he had sent it to others or not I do not know, nor do I remember at present by whom—that he was about to leave the city, and that prior to doing so he would be glad to have a report of the progress that was being made in the cases. The arrangement was to meet him on Monday night, and I started for that purpose, but an exceedingly violent storm arose and the horses in the carriage became unmanageable and travel became impracticable, so that I was compelled to postpone it. It was then followed by the arrangement for Wednesday; and I presume that, in that connection, I might as well state as well as I recollect what occurred at that interview. When we called at the White House we were informed that the President was upstairs, and that some persons were with him; who they were was not stated—certainly not in my hearing. In a short time he came down stairs and had an interview with us in a private room. He inquired in relation to the cases; what progress was being made. I stated to him then in brief what had occurred, and that in view of the complicated nature of the facts and the ramifications of the inquiries necessary to arrive at fair and correct conclusions, I believed the cases had made as rapid progress as was possible. He expressed himself satisfied. There was then some desultory conversation, and prior to leaving I said to him that I ought perhaps to suggest that he should be careful of his movements; that, as had been developed by the bitterness of the press favorable to those who were denominated star-route men, in connection with the excitement growing out of the antagonism between the “Stalwarts” and the “Half-breeds,” that there was an exceedingly bitter feeling prevailing, and that there were connected with these cases men of violent temper and disposition, men of extreme training and character, and that I feared there might be a resort to violence; at least that such was the impression on my mind, and that I made the suggestion accordingly. It seemed to touch him but for a moment, as appeared by a nervous or spasmodic change of his position, and he responded and said that he apprehended that there was no danger.

Q. Did you state whether any others than himself were in danger?—

A. I stated that such was the bitterness of feeling that it would not be surprising to me if that feeling should carry itself out against others; against the Postmaster-General and against the Attorney-General. I do not think I used the language which it seems has been placed on my lips by Mr. James, but I did make the suggestion to the President substantially in the form in which I have mentioned. And there was an intense and bitter feeling; more so, perhaps, than the gentlemen of the committee are able now to form any conception of.

Q. Had you in your mind any particular act of violence which you suggested might be perpetrated?—A. No, sir. The idea that I had was this: That the feeling of bitterness and vindictiveness was so strong that it might operate upon the minds of some of those involved, or some of their associates or friends, to an extent that would lead to violence; or that it might assume the form of a resort to desperate and usual actions.

Q. Have you completed the statement that you desired to make?—

A. I presume that I have substantially completed that statement.

Q. Do you know whether any efforts were made after the assassination to discover whether Guiteau had accomplices?—A. There were, so far as I know, no decided or vigorous efforts. I accompanied the district attorney to his office when witnesses who were supposed to have been present at the shooting of President Garfield were first taken there, and I strongly suggested that line of investigation. I went further; I addressed a letter to the Attorney-General, and proposed to him to participate, with his sanction, in the prosecution of Guiteau without compensation. I stated that I felt it to be my duty, in view of my relation to the star-route cases and to the President, to do so. In a little while the line of investigation which would have conducted to a development of the assumption which existed for some time that Guiteau had, directly or indirectly, quietly or otherwise, associates, was dropped, and the prosecution of Guiteau was conducted upon the assumption that he alone was responsible for his act.

Q. Had you at that time any reason to believe, or did you believe, that any persons who were interested in the star-route contracts had instigated him to commit this act?—A. The inference that I drew originally from all the facts and circumstances, and from knowledge that I had of the intense feeling which existed in connection with the star-route prosecutions, was that the shooting of the President was not the result of the individual action of Guiteau. I have never become fully satisfied that that assumption was incorrect.

Q. Just state what was the substance of the letter which you sent to the Attorney-General on that subject.—A. I stated to him in substance that in view of the fact that I had been engaged in the prosecution of the star-route cases and had been selected in connection with him and the administration for that purpose, I felt it was a duty that I owed to the administration and the country to tender my professional services without compensation, so that there might be a full, free, unqualified, and unlimited investigation into the cause of the shooting.

Q. Did you receive any answer to that?—A. I never did, excepting a statement, I believe, that emanated from him on one occasion that President Arthur had determined to select others to prosecute the case, and some special friends of his, one a gentleman from New York.

Q. Can you state any facts which led you to believe that Guiteau had accomplices?—A. Yes, sir. The first fact was that I could not conceive it possible that he had been in the city of Washington for a considerable time, as I ascertained he had, been without forming any associates or acquaintances; that he could not have been here as a hermit; that he necessarily, in the nature of the human mind and the human organization, must have acquired some associates or acquaintances. I think so still. In addition to that, the act was so bold and daring, and at the same time so cowardly, that it seemed to me it would not be attempted by any one without associates. In the next place, it was in harmony with what I had suggested to the President in relation to the bitterness of feeling that prevailed in connection with the star-route cases, aggravated by the bitterness between the Stalwarts and the Half-breeds. And perhaps I may be allowed to say that I am and was a Stalwart. In the early part of the investigation into the shooting there were parties who came to my office and stated that Guiteau had been in one or more establishments seeking a pistol, and that he had been accompanied by two or three persons. I had an affidavit made to that effect. I believe that the party who made it is still of the belief that he was when he made the affidavit.

Q. Who was it that made that affidavit?—A. The name for the moment has passed from my mind. He was a second-hand clothier on Ninth street, and a dealer in pistols and weapons. It was Herzog.

Q. His affidavit was with reference to parties who called with Guiteau?—A. Yes, sir; to a call of Guiteau, in company with two or three other persons.

Q. Did he name those persons?—A. He did not know them. He described them.

Q. Did you have any reason to believe that they were persons that were in any way connected with the star-route defendants?—A. I had no information on that subject to lead me to that conclusion except the affidavit and search for a pistol and the description given by Mr. Herzog.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. What became of that affidavit?—A. My recollection is that I passed it over into the hands of the district attorney.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did the description given in this affidavit lead you to believe that they were persons connected with the star-route cases?—A. No, sir. He was well acquainted in the city, but they seemed to be unknown persons to him. Now, I have given you as frankly as I can the inner feelings of my mind on the subject in connection with some of the facts and circumstances. My views may have been erroneous, and they may not have been.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Colonel Corkhill in regard to this line of investigation?—A. I had.

Q. Did you suggest to him that an investigation would develop the fact that the star-route defendants were the instigators of this crime?—A. I may not have spoken of the "star-routers," as we called them, but I suggested to him strongly that an investigation might lead to the discovery of the fact that others were associated with Guiteau in the perpetration of the crime.

Q. But you say that line of inquiry has never been pursued.—A. I do not think it has ever been pursued earnestly. Immediately after Guiteau was incarcerated, to use the expression, he was taken charge of by the district attorney and the local authorities, and no one at all, or perhaps very few, were allowed any interviews with him, except through them.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Was there any declared purpose by the parties who took charge of him for so doing?—A. Nothing beyond this, that they were satisfied that the shooting was his individual act. That was all.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. And you were of the contrary opinion?—A. I was of a contrary opinion.

Q. Did you arrive at that opinion from facts that you had learned in interviews with persons interested in the defense of the star-route cases before you entered into the employment of the Government?—A. Shortly after I entered into the employment of the Government I unquestionably formed the idea that there was a bitter and a reckless feeling on the part of those involved in the star-route investigations. It was so bitter in words, and so bitter in print, so bitter socially, that I was impressed with the idea that it might be carried into corresponding practice.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Was that bitterness against the President?—A. It included him in part; indeed all actively engaged on behalf of the Government.

Q. Did you get any intimations, or threats, or hints from the "star-routers" that led you to the conclusion to which you came?—A. No, sir; because they ceased to converse with me, and of consequence assailed me as well as others with every conceivable epithet when they failed to secure my employment for them.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed with your statement.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. If the committee will permit me I should like to make a remark with reference to sections of the law regulating the appointment of special attorneys, with the view to giving clearness to some of my subsequent statements. The first section, 359, is in these words:

Except when the Attorney-General in particular cases otherwise directs, the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General shall conduct and argue suits, writs of error, and appeals in the Supreme Court, and suits in the Court of Claims in which the United States is interested, and the Attorney-General may, whenever he deems it for the interest of the United States, either conduct and argue any case in any court of the United States in which the United States is interested, or he may direct the Solicitor-General or any officer of the Department of Justice to do so. The Attorney-General may require any solicitor or officer of the Department of Justice to perform any duty required by the Department, or any officer thereof.

Section 363 reads:

The Attorney-General shall, whenever in his opinion the public interest requires it, employ and retain in the name of the United States such attorneys and counsellors at law as he may think necessary to assist the district attorneys in the discharge of their duties, and shall stipulate with such assistant attorneys and counsel the amount of [their] compensation, and shall have supervision of their conduct and proceedings.

You will observe that in my appointment it is stated that the compensation was to be fixed at the termination of the suit. I suggested to Mr. MacVeagh that it would be proper in all cases, I thought, before I entered upon the duties of the appointment, for him to fix the salary or compensation. He interpreted the law differently. The result was that I entered upon it without any arrangement for compensation.

The other section is 365:

No compensation shall hereafter be allowed to any person besides the respective district attorneys and assistant district attorneys for services as attorney or counsel to the United States, or to any branch or department of the Government thereof, except in cases specially authorized by law, and then only on the certificate of the Attorney-General that such services were actually rendered, and that the same could not be performed by the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General, or the officers of the Department of Justice, or by the district attorneys.

I supposed, too, that there ought to have been such a certificate, and I desired that.

Section 366 reads:

Every attorney or counsellor who is specially retained under the authority of the Department of Justice to assist in the trial of any case in which the Government is interested shall receive a commission from the head of such Department as a special assistant to the Attorney-General or to some one of the district attorneys, as the nature of the appointment may require, and shall take the oath required by law to be taken by the district attorneys, and shall be subject to all the liabilities imposed upon them by law.

The question arose in relation to the appointment which I received, which was vague in its terms, whether it made me an assistant to the district attorney or whether it created me as an assistant to the Attorney-General; and that remained an open question, and subsequently involved the case in considerable difficulty. The district attorney assumed the position that I was only an assistant to him, and as such had no authority to go before the grand jury.

Q. You mean Mr. Corkhill?—A. Yes, sir. When Mr. Bliss came into the case he also assumed that position. I had prepared cases to be laid before the grand jury. The result of the views entertained by the two, and which prevailed temporarily, was that I was not allowed at any time to go before the grand jury. What may be the nature of the appointments of Mr. Bliss and Mr. Ker and others I do not know, but subsequently Mr. Bliss, as well as Mr. Ker, changed his views and went himself before the grand jury to the exclusion of the district attorney. Why that was is conjectural. It deprived me of doing what would have been done, and of finding indictments, not only against Mr. Brady and Mr. Dorsey and others, but with the assistance of Mr. Gibson, against other of the prominent star-route contractors.

Q. In what other cases would you have recommended indictments?—

A. I cannot call them all up here now. There was the Salisbury case; there was the Parker case; there were Roots & Kearns, and a number of others.

Q. The San Antonio and Corpus Christi route, there was that case?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Santa Fé and Prescott route and the Indianola route?—

A. Yes, sir; there was quite a number. Mr. Gibson's plan and mine of preparing the papers was to separate them so that we could present clearly and intelligently to the grand jury almost any one of the cases independent of others; that is, against any one of the contractors in connection with post-office officials.

Q. Please explain to the committee the nature of the evidence compiled upon which indictments might have been found against the various combinations of contractors to which you have referred.—A. The evidence consisted chiefly, apart from the papers in the Post-Office Department, of reports of special inspectors who had been sent out into various localities to ascertain the nature of the various routes, the mode in which the services were performed, and the necessity for the number of men and horses that were employed upon them. The reports were transmitted to the Post-Office Department and carefully examined.

Q. Did you examine those reports yourself?—A. I examined a number of them. I did not examine them so fully as Mr. Gibson did, but I examined them sufficiently to satisfy me that there was a primary cause made out against various parties, while I was by no means satisfied that it was conclusive of guilt. It remains a fact that no special attempt was made to procure any indictments against any, but what was called the Dorsey combination.

Q. That is the case that was actually tried?—A. The case that was actually tried.

Q. What percentage of the fraudulent contracts did that Dorsey combination embrace?—A. I could not definitely state the percentage. It was relatively but small.

Q. Fifteen per centum was stated by Mr. Spencer.—A. Well, that was pretty nearly accurate, but I could not state it with exactness without calculation.

Q. How many of these contracts, and what per centum as to amounts were held by the Salisbury combination?—A. They held a very large percentage; but just what it was I could not tell. Mr. Gibson is more accurately posted on that subject than I.

Q. Can you state in regard to the other combinations?—A. I could not tell the exact percentage. The contracts held by them were large and valuable. That general statement I can safely make.

Q. State what interviews you had with Mr. Bliss or Mr. Corkhill in regard to procuring indictments against others than members of the Dorsey combination contractors.—A. An explanation will perhaps best answer that question. Mr. Corkhill had stated openly in court before Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster became connected with the cases, that he had nothing whatever to do with them. That was the fact. Whether correctly or incorrectly, justly or unjustly, Mr. Corkhill had not the confidence of the Department or of the Administration, and it was commonly supposed that he was under the influence of persons connected with the star-route cases, or to use an expression that was more or less current at the time, that they had "a corner" on him. The result was that I never had any consultations with him—I purposely, acting under instructions, declined to have any.

Q. When was this time to which you now refer, when this distrust of Colonel Corkhill prevailed?—A. From my first connection with the cases until it ceased.

Q. When was it that he announced in the court that he would not have any responsibility for the prosecution of those cases?—A. That was probably some time in June.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Which administration had no confidence in Colonel Corkhill, Garfield's or Arthur's?—A. The Garfield administration, and when Mr. Bliss first came in he apparently had none, for he contemplated the removal of Mr. Corkhill.

Q. Now, please explain your efforts to secure indictments against those other parties.—A. Those efforts consisted in the careful preparation of the facts and papers as fully as possible, and getting them in a condition and order so that when the time arrived they could be intelligently presented to the grand jury.

Q. Were you in the cases when the information was filed?—A. I was; and chiefly prepared the information.

Q. What combination of contractors did that information embrace?—A. That embraced Messrs. MacDonough, Brown, Brady, and French. In my original plan it embraced also John A. Walsh, but it was suggested, and probably wisely, that Mr. Walsh would be more valuable to us as a witness and as an informer, than as a party to any information or indictment, and that suggestion was adopted.

Q. Then his name was not included in the information?—A. I included it in my original draft of an indictment, but upon fuller consultation, if I remember correctly, with the Attorney-General and Mr. Gibson and others, it was concluded that it would be better to omit his name and use him as a witness.

Q. What was done, if anything, after the information failed to procure indictments against the parties who were embraced in the information proceedings?—A. The information was decided in November, 1881. When the President was removed to Elberon I was called there, and the consultation there occupied my time considerably, and on my return I found that the grand jury had been discharged.

Q. What session of the grand jury was that?—A. That must have been the June term of the grand jury.

Q. How long had it been in session when it was discharged?—A. But a very short time.

Q. How many days was it in session?—A. I think, if I remember correctly, it was in session only a day or two. It had only organized, according to my best recollection, and was adjourned from the 14th of September until the 3d of October, only remaining in session two days. I left Elberon and returned to Washington for the purpose of laying some of the cases before the grand jury (route 40101), and to my surprise when I reached the depot, one of my employes stated to me that the grand jury had been adjourned. It was that fact that compelled us to resort to an information.

Q. Who had that grand jury adjourned?—A. Colonel Corkhill, the district attorney.

Q. Was there any business before the grand jury which it could have transacted?—A. I do not know certainly, but it is to be presumed that there was. Its adjournment so immediately after the organization, and so suddenly, and for so great a length of time, was unusual, especially in that season of the year.

Q. Explain what you found to be the cause for that sudden adjournment of the grand jury.—A. I have never been able to ascertain any reason for the adjournment, unless it lay in the fact that by that adjournment it was supposed that the statute of limitations would operate against a number of the cases that had been made up against star-route contractors.

Q. Before another grand jury would assemble in court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Colonel Corkhill consult you with regard to the business that you might desire to bring before the grand jury?—A. No, sir. The adjournment took place while I was on my way from Elberon, having been specially called there by the Attorney-General.

Q. Had you any information previous to that of its proposed adjournment?—A. None; direct or indirect.

Q. Do you know whether Colonel Bliss or any of the other attorneys had?—A. Colonel Bliss had not, because he was at Elberon with me. Mr Gibson was also there with me. Mr. Bliss had just come into the cases.

Q. Then, so far as you know, Colonel Corkhill did not consult with any of the attorneys for the Government engaged in the star-route cases?—A. No, sir. He claims, I believe, that he had spoken to the Attorney-General (Mr. MacVeagh) on the subject; but in relation to that there seems to be some difference of recollection between the Attorney-General and Mr. Corkhill.

Q. State what you intended to do, so far as the grand jury was concerned, on your return from Elberon, and which you were prevented from doing by the adjournment of the grand jury.—A. To go immediately before the grand jury and lay before them the facts in case 40101 for the purpose of procuring an indictment, or to get the facts somehow before the jury.

Q. Did you ask Colonel Corkhill why he had adjourned the grand jury?—A. I did on one occasion; and he stated that he had nothing special to lay before it, and he did not know that I would have.

Q. He had not taken the pains to inquire?—A. No, sir; he had not inquired.

Q. When was it that the next session of the grand jury would convene in regular course?—A. Not until October.

Q. What time in October?—A. The adjournment was on the 15th of September. I have here a paper that I presented in court which sets forth all those facts.

Q. Well, state the substance of that paper?—A. Yes, sir [referring to the paper]. I state first that it is due to the public, to me as special attorney of the United States, to my colleagues and associates, and to superior officers of the Government to state more fully than has been done why the more common course was not pursued, and why the information was filed.

The assassination of the President occurred on the morning of the 2d of July. On Wednesday night previous, at his request, I had a consultation at the White House, in part in hearing of others, in reference to the star-route cases. After a full explanation of this case he expressed himself as fully satisfied with what had been done, but urged me to proceed as rapidly as possible with the cases. It was the intention to complete the necessary preparations or present them to the grand jury at its meeting in September. On the Saturday following, the nation and the civilized world were shocked by the announcement that James A. Garfield had been assassinated. That suspended all labor for a while. The delay, therefore, which occurred in the preparation of the case after the first adjournment of the grand jury was primarily and chiefly caused by the assassination of the President.

Resuming active investigations in connection with Mr. Brewster and Mr. Bliss, I was called to Elberon. After visiting Elberon several times, I at length returned from a special consultation on the 11th of September so as to be here on the reassembling of the grand jury. I was immediately recalled to Elberon with the least possible delay. On the 15th of September I hastened back to Washington to proceed with the cases. Witnesses had been previously notified at different localities. One had arrived and others were prepared to come. On stepping from the cars I was surprised by the statement that the grand jury had adjourned. The Attorney-General was at Elberon; he could not have known its purpose and did not. It was without his concurrence or desire. It was, too, without mine. The fact that I was specially commissioned to take charge of the star-route cases was notorious. The commission was openly placed upon the records of the court. Neither from the district attorney nor from the grand jury or any member of it, or any one else, had I any notice or information, direct or indirect, of the proposed recess, nor could I have anticipated it. It was unusual and extraordinary. The recess was for a sufficient length of time to prevent an indictment being found in the case, as was at that time supposed, within three years from the inception of the alleged conspiracy. It thus placed the plea of the statute of limitations in the hands of the accused. Then the question at once arose, shall this case be lost or be left in a position where it may be by lapse of time. To prevent possible failure by time running against the case it was determined to file an information. That information was prepared with the least possible delay by laboring both night and day. It was then argued and it was decided that in this District an information would not lie for a misdemeanor; the decision being contrary to the prevalent decisions in all other localities with regard to misdemeanors in the United States courts.

That in brief is an account of the delay in connection with that prosecution and this paper I read in open court.

Q. Do you say you prepared a brief or papers in reference to an indictment in that case?—A. I did.

Q. What became of those papers?—A. I have them in my possession now at my office.

Q. You did not file them, then, with the Government?—A. They were never completed. The assassination of the President prevented their completion.

Q. Why did you not present those papers, or that evidence, at the next term of the grand jury?—A. We had not all the facts or witnesses as we supposed necessary to do it. Some of our employés were out engaged in obtaining the information, and then Mr. Bliss objected to my going before the grand jury, and complications arose.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Was there any blame to be attached to any one for the adjournment of that grand jury at the time it was adjourned?—A. Perhaps—desiring to be as charitable as I can——

Q. (Interposing.) We want the truth, not your charity.—A. Let me give you a combination of the two. It seems to me that the facts as I have stated them would attach blame——

Q. To whom?—A. To the district attorney.

Q. Mr. Corkhill?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any one else?—A. No one else, so far as I know.

Q. What do you think his purpose was in having the grand jury discharged?—A. I cannot tell his purpose. I can tell you what was the impression upon my mind at the time from the facts. It was that the grand jury was adjourned so as to prevent indictments being filed in the star route cases. And yet that may have been an incorrect and unkind inference. I am only presenting the facts. Your own intelligence can perhaps draw the proper inference more safely and impartially than I.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How long after that was it that your connection with the cases ceased?—A. My connection ceased in March, 1883.

Q. State what efforts you made in any of the cases to procure indictments between the time to which you have referred and the time when your services were dispensed with.—A. Mr. Bliss and Mr. Brewster came into the cases in September. When President Garfield passed away Mr. Bliss, in a comparatively short time, assumed the leadership in the cases and they were conducted chiefly by him. What I did in the mean time was to procure indictments against Mr. Lilley and Brott. I procured two indictments against Brott, if I remember correctly, and several against Lilley.

Q. At what term of the court?—A. On December 3, 1881. Mr. Lilley had been an Assistant Sixth Auditor of the Treasury in connection with Mr. McGrew. Mr. Brott was a contractor. Those indictments were for procuring by Brott approval of accounts by Lilley.

Q. What kind of claims?—A. Post-Office claims. Mr. Brott was a mail contractor.

Q. What was the charge against Mr. Lilley?—A. Mr. Lilley was the Auditor who passed through improperly, it was alleged in the indictments, for a pecuniary consideration, claims presented by Mr. Brott.

Q. What routes did they involve?—A. I do not remember the routes.

Q. What was done with those indictments?—A. They have been allowed to slumber untouched ever since.

Q. Are they still pending in court?—A. They are pending. They were antagonized to some extent by Mr. Woodward, and have received no attention since they were filed.

Q. Did you present the facts upon which these cases were found to Mr. Bliss?—A. The facts were presented to him at the Arlington Hotel in the presence of Mr. Gibson, and in my office, and he spent some time in examining the papers, and some time in looking over the form of indictments which had been prepared, and which were afterwards completed by Mr. Gibson and myself. It became necessary for me then to procure those indictments by indirection. I was not permitted to go before the grand jury, and I transmitted the papers to the foreman, Mr. Wilson (or whoever was the foreman at the time), and in that mode secured an indictment.

Q. Did you go before the grand jury yourself at all?—A. It was a somewhat significant fact perhaps, that I was never allowed to go before the grand jury.

Q. What reason was given to you for that?—A. In the first place, Mr. Corkhill claimed that he alone as district attorney was entitled to go before the grand jury. In that claim he was supported by Mr. Bliss, who said that he doubted very much whether an assistant attorney, either a special assistant to the Attorney-General or an assistant district attorney could go before the grand jury legally, and that if when indictments were found when he went before the grand jury it might justify a motion to quash. Over against that stands the significant fact that when Mr. Bliss passed actively into the control of the cases he unhesitatingly went before the grand jury, as well as Mr. Ker, by some arrangement.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Riddle ever went before the grand jury except as a special attorney?—A. Mr. Riddle went before the grand jury in what were called the safe-burglary cases.

Q. Was Colonel Corkhill then district attorney?—A. I think Judge Fisher was then the district attorney. But the precedent had been established here in that case, which was one of almost national character. Mr. Riddle went before the grand jury and examined the witnesses, and that there was no legal obstacle in the way of my going has been demonstrated since by the conduct of both Mr. Ker and Mr. Bliss.

Q. Upon what information did the grand jury find indictments in the Brott and Lilley case?—A. I prepared a series of questions in writing and transmitted them to the foreman of the grand jury. These questions brought out the necessary information upon which to base the indictments.

Q. Who prepared the indictments in those cases?—A. I did, with the aid of Mr. Gibson, and we called in Mr. Taggart, of the district attorney's office, to aid in the revision of them.

Q. Was the motion made to quash?—A. It never was; perhaps I ought to say that the evidence in those cases was so simple, so clear, and so conclusive that there could have been no doubt of conviction. It consisted of acknowledgments or statements in writing, chiefly of Brott. What became of these statements, I do not know. Mr. Gibson saw them. I have seen them. And the cases could not have occupied more than a day or two in trial.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Do you feel certain that you could get a conviction before a Washington jury with all that clear evidence?—A. My strongest belief is that I could have secured several convictions. Perhaps it is not improper for me to say that I am accustomed generally to succeed in both civil and criminal cases.

Q. A great many people believe that with a fair jury there would have been a conviction in the case that was tried. What is your notion about that?—A. My opinion is that the difficulty was not in the character of the jury, but in the mode in which the cases were prepared for trial and tried. There were as honorable men upon those two juries as the District or the nation can afford.

Q. Yes, but it takes twelve honorable men to render a verdict.—A. I have had large experience with the jurors of this District, and I think they would compare favorably with the jurors in any other locality. They are not ordinarily bad men. Indeed, when that question was recently presented in the proceedings against Ex-Senator Spencer, Judge Wylie took occasion to say that in a large experience with the jurors he never had seen, take them in the aggregate, a better class of men, and that it was a base slander on them to say that they were made up of bad or improper men.

Q. Did he refer to all the men on the jury?—A. He referred to the jurors generally. Now, if you will allow me to become more particular——

Q. Allow me to ask you another question. Will you name the honorable men who were on that jury—as honorable as are in this country?—A. There sits one of them, who was the foreman of the first jury—Mr.

William Dickson. I have been acquainted with him for a long time. We have been in almost bitter antagonism in politics. He is a Democrat; I am a Republican; but a more honorable, purer-minded, and upright gentleman I have never met.

Q. I have not disputed that; I simply ask for names.—A. William Dickson is one. The foreman of the other jury was Mr. Crane. He was a representative Republican.

Q. Who are the others?—A. I cannot now give you the names of all the others. I can get you a list of them, and by refreshing my recollection by that list I can tell you the character of every man on it.

Q. I have not sought in any way by any question to impugn the jury or anybody on it. I simply stated what was the impression of a great many people, and that, of course, I got from the newspapers as other people do.—A. Yes, sir; but I think it is an incorrect opinion.

Q. Let me ask you another question: What were the wrong methods of proceeding in the trials of the cases by which you think that verdict was lost?—A. The first answer would be this: In rendering the case that was presented too complicated. It embraced too many parties. It embraced Mr. Brady and Dorsey, and Mr. Dorsey's brother, and Rerdell and Miner, and several others, and embraced several different routes, so that it was impossible to present one clear distinctive case or view to the jury. The length of time that was occupied in the trial of the case would perhaps convey to your minds a development of that idea. In the next place the case that was selected in itself was not a strong case. Mr. Gibson, in connection with myself, to some extent, had prepared a careful and thorough analysis of the case, which, at my request, if I remember correctly, he took with him to Elberon. It was carefully read in the presence of Attorney-General MacVeagh and Mr. Bliss and Mr. Gibson and myself. At the close of the reading of that statement of the cases which contained all the essential facts connected with it, and to which few, if any, of importance were added on the trial, Mr. Bliss, turning to me, said, in a low tone, "Why, that case is weaker than I supposed it would be. It is not a case of any strength. I do not think there could be a conviction upon it." And subsequently he made the same remark to both Mr. Gibson and myself. It was that case so prepared, and so at that time pronounced a weak case, which was pressed forward as the first or test case in the prosecution. I endeavored to have other cases selected in which, after full examination, I felt or believed that there could be a conviction, at least cases which could be presented and tried within two or three weeks at the utmost. Mr. Gibson concurred with me and after consultation he addressed a letter to the Attorney-General urging that one of those cases, 40101, should be presented, but no attention was given to the request.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Do you think it was the intrinsic weakness of the case or the method of its trial which resulted in an acquittal?—A. To some extent both.

Q. How do you account for that weak case being taken instead of the "strong case," as you call it, which you have named?—A. I was about to give the only explanation that I could.

Q. Please be as brief as you can.—A. I will, and yet at the same time I want to give you all the facts that I should. In my office, in speaking of that case, when I endeavored to direct Mr. Bliss's attention to others, he said that he intended to try the Dorsey case. Referring to another case in which one Boone was involved, he said that he intended to try that; that Dorsey and Boone were the "head devils," and he intended to pursue them first. There was unquestionably manifest personal feeling on the part of Mr. Bliss toward Mr. Dorsey and toward Boone.

Q. Do you think that Mr. Bliss decided to try that case on account of his personal enmity to Mr. Dorsey?—A. To a considerable extent, if his conversation with me developed the feelings of his heart. Now, the case was not intrinsically strong as presented, because it was too complicated. No twelve men could retain the essential facts. Instead of having a few leading facts, strong and vigorous in themselves, to present to the jury, whatever of such facts there may have been, were overlaid by a complication of incidents.

Q. Mr. Cook, what would have been your verdict if you had been those twelve men?—A. As the case was presented, my verdict would have been that the men were not proven guilty.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE :

Q. The Scotch verdict "not proven"?—A. Yes, sir; in other words, under our law, I would be compelled to have brought in a verdict of not guilty.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. When you retired from those cases did you turn over to the Attorney-General the evidence you had collected and the brief you had made, with the recommendations as to who should be indicted?—A. I never had the evidence in my personal possession. I refused to take out original papers from the Post-Office Department. When I needed them I invariably had them brought to my office by a messenger and they were returned again. I never allowed an original paper to remain in my office overnight. I made no recommendation to the Attorney-General because I was satisfied that any recommendation from me, after he became Attorney-General, would be useless.

Q. You then hadn't the confidence of the Attorney-General?—A. Originally I had his confidence and his eulogy. I had his confidence when I retired, and perhaps my best way to answer that question is to refer——

Q. (Interposing.) Let me ask another question. I am satisfied with that answer as far as it goes. If you had the confidence and the eulogy of the Attorney-General, why do you say a recommendation of yours would not have any weight?—A. Because the Attorney-General had informed me distinctly on two or three occasions when I approached him with regard to some of the spasmodic actions of Mr. Bliss, that I must consider that he was indebted largely to Mr. Bliss for his position; that Mr. Bliss was an intimate friend of President Arthur's, and that as a consequence he would be compelled to place Mr. Bliss in control of the cases and allow him to conduct them in the mode which he deemed best.

Q. What significance did the fact that Mr. Bliss was a friend of President Arthur have in that connection?—A. The significance was this: that because he was a friend of President Arthur's the suggestions and views of Mr. Bliss in the conduct of the cases must be carried out, and that suggestions that might come from me would, of course, be of little or no importance if they antagonized those of Mr. Bliss. Then Mr. Bliss had assumed to act wholly independently of me and ceased to hold any consultation with me.

Q. Am I to understand from your statement that President Arthur put Mr. Bliss in command over the Attorney-General?—A. That is unquestionably what the understanding would fairly be. And associated with it is an additional fact. President Arthur, in his message, said that he had instructed the distinguished attorneys in charge of the star-route cases to press them with all possible vigor. President Arthur never spoke to me in relation to the star-route cases, never saw me in relation to the star-route cases; I was never able to obtain an interview with him in relation to the star-route cases. And I therefore concluded, regarding him as a truthful President, that when he referred to having consultations with the "distinguished attorneys" connected with the star-route cases he did not include me.

Q. Did you ever have any talk with President Garfield, while he was President, upon the star route cases?—A. Yes, sir; I had on several different occasions, and received special instructions from him as to how I should proceed, what I should do, and what reports I should make from time to time to him.

Q. Did President Garfield evince earnest desire for the thorough prosecution of the "star-routers"?—A. He evinced an earnestness to pursue any one and every one who might be improperly involved in the star-route cases, irrespective of persons.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. You have spoken of these interviews in the first part of your examination?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There were four of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the last one Mr. James, the Postmaster-General, was present?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he present at any of the others?—A. No, sir; they were private personal interviews.

Q. Mr. James, I think, left the impression with us that he introduced you to President Garfield.—A. I observed that, but it was a mistake.

Q. You did not require any introduction?—A. I did not; I ought not. I was chairman of the Republican committee here for many years, and was personally acquainted with Mr. Garfield, but on that occasion I stepped back as a matter of etiquette to let Mr. James speak to the President first, and he probably inferred from that act of etiquette on my part that I was awaiting an introduction, and probably did say to the President, "Mr. Cook."

Q. An occurrence which frequently happens, I suppose, when people are introduced?—A. Well, ordinarily I am a modest and retiring—

Q. Was there any other person present at the other interviews with the President?—A. No, sir. The other interviews were distinctly personal, and from the stand-point that I have mentioned that the President might receive direct from me communications about these cases.

Q. I understand you to say that you prepared the complaints in the cases of Brott and Lilley?—A. Yes, sir; in connection with Mr. Gibson.

Q. Did Mr. Bliss have anything to do with them?—A. He looked over them to some extent—revised the first drafts to some extent.

Q. Did he draw them?—A. Oh, no. Those complaints were drawn in my office, chiefly by Mr. Gibson and myself, and were looked over by Mr. Taggart, of the district attorney's office.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE :

Q. Up to the death of President Garfield you thought it was the purpose of the administration and the persons in authority to prosecute with vigor all the parties concerned?—A. I had no doubt of it whatever.

Q. Are you still of that opinion touching those in authority since the death of President Garfield? And, if not, is your present opinion based upon facts?—A. I stated, shortly after my retirement, openly in the press, that I doubted very much whether the cases would be prosecuted to a successful termination; that I doubted whether that was the purpose of Mr. Bliss. I have never changed my views upon that subject, whether they are correct or incorrect.

Q. Did you believe at that time that you were in possession of facts which amounted to real knowledge, and which justified your conclusion?—A. I did; and I can furnish some of those facts.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. State them.—A. If you will allow me a little kind indulgence, I would like to put in at this point my letter of resignation, addressed to the Attorney-General, and dated March 14, 1882. It is as follows:

[William A. Cook, attorney-at-law.—Lock-box 71.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 14, 1882.

SIR: Allow me to call your attention to the fact that for some time past I have had under consideration the question of my continuance as a special assistant attorney of the United States in the prosecution of the star-route cases; and I have finally concluded to tender my resignation of the appointment conferred upon me by commission dated June 1, 1881.

Respect for you and justice to myself require that I should at least refer to some of the reasons which have influenced me in this determination. Without any solicitation on my part, I was selected by the late Attorney-General, with the concurrence of the late President, to assist in the prosecution of the star-route cases and to take immediate charge of them.

After considerable reflection, candor of statements, and mutual understandings, I consented to accept the position kindly tendered me, and, shortly after the date of my appointment, entered upon the discharge of the duties connected with it. For successive months I devoted most of my time to the investigation of various cases and the preparation necessary for their early prosecution by the ordinary mode of indictments. At the request of President Garfield, and until the period of his assassination, I had frequent interviews with him, as well as almost daily consultations with your immediate predecessor, and was careful to take no step which had not their direct or implied sanction.

Shortly before you and Mr. Bliss, in September last, were retained, the preparations which had been in progress were so far completed that some of the cases were in a condition to be submitted to the grand jury, but unexpected circumstances and contingencies prevented this being done as promptly as was desired. The result was that a criminal information against Thomas J. Brady and others was filed in connection with mail route No. 40101, from Prescott, Ariz., to Santa Fé, N. Mex.

I cordially united with you and Mr. Bliss in the argument on a motion which was made to quash the information, and endeavored, as far as time and opportunity allowed, to acquaint you both with the facts of this and associated cases, and, while holding myself ready to perform any required work, I have not voluntarily evaded any responsibilities.

It is manifest, however, that my relation to the cases has become essentially changed. Having been selected by the late administration, this was to have been expected. Within the terms and intention of my appointment, I temporarily represented it, acted in accordance with its wishes, and was responsible primarily to it. These considerations strongly inclined me to retire from the cases immediately after the death of President Garfield and the practical withdrawal shortly thereafter of Mr. MacVeagh from his office. But I was induced to remain from different considerations, and among them, because I had good reason to believe that you desired me to do so, and because it was supposed my retirement might interfere with the finding of indictments in cases which seemed to me to demand judicial inquiry and determination.

A number of indictments have, however, been found, chiefly in cases selected by Mr. Bliss, and it is to be presumed that he has become familiar with these (as well as others) by an investigation of facts and papers mostly procured, classified, and prepared prior to September last, and perhaps otherwise. Whether the strongest and most important cases have been included in the indictments, it is not for me to now determine. But without referring to other facts and reasons the present seems to be the most appropriate time for my retirement, and I respectfully submit the matters for your consideration and action. I need scarcely assure you that I expect to always entertain the highest regard for you, both personally and professionally. I will be pleased to hear from you at your earliest convenience. Wishing you every possible good,

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. A. COOK,
Special Assistant Attorney, United States.

HON. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General, United States.

I received an answer from the Attorney-General in the following terms:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., March 17, 1882.

SIR: I have received your letter dated the 15th of March, 1882. It was a surprise to me, and I could not see the necessity for it. I have considered your proposed withdrawal from the star-route cases, as submitted to me in that letter. I have read with care the reasons which you say rule you. As they are the conclusions of your own judgment and relate exclusively to yourself, I will not do more than accept them as they are presented. With me they must be final. It is true, as you have stated, that you were selected by my predecessor, as Mr. Bliss and myself were.

Had I not been advanced to the position I now hold I would have continued to act for the Government, as I had believed you would and as Mr. Bliss has acted—not complicating my relation as counsel with the supposed policy of any administration. I did not think, and I do not now believe, that the position of counsel in those cases has the remotest connection with any question of political administration. They are public cases, not political cases; they are pro bono publico; they were confided to all of us as lawyers, and not as politicians. Since I have had the control of them as the Attorney-General, I have treated them as public cases; and I have been instructed by the President to give them my vigilant attention, and to see that they were prosecuted with diligence and with earnestness to a practical result; and those instructions I have, before this, as an act of public duty and as an act of personal duty to him, made known and had announced.

I cannot permit the implication you appear to raise by your reference to your having been retained by the late Administration, to pass without objection. You were not responsible to any particular Administration, as a political responsibility. Nor were these cases, or are they, to be confounded or associated with any idea of policy supposed to be connected with any Administration. They are instituted for the purposes of justice, and justice only. They will be conducted by counsel upon principles that regulate the orderly administration of justice, and not with reference to the wishes or policies of any President, no matter what his name may be.

Had you continued in the cases and labored in them, your usefulness would have been appreciated. Mr. Bliss, to whom the matter was committed at the instance of the Post-Office Department, and by whom he was especially invited, has exercised his peculiar skill in methodizing and organizing and executing all that was necessary to prepare the way for securing the binding over and indictment of the accused, and he did secure those results.

The indictments, because of their fundamental importance, I myself caused to be prepared by Mr. Ker, of Philadelphia, a gentleman conspicuously experienced as a draftsman of criminal pleadings; he is an acknowledged eminent expert in that branch of the law. Those indictments have been found, and they are now soon to be tried before a traverse jury. At this juncture, on the eve of their trial, you announce to me that you propose to withdraw from these cases. You say that this is the most appropriate time, and “submit the matter to me for my consideration and action.” Of that you must judge, both as to the necessity for the withdrawal and the fitness of the time. All that I can say is to acknowledge your request and accept it, and to return my thanks for your civil expressions of personal and professional respect for me.

I am, sir, truly, &c.,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER.

Col. WILLIAM A. COOK,
Washington, D. C.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. That is the letter of the Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the Attorney-General at the time?—A. Mr. Brewster; and in that letter he states distinctly that the matter had been committed to Mr. Bliss by the Post-Office Department. Now, I said I would go a step or two further. In an interview with Mr. Bliss in this city, March 18, 1882, which was published in the Post, I find this. The reporter asks him:

Did you anticipate Colonel Cook's withdrawal?

No; it was an entire surprise to me.

Had there been any trouble between him and yourself?

Nothing of the kind. No unkind word or word of difference has ever passed between us. I might perhaps fairly stop here (continued Colonel Bliss), were it not that Colonel Cook has allowed to go to the public an assertion which I think correctly states what he said and which involves a personal attack upon me.

That was simply in relation to his purchase of the Republican.

Have you recently advised with Colonel Cook in regard to the cases?

He had just said that there was no trouble between us.

No; I have not advised with him in regard to my intended action in every case. Circumstances arose which led me to think it was better to procure the arrest of certain persons before Colonel Cook had any knowledge of the proceedings. I laid the facts before Mr. Brewster, and was directed by him to take that course. The parties were arrested and have since been indicted. I have not sought to "freeze" Colonel Cook out of the cases, or Mr. Gibson. The fact is that Gibson voluntarily retired after his work had been finished. His work was a work of investigation; when that was completed the cases passed into the sphere of prosecution. Mr. Gibson obviously had no further scope for his abilities. As to Mr. Cook, without enlarging, the fact is that I have for some weeks stood in the way of his dismissal. It is true that I procured the discharge of the detectives.

Those were detectives that I had employed, and they were discharged without my knowledge and others substituted. They were valuable men.

I did not know that they were employed in the cases until after I had been concerned in them many months. I never knew what they did, or that they did anything, and it was only when bills for their services accidentally came to my notice that I first knew of their employment. I could see no use for detectives in the cases at all, and certainly not for the men whom he employed—men whose names even he did not venture to give upon the vouchers which he presented for their payment. There is somewhere an intimation, alleged to proceed from Colonel Cook, that he remained in the cases because he considered it important to do so for the purpose of affecting the action of the grand jury.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. What were the circumstances which led Mr. Bliss to have certain arrests made before he let you know about the evidence?—A. Will you allow me to present one more statement of Mr. Bliss's in another paper? It comes in here appropriately, and then I will come to that question. At the same time or shortly afterwards, in the New York Commercial Advertiser, there was an interview with Mr. Bliss, from which I will read:

Col. George Bliss was seen at his office to-day, and in reply to inquiries said, "About a month ago I became dissatisfied with the manner in which Colonel Cook was proceeding with the star-route cases, and I did not like his associations by any means. I told Attorney-General Brewster so, and he wanted to relieve him at once, but I said no. He still insisted, after being spoken to by the Attorney-General, in wanting to push certain of the cases for trial where the evidence was not strong enough—of course for effect, in my judgment—and finding that the Attorney-General supported me I supposed he became more jealous of me. Hence his resignation."

In regard to Cook's intimation that the cases would not be prosecuted Colonel Bliss said:

"The cases will be pushed forward for trial as rapidly as possible, Dorsey, Brady, or any one else not being considered. Politics will not enter the case, and simply justice will be called for."

He said associate counsel in Cook's place would soon be engaged. He was not disposed to say who it would be until the gentleman's name was made public. Colonel Bliss expects the trials will come off in the May term, and he wants to get them off his hands as soon as possible. In conclusion Colonel Bliss said, "You may say I advised the Attorney-General to get rid of Colonel Cook."

There are the two papers, the one directly contradicting the statement of the other. And now your question if you please.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. What were the circumstances which led Mr. Bliss to have certain arrests made before he let you know about the evidence?—A. He can speak for himself. This is a letter from Mr. Bliss to me dated—

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL: By direction of the Attorney-General I have prepared informations in the police court against Boone and a half dozen of his bogus bidders, and shall in the morning apply for warrants for them.

I designedly did not notify you of this proceeding, because I thought from your past relations to Boone it might embarrass you. With this knowledge now given you are at liberty to assume either position that you choose, that is, that you know nothing about it, or that you know all about it. Do whichever commends itself to you.

Yours, truly,

GEORGE BLISS.

That was simply, in one part, a commission issued to me by Mr. Bliss, to lie in connection with the cases and say that I knew all about it, or that I knew nothing about it. I went immediately to the Attorney-General and showed him this letter and asked him whether he had directed Mr. Bliss to proceed without any consultation with me or any of the other attorneys. He said he had not, but that Mr. Bliss had had some consultation with him, and probably inferred that he had given such authority. I said to the Attorney-General that the time had come when it was important for me to understand my relation to the cases; that it was useless for me to remain in them if I was not to be consulted, and I could assume no responsibility for the failure of any of the cases unless I was. He said to me, "Now, old fellow, don't get in a bad humor;" and related to me a Grecian fable——

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, do we want all this?

The CHAIRMAN. This relates to the good faith of Mr. Bliss in his action in connection with these cases.

The WITNESS. (Continuing.) He said to me (he repeated it again), "You know I am largely indebted to Mr. Bliss for my appointment. He is a particular friend of President Arthur and I must do things accordingly, that I otherwise might not do." I said to him distinctly, "I wish the Attorney-General to understand that I have not sunk so low, or become so degraded, professionally or personally, as to accept a commission from Mr. Bliss, or any one else, to lie in the star-route cases," and I left him.

Q. What were the circumstances which led Mr. Bliss to have certain arrests made before he let you know about the evidence?—A. I supposed I was giving the circumstances, all of them. I addressed a letter to Mr. Bliss, stating that I had seen the Attorney-General, and that he did not concur with him; that he had directed him to proceed without consultation. I also stated to him that his reference to my relations with Mr. Boone was without foundation in fact; that I had no relations to Boone which would prevent me from prosecuting him or any one else, fully and unhesitatingly. Mr. Bliss then went to New York and sent me a note, stating that he expected to take up these cases in a few days, and if I desired, he would be pleased to have me participate in them. I did so. They were delayed for months, and finally, when he was absent in New York, Mr. Gibson and I made a point or two that I was desirous of making while Mr. Bliss was away, and the cases were concluded in his absence, and the parties bound over to court.

Q. What parties were they?—A. Mr. Boone was the chief party. They were called the “bond” cases, the “straw bonds.”

Q. Have those parties been indicted?—A. Yes, sir. Prior to the pursuit of Mr. Boone in the police court, I had been, with the authority of Attorney-General MacVeagh, engaged in endeavoring to obtain information from Boone, and had procured considerable, as he was very well posted in regard to the cases. I put him in communication with Mr. Bliss, at the Arlington Hotel, with a hope that he would be able to conclude the arrangement which I had made to make him a witness. A difference arose between them, and Boone came away very greatly dissatisfied. He was then indicted, but when the Brady, Dorsey et al. case was finally tried, Mr. Boone was placed in the position, to some extent, I had at first attempted to have him in (though less favorably for the Government than he would have been otherwise), and was used as a witness, with the understanding that the cases against him should be nolle prossed, and when they were concluded that was done, and the cases against Boone were dismissed; so that all the proceedings in the police court became, as respects Boone, entirely nugatory.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Who conducted that final prosecution against Boone?—A. Mr. Bliss.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. What were the associations referred to in that letter of Mr. Bliss?—A. They could have been no other than those to which I have just referred. The letters will show.

Q. Association with whom?—A. With Mr. Boone in an attempt to obtain from him information which might be used in the prosecution of the star-route cases.

Q. That is all?—A. Yes, sir. There never was any peculiar relation existing between Mr. Boone and myself.

Q. Did you return to the Government officers the copies of papers sent to you?—A. I did; and I hold the receipt of the Attorney-General for them. I thought I had it here, but I do not see it among these papers. I will produce it later, though.

Q. Copies of all the papers sent to you?—A. Yes, sir; copies of all the papers. Here is the receipt. There was a demand made upon me by Mr. Bliss for papers, and I returned all the papers and all the fragments of papers that I had, not to him, but the Attorney-General. He stated afterwards in a communication, that the papers were of no consequence whatever and would be of no utility to any one. Nevertheless I returned them.

Q. Did you take copies of those papers before you returned them to the Government?—A. I did not. They were of no manner of use to me, and, as Mr. Harris stated, to any one else. The most of them were mere abstracts or notes in relation to routes. This is the receipt.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, ———, 188—.

Received from William A. Cook, esq., a package which appears to contain the following-named papers, but which I must hereafter examine: Route 44154, part 2; route 44154, part 1; route 38135, route 38140, route 34149, route 38113, route 44140, route 38134, part 1; route 38134, part 2; route 44155, part 1; route 44155, part 2; route 34124; route 38135, part 2; route 35051, route 33264, route 34124, route 35013, route 35015, route 34042, route 35043, route 33259, route 35042, route 35015, route 44160, route 44119, route 38152, route 44140, route 35051.

Copies of letters of George F. Brott and Fred. B. Lilley.

Copy of contract of John A. Walsh with the United States.

Copy of contract of George L. McDonough with the United States.

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Q. Did you have copies of those papers made before they were returned?—A. I had not copies made of any papers.

Q. Were any copies made by anybody before they were returned by you?—A. Not with my knowledge.

Q. Did they go out of your hands so that any one might have made copies without your knowledge?—A. They were never out of my hands so that copies could have been made, so far as I know.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. While they were in your possession were they kept in your office?—A. They were kept in my office.

Q. For what length of time?—A. The copies were kept there probably, some of them, for several months.

Q. In what manner kept?—A. They were kept, a part of them, in a safe and a part of them in a drawer locked up in my office.

Q. Did any other person than yourself have access to the safe?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or to the drawer?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then while they were contained in either of those places no person could have copied them without your knowledge?—A. Unless they were taken away clandestinely.

Q. Could that have been effected without your knowing it?—A. It might have been effected without my knowing it, for I have been informed credibly that a proposition was made on behalf of the Government to go into my office and gather up all papers that might be supposed to be connected with the star-route cases.

Q. Did you ever leave any of them exposed in your office while you were absent from it?—A. I do not think I ever did. One answer I should correct. As to the safe, my partner at times had access to the safe.

Q. Who was C. C. Cole?—A. He was my partner.

Q. Did any of the papers, or copies of papers, which you had received from the Department of Justice, so far as you know, reach the hands of either of the defendants in the star-route cases?—A. They did not.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Did any one else except yourself have the copies?—A. No, sir; the copies were made for my individual use.

Q. How could they reach the defendants without your knowledge?—A. They might. Sometimes days or weeks would elapse and I would not look at papers in my office.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. But you have no knowledge that they were ever possessed of any of those papers?—A. I have not. It is a suggestion that has been made on various occasions by interested parties. I mean parties interested on behalf of the Government, and apparently anxious to account for its failure. All statements or insinuations that I retained papers or had copies made, or furnished any to the defendants or any other persons, are utterly false.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you see some articles that were recently published in the New York Sun?—A. I did.

Q. Were the papers from which those articles were taken ever in your possession?—A. Never.

Q. Did you ever see those articles before in manuscript, or in any other form?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is that the first knowledge you had of the existence of such papers?—A. No, sir; because part of those papers related to the Brott case, if I remember correctly.

Q. You had a part of those papers then, so far as they related to the Brott case?—A. Yes, sir; but so far as Mr. Ellis is concerned, I never saw any statement made by Brott involving Mr. Ellis. If such papers existed, they were never shown to me.

Q. But you did have certain papers involving Brott?—Yes, sir; on which I had the indictments found, and of which I had copies made.

Q. But in the papers which you had, or which you saw, you say there was no mention of the facts which appeared in the Sun, so far as Mr. Ellis is concerned?—A. No, sir; and I am quite sure that quite a number of the pretended facts in the article in the Sun were incorrect.

Q. Do you know how the matters that were published in the Sun became public?—A. I do not.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Did you ever turn over to the Government the result of the work of your detectives?—A. Invariably. I used that information.

Q. Did you turn it over to the Government so that they had it in their possession after you became disconnected with those cases?—A. I had no such information.

Q. You have testified that you employed certain detectives, and that those detectives were discharged.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did those detectives bring to you information in regard to those cases?—A. While I was actively connected with them they did.

Q. Did you turn that information over to the Government?—A. That information I used as far as I could; utilized it in the progress of the cases. There was nothing to turn over.

Q. Was not that information in writing?—A. No, sir; it was not in writing.

Q. Was it not put into some shape for you?—A. No, sir; it was not put in any shape in writing.

Q. What became of those detectives who were discharged?—A. Most of them remained about the city of Washington, and were made objects of investigation, according to bills put in and certified by the Secretary of the Treasury by Mr. Bliss and his associates.

Q. Were any of them ever employed afterwards by the defense?—A. I am not aware that any of them were.

Q. Was John Sargent so employed?—A. I have no knowledge of his being so employed.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Please name the detectives you employed.—A. I had Mr. Sargent; I had to some extent Mr. James Croggin; I availed myself largely of the services of Mr. Newcombe, who was generally employed; of Mr. Jerome J. Hinds, and Col. William B. Moore, and incidentally of some others.

Q. Were all those discharged?—A. They were discharged by Mr. Bliss, as he states in his interview, without any consultation whatever with me.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. You have read the interviews with Mr. Bliss, in one of which he approves of your action, while in the other he does not; which of those interviews occurred first?—A. The one in the Post, the one I first read. I read them chronologically.

Q. What was the date of it?—A. The 18th of March.

Q. What was the date of the later one?—A. That one is of the date of March 21.

Q. So that between the 18th and 21st of March Mr. Bliss seems to have changed his mind in regard to the value of your services?—A. Yes, sir; and with regard to the part that he took respecting my connection with the case; in the one interview stating that he had upheld me, prevented my removal; in the other that he had advised it; in the one that there had never been any difficulty between us; in the other that he was dissatisfied with my course. And there were other similar interviews which he gave out at that time.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In reference to these detectives, can you state whether any of the reports of the investigations of the detectives whom you employed were written out and filed with the Department?—A. In the first place there was no money whatever to be used in relation to the star-route cases, and for some time, at the request of Attorney-General MacVeagh, I supplied the necessary money myself. Afterwards I made out some bills and took receipts from the several persons I had employed. Some I never took receipts from, but paid them out of my own funds.

Q. Have you there a memorandum of the amounts which you paid to the detectives?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. GIBSON:

Q. Did you not propose, after the information was quashed, to proceed before the police court?—A. Oh, yes. I proposed after consultation with Mr. Gibson, after the information was quashed by Judge Cox, to proceed at once and vigorously with all the cases before the police court, including the "straw-bond" cases. I submitted that proposition to Mr. Bliss, and he earnestly antagonized it. He regarded it as improper and useless. I was therefore surprised, of course, when I found that without consultation he had gone into the police court and instituted proceedings there which were carried on for a considerable time at heavy cost to the Government.

Q. You also stated that subsequently, in Mr. Bliss's absence, those cases were concluded.—A. Yes.

Q. Might they not have been concluded weeks previous upon the same points?—A. I think upon the points raised that they could have been concluded within a week after they were commenced.

Q. They ran on several weeks?—A. Yes, sir, several weeks; indefinitely almost.

Adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, March 12, 1884.

WILLIAM A. COOK recalled and further examined.

The WITNESS. I wish, with the permission of the committee, to make a slight correction. I stated yesterday, if I remember correctly, that I was offered, through Colonel Wood, $25,000 as a retainer in behalf of the defendants in the star-route cases pending my acceptance of the offer of the United States through Mr. MacVeagh. The amount tendered was $20,000, not $25,000.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE (in the chair):

Question. Please begin at the point which you had reached yesterday in the history of this case, and proceed with it. I think you were speaking then of proceedings pending at the police court.—Answer. Yes, sir. I had stated that they were instituted without any consultation whatever with me. I had referred to the letter which I had received from Mr. Bliss of date of January 5, 1882. On the 6th of January I made a reply to him, in which I stated, among other things:

I have supposed that as assistant counsel of the United States it was our purpose to consult fully in relation to the star-route cases, to act in harmony, and after doing so, to submit the results of our labors to the deliberation of the Attorney-General. This I certainly have endeavored to do. It would indeed be a surprise to me if the Attorney-General had directed you to proceed with any of the cases, in the police court or elsewhere, without any consultation, suggestion, or information to me, or by concealing your plans and action from me in the progress of the star-route cases. Allow me to inquire if I am to understand that the Attorney-General so directed? I regret that these proceedings have been instituted in the police court without even notice to me of the intention to do so; nor am I aware of any relation between Mr. Boone and me, or any others who may be involved in the cases, to prevent the freest consultation with me, and the most active co-operation on my part.

Q. Did you give the names of the gentlemen who were arrested?—A. Part of them; there was Boone, Cabel, Herringer, Jackson, and a lady named Armstrong, who was an inmate of Mr. Boone's family.

Q. Do you remember the day that they were arraigned at the police court?—A. No, sir; not certainly; but my letter or reference to it will enable me to determine. It was on the 7th of January.

Q. And that examination, you say, was pending until it was finally terminated by action of yourself and Mr. Gibson's in the absence of Mr. Bliss?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Bliss answered that letter and stated that he would not say that the Attorney-General had absolutely directed what he had done, but that he understood it fully, and on the 11th of January I sent him another letter, in which I said, among other things, that—

I entered after mature consideration into the star-route cases on the part of the Government, rejecting a large and liberal offer of employment from some of the defendants. Until your employment, Mr. Brewster's, I acted largely alone in connection with the Attorney-General, and devoted time and attention to the cases to a greater extent than you suppose. My choice of employment was deliberate, and as far as possible I shall try to discharge my duties while I remain in the case. That I felt hurt, not irritated, when I learned what you had done and the reasons assigned for proceeding in the police court without any consultation with me, is true; and I think it was a mistake not to inform me, especially as immediately after the decision of Judge Cox I had suggested vigorous proceedings in that court, which you opposed. But all this becomes immaterial now. I will co-operate with you as far as I possibly can in the police court, but it will be just for you to remember that I have in vain endeavored to see the original of the Tidball report and other papers. Indeed, let me kindly and candidly suggest, not because "I am on my ear" [quoting an expression in one of his letters], but in the interest of the cases which have been committed to us, whether it would not be wiser and better if you would consult with me more fully and seek information from me rather than from others who may, after all understand less about the cases than I do. At all times you will find me ready and willing to do so, and by so doing I think you will be saved considerable labor, and perhaps in the end be better satisfied with the results of the case.

After receiving my first letter Mr. Bliss sent me one from New York, saying that if I saw fit I could appear in the police court.

Q. Where is the letter that Mr. Bliss sent you?—A. It was in the following terms:

NEW YORK, January 9, 1882.

MY DEAR COLONEL: The examination of Boone in the police court is set for Wednesday at 12. I hope you will feel like taking part. I shall be in Washington Monday a. m.

Yours truly,

GEO. BLISS.

P. S.—If you decide to take part please notify Post-Office Inspector Tidball.

I at once proceeded to take an active part in the cases in the police court, and, as I have heretofore stated, after what I regarded as an unnecessary delay of the cases and a useless production of what was designated as evidence, in Mr. Bliss' absence they were disposed of by having the parties bound over to court. That, I believe, concluded the transaction.

Q. After the arraignment of the prisoners, until they were finally adjudged by the court as probably guilty, were they held to bail?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the recognizances were returnable to the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir; and indictments were found against several of them which have never been prosecuted, but the indictment found against Mr. Boone, who was the representative man of the number, was, immediately after the second trial of Mr. Brady, Dorsey, and company nolle prossed, as I stated yesterday.

Q. If they gave their bond on arraignment for their appearance before the grand jury, what was the occasion of the continuance of the examination at the police court?—A. There was none; but one reason that was incidentally assigned was that the time had arrived for entering into new contracts on the part of the Post-Office Department, and that it was important that those contracts should be entered into upon superior bonds. On the other hand, it was claimed by Mr. Boone and some of his associates that the proceeding was instituted against him and others to prevent them competing for the obtaining of contracts, and that it was in the interest of other contractors or other bidders.

Q. Were there any facts developed on the examination at the police court that were not within the full knowledge of the attorneys for the prosecution, and which might not have been communicated in an intelligible and reliable way to the Post-Office Department?—A. None whatever. All the facts lay in the papers of the Post-Office Department, and at that time, if I remember correctly, official reports had been made in relation to those cases. Those had been secretly made out upon evidence taken in the Post-Office Department, and was called the Tidball report.

Q. Then, if I understand you aright, you assert that the examination at the police court was neither in the interest of the prosecution of the criminal case itself, nor did it tend to aid the Post-Office Department in the more intelligent and safe execution of the duties that devolved upon it.—A. I think there was no actual necessity for the proceeding in the police court. The cases could have been taken at once to the grand jury.

Q. About how many days were devoted to that examination?—A. Well, if I remember correctly, well on to two months.

Q. And those two months entered into the per diem charge of Mr. Bliss as an attorney for the Government in the star-route cases?—A. Yes, sir; and perhaps in that connection I might as well state that while his bill for that period, if I remember correctly, extended to five or six thousand dollars, and was allowed by the Attorney-General, I prepared a bill from January to March, two and a half months, for $2,500, and the Attorney-General cut it down to $1,000; and in doing that, after some considerable delay and correspondence, he assigned as a reason, in a letter dated the 23d of November, 1882, that the bill I had presented for $2,500 was excessive; that he could not allow it; that it was greater compensation than was allowed cabinet officers or members of the Supreme Court. To this I replied in a letter to the the Attorney-General dated, November 27, 1882, in which I said:

I have received your communication of the 23d instant in reference to my bill as special attorney for the United States in the star-route cases. The bill rendered included the months of January and February and seventeen days of March and was for $2,500. The bill was for services actually rendered under official employment. It was duly sworn to. Of the amount claimed you allow $1,000. In doing so you assign your reasons. It is, I think, due to myself that this should be briefly noticed. It is perhaps, too, due to you. I cannot deny that the compensation included in the bill exceeds the pay of a cabinet officer or a judge of the Supreme Court, but that the pay of a cabinet officer or a judge of the Supreme Court is a standard for the compensation of an attorney-at-law especially employed in important cases I cannot admit. It certainly was not the rule adopted in regard to your own compensation in the star-route cases nor in determining the compensation of Mr. Bliss, Mr. Merrick, and Mr. Ker.

I then go on to say that it will not be disputed that for the period covered by my bill Mr. Bliss has been allowed a very much greater compensation, and to express the hope that the Attorney-General may, on mature consideration, change his mind as to my account.

That bill which I rendered was for the same general class of work performed by Bliss; and, as you will observe, the Attorney-General himself set up the standard of compensation or pay which should be allowed in the star-route cases.

Q. Are you familiar with the portion of time of employment assigned to Mr. Bliss; for instance, from the last of December until the termination of the time at which you put in your claim?—A. His services were during that period also substantially the same in character as those rendered by me.

Q. Had you devoted your attention exclusively to the business of the Government?—A. Exclusively to the business of the Government, involving to some extent another case of United States vs. Howgate, which had been placed in my care, and in which I saved the Government probably about $75,000.

Q. Do you know what the fact was in that respect as to other counsel?—A. I do not.

Q. Was Mr. Bliss present in Washington during that entire time?—A. No, sir; he was repeatedly absent. He would come and remain a few days, then go to New York, and come back again at his pleasure. During the period of his absence Mr. Gibson and I attended to the cases.

Q. Did you become possessed of any new facts touching any of the cases with which you had to do through the instrumentality of Mr. Bliss or Mr. Merrick?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you watch the progress of the trials of the star-route cases after you had ceased to be connected with them?—A. I was almost necessarily in the court-house every few days, and observed them with some degree of interest.

Q. Did you read the published reports of the proceedings?—A. I sketched them; glanced at them.

Q. What do you say as to there being evidence in the trial of the discovery of new facts other than those which you possessed and communicated to counsel before leaving the cases?—A. There were no material new facts. I cannot recall any material fact important to the case that was developed in the evidence that had not been secured prior to the appointment of Mr. Bliss, and while Mr. Gibson was connected with the cases.

Q. When the examination of Boone and his companions was inaugurated before the police court, did you advise against it?—A. No, sir. I could not; the determination was formed independent of me to carry the case on in the police court.

Q. After it came to your knowledge, did you advise against it?—A. No, sir; I did not. I was placed in this delicate position——

Mr. STEWART. I do not think there is any necessity to make any explanation. This gentleman is a witness.

Q. Did you approve of it?—A. I would not have instituted it at the time that it was commenced; but it is proper, if you will permit me, to say that the proceeding having been instituted in the manner it was, and having been placed in the delicate position of refusing my co-operation, I felt that I could do nothing else with justice to the cases or honorably to myself but manifest my willingness to participate in the hearing of them before the police court.

Q. You remarked that there was a multiplicity of unimportant evidence introduced; to what did you refer in that remark?—A. There was one or two simple questions contained in the case, and that was whether there was a probable case arising from the defective bail. There were handcarts and loads of papers brought in, going into all matters connected with the cases, which, in a preliminary examination, I did not regard as at all important in the case. I supposed the inquiry before the police court lay in a few important and pertinent facts.

Q. Being possessed of the facts that told against the defendants, what do you say as to the length of time that would be required in a proper presentation of the case before that court?—A. In a condensed and incisive form the case ought to have been presented within two days, so far as the Government was concerned.

Q. But instead of that it was continued through two months or more?—A. About that time—through several weeks.

Q. What do you say in regard to the length of time that was occupied in the trial of those cases on the indictments in the higher court?—A. The trial of those cases corresponded in that respect with the examination in the police court.

Q. Was it unnecessarily protracted?—A. I think it was unnecessarily protracted. The indictment, a copy of which I hold in my hand, embraced a number of separate routes, and every minute particular of those routes was gone into. I do not know how far I may express an opinion—if I err the committee or some member will check me—but no criminal case of the magnitude that these were can ordinarily be successfully presented so as to secure a conviction without a grouping of a few concise and pregnant facts. The mere incidents are of no consequence excepting for the consumption of time. Now, while I have this indictment before me perhaps I might refer to it. It is the first indictment, filed March 4, 1882. It was drawn up, as has commonly been stated, by Mr. Ker, a supposed expert from Philadelphia. In that indictment two persons were presented by their mere initials, “M. C.

Rerdell" and "J. L. Sanderson." This point was raised that the indictment was bad because no person was definitely designated by the initials, and that therefore the indictment should be quashed. It was swept out of the way by the action of the court, and, as a consequence, a new indictment was found. That delayed the case probably over two months, during which time the expenses were accumulating. In the second indictment Mr. Sanderson was dropped out. In the mean time he had been in the city, but instead of being reindicted by his full name he was allowed to escape entirely.

Q. Was that count in the indictment for conspiracy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the form of that indictment discussed before it was presented to the grand jury for the signature of the foreman?—A. Never before me. The whole action in this case, as Mr. Bliss stated in one of his interviews, although I was familiar with all the facts and had been from the beginning, was carefully concealed from me.

Q. As an elementary principle, if the names of a coterie of conspirators are known, is it not absolutely necessary that they should be all set forth?—A. They should be.

Q. If they are not known as a matter of fact, can it be pleaded "with others unknown"?—A. It might be.

Q. How many special counsel were there at that time in the employ of the Government?—A. There was Mr. Bliss, Mr. Ker, and myself nominally, not fully. I was engaged in work to some extent at that time in examinations, but the distinctive action taken in this case was independent of me.

Q. Do you know directly or indirectly whether or not Mr. Bliss was consulted in regard to the indictment before its presentation?—A. I have understood that he was.

Mr. STEWART. The question is whether you know it. You are a lawyer.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. From anything that transpired on the argument, on the indictment, or otherwise?

The WITNESS. So I understood the question.

Mr. STEWART. The question was whether you knew it. You said you "understood" it. Please answer the question.—A. Yes, sir. The answer was probably a little incorrect. I understood incidentally from Mr. Bliss that the Attorney-General had engaged Mr. Ker to prepare the indictments, and that Mr. Bliss would assist him in doing so. That was the first information I had of the employment of Mr. Ker. Up to that time I had prepared quite a number of papers in consultation with Mr. Bliss and Mr. Gibson.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. You used the remark that "the court swept it out of the way." Do you mean that there was no delay in the decision of the court?—A. No delay. The decision of the court was prompt and immediate, that parties might not be indicted by mere initials.

Q. Is there anything further that you have to say in connection with this?—A. Perhaps it will aid, to some extent, when I refer to the fact that in this indictment there are two, three, four, five, six, seven—quite a number of different routes, involving different contracts and different parties, in which there was no common interest. The original conception that I had of the indictment, so far as the conspiracy was concerned, was to embrace Mr. Brady and the contractor on the single route, and thus simplify the indictments and lessen the time required for the examination and trial of any one case. It was, in my opinion, a grave error to embrace so much in one indictment as to render it difficult for either court or jury to form a clear, concise, brief conception of the facts.

Q. So you designate the indictment as a conglomeration?—A. It is a conglomeration.

Q. Embracing a number of offenses entirely separate and distinct from each other?—A. Many of them separate and distinct.

Q. And the parties to the transactions independent of each other?—A. Many of them independent of each other. It was that which led to the great length of time consumed in the trial of the cases.

Q. And the confusion occasioned the disastrous result?—A. Yes, sir. I was asked on yesterday in reference to the character of the jury, and I stated generally that they were good men; and while I cannot remember all the names there are some (referring more especially to the last jury) which perhaps I might mention. There was a gentleman on the jury named Green, a real-estate agent, and a man of very fine ability and character. There was a man named Horringer, a blacksmith. There were one or two colored men of established character and ability. There was a gentleman of the name of Sheriff, from the county, a farmer. I think I may say in brief from personal knowledge of the entire jury, that it was composed of honorable, conscientious, and upright men, and of blended politics. The first jury was also composed of good men. Apart from the foreman there was on that jury a gentleman named Holmead, who resides in the county, a very excellent man. There was this difference in the selection of the first and the second jury: On the first trial Judge Wylie held that under the law each of the defendants was entitled to a challenge of four. On the second trial he held that that was an error, and that instead of being entitled to four they were all combined entitled to only four, so that the challenges of the defense were diminished. In the outset of the case I was authorized to consult with Mr. Boone, and did so, as I stated yesterday, for the purpose of obtaining information and making him a witness. I was also authorized to consult with Colonel Price, in New York, and I did so at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. At that time, after full consultation, he stated to me that he was entirely innocent, and submitted papers to me, and said that he could furnish no particular information. I inquired of him in relation to Mr. Kellogg and others, and he said that he never had any transactions with Mr. Kellogg, except those which related to some friendly act of contribution in a political contest, Mr. Price being a Democrat and Mr. Kellogg a Republican, but both from the same locality at one time. Mr. Price afterwards was indicted and Mr. Kellogg afterwards was indicted.

The employment of Mr. Brewster and Mr. Bliss occurred in this manner. The Attorney-General, Mr. MacVeagh, when he felt that President Garfield would probably die, called a few of us into his presence and stated that he felt a great responsibility, and that it would be wise in view of that responsibility to select our attorneys. The result was, after many names were mentioned, that Mr. Bliss was selected as one, if he would consent to act, and Mr. Brewster another. It fell to my lot to consult with Mr. Bliss. I visited New York, and he met me at the Fifth Avenue Hotel at my rooms, when I presented to him an outline of the cases. He then said that he could not give me a definite answer until he consulted with some others, but would do so next day. He returned and said that he had concluded to accept the position; and I then went to Elberon to put myself in immediate communication with Mr. Mac-

Veagh, who was there, and it was concluded that Mr. Brewster and Mr. Bliss should be appointed and a telegram sent out through the press announcing their appointment. I personally, while I could not control it, and ought not to have done so if I could, regarded the selection at that time as unwise, but the Attorney-General thought otherwise. My own belief was that the whole matter should have been allowed to pass over to the incoming President and administration.

Q. Beyond political influences was there any occasion for more than a single counsel for the proper conducting of any or all of those cases?—

A. Not in the preparation of the case. Now, how Mr. Ker came in I do not know. Mr. Merrick was selected to take the place that I vacated by my resignation, and was unquestionably the ablest attorney employed in the case. But, while that was true, Mr. Merrick never had been engaged to any particular extent in criminal practice and was not adapted to that class of practice.

Q. What is the fact as to whether the interests of the Government were delayed and consultations broken up by the absence of counsel engaged on the part of the Government?—A. That not unfrequently happened, and it is unquestionably true also that on many of the occasions when Mr. Bliss came to Washington and returned it was to attend to his own private business in New York. That he stated both to Mr. Gibson and myself, together and separately.

Q. While he was thus engaged, did the time enter in as a part of his per diem claim against the Government?—A. I do not know; but I do know that there entered into his account minute charges of expenses in traveling from New York to Washington and returning. The fact unquestionably is that in view of the compensation allowed—

Q. (Interposing.) On those same occasions to which you allude, when he went and came on private business?—A. The fact is, that when the service was accepted, in view of the character of the cases there ought to have been an abandonment of all other service. I devoted myself to this almost entirely and exclusively. In talking with Mr. MacVeagh, and also with Mr. Brewster, Mr. Gibson being present part of the time, when we were endeavoring to settle our bills, which were fixed at $5,000 each, anything that was paid me in addition to that being for expenses that I had incurred and paid out my own money to meet, it was with difficulty that we were able to secure the $5,000. I inquired then what would be allowed Mr. Bliss, and was startled at the announcement that he would get $100, but the announcement then made was that that was to cover all his expenses; that there was to be nothing additional.

By Mr. FVAN:

Q. Who made that announcement?—A. Mr. MacVeagh first, Mr. Brewster afterwards. I find on page 21 of this document, in the account of Mr. Bliss, a charge for board for $16\frac{3}{4}$ days \$167.50; charges for baggage, fire, messengers, tickets, postage-stamps, 6 cents, and washing, \$7.75; making in all \$225.18. Now it does seem remarkable that those expenses should be embraced, and that the washing of the linen of an attorney should be paid for and certified by Attorney-General that it could not be done.

Mr. STEWART. It seems to me that this is entirely aside from the vocation of this witness. That is a matter that the committee can judge.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were there any such items in your bill?—A. Not such items as that; when I went to New York in reference to the case I put in the incidents of travel.

Q. You have stated that you devoted your time exclusively to the business of the Government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And without interruption during the day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there, so far as you know, any reason why there should be any difference, if the payment was by per diem, in the allowance to Mr. Bliss over yourself other than that he is a different person?—A. None whatever.

Q. Was it possible for him to give greater attention or to apply himself more industriously to the extent of his ability than you did?—A. No, sir.

Mr. STEWART. That is rather a curious question and a curious answer.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What do you say as to the compensation that has been awarded

Mr. Bliss, as appears from the report of the Attorney-General, as being in excess of what was really earned by Mr. Bliss in the cases?—

A. I have no hesitation in saying that it was extravagant, unjustifiable, and unearned in every respect.

Q. Having gone thus far, state what you would regard as a fair compensation for all that you know or are able to see from looking at the case for his services?—A. An ample compensation for what was done in those cases, in the condition in which Mr. Bliss found them, would have been not more, I think, than $20,000. That would have been ample.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. On what terms are you with Mr. Bliss personally?—A. Mr. Bliss and I have been upon the best personal terms. I was associated with him in one or two private cases prior to the star-route cases. I have not been on any terms with him at all since our connection with the star-route cases ceased. I have had nothing to do with him. I have no enmity towards him, nor I trust towards any other human being.

Q. Yes; well you were not on good terms, were you, after you left the employment of the Government in this case?—A. Yes, sir. There was no difference, no rupture between Mr. Bliss and myself. I was not aware of some of his clandestine acts. I learned them afterwards.

Q. Then you are not on very good terms with him at present?—A. I have no unkind feeling toward Mr. Bliss.

Q. You have no kind feeling toward him?—A. I have this feeling simply. I have perhaps no personal feeling. I have a feeling which arises from a deep conviction, from the knowledge that I have of the cases, that they were improperly handled and conducted, and that improper amounts have been charged against the Government and received for the labor done. It is a matter of no personal consequence to me, for I have more professional business than I can attend to.

Q. You have said you did nothing in your own business when you were so engaged. You had, I suppose, a large practice on your hands when you took employment from the Government?—A. I had in a calendar of perhaps 600 cases, nisi prius cases probably one-seventh.

Q. You gave no attention to them while you were employed by the Government?—A. I gave no attention. It was my purpose—

Q. You did nothing with reference to your private practice in all that time?—A. Oh, I may have said something to my partner incidentally.

Q. If you said anything it was merely accidental?—A. I said incidental. I do not think I entered into court in the trial of any important case in which I was employed.

Q. You did not have any consultations with reference to any of your private cases, nor examine any authorities?—A. I had occasional consultations in the office and made occasional inquiry with regard to cases. But apart from that I devoted my time both night and day to the star-route cases. It was no common task to comprehend them.

Q. I understand your judgment to have been averse to the judgment of the principal counsel in the management of the star-route cases. You entertained a different opinion from what the leading counsel did?—A. I entertained a different opinion from what they appeared to entertain ultimately with regard to the cases. Originally there was no difference between Mr. Bliss and myself about the cases.

Q. I suppose the counsel, Mr. Bliss, Mr. Merrick, the Attorney-General, and Mr. Ker, all concurred in the propriety of prosecuting this principal case upon the indictments which were found?—A. That is a matter of which I have no personal knowledge.

Q. What do you think about it?

The CHAIRMAN. That is speculation.

The WITNESS. I am perfectly willing to give my thoughts if the committee desire it.

Q. Well, I do not care to press that. Now in regard to the value of the professional services of Mr. Bliss, I suppose the sum that an attorney is entitled to charge for special employment depends somewhat upon the value of his time to himself in his private practice; is not that one element that enters into the consideration of the question?—A. That is an element that will enter into his consideration in his accepting any employment that is offered to him. Whether it should be a consideration on the part of his employer is entirely a distinct question.

Q. Do you mean that the employer should omit that from his consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. He has said in substance that this was a political employment. That the selection was made on political grounds.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, he does not mean that. He would not take the responsibility of saying that.

The WITNESS. I directly and absolutely take the responsibility of so saying.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Do you think the Attorney-General would have employed Mr. Bliss if he had not been a lawyer?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then his professional character had something to do with it?—A. That was a mere incident. The chief and controlling consideration which led to the employment of Mr. Bliss was that he was an intimate personal friend of Mr. Arthur.

Q. Have you read the testimony of the Postmaster-General on the subject?—A. I have not read it, and it would not change anything that I am stating.

Q. Who advised the President to employ Mr. Bliss?—A. He never was employed by the President.

Q. Who advised the Attorney-General to employ him?—The Attorney-General called a consultation consisting of the Postmaster-General, Mr. Gibson, and myself, and perhaps one or two others, in relation to the employment of attorneys, and at the time one of the considerations most strongly urged in favor of the employment of Mr. Bliss was that President Garfield would probably die, and that it would be wise to select some one who was on intimate terms with the Vice-President.

Q. Now, was it not also said and urged by the Postmaster General to the Attorney-General that Mr. Bliss was a man entirely competent and a man that he desired should be employed by reason, not only of his personal relations to President Arthur, then Vice-President (if it was before Mr. Garfield's death), but for other reasons?—A. The Postmaster-General stated distinctly that Mr. Bliss was a good and able attorney, and urged that as one reason of his employment.

Q. That is the point. You said that he was employed exclusively for political reasons, and the chairman of this subcommittee stated with considerable emphasis that it was a political appointment. Now, was it not for both political and professional reasons that Mr. Bliss was appointed?—A. I do not believe that Mr. Bliss would ever have been appointed if the intimate relationship between him and the present President had not existed.

Q. That is not the question. You evade the question.—A. I do not wish to evade it.

Q. I don't know whether you do or not. You do evade it. The question is not whether he would or would not have been appointed, but whether his professional reputation as a skilled lawyer was not a consideration which entered into the mind of the Postmaster-General and the Attorney-General, and which led to his employment?—A. It may have been.

Q. What do you think of it? Answer the question squarely.—A. So far as I was personally concerned, I regarded Mr. Bliss as an attorney of ordinary ability. That was the result of my experience with him. I have never changed that opinion. But when there was laid alongside of that the importance of having some one who was intimate with the President employed, I favored the selection of Mr. Bliss.

Q. You speak of Mr. Bliss's ordinary ability; that is a thing I don't know anything about; I am only speaking of his reputation. I suppose that at that time you regarded him as a man of ordinary ability in his profession?—A. I did; and that is the opinion that I entertain of him to-day.

Q. I do not know that you are not correct about that.—A. Of course not; but I do.

Q. You know, I suppose, that he has a large and valuable practice?—A. I do not know it.

Q. You spoke of Mr. Ker as a "supposed expert"?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you mean by that phrase—supposed expert?—A. I meant this: It was represented to me that he was selected by Mr. Brewster to prepare indictments because of his great competency to do so. I had no personal acquaintance with him, nor have I now; but the first manifestation of his competency I found in that indictment, in which there was a most stupid and unjustifiable use of the initials of two parties. I meant, therefore, by the language which I used, that there must be a mistake as to his being an "expert," that no expert would have perpetrated so manifest and plain a blunder as that indictment contained, which entailed upon the Government a large amount of expenditure.

Q. You do not, I presume, suppose that Mr. Ker did not know as well as you do that you could not indict a man by his initials?—A. If he knew it I cannot account upon any theory of integrity or uprightness for the use of the initials found in the indictment.

Q. Do you know how that error crept into the indictment?—A. I know that the full names of both Mr. Rerdell and Sanderson were accessible.

Q. That is not an answer to my question.—A. I do not know how that crept in.

Q. You don't know whether it was a mistake of the scrivener or copyist or whether it was Mr. Ker's mistake?—A. I know this, that Mr. Ker attempted to justify the indictment with the initials when the matter was called to the attention of the court. I was present when that attempt was made.

Q. You never have heard any explanation of how that mistake occurred?—A. Only the explanation made in open court, that the use of the initials was proper, and that the presentation of the full name was not required.

Q. That would not be an answer to my inquiry. That was a mere argument addressed to the court as to whether writing the full name was necessary. I am asking about whether any explanation ever came to your knowledge of how those initials got in there?—A. The explanation was found in the fact, as I comprehended it, that the indictment, with the initials, was justified by Mr. Ker.

Mr. STEWART. Well, it was justified on perhaps an unusual practice of trying to get out of a difficulty as well as possible. If he could persuade the court to let the indictment stand, I suppose he wished to do so.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. The explanation, as you understand it, was that this gentleman, Mr. Ker, thought that was a proper way to draft the indictment?—A. Yes; that was it.

Mr. STEWART. You do not think he thought so.

The WITNESS. How can I think anything else, when he stood up in court and tried to justify the use of the initials?

Mr. STEWART. You cannot think that any lawyer would argue that it was not necessary to set forth a man's name in full in a criminal indictment?

The WITNESS. But I heard it argued. I was amazed.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, well, Mr. Ker was speaking in a professional or Pickwickian sense, I suppose?

The WITNESS. He may have been, but I was amazed. In connection with that there lies another significant fact which, perhaps, it is my duty to present to you. Sanderson, whose initials were used in that indictment, was not embraced in the second indictment. In the mean time he spent a considerable portion of his time in the city of Washington, and was at the Arlington Hotel, and I have been credibly informed that he stated to a gentleman whose name I can give the committee, but prefer giving it privately, and who at one time had been a broker for him, that he was going home, that Mr. Bliss had told him that he would not be embraced in the second indictment.

Mr. STEWART. If that is the fact I should like to have it known, because it is part of our business to find out.

The WITNESS. I should regret if I should do anything else but humbly assist you to arrive at the real facts.

(The witness here wrote the name of the broker above referred to on a piece of paper and handed it to the chairman.)

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Is the man a resident of Washington?—A. Yes, sir. [To the chairman.] I would rather that the gentleman sitting back of you [Mr. Brewster Cameron] should not see the name.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Cameron never sees anything.

The WITNESS. No; I am aware of that.

Another fact. You observe that M. C. Rerdell's initials also are used. M. C. Rerdell afterwards became a witness in the case.

Now, I have, if the committee will indulge me, one more matter, and only one more, to which I beg leave to direct attention. This matter is to some extent personal, yet it is directly connected with the subject-matter of investigation. In the Philadelphia Press of May 24, 1883, there was an interview with the Attorney-General headed "Star Route Expenses," and in the close of that the statement had been made by Mr. Brewster to the correspondent that—

The defendants not only used the proceeds of their robberies to pay counsel, but the money was expended in spiriting away witnesses, in buying up ex-counsel of the Government, and in hiring newspapers to defend their rascality. The Government has paid for all this. The expenditure of every dollar used by the Department in the prosecution of these cases was authorized by Congress. The Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate were fully advised of the use made of our funds, and, understanding the character of the expenditures, the sum that this Department asked for was voted.

"What do you mean by the assertion that the defendants bought ex-counsel for the Government in these cases?" asked the correspondent.

I mean that J. M. Bosler, of Carlisle, Pa., showed Mr. Bliss his books containing a record of payments made by him on account of expenses incurred in the defense of these suits, among other things, and Mr. Bliss told me that Bosler's books contained entries of several thousand dollars paid the law partner of Mr. William Cook and Mr. A. M. Gibson. Both Mr. Cook and Mr. Gibson were originally retained by the Government in these cases, and I dismissed them because I felt that their services could be dispensed with.

When this paper was sent to me marked, I at once addressed the following letter to the Attorney-General:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 7, 1883.

SIR: My attention has been called to an interview with you published in the Philadelphia Press of May 24, ult.:

It appears that, among other things, you stated to the correspondent of the Press that the defendants in the star-route cases not only used the proceeds of their robberies to pay counsel, but "the money was expended in spiriting away witnesses, in buying up ex-counsel of the Government, and in hiring newspapers to defend their rascality. The Government has paid all this."

It also appears that the following question was asked you, viz: "What do you mean by the assertion that the defendants bought ex-counsel for the Government in these cases?" To which you responded: "I mean that J. M. Bosler, of Carlisle, Pa., showed Mr. Bliss his books containing a record of payments made by him on account of expenses incurred in the defense of these suits, among other things, and Mr. Bliss told me that Bosler's books contained entries of several thousand dollars paid the law partner of Mr. William Cook and Mr. A. M. Gibson. Both Mr. Cook and Mr. Gibson were originally retained by the Government in these cases, and I dismissed them because I felt that their services could be dispensed with."

Allow me to inquire whether you are correctly represented in these extracts from the Press.

You will observe that they contain, first, a strong and plain implication that, as one of the ex-counsel in the star-route cases, I was bought by the defendants; and, second, a positive assertion that you dismissed me as one of the original counsel. I will be pleased to receive an early reply.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM A. COOK.

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General United States.

I received no reply to that letter.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Did you address that letter personally to him?—A. Personally,
H. Mis. 38, pt. 2—9*

and had it delivered to him personally. Not having received any reply, I wrote him again, a few days later, as follows:

As you have not seen fit to reply to this letter, I am compelled to conclude that your utterances to the correspondent of the Philadelphia Press were correctly reported. Indeed, this was a reasonable presumption; but I deemed it proper to afford you a fair opportunity for explanation or correction.

I am not accustomed to notice misrepresentations or censure which the uninformed or malignant may circulate or publish against me. I have neither time nor inclination to do so. But your accidental position as Attorney-General of the United States imparts to your accusations an importance which they would not possess if they emanated from you as a private individual, and therefore both public and personal respect require that they should receive a proper denial from me.

CHARGE OF FALSE STATEMENTS.

It is utterly false that the defendants in the star-route cases in any manner bought me as one of the ex-counsel. No one of them had the audacity to attempt it. I believe that Mr. Cole was for a while employed by Mr. Rerdell, but I am credibly informed that he gave a receipt for his fee, which was turned over to the Government. It is presumed you know this fact. Moreover, you were not ignorant of the truth that Mr. Cole and I were only limited partners in civil cases. This information you had twice from my lips, so that your assertion was not only untrue, but made with full information of the actual facts.

Second. The declaration that you dismissed me as one of the original attorneys in the star-route cases could not be surpassed in the realm of bold and audacious misstatements.

On March 14, 1882, I sent you a written and unsolicited resignation of my appointment as a special attorney. On the 17th of that month you transmitted me a reply, in which you said that my letter of resignation was a surprise to you, and that you could not see the necessity for it; that my retirement was the conclusion of my own judgment, and that had I continued in the cases and labored in them my usefulness would have been appreciated.

It cannot therefore be doubted that when you made the assertion that you had dismissed me you knew it was utterly untrue.

The intellectual and moral depravity which tempted and impelled you to malign and misrepresent me as you have done I am unable to comprehend. You probably can.

It only remains for me to state that I will publish this reply to your manifestly malignant falsehood in the public press, and pursue any other plan of vindication I may deem proper.

An Attorney-General of the United States cannot assail my professional or personal character with impunity, especially one who attained his distinguished position amid the smoke of an assassin's pistol, and possibly by means which reflect little or no credit on exalted manhood.

Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM A. COOK.

That I transmitted to him.

Q. How did he enjoy that?—A. I don't know. In the mode in which he assailed me I sent forth the response.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In the last interview you had with Mr. Garfield before he was shot did you say anything to him as to your being able after a time to inform him of the sources of danger that you anticipated?—A. I said to him that I might. And I omitted yesterday what was communicated to me as a fact, that the Attorney-General about that time had received various anonymous and threatening letters in consequence of his vigorous action in the star-route cases.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Did you see those letters?—A. No, sir; the Attorney-General stated to me that he had received some.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Those were threats addressed to the Attorney-General?—A. Those were threats addressed to the Attorney-General. There is one more matter: On yesterday questions were propounded to me in relation to an article in the Sun. I think they were propounded by Mr. Milliken. I observe that in the committee of which Mr. Money is chairman, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, Mr. Woodward, appeared and stated that he furnished to me a copy of the statement.

Mr. WOODWARD. Have you read the evidence that was taken in that committee-room?—A. I have read it as it appears in the papers.

Mr. WOODWARD. It is entirely incorrect in the papers.

The WITNESS. As it appeared in the papers it contains that statement. I wish to say, first, that Mr. Woodward never furnished me any such paper in relation to Mr. Ellis, or any paper relating to Mr. Ellis; and, in the second place, that if he has such a belief as the press report of his testimony indicates, it is without any foundation whatever in fact. I never saw the Sun article until——

Mr. WOODWARD. I never intimated in my testimony that he did. The report is incorrect.

The WITNESS. Very well; I am happy to hear it. It is a gross misrepresentation.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE (in the chair). I will state to the committee that a communication was sent down a little time since from the Post-Office Committee, who are investigating that matter, requesting that Mr. Cook might be relieved from attendance here, for the time being, in order to appear there.

Mr. WOODWARD (to Mr. Cook). When you go there read my evidence on that point.

The WITNESS. I have this request to make of the committee: If hereafter any of the essential statements which I have made should be contradicted by any witness, I may have the privilege of again appearing before the committee and furnishing corroborative evidence, for I have made no essential statement but what can be sustained by the testimony of others and by papers.

WASHINGTON, March 12, 1884.

A. M. GIBSON recalled and further examined.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Question. You have already stated that you were associated with Mr. Cook in the work which you and he were doing for the Government in relation to the star-route cases. Do you remember the indictment that was drawn against Brott and Lilley?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Who drew that indictment?—A. Mr. Cook and myself.

Q. How many indictments were there?—A. I forget.

Q. Two or more?—A. There were two, and my recollection is that there were more. My recollection about that is this: The drafts of the indictment were made, and Mr. Bliss looked over them and made some changes in them, and Mr. Taggart, who is assistant district attorney for this District, came afterwards to Colonel Cook's office and we went over them again, and in that shape they were presented to the grand jury and found.

Q. Who really did the work of drawing those affidavits, and how long a time was occupied in looking them over and making corrections and revising them as to details generally?—A. Oh, I do not think there was a great deal of time occupied. It was a very simple matter to draw those indictments under the section of the Revised Statutes which provides for such cases. My recollection is that the indictments were drawn one evening and presented to the grand jury next morning.

Q. You say you went over them together; did you draw them over again, or simply look them over?—A. I have stated that the drafts of the indictments were made by Colonel Cook, and that Mr. Bliss revised them, and that subsequently Mr. Taggart and myself went over them, which would make a second revision.

Q. Under what authority were those indictments brought?—A. One indictment was under section 5051, I think, of the Revised Statutes, for procuring an officer of the Government to pass a claim improperly. You will probably remember that provision of the Revised Statutes. Then there is another section, you know, which provides a penalty for an officer of the Government allowing a claim from improper motives.

Q. Who were the respondents in those indictments?—A. Brott and Fred. B. Lilley. Lilley was deputy auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department.

Q. The offense was of frequent occurrence, or at least not unusual?—A. Not unusual.

Q. Was there anything special in the indictment that required either extraordinary skill as a draftsman or as a lawyer?—A. No; such indictments are usually drawn up by clerks in lawyers' offices.

Q. Were there not, as a matter of fact, skeleton forms of indictments, so that all a man was required to do was to fill in the facts and the name?—A. There are skeleton forms. Usually, however, district attorneys have their own forms drawn up.

Q. But I understand you to say that those indictments were in effect complete when they were submitted to Mr. Bliss for his inspection?—A. Yes, sir; that is my recollection of it.

Q. What corrections did Mr. Bliss make?—A. Oh, I don't recollect. I have only a vague idea of that.

By Mr. FVAN :

Q. I may have misunderstood you, but I understood you to say that Mr. Cook drafted the first rough draft, and that then the indictments were revised by Mr. Bliss.—A. They were looked over by Mr. Bliss. I do not think he changed them at all.

Q. You were connected with Mr. Cook when the original draft was made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much time was occupied in clerical work, in connection with that indictment, from its original drafting—that is, by Mr. Cook or by yourself—until its final finding?—A. I do not know. It would be a good half day's work, probably, to draw both the indictments.

Q. Did that work extend over two days from its commencement to its end?—A. Not continuously, of course.

Q. Well, with breaks?—A. There may have been intervals. There may have been a suspension of more than a day during the progress of the work. I do not remember exactly. I do remember that Mr. Taggart and I went over all of the indictments in the course of one evening.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE (in the chair):

Q. What would be a fair compensation for the drafting of an indictment of that character?—A. I would like to take a contract for them at $25 apiece.

Q. Would you regard that as ample pay?—A. I would make lots of money at the business if I had enough of them to draw. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going away from the city, and I do not know that I shall have another opportunity to say what I desire to say, so I think I will embrace the present one. The statement has been made—Mr. Ker made it in a letter, and it was made by Mr. Bliss in the course of the second trial of the star-route cases—that the books of J. B. Bosler showed that I had received payments from him while I was in the employ of the Government. There is no truth in that statement. Mr. Bosler employed me six months after I had left the service of the Government. He paid me, on the 15th of June, $1,000, by a draft on Kountz Bros., of New York, which was collected by me through Riggs & Co., of this city. On the 8th of July, 1882, he paid me $1,500 in the same way.

By Mr. FVAN:

Q. For what service?—A. For services rendered to Mr. Bosler.

Q. Services not connected with these cases?—A. The circumstances were these: Mr. Bosler supposed that he was likely to be brought into trouble through Mr. Rerdell, and he employed me, and he was not.

Q. That was after you had resigned as counsel for the Government?—A. Yes, sir; nearly six months after.

Q. What services did you render Mr. Bosler?—A. Legal services. He followed my advice.

Q. What kind of legal services?—A. I gave him some advice, and he took it.

Q. Did you furnish him any information that you had obtained while you were engaged for the Government?—A. Oh, none whatever. Mr. Brewster, the present Attorney-General, in the final argument on the first star-route trial, eulogized Mr. Bosler as an honest man.

Q. Can you state what you did for this $2,500? Did you do anything but give advice?—A. I did nothing but advise him.

Q. Where were you when you advised him?—A. In Washington.

Q. Can you fix the dates?—A. No; I cannot fix the dates. I came here one time from Atlantic City at his request.

Q. Was that all the money Mr. Bosler paid you?—A. That was all.

Q. You never did anything for him in any of the courts?—A. No, sir.

Q. There were no indictments against Mr. Bosler?—A. No; there was no attempt to indict him.

Q. So that he consulted you as an attorney in relation to supposed indictments that might be brought against him by the Government?—A. In relation to Mr. Rerdell, who afterward testified. Rerdell made a demand upon Mr. Bosler for $5,000.

Q. How do you know that?—A. He showed me the papers.

Q. Who did?—A. Mr. Bosler.

Q. Papers from Rerdell?—A. Yes, sir; a letter from Rerdell and a telegram.

Q. Do you say a letter or a telegram, or both?—A. My recollection is, a letter and a telegram.

Q. Do you know Rerdell's handwriting?—A. No.

Q. Have you never seen him write?—A. I have never seen him write.

Q. How do you know that it was from him?—A. It was signed "Rerdell."

Q. Where was the letter postmarked?—A. At Washington.

Q. Where was it sent to?—A. Carlisle, Pa.

Q. What was the date?—A. I do not recollect the date of it.

Q. Where did Mr. Bosler show you the letter?—A. When he came here.

Q. What time was that?—A. I do not recollect the date. It was some time in June.

Q. What year?—A. 1882.

Q. Where was the telegram from?—A. From Washington.

Q. What was the date of it?—A. Some time after the letter, I believe.

Q. Was it sent to Carlisle, Pa.?—A. Carlisle, Pa.

Q. Can you give the substance of that telegram?—A. The substance of it was: "If you know when you are well you will pay my draft for $5,000."

Q. That, you say, was addressed to Bosler, signed by Rerdell, and sent from Washington to Carlisle, Pa., some time in June?—A. I think it was some time in June, but I have no distinct recollection as to the date.

Q. Can you give us the substance of that letter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you not recollect it?—A. My recollection is that Rerdell had drawn a draft or was to draw a draft on Mr. Bosler for $5,000, and that he told him he had better pay it.

Q. The letter, as I understand you to say, was dated prior to the telegram?—A. I think so.

Q. What length of time intervened between those dates?—A. A few days.

Q. How long after you received this telegram was it before Mr. Bosler employed you?—A. Mr. Bosler came here, I think, immediately after that.

Q. And then he gave you $1,000?—A. Not at that time.

Q. When did he?—A. He paid me 1,000 on the 15th of June. I know that simply by my bank account.

A. How long after that was it that he paid you the other $1,500?—A. It was on the 8th of July.

Q. Was there any additional reason for that payment? Did you say that you would charge him $2,500 originally?—A. I told him I would charge him $2,500.

Q. You told him that when he first employed you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did he not pay it, then?—A. I did not ask him.

Q. Did you ask him for any of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. He voluntarily tendered you the $1,000?—A. That is my recollection. Mr. Bosler was a perfectly good man. I knew his reputation.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Did you possess knowledge of any fact bearing upon Mr. Bosler in connection with these star routes—any fact which you had obtained from the Government?—A. None whatever.

Q. Had you acquired any additional knowledge of that kind from the time you quit the service of the Government down to the time you saw Mr. Bosler?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Did you keep copies of any of the papers or affidavits that came into your hands as an attorney for the Government?—A. No, sir; I not only kept no copies of what papers I examined, but I left at the Department my letter books and papers that I possessed before I was employed by the Government, and they are, or should be, there now.

Q. I will ask you the direct question, Did you sell any information to Mr. Bosler, or anybody else, that you had acquired as attorney for the Government?—A. No, sir; I never sold any information. I was extremely careful, on leaving the service of the Government, to leave everything there in the Department that I had taken there.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. What gave your advice to Mr. Bosler, under these peculiar circumstances, the value which he recognized by paying you $2,500? Did it not depend on your knowledge or information of these star-route matters?—A. I do not care to state to the committee what advice I gave Mr. Bosler, but I will say that it was entirely disconnected with the star-route cases.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. You say you do not care to give it. Do you mean that you do not desire to do it, or that you are unwilling to do it?—A. It is not proper that I should do so.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Do you mean to go to this extent in your remark, that the advice which you gave Mr. Bosler did not have relation to a matter existing between Mr. Bosler and Mr. Rerdell growing out of the star-route transactions?—A. I do not quite comprehend your question. I knew nothing whatever of Mr. Bosler's and Mr. Rerdell's connection. I knew, of course, what Mr. Bosler had told me about his connections with the star routes. I knew that the records of the Department showed that Mr. Bosler was the holder of drafts on the future pay on many routes, which is not an uncommon thing. The advice, however, which I gave Mr. Bosler was entirely outside of any relation that might exist between Rerdell and him.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. In this matter of Mr. Bosler's anticipating prosecution from the Government, was he apprehensive of that, and did he employ you to defend him if he was prosecuted?—A. Mr. Bosler was chiefly apprehensive of being smirched. Being a gentleman of large means and somewhat prominent in Pennsylvania, and an active politician, he was extremely anxious that he should not be drawn into this business.

Q. You say he was afraid of being smirched; smirched how—by the newspapers, or by an indictment?—A. I mean that he was afraid of being drawn into this star-route matter.

Q. How drawn in, by an indictment against him by the Government?—A. By an indictment against him, or by—

Q. Well, if he did not anticipate an indictment, why was he employing you as an attorney?—A. I have not said that he did not anticipate an indictment.

Q. That is what I am trying to get at.—A. The demand which Rerdell made on him, and the threats that he would go before the grand jury and have Mr. Bosler indicted, gave him that impression.

Q. Indicted for connection with the star-route cases?—A. For connection with the star-route cases.

Q. And in case he were indicted, he wanted to employ you as an attorney, and did employ you?—A. He wanted to employ me as an attorney to prevent his being indicted.

Q. To prevent his being indicted?—A. Yes, sir; to prevent his being in any manner drawn into these cases.

Q. He was not indicted?—A. He was not indicted.

Q. You earned your money?—A. I earned my money, which I had a perfect right to do. Because a man has been once employed by the Government, it does not follow that he is precluded from other employment.

Q. You say you earned your money? Do you think your efforts prevented Mr. Bosler from being indicted?—A. Well, I do not know. I know there was no attempt to indict him.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 13, 1884.

WILLIAM A. COOK recalled and further examined.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Question. At the time your examination was suspended I believe you were speaking of the incidents attending the appointment of Mr. Bliss?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. If there is anything further in connection with that matter that has not been fully detailed you may now present it.—A. Yes, sir; I referred to it as a political appointment. I did not mean by that that there was necessarily no reference to the fact that Mr. Bliss was a lawyer; but that, while he was a lawyer, he never would have been selected for the position that he was selected for except for partisan considerations. Let me illustrate that. In the consultation which we had in reference to the selection of additional attorneys the names of several prominent gentlemen were mentioned. I mentioned, for instance, General Butler, with whom I had been connected on various occasions, and Judge Fullerton, of New York, with whom I had been associated in several cases, and other men of corresponding national reputation. The name of Mr. Henderson, of Saint Louis, was mentioned, and the objection was at once raised to him that, while he was a very able attorney, it would not be wise or prudent to select him, because he had been engaged in connection with the prosecution of the whisky-ring cases against General Babcock and others, and, manifestly, would not be acceptable to the incoming President, and that became a controlling consideration in his rejection.

Q. Was it stated why?—A. Because of his antagonism to one element of the Republican party and his connection with the whisky-ring cases as against General Babcock (for whom I was an attorney) in the trial of those cases. On the other hand, while it was manifestly, it seemed to me, conceded that Mr. Bliss was not of the same degree of eminence, yet the fact of his intimate association with President Arthur became unquestionably the consideration which led to his employment. It is to be observed that neither Mr. Bliss nor Mr. Brewster was selected by President Garfield; and while it is not a fact that I can testify to, yet I am satisfied as matter of inference that they never would have been selected had he continued as President.

Q. Is there anything further connected with that?—A. I think not; I have given you now the facts as they occurred in the selection and the motives and considerations which led to the selection.

Q. Is there anything connected with the indictments against Mr. Brady and others that has not been detailed in your examination?—A. Nothing, perhaps, special, except that I find by reference to the Star of March 20, 1882, in an interview chiefly in relation to myself (to which part I do not propose to refer), that Mr. Ker says distinctly that "Colonel Bliss did not supervise the bills of indictment at all; they were left entirely to me. Sometimes, coming into my office, out of mere friendship he would casually glance over the sheets as they lay on the table, but he never examined any of them." He closed by saying that "there is enough of documentary evidence on file now to convict these people without the use of a single witness on the stand." Then, perhaps, although it is not in the nature of an exact fact, I ought to call attention to the difficulty in this indictment from its conglomeration of cases and from the peculiar manner in which the various accusations are made, and to the fact that there were filed motions to quash which were overruled, but which might be ultimately sustained. I have a copy of this indictment in print which I may as well leave with you. Now, in that indictment, which originally embraced Sanderson, it will be found that there are a large number of cases involved, including different and distinct offenses, and in different and distinct States and Territories. Thus, two routes in California, 46132 and 46147, and routes in Colorado, Oregon, and several States and Territories embrace various contracts and various considerations.

Q. Those contracts were separate and distinct from each other?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Separate transactions with the Government?—A. Yes, sir. I will leave with you also a copy of the information which was a substantial indictment in which we framed an indictment on the one route alone. Now, it was the fact which I have just pointed out which led to a protraction of the trial; and I ought, perhaps, to give you a correct idea of how that was. The first indictment, which embraced the initials of Sanderson and Rerdell, was filed March 4, 1882, and was number 14262. The second indictment was filed May 20, 1882; so that the errors in the first indictment created a delay from March 4 to May 20. When the new indictment was found, it was substantially the same as the first, with the exception that Mr. Sanderson was dropped out. On the first indictment the trial began June 1, 1882, and ended September 11. On the second indictment it began December 12, 1882, and ended June 4, 1883. Had the indictments been framed on any one of the cases it could not have taken more than two or three weeks to try any one of them. The strongest indictment could have been presented on the strongest case, and initial convictions perhaps had.

Q. Was the trial continuous during all this time?—A. Yes, sir; with an occasional adjournment.

Q. From Friday until Monday?—A. Yes, sir; sometimes they failed to sit on Saturday, and during all that time the jurors and others were abroad—I mean that they were out.

Q. You say that if the indictment had been drawn to cover what you regard as the necessary counts, the trial might have been concluded within a few weeks?—A. Within a few weeks. Mr. Brady and the officers of the Department would necessarily have been involved in any one of the cases in connection with the contractor. That, too, was in harmony with the original plan we had proposed. I proposed to go before the grand jury with the papers carefully selected in each distinct case, and procure an indictment against Mr. Brady and the officers of the Department in connection with any one single route, selecting those that might be regarded as the strongest cases; and the information was drawn upon that plan. There was also another plan. The original plan that I had, involved the indictment of the officers of the Government distinctly from the contractors for malfeasance in office, and the indictment of the contractors and their immediate associates in the alleged "ring" separately.

Q. What effect would that have had as to simplifying the case and the proof that would be required for a conviction?—A. The conception that I had was that it would simplify the cases very much, and at the same time enable us, perhaps by the procurement of indictments, to arrive at the truth as between the Post-Office officials and the contractors to an extent that we otherwise could not—that it might induce contractors, if there had been any wrong, to come forward and candidly disclose the actual facts to us. But as the indictments were framed, you will observe, it created a combination of interests between the officials of the Post-Office Department and the contractors, and as that indictment was framed it created a combination of a number of contractors together with the Post Office officials in the trial of the case so as to require the Government to meet combined efforts which they otherwise would not have been required to do.

Q. And the statute was broad enough to cover that proposition?—A. There was no trouble about that whatever.

Q. You were inquired of yesterday as to who composed the juries at the two trials?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have that list now?—A. Yes.

Q. I don't care about your stating who they were.

(The witness produced the list.)

Q. Is there anything further upon that subject that has not been detailed?—A. I ought perhaps to refer more minutely to the Lilley and Brott indictments, the Lilley indictment being for misconduct in office.

Q. What was Mr. Lilley's position?—A. He was Deputy Sixth Auditor of the Treasury. On December 3 there were found against him six indictments: Nos. 14131-2-3-4-5, and 6; and against Brott, on the same day, two indictments: Nos. 14137, 14138, for giving to Lilley money to influence his action as Deputy Auditor. Those indictments rested upon plain and simple evidence, and while filed December 3, 1881, they have never been taken up in any form whatever. Their trial would have embraced, perhaps, three or four days, or a week at most.

Q. The investigation of those cases fell within the purview of your employment?—A. Yes, sir. I prepared the indictments chiefly. They were examined somewhat by Mr. Bliss, but I was more particularly aided in their preparation by Mr. Gibson.

Q. Was the character of the evidence which you became possessed of such as would demand an investigation and prosecution of those cases in the healthy administration of justice?—A. I had no doubt about that. It consisted chiefly, though not exclusively, in a statement made by Brott himself, and the sections of law involved were 5451, 5440, and 5438.

Q. Were those statements made under circumstances which would authorize their admission as evidence without a criticism which would impair the force of the confession, if it was such?—A. The statements, so far as I know (they were not made to me directly), were made in the regular course of an investigation of the transactions of the Department, and there was no regulation allowing anybody to escape upon his mere confession or statement, unless upon a full view and consultation with the Department of Justice, and with the President also, if necessary, it should be deemed proper to accept the statement and accept the party as a witness, and thus release him from indictment, but in that case the confession would have released Brott only and would have operated against Lilley.

Q. Do you know why the prosecution has not been followed up?—A. I have no reasons within my personal knowledge; I have formed convictions on the subject, but they would perhaps not be testimony; I have no doubt, however, of their correctness.

Q. Have you anything further upon that subject?—A. I think not; I think I have given you all the facts with regard to the indictments.

Q. At the time of the engagement of any of these special counsel was there anything said about the per diem or any reason assigned for payment of a special sum?—A. I read you, on the first day that I was examined, a provision of law which required, according to my view of it, that when a special attorney was employed that there should be a stipulation as to the compensation. I was unable, however, to get any sum fixed, but was told generally, personally, that a just compensation would be paid. The entire amount allowed me was $6,000 for about ten months', not quite ten months' labor, making about $20 a day. That was, both by Mr. MacVeagh and Mr. Brewster, as appears by the letter that I have furnished here, as well as otherwise, regarded as a just compensation to me. Immediately afterwards the compensation allowed Mr. Bliss was justified upon the assumption that he was a New York lawyer, and that New York lawyers were accustomed to charge more largely for their professional labor than I was; it was then limited, however, to a clean hundred dollars. When Mr. Ker came in, as he was a Philadelphia lawyer and not a New York lawyer, the compensation, according to that rule, would have been less; and when Mr. Merrick came in, who was, like myself, a Washington lawyer, it should have been less still; but they both were allowed a compensation equal substantially to that given to Mr. Bliss. How far I ought to state that which has come to me as rumor I do not know, but there is a fact in connection with the employment of Mr. Merrick that was stated to me once or twice, though I cannot connect it with any person whatever. It was simply this: That it was a shrewd act on the part of Mr. Brewster; that it enabled Mr. Brewster to call into the star-route cases which were of doubtful termination a prominent Democrat, and thereby prevent the Democratic party, in case of failure, from being able to make anything out of it by the statement that one of the ablest Democratic lawyers—

Q. (Interposing.) You got that in the newspapers?—A. No; I did not.

Q. It was in the newspapers.—A. It was? Well, it was brought to me by some one passing to and fro from the Department of Justice, when I made the remark that it was a little remarkable that the Attorney-General had employed Mr. Merrick. Whether the motive was in truth such or not, I do not know, but it has had that effect, of course.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. You have already stated that when your connection with the Department was sundered you turned over to the Department all the papers in your possession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that they contained valuable information?—A. They were mere copies. No; they did not contain valuable information. The papers which they had, and which they earnestly persisted in having me turn over the copies of, were papers that had no real value in themselves. Mr. Bliss stated in a letter, after repeated efforts to get what I had, after

I had given the Attorney-General every fragment that I possessed, that "The possession of these papers, however, by others can do no harm to the Government" so that the papers which they insisted upon my turning over were of no real value, being mere copies and partial copies.

Q. Is there anything further that you care to say touching the general conduct of the star-route cases and the reasons of the failure to secure a conviction before the jury?—A. I can very briefly state, in addition to what I have stated in relation to the indictments, that the mode in which the cases were conducted, the extended length of time, the confusion in the minds of the jurors, and the want of plainness and simplicity, was perhaps one of the difficulties. There was perhaps in addition to that, as they were not engaged in the original investigation, necessarily, only a derived knowledge on the part of the attorneys who tried the cases, and the trial, before it was completed, unquestionably assumed the nature of a contest and rivalry between the attorneys for success.

Q. What attorneys?—A. The attorneys for the defense and the attorneys for the Government. There was this, too: The parties who were indicted had been, previous to their indictment, men of good standing and reputation, and the mode of argument was extremely bitter and vituperative and denunciatory, which had an injurious effect, I think, upon the jury, as it will always have when a man of previous good character is indicted. I heard repeatedly persons leaving the courtroom after the arguments and making this remark, that it was unfair and unjust to denounce so bitterly instead of presenting the facts calmly and coolly. These considerations, perhaps, operated upon the minds of some of the jurors.

Q. If that exhausts your knowledge of those cases, we will regard your examination as concluded.—A. I think that concludes all I have to say. If there is anything else that occurs to me, or if the committee desire to ask any further questions, I shall be glad to answer.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. I do not remember whether it was you or Mr. Gibson who testified here that it was understood between you and the other counsel for the prosecution, that Colonel Corkhill, as district attorney for this District, was not to be trusted by the Government, and that nothing that was done by the prosecution in those cases was to be confided to him?—A. That is correct.

Q. Did you so testify?—A. I am not certain whether I did or not.

Q. Do you so testify?—Q. I do. That was the understanding, unquestionably.

Q. Who were the attorneys for the prosecution at that time?—A. Mr. MacVeagh, the Attorney-General, Mr. Gibson, and myself.

Q. Did Mr. Brewster and Mr. Bliss, when they came in, concur with you in that view?—A. They accepted primarily and for a while as correct the statements that were made, by Mr. MacVeagh and Mr. Gibson chiefly, with regard to Colonel Corkhill, but after a while that conception or view seems to have passed from their minds, and Mr. Corkhill was consulted more or less in reference to the conduct of the cases.

Q. Who was present at this conference at Elberon?—A. Mr. MacVeagh, the Attorney-General, Mr. Bliss, Mr. Gibson, and myself.

Q. You determined, then, to present certain cases before the grand jury?—A. We then determined to present this case, number 40101, and if that could not be done in time by an indictment, we determined to present it by an information, which we did.

Q. You came on immediately to Washington to present that case to the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The grand jury was then, as you supposed, in session?—A. I supposed it was.

Q. When you got here the jury had been in session two days?—A. Two days, I think.

Q. And you found to your surprise that the grand jury had been discharged by Colonel Corkhill?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Up to that time had you thought of presenting these cases by information?—A. No, sir—let me be more careful and correct. There was considerable difficulty in preparing the cases. It was questionable whether they could be ready in time to meet the suppositional question that was reached in our consultation with regard to the statute of limitations, but the conclusion was that I should try to secure an immediate indictment, and that in the event I did not, an information should be prepared. I came on, having drafted the outline of an indictment, which I had submitted to the Attorney-General previously, with the intention of going immediately before the grand jury, as I would have done but for its adjournment.

Q. You say that Mr. Corkhill was subsequently taken into the confidence of the other counsel for the Government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Up to that time had he been taken into their confidence?—A. He had not.

Q. You were surprised that he had discharged the grand jury?—A. Greatly surprised.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him as to the reasons for his action in discharging the jury?—A. Only incidentally, on Pennsylvania avenue. On that occasion he said that while I might not have known it he had had a conversation with Attorney-General MacVeagh, and in that conversation had stated to him that the grand jury might be adjourned.

Q. The result of adjourning that grand jury was to bar prosecutions against certain individuals. In other words, it permitted the statute of limitations to intervene.—A. It allowed that question to be raised.

Q. What was the effect of it?—A. The effect of it was to prevent us from filing the indictment so as to avoid that question; but it was afterwards our intention to present the same case in the form of an indictment, and then we would have been compelled to encounter that question.

Q. That question never has been settled?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE :

Q. Did Mr. Corkhill know before that grand jury was discharged that you had it in view to present those cases for its consideration?—A. He certainly knew that.

By Mr. FVAN :

Q. In whose cases would the statute of limitations run? Can you name the individuals?—A. Yes, sir. The cases included Mr. Brady, Mr. MacDonald, a contractor, Mr. S. P. Brown, Mr. French, acting as Second Assistant Postmaster-General, and, according to my original scheme, it would have included also Mr. Walsh, but he was dropped out because it was decided to accept him as a witness.

Q. When was it that this grand jury was in session for two days?—A. That was in September, 1881.

Q. When did the statute of limitations run?—A. It was supposed, incorrectly however, that it would run about the latter part of September. I do not remember the exact date.

Q. How long after the grand jury were in session?—A. About a week, I think.

Q. When did you file your information—before or after the statute would run?—A. Before.

Q. Within that week?—A. Yes, sir. The information was filed September 30. On refreshing my memory by reference to these papers I think the statute of limitations began to run during the first few days of October, about the 3d of October.

Q. And the information was filed in the interim?—A. Yes, sir; prior to the running of the statute on any view that could be taken of it.

Q. But that information was not sustained by the court?—A. It was argued and dismissed in November.

Q. Then the statute of limitations ran before you could get your second indictment?—A. Yes, sir; but please observe, that was a question which arose in our consultations, and we wished to avoid it if possible. It was not determined in our consultation that the statute could be successfully pleaded. That question never has been determined yet.

Q. Were there any offers made to you by any of the defendants to employ you, and if so, by whom?—A. I think about the 10th of May I had my first consultation with Mr. MacVeagh. My appointment was dated June 1st, 1881. During that time I was approached by parties who urged me not to accept employment on the part of the Government. It had gone out in some way that it was the intention of the Government to employ me, and offers were made to me of employment by other parties.

Q. By whom?—A. Colonel William P. Wood, representing, as I understood indirectly from him, nearly all the parties involved, stated that he had authority to offer me, in case I declined the appointment of the Government, a retainer of $20,000.

Q. Who is William P. Wood?—A. William P. Wood is a citizen of the District, who was formerly a detective or agent of the Treasury Department.

Q. Does he have an office here in Washington?—A. He has an office in the same building where I have mine, 402, 6th street northwest.

Q. When was this offer made to you through Mr. Wood?—A. Probably about the middle of May.

Q. Did he tell you whom he represented?—A. He did not; and I did not inquire.

Q. Did you know whom you were to defend?—A. I did not. The general statement made to me by Mr. Wood was that he was authorized by men who expected to be indicted in the star-route cases.

Q. Do you know that he represented anybody?—A. I do not know it beyond his own statement. I called upon him on yesterday, and stated to him that I had testified here. He said that it was correct, and that he had had that authority.

Q. Then there was no arrangement between you and Mr. Wood to seek to get employment from the defendants for your own common benefit?—A. No, sir,

Q. Did you and he work together?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why was it you did not take the money that was offered you?—A. I had an offer of employment by the United States and an offer of employment by the defendants. Upon full consideration I concluded that it was wiser and better and my duty to accept employment from the United States. I ought, perhaps, in that connection to go a step further. There had been many cases against the United States Treasury Department, involving frauds and misappropriation of money, and a case against Jerome J. Hinds on the part of the Post-Office Department, when Mr. Jewell was Postmaster-General, in all of which cases I appeared for the defendants. None of them were convicted. They were all acquitted. I never had any one convicted in that class of cases whom I defended as against any of the Departments.

Q. What is the object of that statement which you are now making?—

A. I understood you to inquire why I accepted employment from the Government in the star-route cases——

Q. The question I asked you was why you did not take the $20,000 that was offered to you by this man Wood?—A. I am connecting what I am saying with that question.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Because you had acquitted everybody that you had defended—was that any reason for declining this fee?—A. Yes, sir; I felt just this, that having acquitted so many, or been connected with the acquittal of so many, if there had been gross frauds and wrongs committed on the Government in these star-route cases as was alleged, with the experience that I had it would be proper for me, having been solicited by the United States, to respond favorably to its request and to accept employment in the prosecution of those cases.

Q. Then it was not a question of remuneration with you, but a question of patriotism?—A. It was in part a question of duty. I was approached by two parties——

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. (Interposing.) This man Wood offered you $20,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You put in your bill to the Government for only $7,500?—A. That amount embraces actual expenditures made by me.

Q. How much did you charge the Government for your services?—A. I never was allowed to make any charge.

Q. Did you make any charge?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever notify the Attorney-General of the amount that you claimed?—A. I made out a bill against the Government after consultation with Mr. MacVeagh and intimations from him of the amount that I would probably obtain.

Q. What amount was that?—A. I received $5,000 for my services in connection with the Government from June to January. That bill was approved by Mr. MacVeagh. I then put in a bill for $2,500, including January and February, and down to the 17th day of March. Mr. Brewster cut that charge down to $1,000, which I have not yet received. I received the $5,000. The bill for the additional $1,000 was approved by Mr. Brewster and by the Treasury Department, and was presented to the last Congress, but no appropriation was made.

Q. Then your answer is that you never did claim anything more than $7,500, including expenses?—A. I never did; but it was because I had an intimation that I would not get anything beyond that. I would have claimed more.

Q. You refused to take $20,000 from the defendants, yet you put in a claim against the Government for your services and expenses on its side of only $7,500, and that has been cut down to $6,000?—A. Yes, sir; but I would have made a larger bill had I been free to do so.

Q. How much larger would you have made it?—A. As I was devoting all my time to the Government service and had a practice that would bring me in probably $20,000 annually, what I had fixed in my mind, if I devoted a year to the cases almost exclusively, was that I would put in a bill of from $15,000 to $20,000, regarding that as a fair and just compensation. I think so still. I lost money by the transaction.

By Mr. STEWART :

Q. Did you not know when you took the employment that the rate of your compensation would be subject to the decision of the Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you took the employment with that understanding?—A. Yes, sir; I took it with that understanding, but I did not suppose for a moment that it would be cut down to the mere nominal sum to which it was cut down. If I had, I would not have accepted the employment.

Q. Do you call $7,500 a nominal sum as compensation for the services which you rendered?—A. $6,000. Yes, sir; I do call that a nominal compensation, in view of the practice that I had and the business that I was necessarily compelled to turn away from.

Q. If that was a nominal sum, what do you say as to what Mr. Bliss got for the time he spent in these cases?—A. I call that an extraordinary and unjustifiable charge.

Q. But you regard $7,500 as a merely nominal charge for your services?—A. Mine was at the rate of about $20 a day, while his was at the average rate of $150 a day. Having relation to the amount allowed him, I regarded the compensation allowed me as merely nominal.

By Mr. FYAN :

Q. Did you help the defendants in either of those cases to get up the juries?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any talk with any of the defendants or with any of their representatives about the juries?—A. None whatever.

Q. You have said that Mr. Cole, your partner, was employed to represent the defendants?—A. Some of them.

Q. Do you know by whom he was employed?—A. By Mr. Rerdell, as I am informed.

Q. Employed to do what?—A. To defend Rerdell.

Q. Who employed him?—A. Mr. Rerdell or Mr. Dorsey.

Q. You say he was employed to do work for Rerdell; now, I want to know whether you understood that Mr. Rerdell employed him or that Mr. Dorsey did for Rerdell?—A. Mr. Rerdell was in the office and was in consultation with him.

Mr. STEWART. That does not answer the question.

The WITNESS. Allow me time to answer.

Mr. STEWART. Please answer the questions that are asked.

The WITNESS. I try to answer them, but it is impossible for me to answer a question all at once.

Mr. STEWART. You answer and argue at the same time.

The WITNESS. Well, I am not aware of the fact.

Mr. STEWART. It is a very simple question that was asked you, whether you understood that Mr. Rerdell or Mr. Dorsey employed your partner.

The WITNESS. Well, if I am required to answer the question without reference to any associated facts or surrounding circumstances, I will say that I do not know.

Mr. STEWART. If you don't know, of course you can so answer.

The WITNESS. If I am allowed to present the circumstances connected with the employment, so far as I am acquainted with them, my answer may be different.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Do you know how much your partner got for that service?—A. I do.

Q. How much?—A. Two thousand five hundred dollars.

Q. Did you get any share of it in your partnership settlement?—A. We never had any partnership excepting with regard to civil cases.

Q. I understood you to say that before. Now, please answer my question: Did you get any share of that $2,500?—A. I got no part of it in our settlement, as our books will show.

Q. Did you tell the President that the defendants, or any of them, had attempted to corrupt you?—A. I did not.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. President Garfield?

Mr. FYAN. Either of them.

The WITNESS. I never have had any conversation with President Arthur in relation to the cases in any form whatever.

Q. Then you never told the President that?—A. I never had a word with President Garfield on that subject at all, and I have had no conversation with regard to the star-route cases with President Arthur, nor on any other subject except incidentally one day.

Q. Did you ever go to Dorsey's house after your employment by the Government?—A. No, sir. Mr. Dorsey sent for me prior to my employment by the Government, or about that time.

Q. Can you fix the date?—A. I cannot; it was toward the latter part of May, 1881, I think.

Q. You had been talked to and sought to be employed about the 1st of May, if I understood you correctly?—A. No, sir; not until after the 10th of May.

Q. You did not actually receive your commission until about the 1st of June; am I correct?—A. Yes, that is it; but my—

Q. (Interposing.) Now, when Mr. Dorsey sent for you, was that after you had been talked with about being employed for the Government, but before you received your commission?—A. I cannot remember distinctly. It may have been after the Attorney-General sent for me.

Q. What is your best recollection?—A. I think probably it was a few days afterwards.

Q. He sent for you?—A. He sent for me.

Q. Whom did he send?—A. A carriage was sent to my house with the statement that Senator Dorsey wished to see me.

Q. Who delivered that message?—A. It was sent up by the driver.

Q. Verbal or written?—A. A note was sent.

Q. Have you that note?—A. I have not.

Q. What became of it?—A. I don't know.

Q. Can you give the substance?—A. It was in substance this: If convenient I will be pleased to have you call at my house to-night.

Q. And you think that was the latter part of May?—A. No, sir; I do not think it was the latter part of May. It was, perhaps the middle of May, but the exact date I cannot tell.

Q. I thought you said a while ago that it was the latter part of May?—A. No; do not misunderstand me.

Q. When I first called your attention to the matter I understood you to say that it was between the latter part of May——; then you stopped, and then I asked you as to the latter date. If I am incorrect in that I have misunderstood you ; but at all events, it was after you had been spoken to on behalf of the Government.—A. I think I followed that by stating afterwards that I thought it was after the 10th of May.

Q. What response did you make to that invitation ?—A. I went down immediately to Mr. Dorsey's house and saw him.

Q. What did he desire to do ?—A. He desired to employ me.

Q. In what case ?—A. In the case that he anticipated would be originated against him in connection with the carrying of mails on the star routes.

Q. And you declined being employed ?—A. I declined being employed and told him it would be necessary for me to reject the offer at that time—that thereafter I would be able to tell him what I could do. He offered me, at the time, a roll of money, which I told him I could not accept, and which I did not count.

Q. Did he tell you how much there was ?—A. He did not.

Q. But you took the matter under advisement as to whether you would act as counsel for him or not ?—A. I did.

Q. You did not consider yourself in the employ of the Government at that time ; you had not then made up your mind that, as you had theretofore acquitted so many men, you would now try to convict some one ?—A. I had not.

Q. You came to that conclusion afterwards ?—A. I came to that conclusion afterwards.

Q. What reasons did you give Dorsey, those that you are giving us now ?—A. I did not give him those reasons ; I did not say anything further to him than that I could not at that time consent to accept employment from him ; that was about all I said.

Q. Didn't you say that you would consider the matter and let him know afterwards ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you consider it ?—A. I did.

Q. Did you let him know ?—A. I did.

Q. How long afterwards ?—A. A few days afterwards.

Q. Can you remember any more definitely about it ?—A. I cannot be any more definite.

Q. In the interim between the first time you saw Mr. Dorsey and the last time, when you let him know that you could not take a fee from him, had you consulted with the officers of the Government ?—A. I may have done so, because I saw Mr. MacVeagh two or three times ; but I cannot say positively.

Q. Can you tell us what the reasons were that induced you not to accept that employment when you had the matter under advisement ?—A. The simple reason was that I had not arrived at a conclusion for myself as to what I should do, or which of the two offers I would accept, and until I did so I was not prepared to announce to Mr. Dorsey or to the Government which proposition I would accept.

Q. But you did come to a conclusion on that point a few days afterward ?—A. I did.

Q. And you do not know what were the reasons that operated upon your mind within those few days ; you do not know whether you saw the officers of the Government within those days or not ?—A. I know that I saw them, and I know the reasons that operated on my mind.

Q. I have read some testimony which you are reported to have given before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads ; and I want to ask you about it. Did you testify yesterday to this effect : "I never saw any papers or heard any testimony from Mr. Woodward, or anybody else, officially or unofficially, directly or indirectly, implicating Mr. Ellis in the star-route frauds, or reflecting against him."—A. I did so testify.

Q. Do you repeat that testimony to-day?—A. I repeat that testimony to-day.

Q. Did you advise the suspension of pay on route 37110 from Rock Creek, Wyoming, to Etchitas, Montana?—A. I believe I did.

Q. When did you give that advice?—A. I cannot give the dates.

Q. Approximately?—A. I am not able to do that, but I have copies of the letters to the Postmaster-General, advising suspension, which I can furnish the committee.

Q. You cannot either fix the date or approximate it?—A. I cannot fix the date from memory, but I have a copy of the letter.

Q. Do you remember the reason you gave that advice?—A. It was because I had understood that there was an attempt to secure the payment, and I had information that it was fraudulent and unjust.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Who was the contractor on that route?—A. I do not remember. The reason I do not remember is that that was a matter brought only incidentally to my attention with a statement that unless prompt action was taken payment would be unjustly and improperly made.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. And you advised the suspension of the pay?—A. I did. More, I addressed a letter to Attorney-General Brewster in relation to the subject, suggesting an investigation, I think, and it was ordered under the direction of Mr. Bliss himself.

Q. Did you afterwards advise the removal of the suspension?—A. I did not. The matter passed into the hands of Mr. Bliss.

Q. This advice that you gave was oral, I believe, not written?—A. Oh, no; it was in writing. I addressed a letter to the Postmaster-General, and subsequently a letter to the Attorney-General, and received a response. I can furnish copies of both letters.

Q. During the time that you and Mr. Gibson were associated in these cases did you always have full confidence in the integrity of Mr. Gibson?—A. From the commencement to the end, I never had any reason to doubt the integrity or sincerity of Mr. Gibson.

Q. You never expressed to any one any distrust of his integrity?—A. I have no recollection of having done so.

Q. If you never entertained any such feeling you certainly never would have given expression to it?—A. I would not.

Q. Then you ought to be positive on that subject?—A. That would be a mere inference.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Call his attention to the person to whom you refer.

Mr. FYAN. I just wanted to know, as a matter of fact, whether he had said so.

The WITNESS. I never doubted Mr. Gibson's integrity in the star-route cases. I may have done this. There were a great many things published, a great many denunciatory articles in relation to Mr. Gibson, and statements made in regard to him. Now, I may, in conversation with some one have referred to those statements, but so far as any opinion of my own was concerned, I never doubted the integrity of Mr. Gibson, and do not now.

Q. I understand you to say that you never doubted it and never gave any expression of any doubt of it to any person?—A. No, sir. But if you will let me go further, I well remember having said that he had labored with me most earnestly and diligently, by night and day, and any suggestion that I would make to him of supposed value in arriving at facts, he pursued carefully and cautiously.

Mr. STEWART. Do you know how that $2,500 was paid for the services rendered Rerdell by your partner?—A. I do not know, personally, but while I so answer, I do know by information.

Q. From whom? From your partner?—A. From my partner.

Q. Was it paid all at once?—A. May I state what I learned about it?

Q. Yes; I have no objection to your stating what your partner said about it.—A. Very well; it was paid by a draft on Mr. Bosler, of Carlisle, Pa., and was collected, as my partner informed me, through some person in New York.

Q. To whom was that draft payable?—A. It was payable to Mr. C. C. Cole, my partner, a native of Maine.

Q. Into whose account did the cash go?—A. I do not know. It must have gone into his own account. It did not go into our partnership account.

Q. You have stated that in your settlement with your partner, no part of that $2,500 went to you?—A. No part of it went to me.

Q. Now, I will ask you a little broader question: Did you ever receive, in any manner, at any time, directly or indirectly, any benefit from that $2,500 yourself?—A. I am not aware of any benefit that I ever received from it.

Q. Would you not be likely to know it if you had received any such benefit?—A. My partner and I have settled our accounts——

Q. (Interposing.) You have said that already.—A. (Continuing.) Well, one step further. In those settlements my partner (for he keeps the accounts exclusively) has paid me money. Where he got the money—from what source he got it—I do not know.

Q. That is not exactly in answer to my question. You know just what I mean when I ask you whether you know or have any reason to believe that you did receive, directly or indirectly, either at the time of your settlement or at any other time, the benefit of any portion of that $2,500 that was paid to your partner on account of Mr. Rerdell?—A. I have no knowledge of having ever received any portion of the fund that he procured upon the draft that was drawn in his favor.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Did he ever give you any of it?—A. How can I tell? He never gave me any money saying it was part of the proceeds of that draft.

Q. Did he make a present to you about the time he received it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or to any member of your family?—A. No, sir.

Q. Either of money or anything else?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. FVAN:

Q. At the time you were prosecuting these cases on the part of the Government your partner was defending the same cases?—A. No, sir; it was a considerable time after I resigned, and Mr. Rerdell, at the time I resigned, was not embraced in my investigations.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Was this $2,500 which was paid to your partner on account of that service to Rerdell ever a subject of conversation between you and your partner?—A. Nothing beyond the fact that he had received the money.

Q. Was it ever a subject of conversation between you in any form as to any division of the money between you?—A. No; under the terms of our partnership I had no right to any part of it.

Q. I understood that before.—A. Well, there may be no objection to repeating it, especially in view of the character of the question.

Q. Then, so far as you know, you have not received any money from that payment of $2,500?—A. I have repeatedly answered that question. If am required to answer it further I will do so during the entire day, but the answer will be the same all the time.

Q. That you are not aware that you have had any of that money?—A. I will answer it again, with a negative, emphasized as intensely as I can pronounce it.

Mr. STEWART. There is no intensity that can be given to a plain, square, negative, and if you had said so in the first place, I should not have pursued it.

The WITNESS. I think the record will show that I did so.

Mr. STEWART. You first said that you had not received anything out of it at the time of the settlement with your partner, which is a somewhat different statement.

The WITNESS. Well, the record is there, and I am satisfied with it, as far as I am concerned.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Did your partner ever advise with you in this case, after he was employed by Rerdell? Did you give him the benefit of any information you had acquired?—A. I gave him the benefit of no information. He may have asked me occasionally a general question. He did in one or two instances as to authorities or references to forms by which papers should be drawn up.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Did you have knowledge of facts bearing upon Rerdell obtained whilst you were in the employ of the Government?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. I understood you to say that you were cognizant of the fact that the employment was about being made of your partner as counsel for Rerdell. Did you say anything to him on the subject of the impropriety of it, in view of your having been counsel for the Government?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did it occur to you that there was an impropriety in it?—A. I said distinctly to them that I could not accept any employment from Rerdell or any of the other star route defendants connected with any of the cases that I had directly or indirectly examined or been associated with.

Q. Did it occur to your mind, you having been employed before that as counsel for the Government, that the employment of your partner in civil business by any of the parties accused in cases within the general scope of this star route investigation would subject you to invidious criticism?—A. The idea did not arise in my mind at any time. By our arrangement, Mr. Cole had a right to accept any employment that he saw fit in criminal cases; so had I.

Q. Is it an unusual fact in the experience of lawyers of extensive practice for them to be applied to by both parties to a case?—A. I think not.

Q. Has it occurred frequently in your history and experience?—A. I may not be able to recall instances, but it has occurred, and men have gone away saying that they regretted that they could not obtain my services.

Mr. FYAN. As a question of professional ethics, if a man had been employed as an attorney on one side of a case, and his relations in that capacity ceased, do you think it would be professional, according to the rules governing in this locality, for him to take employment and pay from the other side?—A. I have understood that in this locality it was so considered.

Q. Considered professional?—A. Yes, sir; if there had been an entire severance, and if the case for which the subsequent employment was desired did not involve the facts connected with the previous employment.

Q. You think it would be professional for a man who is employed as an attorney on one side of a case to go over to the other side, after that employment ceased, carrying with him the information that he had obtained?—A. No, sir; if the case involv'd the facts of the previous employment, it would not be professional. But if it was merely a case of the same general character or class without involving the same facts and not affecting the previous case.

Q. And not having any actual connection with the same parties?—A. Not having actual connection with the same parties.

Q. That is, if I am employed to prosecute a particular case of murder, I am not thereby debarred from defending another man charged with murder?—A. No, sir; although he may be charged with this same offense.

Q. Growing out of the same subject matter?—A. Growing out of the same subject matter.

Q. Suppose six or eight men engage in a conspiracy, and three or four of them are indicted, and you are employed to prosecute those three or four, and, having received your retainer and discharged that duty, suppose that the other two were indicted also for the same offense, would you think it professional for you to take a fee to defend those other two?—A. I would not.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Is not that this very case?—A. Perhaps not exactly. Mr. Rerdell was not embraced in the scope of my investigations, for the purpose of including him in an indictment. He became an informer as against the parties through the Attorney-General.

Q. Did not Mr. Dorsey employ your partner to defend Rerdell?—A. The check or draft given was signed by Mr. Dorsey; at least that was my information, but beyond that I have no knowledge.

Q. Were you not prosecuting Dorsey?—A. I had been, but at that time my connection with the case had entirely ceased. All that is a question of ethics, about which the attorney and the books differ, as all lawyers know.

Mr. FYAN. We want to get a little higher standard if we can.—A. Well, I would not accept employment under such circumstances, unless they were very peculiar.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 18, 1884.

JACOB M. MCGREW appeared at his own request and was sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Please state your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. I am fifty-four years of age; I am an attorney at law; I reside in Washington.

Q. State whether you were at any time in the public service, and, if so, in what capacity.—A. I was chief clerk of the Sixth Auditor's Office for about eleven years, and Sixth Auditor for six years.

Q. During what periods?—A. I was appointed chief clerk November 16, 1864, and promoted to the auditorship July 1, 1875.

Q. In what Department of the Government is the office of the Sixth Auditor?—A. The Sixth Auditor's Office is a Bureau of the Treasury Department, located in the post-office building for convenience only.

Q. What are the duties of the Sixth Auditor?—A. To settle all the accounts pertaining to the Post-Office Department.

Q. Had you anything to do, as Sixth Auditor, with the letting of contracts for mail-services, or for the expedition of such service?—A. Nothing whatever to do with the making of contracts, or with the increase, expedition, discontinuance, curtailment, or anything of that sort.

Q. Upon whose order did you audit the expenses of the Post-Office Department?—A. On the order of the Postmaster-General, certified to us by the journal clerk of the Postmaster-General, on weekly orders.

Q. Is the order of the Postmaster-General conclusive upon the Sixth Auditor?—A. Entirely so. If you will permit me, I will read, as a part of my answer, a few lines from the decision of Judge Wylie in the first star-route trial, which will be found on page 2192 of the record of that trial. I was called as a witness to contradict a supposed statement made by a man of the name of Rerdell, and objection was made to my testimony, and the court said :

The Auditor's office is altogether distinct from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's office. The Auditor's office is an auditor's office. It has nothing to do with the business of increasing service or expediting routes. The Auditor's office, having nothing to do with that, was obliged to take the orders of the Second Assistant, or the Postmaster-General through the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, as its law. All that the Auditor's office had to do was to audit the accounts according to the orders for expedition and increase which had been made by the other Department. It was not possible, therefore, for any assistance to be rendered by the Auditor himself, or by clerks in his office, to the parties who were concerned in expediting and increasing the service.

I would like to add, also, an extract from a decision of the United States Supreme Court, which has been made a part of a circular sent out by the Secretary of the Treasury to his accounting officers as their rule and guide :

The Secretary of the Navy represents the President, and exercises his power on the subjects confided to his Department. He is responsible to the people and the law for any abuse of the powers intrusted to him. His acts and decisions on subjects submitted to his jurisdiction and control by the Constitution and laws do not require the approval of any officer of any other Department to make them valid and conclusive. The accounting officers of the Treasury have not the burden or responsibility cast upon them of revising the judgments, correcting the supposed mistakes, or annulling the orders of the heads of Departments.

That is made a part of the instructions sent out by the Secretary of the Treasury to the accounting officers of his Department.

Q. Have you seen a publication which recently appeared in the New York Sun in which your name was mentioned in connection with star-route matters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That publication stated that you had received a certain sum of money from one Lilley, to be divided with some person in the postal service, for the purpose of securing the expedition of service upon some route. State what you know about that?—A. The statement, I believe, was that a gentleman of the name of Brott had stated to Mr. Woodward that Mr. Lilley had stated to him that he had paid money to me in the auditor's office to secure the expedition of service upon some route. I do not remember what route it was or where it was. I want to say that it is infamously false, so far as I am concerned. I never received any money from Mr. Lilley, or any one else, for expedition of service, or for increase of service, or for any other services rendered to mail contractors.

Q. Had you ever any dealings with Mr. Lilley with regard to postal matters?—A. No, sir; I think he never visited my office more than twice while I was Auditor, and that was at the close of my term.

Q. When did you first see that statement which appeared recently in the New York Sun?—A. I did not see the statement which appeared in the Sun. What I saw was a very brief statement, but of course it contained the gist of the matter, and that was that a payment of money had been made to me. My attention was called to it a little over two years ago.

Q. State the circumstances under which your attention was called to it.—A. I was calling on a friend of mine and he handed me a piece of paper containing a very rough memorandum. I attempted to find the paper this morning, but I appear to have mislaid it, or it was perhaps kept by Mr. Lilley—a memorandum stating that, "It has been reported that Brott has said to Mr. Woodward that Mr. Lilley had informed him that he had paid McGrew $4,000 for expediting service." I think the paper gave the number of the route, but I am not certain about that. I think it gave also the name of the party. It was a very brief memorandum. I think there was nothing said in it as to my dividing the money with anybody, at least I did not notice anything of that sort, and I do not think there was any such statement in the paper.

Q. Who showed you that statement?—A. General Brady.

Q. Where?—A. At his house.

Q. At what time?—A. Some time in the evening.

Q. What year and month?—A. I should think it was in January, 1882. I fixed the date by the fact that I went at once with the memorandum to Mr. Lilley; I did not tarry a moment.

Q. Did you read it to him?—A. I did.

Q. Is Mr. Lilley now living?—A. He is not. [Referring to a memorandum.] I can now fix the date with certainty; it was March 20, 1882. I went the same evening to see Mr. Lilley.

Q. What was said on that occasion between you and Lilley?—A. I showed Mr. Lilley the memorandum and asked him what it meant, and he denounced the statement as false that he had ever made any such statement as that, and he sat down and wrote me this letter. He addressed it to me, but in the letter he speaks of me in the third person.

Q. Please read the letter.—A. (Reading:)

LAW OFFICE OF W. LILLEY, March 20, 1882.

Your communication, with inclosure of even date herewith, is now under reply. I was surprised when I read it, and I was more than surprised when I read the paper which accompanied it. [He means, I suppose, that I wrote him a note, and the accompanying paper to which he refers was this memorandum.] I have often wondered why McGrew was displaced, but I never supposed that I had any connection with it. I never exchanged a word with J. B. Price on any subject, nor did I ever have any business relations with him. I have known George F. Brott for some years, and I acted as his attorney on many occasions; I am his attorney now in some matters. I have always believed him to be a man of truth, though some matters have recently transpired which lessen my faith in him. If he made the statement the paper you inclosed attributes to him—I have doubts if he ever made the statement—but if he made it he was guilty of inflicting a grave wrong, both on Mr. McGrew and on me. There is not a word of truth in the statement, so far as it refers to me. It is simply false in every particular. When I say this, I desire to be understood as giving this answer to every form of question that might be put to me. I desire to be understood as saying that I never paid any money to Mr. McGrew to do either an official or unofficial act. I never had any money relations with him of any sort. I do not use harsh or vehement language, though I feel like doing so. I say it is simply not true, and if I can add any force to this form of denial by pursuing any form that you may suggest, I am ready to do it.

I am, truly,

W. LILLEY.

P. S.—Your communication is herewith returned.

I think the communication was not returned, at least I have not been able to find the memorandum, and I think he did not return it to me.

Q. Will you please tell the committee how it happened that you resigned your position of Sixth Auditor about that time?—A. Yes, sir. On the 2d day of January, 1881, Mr. Windom, the Secretary of the Treasury, sent for me, and taking me into his private room, said that he was about to perform a duty the most disagreeable that he had ever performed in his life, which was to ask for my resignation as Sixth Auditor. I inquired the reason for which I was asked to resign. He said that two members of the Cabinet, whom he need not name, because I would know who they were, had stated to him and to the President that they could not proceed any further with the investigation of alleged star route irregularities unless I was out of the Auditor's office. I told him that upon that statement I would not resign; that the charge against me was not true; that I had written a letter to him, the Secretary of the Treasury, and also to the Postmaster-General, in which I had invited an investigation of the operations of my office, so far as they related to star-route expenditures, and had asked as a favor that inspectors of the Department might be directed to investigate thoroughly all the operations of the Auditor's office in connection with such payments, and that therefore the reason assigned was not a satisfactory one, and I would not resign. He then said that that was about the answer he had expected to receive; but that now he would place the matter before me in a different form, and that he thought I would then resign. He said that the President was very much embarrassed by the statements made by these two Cabinet ministers; that neither he nor the President had any doubt as to my honesty, integrity, or ability as an officer, but inasmuch as the President was very much embarrassed by the importunities of these gentlemen, he would regard it as a very great favor if I would place in his hands my resignation, with the understanding that as soon as the investigation had been concluded and I had been found not to be implicated in any of the irregularities, he would give me a position better than the one I had been holding. Mr. Windom requested me to see the President, and I did see him, and he made precisely the same statement to me.

Q. President Garfield?—A. President Garfield. Upon that statement and promise, I resigned.

Q. When did you see President Garfield?—A. On the same day that I saw the Secretary. I saw the President afterwards, of course, but that is the occasion that you are asking about.

Q. What did the President say as to the demand for your resignation?—A. He said the same that Mr. Windom had said, that these two members of the Cabinet had stated that they could not proceed with the investigation of these alleged star-route abuses unless I was out of the office.

Q. Did the President name those two members in the Cabinet?—A. The President did. Of course I knew who they were—Mr. James and Mr. MacVeagh, the Postmaster-General and the Attorney-General.

Q. When did you see the President again?—A. Those interviews were on the 2d day of June, the day that I resigned; I put my resignation in the hands of the President, and on his statement and promise, on Thursday, the 30th of June, the President sent for me and said that he had become convinced that he had done me a very great injustice; and that he intended to redeem the promise he had given to me, and intended to make my restoration conspicuous. His words were, "McGrew, I will make reparation, and I will make it conspicuous." I had some considerable talk with him, and I started to Ohio the next day, having some private business there. I started on Friday, and on Saturday I saw in the dispatches from Washington that the President had been shot.

Q. Did you see him afterwards?—A. I did not; I can say, however, that he made the same statement to several friends of mine, who have told me about it. Governor Foster, Mr. Elkins, Capt. Chas. C. Henry, Col. Henry C. Corbin, and some others whose names I do not now remember; and I think he said it to Mr. Blaine also. Some of those parties have so informed me themselves; Col. R. G. Ingersoll is another person to whom the statement was made.

Q. Have you had any official position tendered to you since that?—A. No, sir. I have made no application for any position, and I do not want any. I have had enough.

Q. Then I understand you to say that the statement as to your receiving any money in this matter is false?—A. Entirely so. The statement as made by—I do not know whom—I do not know where that memorandum came from, or who took the memorandum, but the statement made in it is false in every particular.

Q. Was that memorandum in substance the same as the statement published recently in the New York Sun?—A. It was a very brief statement of perhaps a dozen lines.

Q. Did you see the article in the Sun?—A. I did. That memorandum contained the gist of the whole thing; that is to say, there were no details given in the memorandum.

Q. Were any papers filed in your office that came within your cognizance relating to the expedition of star routes?—A. No; we never had any such papers filed in our office; they did not belong there.

Q. Did you have anything at all to do with the expedition or increase of mail service?—A. Nothing whatever.

Q. Were you ever consulted in regard to that?—A. I was never consulted on any subject of that kind; our official notice of expedition, increase, curtailment, and discontinuance of service came in weekly transportation orders, weekly reports from the Postmaster-General; they would not be received for a week or two, or perhaps for a month or two, after the orders had been made in the Post-Office Department; we knew nothing about orders for expedition, increase, the making of contracts, or the certification of service, until long after it had been done in the Second Assistant's office.

Q. Did any of the star-routers solicit your influence, at any time, with the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, or with any other officer of the Government, to secure expedition or increase of service?—A. Never in the world.

Q. You know nothing about that?—A. Nothing. I knew nothing about the manner of making application for it. It was a matter that did not pertain to my office, and I had plenty of work of my own to attend to, so that in fact I did not think of that subject, and did not know anything of any alleged irregularities until after April, 1881. I had reported to the Postmaster-General every quarter the expenditures of his Department under the various heads, showing him the expenditures on account of the star service as well as of other mail routes. That was my duty; but beyond that I had no connection with the star-route service.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Did you ever make a recommendation in writing for the extension or expedition of any of the routes?—A. No, sir. I did not know anything about the routes. I never talked with a contractor about expedition or increase of service. I never, while I was Auditor, made but one request in relation to the star-route service, and that was to have a little route, eight miles in length, established in my own county in the State of Ohio, and Mr. Brady would not do it.

Q. Your duties were purely of a clerical character?—A. I was purely an accounting officer, as Judge Wylie said.

Q. Your action was based upon the papers sent to you, and in regard to which you had no power or authority to make inquiry or change?—A. That is exactly the case. The law prescribed my duty, and I tried to do my duty under the law.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 20, 1884.

GEORGE BLISS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your residence and occupation.—Answer. I reside in New York City; I am a lawyer.

Q. State whether you have at any time held any official position under the Government of the United States, and if so, what?—A. I was a captain in the Army during the war. I was from 1873 to 1877, something over four years, district attorney of the United States for the southern district of New York. Those are all the official positions that I have held under the Government.

Q. Were you special counsel for the Government at any time?—A. I was special counsel—technically, I was a special assistant district attorney—in connection with the star-route cases.

Q. When did your service in that capacity begin?—A. I think about the first week in September, 1881.

Q. Have you your commission with you?—A. I have not. I was first applied to to become employed by Postmaster-General James in the last week in August, 1881, and then I rather declined. I was applied to further on, about the 6th of September, 1881, and then accepted the appointment. I would like, in this connection, to read a letter which I wrote to Mr. James at that time. The letter is dated August 29, 1881, and is as follows :

AUGUST, 29, 1881.

MY DEAR JAMES: Referring to our conversation about my becoming engaged in the star-route cases, and Colonel Cook's dispatches, I want to say two or three things, though I think probable a personal interview with you and others will be necessary.

First. I greatly appreciate the compliment you and the Attorney-General pay me in thinking of me in this connection.

Second. While I should expect to be paid as well as the Government pays any one for law business—which is stating it low—I should not think of going into it for the mere pecuniary results to myself; and therefore,

Third. I want one or two questions answered confidentially, such as these:

Has the desire to employ me anything to do with Arthur's possible accession to the Presidency? For, if it has, I do not feel that, with my relations to him, I ought just now to go into the cases, for it will be considered that I am there with his consent if not procurement; and though I do not doubt he would favor the "going for" every guilty man, still to stir up the star-route "gang" at the outset of his administration—if, unfortunately, he is to have one—would add to his difficulties at the outset, by bringing "down" upon him that powerful "gang" before he has had a chance to conquer, as I know he will conquer, the approval of the people at large. In other words, if the star-routers think they would get any favor from Arthur, I should want them to remain of that opinion till he has won in a manner the confidence of the non-star routers, and I ought not to expose him to attack before he has gathered strength to withstand them.

(2.) Is there any truth in the impression the Times has given out and the Sun encouraged, that the prosecution is in danger of failing? I know the difficulties in the way, and that success cannot be assured when you are fighting before Washington courts and jury so powerful a set of men as are involved in these cases. But I don't feel like going into a failing case, one which its friends have in their hearts come to believe is likely to fail.

(3.) Is anybody who is believed to be guilty to be saved, protected, or passed by?

There is a sort of belief that there is something of this kind.

I am aware of the difficulty of your answering these three questions, especially upon paper; but I want to possess your mind of them that you may know what is on my mind, and be ready to say something in case I come to Washington.

Fourth. What would my relations to the case be; how much would they require me to be in Washington, or away from here; how long and how continuously are they likely to take me?

Now, my dear James, all this may perhaps strike you a little like "looking a gift horse in the mouth," but it shows how I feel.

If, after seeing what is in my mind, you still think the condition of things is such that I can be of use in the cases, and am likely to be willing to go into them, I will try and come over to Washington some afternoon this week, in spite of this hot weather.

Yours, truly,

GEORGE BLISS.

Hon. THOMAS L. JAMES.

Mr. James on receipt of that letter telegraphed me that the answers to my questions would be satisfactory to me, adding that Colonel Cook was coming to New York, and that he desired me to meet him. Colonel Cook also telegraphed me to meet him at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and I saw him at that hotel on the 4th or 5th of September, after which interview I wrote this letter to Mr. James :

SEPTEMBER 5, 1881.

MY DEAR JAMES: I had a long interview with Colonel Cook. It was satisfactory, on the whole, in all respects, except one, though there were some idiosyncrasies of his developed. The one exceptional point to which I refer is this: He represented that it was not certain I could be retained; that he and you and MacVeagh were in my favor; that he thought he could, through Gibson, influence Blaine, and suggested that I should "pull my wires," if I could. Now, I have no objection to "pull wires" in politics for a friend or myself, but I never have pulled wires for law business, and don't mean to begin now. I didn't quite know what to make of this phase of the matter; but while concluding in my own mind that it is a little device of Colonel Cook's to enhance his importance, and that it is not correct, I still tell you of it frankly. Don't mention it, of course, to him.

Assuming this matter to be all right, I am disposed to take hold. If the Attorney-General is at Long Branch, I rather think I will drop down there some afternoon and talk with him on some professional phases of the case.

Yours, truly,

GEORGE BLISS.

Hon. THOS. L. JAMES.

After that I went to Long Branch, about the 8th or 9th of September, where I saw Mr. James and Mr. MacVeagh both, and had a long interview with them jointly, and subsequently a separate interview with Mr. MacVeagh, and then accepted my appointment.

Q. Who were present at the interview at Long Branch, to which you refer?—A. No one, except Mr. James and Mr. MacVeagh. After the thing was all over, some of these omniscient reporters at the hotel found me and were anxious to discover why I was there. I declined to give them any information; but somehow or other they got it, and next morning it was announced in the newspapers that I had been retained. I mention this, because I notice that Mr. Cook speaks of having been down to Long Branch, and says it was after his visit that it was decided to retain me in the cases, and makes various other statements of that kind, in which he is absolutely incorrect, as I know of my own knowledge and from things which Mr. James told me.

Q. Did you have any consultation at Long Branch at which Mr. Cook was present?—A. Yes, sir; subsequently. When I came into the cases at the interview at Long Branch, Mr. MacVeagh informed me that he intended to employ Mr. Brewster also (Mr. Brewster being substantially his representative and I being Mr. James's), and said he would telegraph to find out when Mr. Brewster could meet us. There was an appointment made for us to meet at Long Branch a few days later, at which time it was supposed Mr. Brewster would be able to attend. It turned out, however, that he was engaged in the trial of a case in the interior of Pennsylvania, and could not attend. The result was that we had present at the conference at the Elberon, Mr. Gibson and Mr. Cook and myself; Mr. MacVeagh was in the house, and whenever we got to a point in the discussion where we desired anything from him we sent for him and he joined us; so that Mr. MacVeagh also may be fairly considered as having been present at that conference. That conference took place about the 13th of September. It lasted, I think, two days.

Q. Whom do you say were present at that conference?—A. Colonel Cook and Mr. Gibson; and, as I have said, Mr. MacVeagh was there, and came in and went out from time to time. He was in the house, and whenever we wanted him and requested his attendance he joined us.

Q. You may state briefly the nature of the services which you performed for the Government during the period of your employment as special counsel.—A. That is rather a heavy job.

In the first place, I was being indoctrinated as to what had been already done by the gentlemen who were in the cases before me. They had got together an abstract of the papers and the evidence upon what was known as the Prescott and Santa Fé route. That was the case which they said was most nearly ready to be proceeded with; in fact, it was represented as absolutely ready. The facts in that case were gone over; and then Mr. Gibson had prepared a very elaborate statement (which I have here) with reference to Mr. Dorsey and his connection with these star routes. It is dated "Washington, July 10, 1881," and addressed to Mr. MacVeagh, and is 175 pages long. That statement was read to us by Mr. Gibson, and it led to a discussion from time to time as we went along. At that time the Prescott and Santa Fé case was considered, and the question of Mr. Walsh's relation to it came up. It was a case where there had been originally other contractors; they had been declared failing contractors, and Mr. Walsh had come in subsequently, and the route had been see-sawed up and down in various ways upon the record, and finally Walsh had been himself declared a failing contractor. All this had been done by Mr. Brady. I think there may have been some one or two of the orders made by Mr. French, the Acting Second Assistant, but it was substantially all done by Mr. Brady as Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

The strength of that case as a criminal case rested absolutely upon the evidence of Walsh. He was represented as being able to testify to payments of money to Brady in connection with procuring the expedition and increase of service, and, with Mr. Walsh's testimony and with the other record evidence as they stated they had it, it seemed a fairly good case. But I told them very distinctly that, with my experience as a prosecuting officer, I could not help regarding Mr. Walsh as a co conspirator in the case—that he might regard himself as a victim, and I presumed he did, but it seemed to me that on the papers he was a co-conspirator, that I could not but believe he was such, and that I was not willing to go on with that case unless Walsh was brought into it. I claimed at first that he should be made one of the parties to be indicted. Subsequently, I think, I modified my view and said that I was willing to go ahead provided he was named as a conspirator, though he might not be indicted. It was left with Mr. Gibson to see Walsh and ascertain whether he was willing to be put in that position. Mr. Gibson seemed to think he would not be willing, and I was very decided in my opinion, in view of some experiences I had had, that, as the case rested entirely upon Walsh's testimony, as I thought, for any possibility of conviction, it would be very unwise to bring the case into the power of a single witness who might at any time slip away. Following that case down a little further we broke up on that, and, so far as it was concerned, it was left in that condition. Subsequently Mr. Walsh came to see me in Washington. I had a long talk with him, and a very agreeable talk. In the course of it we went over together the statement that had been prepared, I think, by Mr. Gibson—at any rate, by Mr. Gibson or Mr. Cook—as to what he, Walsh, could testify to. Portions of it were found to contain matters that he could not testify to; that is, they were not matters of his own knowledge, but matters of inference. That prepared statement was taken and lines were drawn across the portions which Mr. Walsh dissented from, and what he agreed to was otherwise marked, and the paper was indorsed as having been read to him. After that was all over I said to Mr. Walsh that he ought to know that I had been quite decided in saying that I thought he ought to be included in the indictment; that Mr. Gibson was to have seen him on the subject, and that I understood Mr. Gibson had approached him in relation to it. Mr. Walsh said with a good deal of earnestness that Mr. Gibson had never broached the thing to him. I told him that after our conversation I was willing to go ahead with that case, based upon his statement as to what he could testify to—that I thought there could be no probable evasion in connection with that statement. At Long Branch also, after the Prescott and Santa Fé case was taken up, as I have stated, the Dorsey case was gone over. It was represented as substantially in readiness for presentment to the grand jury, though not so entirely ready as the Prescott and Santa Fé route. I see by the testimony given here there has been some statement made that I said that was a weak case, and so on. I said nothing of the kind. I said this: I had been told that Mr. Dorsey's clerk (whose name I did not then know) had given information to the Government, and that the information he had given was available, and, in connection with the case, I asked something about the information that had been given by Mr. Dorsey's clerk, and they replied that he had gone back on the Government again. I then said that that weakened the case, but I never said that it was a weak case; I never thought it was a weak case. I could hardly take it in with all its bearings, its weakness or its strength, at that time where such an amount of material was pumped into me without any opportunity of seeing the original papers, but I formed the impression that it was a strong case. Subsequently, when I looked into the case, I found that many of the statements made in Mr. Gibson's report were rather inferences than facts which could be proved, and that some of them were at least consistent with a different explanation from what he gave to them; but I found also on going to the original papers, which were very voluminous, a great deal in the case, and I formed the opinion that it was a strong case. I stated that it was a strong case, and I state now, and am prepared to stand by it, that that case was the strongest one that we had available to us for months and months, and that I selected it, so far as I had anything to do with the selection, deliberately as the strongest case. Now, perhaps, I may say why. In these cases the United States criminal statutes are in a measure so defective that the conspiracy section was almost the only one which could be considered as applicable. But, if Mr. Brady increased the service and the speed of the service upon one route and allowed a large sum for it, there was in that fact alone no evidence necessarily of guilt on his part, no evidence of conspiracy with anybody. Nor did you get that evidence of guilt or of conspiracy when, confining yourself to that single route, you sent out inspectors and showed that the increase and expedition were unnecessary and that the contractor's statement as to the number of men and the number of horses on which the allowance for expedition was based was erroneous. The contractor had to state to the Department that so many men and so many horses were now employed on the route, and that so many more would be required under the expedition, but his statements on that subject might be entirely incorrect and yet the increase or the expedition be perfectly consistent with the idea that Mr. Brady or the post-office authorities, whoever they might be, had been imposed upon in the matter, and such erroneous statements would be consistent also with the idea that the contractor himself was mistaken. But even if the contractor was deliberately and corruptly in the business so far as he was concerned, that of course did not show conspiracy with Mr. Brady or with any officer of the Post-Office Department, and the act of the contractor in swearing to an affidavit was not to be brought within any perjury statute apparently, as the affidavit was a thing not recognized in any manner by any law. So that when you take a single route, you have practically no evidence on which you can base a charge of conspiracy or establish guilt. But now if you take another route, and you go on and find that the same officer of the Post-Office Department makes a similar order on that route in favor of the same person, or of a number of persons acting together, as to which all these things occur—if you find ten, fifteen, or twenty-five or more routes as to which you find in the first place that the amount of increase was very large; in the second place, that the number of men and horses by which it was gauged was incorrectly stated, either in the present or in the future, or both, and if you find that the service originally was being performed within the time to which the Government was paying a large sum of money to have it expedited or increased—then, as you increase the number of routes, which you find to correspond with each other in these particulars, the aggregation, it seems to me, carries with it an increased presumption or inference of guilt which makes a case of that kind very much stronger than any case based on a single route could be, and makes a case which I think you have fairly a right to ask a jury to pass upon and convict the parties. I took that view of these cases very strongly, because (though not of counsel) I had had occasion to know a great deal about the Tweed case in New York. There had been attempts there to convict what was known as the “Tweed ring” on single transactions, but they had almost all failed. Mr. Tweed himself was tried once or twice. Finally the prosecuting counsel took up a case where they alleged that Mr. Tweed on successive days had passed, or permitted to be passed, sixty or seventy fraudulent warrants. Each one of those warrants taken by itself, as was argued at that time, was perfectly consistent with the idea that Mr. Tweed was innocent in passing them; but when you found him on succeeding days going in with these sixty or seventy or eighty fraudulent warrants, the coincidence of all these facts coming together carried conviction to any unprejudiced mind of guilt on his part, and also in that case (though there was other evidence) carried conviction to the jury. My view with reference to the Dorsey cases was precisely of that general nature. I therefore said that that was a strong case. I say now that it was a strong case, just as far as we had any strong case. Of course, when you can prove actual payments of money, that presents another and stronger feature; but you can rarely expect to be able to prove anything of that kind by anybody who does not stand in the position of being almost in pari delicto, or at any rate in a suspicious position. Where one man swears that he paid money to an official, there being no other evidence of the subject, you can hardly expect to secure conviction; while such testimony as that in connection with other evidence such as I have described is important and very frequently conclusive. I felt, and still feel, that the Dorsey case was just in that position. We could get this aggregation of cases and show this coincident action on the part of the accused officials as to a number of routes, and then when we had succeeded in thus establishing the conspiracy, we would be able to put in evidence the only proof that we had of the actual payment of money, to wit, Mr. Walsh’s statement.

Now, passing from that, I will answer further your question as to what I did. At Long Branch Colonel Cook raised the question of proceeding by information. He had a case, I think from the 5th of Dillon, at least a decision of Judge Dillon’s, on that subject. It was rather a new idea to me, though I had proceeded by information myself in other cases in New York. The idea was not, as I recollect it now, to apply the information to the case of the Prescott and Santa Fé route. That case was supposed to be in such a shape that it could come promptly before the grand jury, and the witnesses were near at hand and could be got without much delay or expense to the Government. The question of the information came up more particularly at that time with reference to the Dorsey case. In that case it was clear that the witnesses, who were scattered all over the country, could be brought here only at considerable expense and after considerable delay, and the question was whether we should proceed by information in that case. At first my ideas were against it. Subsequently, on reading Judge Dillon’s decision and talking the thing over and recollecting some of my own experience, I was rather inclined to favor it. We left that conference, after it had lasted two days, with the understanding that the other gentlemen would return to Washington, and that the Prescott and Santa Fé case, was to be got ready; that Mr. Walsh was to be communicated with as to the question I had raised about his consenting to become a defendant, and to be named as a co-conspirator, and that that case was to be proceeded with by indictment. As to the Dorsey case, it was to be next taken up and got along with as fast as possible, and the question of proceeding by information in that case was to be inquired into, and, if possible, we were to proceed in that way. Subsequent to that, I went back to New York, and I there took up very carefully the question of proceeding by information, and I found it involved in more difficulties than I had anticipated. While in New York, I learned by telegraph that the grand jury of that term of court here had been adjourned. It was a surprise to me. I knew nothing about the circumstances under which it occurred, and I know nothing about the disputed facts as to how it came about, but at all events we found ourselves with the grand jury having adjourned. The question of the statute of limitations was at all times one that we had to keep in view. The contracts on those routes had been made to commence in July, 1878. Many of Mr. Brady's orders, or most of the orders which were considered suspicious, had been made within a year or a year and a half of the making of the contracts—say in the first two years of the contracts. In one point of view the overt act which undoubtedly governed the question of the running of the statute of limitations was Mr. Brady's order for increase or expedition, and therefore we kept in view all through the cases the three years from that time, and were desirous of getting our indictments, if possible, within those three years; though I never felt and do not now feel that the statute of limitations barred proceedings in such cases. I think that in most of the cases the statute of limitations has not yet barred proceedings, because it seems to me that whenever any one of these parties, in pursuance of the prior fraudulent order of increase or expedition, took his quarterly pay, as he did once in three months, in that action of his you had then and there a new overt act which you could count as in connection with the conspiracy, and from which the statute of limitations could be dated. But, of course, there was something to be said upon the other side of the question, and therefore we endeavored to avoid being thrown down upon that theory. When I got to New York, as I have said, I devoted myself at once to careful examination of the question of proceeding by information, and on the 19th of September I wrote Mr. MacVeagh the following letter:

SEPT. 19, 1881.

HON. WAYNE McVEAGH,
Attorney-General:

DEAR SIR: It should be a very grave matter which would lead me to intrude upon you in the present complication. But I have made up my mind that it is very doubtful whether we can proceed by information. If so, and as the Statute of Limitations runs as to our best case—in one view of it—early in October, it seems to me that there should be a speedy conference and agreement as to what should be done. Colonel Cook writes me that our engagement for to-morrow is postponed because of Mr. Brewster's engagements. I write now to say that as we got at him only through you, I think we should meet him as soon as possible, and that I will go anywhere to do it.

After we get together and under weigh it will not, I think, be necessary to trouble with such details.

Your ob'd't servant,

GEORGE BLISS.

I pursued that examination and went into it very elaborately, getting one or two rare English books upon Conspiracy, and came to the conclusion that we could proceed by information unless there was something in the local law of the district which forbade it. That turned upon the question whether conspiracy was an infamous crime. That question I looked up carefully, historically and otherwise, and I prepared a very elaborate brief upon the subject, of which I have a copy here, and which, as the committee will see, contains 32 printed pages.

From time to time I consulted with Mr. Brewster on that subject. I went over to Philadelphia several times, saw him and Mr. MacVeagh, and discussed that question with them. In connection with that, it became necessary to determine whether the law in the District of Columbia presented any other question than was presented in the ordinary forum or in the forum where I was in the habit of practicing, and that question I referred to Colonel Cook as the local counsel here, and was assured by him that he thought that under the local law there was no difficulty whatever with reference to proceeding by information. We went on. We got notice of a motion to strike the information from the files of the court and we prepared ourselves to meet it, and after I had prepared my brief, though it was rather outside of the scope of my portion of the case, I looked somewhat into the local laws of the District and became a good deal alarmed at what I found there as bearing upon the information, and I wrote Colonel Cook on the 31st of October as follows:

OCT. 31, 1881.

DEAR SIR: Our motion is for Thursday, and I will be ready. Have telegraphed Brewster.

Unless there is something in your local laws to the contrary, we are all right. I am afraid of this. How do you get along with U. S. v. Cross, 1 McArthur, 149? Isn't the syllogism police court has jurisdiction of all crimes not misdemeanors? If this is not an infamous crime the police court has primary jurisdiction. If it is infamous, then an information cannot be granted.

Yours, truly,

GEORGE BLISS.

Col. W. A. Cook.

I also wrote Mr. Brewster the following letter on the same day:

OCT. 31, 1881.

DEAR SIR: I have telegraphed you our hearing is fixed for Thursday. I expect to leave here on the "limited" Wednesday, and hope to pick you up and go on together.

I have heard from time to time that we were to be beaten by some local laws in local decisions applicable only in the District of Columbia, and have become anxious about it.

Look at United States v. Cross, 1 McArthur, 149, and see if it has elements of trouble for us.

Cook has always told me there were no local difficulties or decisions, and I have put the examination of them upon him.

Yours, truly,

GEORGE BLISS.

Hon. B. H. BREWSTER.

We came down here to the argument. We had a very elaborate argument, and were beaten, on the ground that there was a peculiarity in the local law of the District of Columbia which made a conspiracy within the statutes here an infamous crime, and that an information could not be filed in such a case, however it might be in other cases. Of course we were subjected to considerable criticism because of the result of that proceeding. I did not think anybody was to blame; I thought it was a fair thing to try; but, however that may have been, if there was any blame anywhere it did not rest upon anybody but the local counsel, and I never felt that that was a matter of proper criticism upon him. During all this period, so far as time allowed, pending this examination about the information, and the preparation of the argument, I was led to give such attention as I could to looking into the evidence in the cases, and considering it more carefully, and after the information was thrown out of court the question came up as to whether we should proceed in the Prescott and Santa Fé case. I was very decided in the opinion that it was not wise to proceed in that case or to put it forward as a pioneer case.

Q. Who were the defendants in that case?—A. Mr. Brady, Mr. John L. French, the chief clerk, Mr. William H. Turner, a clerk, and I think there was a Mr. Brown in the case, and some others. As I have already stated, we were dependent in that case upon Walsh's testimony. Now, Mr. Walsh was but a single individual, and unless he would come to time, and would prove beyond all question the payment of money to Brady, we were gone. In other words, if we relied upon that case as a test case, we were relying upon a single link in our chain. After the decision as to the proceeding by information, which of course had a bad effect upon public opinion, and a bad effect upon us in a measure, I thought it was not advisable to put ourselves in that position. I may say further, that I saw things from time to time which led me to fear that if Mr. Walsh got the money which he claimed had been wrongfully taken from him he would not be for us an available witness; so that we might be in the position of having an indictment procured solely upon that testimony and then find Mr. Walsh dropping out. I was, therefore, very decidedly of the opinion that the Prescott and Santa Fé route should not be proceeded with as the next case. I understand that there has been a letter read here written by Mr. Gibson to the Attorney-General in January, 1882, upon that subject. My impression is that I never saw that letter. The Attorney-General usually showed me everything of that sort, and if he should say that he did show me that, he would undoubtedly be correct, but my impression is that I never saw the letter. At any rate, I have no hesitation in saying that, whether I had seen it or not, my mind upon that subject would not have been changed one particle. I did not then consider it wise to proceed with that Prescott and Santa Fé case, resting as it did upon the testimony of a single witness, and I do not now consider that it would have been wise. If there is any responsibility to be taken in connection with the failure to proceed with that case by indictment, I desire to accept it in the strongest measure, and to say that it was my judgment that it should not be proceeded with at that time, and that I still remain of that judgment and am prepared to defend it anywhere. I then turned, as soon as possible, to the Dorsey case. But, before doing that, I devoted some days to going over all the other cases which had been regarded as suspicious; going over them simply to the extent of looking to see whether there was any danger of the statute of limitations running against us in any of them, for I was keeping a weather eye on that all the time, and I made memoranda as to the earliest cases so as to keep clear of that difficulty. I found that we were in no danger on that point, and then I went on with the Dorsey case. I found that many of Mr. Gibson's statements, as I have said, were not correct, and that as to others, they could not be proved, if correct. I found an infinitude of detail which occupied me almost exclusively down to the 1st of February. I gave some little time to my private business, but comparatively little, merely enough to keep it along, because I found these cases greatly more exacting than I had had any idea they would be; and on the 10th of October I wrote Mr. MacVeagh as follows:

OCT. 10, 1881.

DEAR SIR: The magnitude and difficulty of the job you have got me into grows upon me. This doesn't, however, trouble me, but I am troubled by the obvious fact that I must be in Washington much more than I anticipated, or than was represented. Legally, it looks as if I must take the laboring oar and this must chiefly be pulled in the muddy waters of Washington. If course, I will go through with it. * * *

Yours, truly,

GEORGE BLISS.

Hon. WAYNE McVEAGH.

I traveled between New York and Washington at night, and I worked here usually from either Monday morning or Tuesday morning until Friday evening, when I generally returned to New York, devoting Saturday, as far as possible, to my private business. But I want to say now that from the time I came here, in the middle of September, until the end of the first trial, I devoted to these star-route cases all the time that I was in Washington (including Sunday's, I am sorry to say), an average of sixteen hours of square work every day; and when I say sixteen hours' work, I mean sixteen hours at the desk, with no deduction of time for meals or anything of that kind. I worked here continuously and constantly, sitting up regularly until 2 or 3 in the morning over the cases, and when away from here I always took papers away with me, and worked upon them at home. I tried no individual cases in New York that I remember after that time, but simply did at home what was necessary to keep along my private business. I was disappointed a great many times in the progress that was made in the preparation of the Dorsey case. I know that on the 23d of December, 1881, I wrote to Mr. Brewster, saying:

DEC. 23, 1881.

Hon. BENJ. HARRIS BREWSTER:

DEAR SIR: On returning from Washington last night I found your kind and flattering letter of the 19th. * * *

I have twice been in Washington since I saw you, the last time for four days. Matters move slowly, and you have no idea of the immensity of detail involved. The Dorsey case is about ready for the grand jury. Only a few finishing touches are needed, which I can supply within a few days. Other routes are now being opened up than those of the Dorseys, and seem to indicate equal rascality. You doubtless saw in the papers some correspondence between me and James as to civil suits. I shall write you with reference to it more formally to-morrow. It was with the President's knowledge and approval.

Gibson has been away for some days, and Cook seems sulky. At any rate, neither are doing anything in our matters.

Yours, very truly,

GEORGE BLISS.

The case was not completed so early as I expected, and my recollection is that it was late in January before it was completed, though I think the subpoenas were sent out to the witnesses at the end of December or early in January. Getting at the names of the witnesses that were proper to be brought here was alone a matter requiring very long and careful examination. We had to go through all the papers and consider the different men, and see what was stated about them. It was very important that no mistake should be made on that point, because in many of those cases the witness fees and mileage for a single witness (from Oregon, for instance) would be as much as $800. Of course, therefore, we had to be very careful not to bring unnecessary witnesses, and at the same time we wanted to bring, as far as possible, witnesses who would be fair, and it required a great deal of care and occupied a great deal of time to make up the list. Then, too, of course, we must have witnesses to prove our whole case as to a given route. If we brought five or six witnesses here in relation to any one route, at heavy expense, and missed one whose testimony was necessary to cover a particular point, our chain was broken. It required a great deal of care and thought to guard all these points. Then, during all this period while the Dorsey case was thus under preparation, there came up various incidental matters. At Long Branch, at the first meeting, reference was made to a case against Mr. Lilley, who had been deputy auditor in the Post-Office Department. I will not undertake to say that the question of the statute of limitations was a danger there, but I have an impression that it was. At any rate, there was some reason why Lilley's case was brought up early, and that was spoken of at Long Branch, and on the 1st of October I wrote to Colonel Cook as follows:

Oct. 1, 1881.

MY DEAR COLONEL:

That there may be no misunderstanding, let me state my views as to the immediate future.

1. I see no reason why all the defendants named in the information should not give bail, good substantial bail, Brady in a round sum.

2. As to all but Brady ——— should actually be issued and served on all who haven't given notice they would surrender. As to those who have given such notice, they should be arrested, unless within a reasonable time they perfect bail.

3. As to the next case, Lilley, and also Dorsey, should be got ready for presentation to the grand jury, say the week beginning Oct. 24. Meantime you and I had better, each of us, draft one or more indictments for Dorsey. In Lilly's case the papers or copies are to be sent me.

4. I think immunity should be promised to no one without my concurrence, and that it should be done in pursuance of a defined system, by which the proposed witness must state in writing what he can prove, and then let it be decided whether we want him as a witness. We are bound not to let him suffer from his attempt. There must be confidence somewhere, and he must in the first instance trust us.

5. After Lilley and Dorsey, we should take some of the Salisbury cases, and I would be glad to have any reports and papers relating to them, though they are only partial, and have not been gone over by others.

Yours, truly,

GEORGE BLISS.

Col. W. A. Cook.

The evidence against Lilley rested entirely upon the statement of George F. Brott. Before I came into the cases, Brott had come to Mr. Woodward and had given him information in detail, which Mr. Woodward had written down; it being given under the assurance, as I was informed, that if he, Brott, kept faith, the information, of course, should not be used against him. Finding the condition of that information, and finding that Brott was somewhere in the West—I think in Minneapolis, or somewhere in Minnesota or Nebraska, I am not sure which—we sent for him. I had still my old feeling of fear of anybody who appeared to be in the nature of an accomplice escaping us. I had been euchred pretty badly once or twice while I was a green district attorney in New York, and therefore I took the precaution of sending a subpoena for Brott, and I also sent, unknown, a warrant, causing it to be put into the hands of a post-office inspector, with instructions that it should not be served unless he found that, after getting the subpoena, Brott was disappearing—perhaps going to take a voyage to Europe—for we had witnesses afterwards who went to Europe. It turned out, however, as I now remember, that Mr. Brott had left the West to come here before the papers got there. At any rate, there was no apparent indication at that time that he had intended to evade service. Mr. Brott came here. We wanted him. We were waiting for him. He came, but instead of staying here, he went off at once somewhere else, and we could not ascertain where. Mr. Woodward was not here. I was a good deal worked up. I thought the indications were that Brott had come here and had been run out of town—persuaded to go away. There had been a proceeding, a warrant issued, and a complaint made before Commissioner Bundy, at Colonel Cook's instigation, and we needed Brott as a witness and he had been here and had gone and we could not discover where he was. Colonel Cook went in and took charge of that case, and was incontinently turned out of court; had not, practically, any evidence. It was so little of a case that the commissioner would not even grant an adjournment. As I say, I was a good deal worked up at the disappearance of Brott, and, getting the best information I could get, and with the concurrence, and I think a good deal at the instigation of Mr. Cook and Mr. Gibson, I consented to institute proceedings against Brott for an indictment, and they were instituted. Mr. Woodward was brought back here, and, after many assurances, he consented to go as a witness before the grand jury, although he claimed that it was not right as to Brott. My theory of Mr. Brott's conduct was that he had not kept faith, and that therefore there was no obligation on the part of the Government toward him; but I afterwards became satisfied that he had not attempted to evade us; that his coming here and going off without communicating with anybody had been accidental, and that the refusal at his house to give us information as to where he was, arose from a misunderstanding there, and, therefore, I was satisfied Mr. Brott had kept faith; although I had been for a time very decidedly of the opinion that he had not, and had congratulated myself that my theory that in dealing with an accomplice you must always treat him as an accomplice and not as a witness, was shown to have been a wise one. Before this, however, indictments were ordered against Lilley and Brott.

The question of the drafting those indictments has happened to be brought up here, and, in the mass of venom and misinformation which has been furnished to this committee, it has been asserted that the indictments were drawn up by Mr. Gibson and Mr. Cook. Now, in the first place, Mr. Gibson is so little of a lawyer that, having been employed as an attorney by the Department of Justice, when it became desirable to give him his pay, it required a good deal of investigation to ascertain that he came within the legal provisions as to counsel so that it would be proper to pay him as such; but it was finally discovered that some twenty years ago or more he had been admitted to the bar in Pennsylvania. As for Mr. Cook, I was determined that, if I could help it, he should never draw any one of the indictments for which I was to be in any way responsible; and for just this reason: Acting upon the suggestion that I had made that each one of us should draw a form of information, Mr. Cook drew up one and I drew another. I did not like Mr. Cook's, and I do not know whether he liked mine. I urged that there was a great deal in Mr. Cook's that should not be there, and finally it was arranged there should be two counts; that I should take one and Mr. Cook the other, and that I should nurse my baby and he should nurse his. He drew up the second count, and it was sent to the printer, and after that I never paid any attention to it until, in the proof, I was looking over Mr. Cook's count, and I found that he had left out entirely the names of the parties; that it did not name any human being, but left the count to run back upon the persons named in my count. Now, I do not pretend to be a criminal draftsman, but I was a good deal shocked at that carelessness, as I thought it, and from that time on I did not wish that Mr. Cook should be allowed to draw an indictment in any of those cases, if I could help it, and therefore I always endeavored, in the other proceedings, to have something to do with drawing the indictments.

These gentlemen say I did not draw the Lilley and Brott indictments. All I have to say about that is, that when that testimony was given here there were present in this room Mr. Woodward, Mr. Cameron, and somebody else, and they went straight down to the Department and examined my papers, and there they found the original draft of the Lilley and the Brott indictments, which I have here now [producing them], and every iota of which is in my handwriting, with all the interlineations and changes. I was in New York at the time they found the papers, so had not any possible chance of "putting up any job" on you; and to avoid any such possibility, these gentlemen placed their names upon the drafts of the indictments, and there they are. I have compared them with the originals on file, and they are identical with the originals, and I think that if any inference can be drawn from the quality of the paper, the copies also must have been made by some of the clerks in the Post-Office Department who were detailed to do that work. I have not been able to get the clerks to ascertain that, but here are the original drafts of the indictment under each separate section of the statute.

Now, if there is any question as to who drew those indictments, I do not think the burden of proof rests any longer upon me; for you not only have here the draft of the indictments, with all the details, but if there is any desire to go to the originals you will find in my handwriting, interlined, "and agent," and you will find it running right through. You will find all sorts of pencil memoranda and directions—"Insert so and so in the indictment"—you will find those memoranda running from the beginning to the end of the indictments, though there may be possibly a word dropped out here and there. Here are directions as to how the indictments shall be drawn—"Make this like the other," and so on—all the directions for making up the indictments.

Now, as I have said, these Lilley and Brott indictments were based entirely upon the evidence of Brott; therefore, the moment it became clear that Brott had kept good faith it was perfectly clear that there could not be any proceeding against him based on this indictment depending upon his own testimony. But one of the difficulties was that, in consequence of the misunderstanding which I have mentioned, Mr. Brott ceased to be very friendly to us. Mr. Brott's wife had been subpoenaed by Colonel Cook to go before the grand jury. I don't know how she came to be brought there to testify against her husband; but she was, and there was a good deal of quite natural indignation about it, and the result was that Mr. Brott largely ceased to be an available witness, even against Lilley, and therefore that was not a case in which we could very well proceed. Again, the committee will bear in mind that when you came to Lilley you were dealing with one official, or late official, alleged to have been bribed by another person, your whole case resting entirely upon that. I don't say that you might not get a conviction in such a case, but I do say that it would not be a wise thing to attempt to put that forward as a pioneer case.

A question has been raised here as to some statements which found their way out affecting Mr. E. John Ellis, a member of the House of Representatives from Louisiana, and it has been said that Colonel Cook testified that he never saw any such papers or had any such papers in his possession, or anything of the kind. Now, upon that point I have to say this, that the statements of Mr. Brott as to Mr. E. John Ellis were contained right in the midst of the papers giving his testimony against Mr. Lilley. They never were separated in the office so far as I know, and I am very confident that they never were separated there. Mr. Woodward kept the papers so carefully that I never was allowed to have possession of the originals. I got a copy, which was with the papers, and bore my memoranda, and if the indictments in the Lilley and Brott case were drawn by Colonel Cook and Mr. Gibson, then there was no possibility of their having any papers from which they could have prepared an indictment in that case except this statement of Mr. Brott, which, as I have said, included right in the midst of it the statement as to Mr. E. John Ellis. Therefore, either Mr. Cook and Mr. Gibson did not prepare those indictments, as they did not, or they prepared them from papers which contained the statement as to Mr. Ellis. But a copy of those papers was certainly in the possession of Mr. Cook at one time.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Is that a copy which you hold in your hand?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is that a copy of some of the papers which appeared in the New York Sun recently?—A. Yes, sir. Some of these have appeared in the New York Sun. I don't know that I desire to say anything more in connection with that.

During that fall we were interrupted in the course of the preparation of the Dorsey case by what were known as straw-bond cases. Messrs. Tidball and Shallcross, post-office inspectors, made a very careful and elaborate report (of which report, by the way, I see Mr. Gibson wants to take the credit largely to himself, when, to my personal knowledge, he is largely not entitled to it, for Mr. Tidball and Mr. Shallcross devoted a great deal of their time to it) against certain persons who had given fraudulent bonds on bids. The post-office law, as you gentlemen know, is somewhat defective. It provides that every bidder for a contract is to give a bond, which bond makes his surety liable not only down to the time a contract is obtained upon the bid, but liable during the entire time of the continuance of the contract. Bids come in in such numbers, thousands and tens of thousands, that it is, of course, impossible for any officer, and the law does not look upon the possibility of any officer doing it, to pass upon the question whether the bondsmen are good for anything or not. Any postmaster may certify the bond, and they used to get the postmaster at Culpeper or some other little place to certify the bonds, and that was the end of it. But when you come to the contracts, no bidder gets an average of one in thirty on his bids, and there the examination as to the bondsmen is more carefully made, and the result, in my opinion, of that provision of law is that it leads every bidder to start in with the idea of imposing on the Government. Thus, a bidder, Mr. Cabell, I think, got a man to go on his bond to the amount of $1,000,000, basing it upon land which he claimed to own in Virginia; then that property was transferred to others, and they went on another bond to the amount of a million or two million more. It was a most extraordinary condition of things. That report of Messrs. Tidball and Shallcross came in, and the President decided, with the concurrence of the Postmaster-General, that the attention of Congress ought to be called at once to that state of things, and he sent a message to Congress suggesting certain changes in the law. His object was to provide for a large letting which was to take place a month later; the advertisement was already out for it, and his desire was to get the law changed in time so that it might be applicable to the bids then to come in. There was no power under the law in the Postmaster-General to reject any of those bids, and the desire was to have that done, and the President decided, late in December, I think, to send a message of that sort to Congress. When the President decided to send in that message and to send with it the report of Messrs. Tidball and Shallcross, the result of such action would be necessarily to give notice to all those parties who it was believed had been guilty of wrong-doing in connection with what the Government was investigating, and there was danger, as it seemed to me, that they might escape, and therefore I thought there was no other course to pursue except to go into the police court and get warrants. I learned of the President's decision quite late in the day, and I remember that I sat up the entire night for the purpose of getting the papers so as to go promptly into the police court, in order that we should not be exposed to the charge that the Administration had sent to Congress a paper showing that A, B, C, D, or E had been guilty of certain crimes, and that it was designed as a notice to them to run away. I thought if it was conceivable that any party would seek by any investigation to make a political point, that if we had allowed that to be done it would have given an opportunity for a very strong charge against us, and I think it would have put the counsel for the Government in a position where it would have been very difficult for them to make a satisfactory explanation. The result was that we went into the police court and made complaints. I may say that there was another incident which made that course not disagreeable to me, and that was that there seemed to be a good deal of talk circulating here about "Star Chamber" business; that we were not giving the defendants in the Star-route cases a fair chance; that we were going to rush in before a grand jury and indicting them behind their backs, without giving them any chance to explain or defend, that we were blackening them, and so on. So we did go into the police court. We had to prove there two or three thousand bids, and we were met by this difficulty: We were required by the defendants, in the exercise of their legal rights, to prove each one of those bids, and to prove it technically and squarely. We were not allowed to produce it as from the Department solely. We were required to get the notary before whom it had been taken, and have him testify as to each one; and the defendants undertook to require the notary there in court to sit down and take each one of those papers separately and go over it, and we had a very long and very tedious time of it. There has been some criticism here, I observe, as to the length of time it took. Well, it did take a great deal of time. It did not, however, take anything like two months in any such sense as has been stated here. We would go along for a time, and then there would be an adjournment, and the matter would go over for some days. Finally, I got ahead of the gentlemen on the other side by just hiring the notary and setting him down in the Post-Office Department, where these files were, and having him carefully examine each one of those bonds—examine them and mark them—and then when he went into court with the whole batch, he had made his examination out of court instead of taking time to do it in court, and the judge let them in in that way, although at an earlier stage, when that plan was contended for, he had rather indicated that it was not a proper thing to do. Now, if there is any question as to whether those cases were unduly prolonged by the prosecution in the police court, I will ask this committee to send for Judge Snell. I have not seen Judge Snell for months, or for a year; but I am perfectly willing to let that matter rest upon his opinion. The cases were pressed as strongly as possible, but they were elephants, because we were forced into the police court by the decision of the President that it was necessary for the public good to call the attention of Congress to this straw-bond matter; and when got in there, the defendants, in the exercise of their legal rights, interposed all these delays. At certain stages, I think some of the defendants did talk of waiving an examination and being bound over for the grand jury; but that was at a stage when we thought it not wise that that course should be taken. We had not proved the bad features of our case, and there had been such a general hullabaloo through the press that we had "no case," and various statements of that kind, that we thought it wise, having got into the police court, to continue our case and prove it, so as to show the general features of it.

Now, you have asked me, Mr. Chairman, to give a statement of what I did in the star-route cases. Well, I lived, and breathed, and ate those cases for two years. I ought to say, at this point, that quite early the question came up about some of the counsel going before the grand jury. I was a good deal embarrassed, because, from sources which I was bound to respect, from sources which I never could state without permission and which I have no right to state now, I ascertained that leave would not be given for Colonel Cook to go before the grand jury. Colonel Cook had been sworn in on the appointment of the Attorney-General, and I always felt, and feel now, that the question as to whether an assistant district attorney, appointed by the Attorney-General, has a right to go before the grand jury, is a very doubtful one; and a very different one from the question whether one of the assistant district attorneys, selected by the district attorney himself, has a right to go before the grand jury. Though, even that question, whether even an assistant, appointed by the district attorney himself, has such a right, was very seriously litigated in New York, and finally settled by a decision of Judge Nelson. When I came here I found that the district attorney was not in the habit, ordinarily, of being represented before the grand jury. Colonel Cook was anxious to go before the grand jury in this case; but from time to time I objected and dissuaded him. I thought it was a very doubtful question whether he had any such right. The committee will see that if you recognize the right of the Attorney-General sitting here in Washington to appoint an officer who shall be authorized to go before the grand juries over the heads of the local district attorneys throughout the country, you are giving the Attorney-General a very great power over proceedings; and a power as to which I think there may well be doubt whether it was intended to be given. But if the district attorney of a given locality chooses to swear anybody in as an assistant, that is his matter; he is the officer immediately responsible, and there is much less likelihood of abuses arising from that. At any rate that, was the difficulty that I had in my mind.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was there any difference between the terms of your appointment and the terms of Colonel Cook's appointment?—A. That is just what I am coming to. When we came to the Dorsey case, that was so large and complicated a case that it was very clear that somebody must go before the grand jury. I went and consulted Judge Wylie as to my authority to do so. As a result of that consultation I went to Colonel Corkhill and got him to appoint me one of his regular assistants; and I was so appointed, and did not go before the grand jury until I was so appointed; and it was one of the points raised and litigated very severely by the defendants in the case, that I did go before the grand jury even under that appointment and under such circumstances. They came into court with a most insulting affidavit, an affidavit containing such terms that Judge Wylie declared it should not be received, and held that it was perjury, all based upon that. The point was litigated and argued, and Judge Wylie decided that I was rightly before the grand jury; but I was there as Colonel Corkhill's regular assistant, and not by virtue of my appointment by the Attorney-General. Before I went I took pains, as I have stated, to be so appointed and to file my appointment by Colonel Corkhill in the court, to take an oath over again, and be in all respects precisely in the position of a new officer. That is the distinction that was made, and I believe there is a real legal distinction there. At any rate, I did not feel that it was right to trust the presentation of those cases before the grand jury to an officer appointed by the Attorney-General. There was another ground upon which I objected to Colonel Cook's going before the grand jury, and that arose from his talk about his relations to the jurors and the personal influence that he could exercise over jurors. His statements on that point were such as I never had been accustomed to hear, and they shocked me greatly.

Q. What was his view?—A. His view was that he had a right to interview the grand jurors and talk to them—to coach them, and suggest to them, and everything of that sort; a view which I did not regard as correct at all. I do not mean to say that there was anything improper in it, but his view differed from mine on that point. I never told him of it. I never have said this before; but I did object to his going before the grand jury; I did not think it was right. I accept that responsibility.

Now, the Dorsey case was before the grand jury a good many weeks, probably three or four weeks. As soon as we got done with the preparation of the Dorsey case I turned, as my letter shows that I proposed to turn, to the examination of some of the other cases concerning other contractors. I turned first to the Salisbury cases. I went over them; went through the inspectors' reports, and everything of that sort; went through the papers in the Post-Office Department, and I was painfully impressed with this condition of things. I had no evidence of it; but I believed, and I believe implicitly to-day, that the files of the Post-Office Department, so far as they related to certain of the Salisbury routes, had been interfered with—in a technical phrase, had been "milked," and that many of the papers had disappeared. You would take up the papers on one of the Salisbury routes, and in the case of a contract extending over three or four years you would find only a little bundle of papers so thick [indicating with his hands]—nothing that would aid you at all in the case. Then going to a Dorsey route you would find a bundle, perhaps four times as thick, bristling all over with papers which you could present in court, or which, to say the least, were very suggestive and very useful in bridging over evidence. Finding that condition of things, I just did the best I could. I set to work and picked out what routes I could, endeavoring to find routes particularly of the Salisbury combination, and next of the Parker combination and the Kerens combination. I speak of them as "combinations" because they came to be spoken of in that way. After consultation with Mr. Woodward, and Mr. Lyman (then chief clerk to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, and now Second Assistant Postmaster-General, a gentleman who has more information than anybody else in connection with the postal service except Mr. Woodward), I selected certain routes, as to which I made up my mind that I was going to put them before the grand jury, and I sent subpoenas west for witnesses. Let me say here that my experience was, from the outset, that no Department of the Government had so efficient, so faithful a set of men as the Post-Office Department had in its post-office inspectors; and I also found, and I think this committee will not differ with me on that point, that deputy marshals were exceedingly unreliable. I could not use deputy marshals in serving process or papers, and the result was that we had to use the post-office inspectors, who proved to be wonderfully faithful. Through snow and through rain, and through every obstacle, they went for their witnesses and they got them. The result was that I summoned here witnesses on the route from Pembina to Fargo, one of the Salisbury routes; witnesses on the route from Wells to Hamilton, in Nevada, and witnesses on the route from Soledad to Newhall, in California. All of those routes, I think, were in the Salisbury combination. I summoned, also, witnesses on the route from Vinita to Las Vegas, a very long route which was in the Parker combination; witnesses on the route from Rock Creek to Etchetah, in Wyoming, which was Patrick's route; and witnesses on the route from San Antonio to Corpus Christi, which was a Price route. Generally I examined witnesses on what seemed to be, so far as any evidence we had indicated, the most vulnerable route of each one of those combinations. I put the cases before the grand jury. You have been told here time and again that there was never any attempt to indict anybody else. Now, the fact is that I put before the grand jury which found one of the indictments against Dorsey, and therefore is not to be impeached as not willing to indict "star-routers"—I put before that grand jury witnesses on all these routes, and I expended for the Government not less than $10,000 in bringing those witnesses here. I made, as I believed (though of course I am bound to yield to the grand jury), a good case on the Fargo and Pembina route. There had been a transfer of that contract and one thing and another, and we got right inside; we got the books of the original contractors and everything of that sort, and I thought I made a very strong case. I see, by the way, that in the published report of the inspectors the Pembina and Fargo route is not included, but the Wells and Hamilton is. On that route there was substantially this condition of things. The contract was in favor of one of the Salisbury stage drivers. Before the contract commenced they went to the people who had been running the stage for passengers over that route for many years, and made an arrangement to pay them for carrying the mail a good deal less than they got for the service, and the stages, for the convenience of the owners and the passengers, ran at a good deal faster rate of speed than the contract required the mail to be carried at. After a time they threw down the mail and declined to carry it any more, and then promptly, not a trip of the mail being lost, it was taken up under a temporary contract made with the Salisburys at an immensely advanced price, and it continued to be carried right along on the same stage line without any change in speed or anything else, and then after that came a requisition for expedition and all that sort of rascality. We had evidence of all that. I do not understand why the grand jury failed to indict. There must have been weak points in the case, because I think you will all agree with me that with a case so strong as that and an honest grand jury, as that grand jury apparently was, it would seem inevitable that there should be an indictment. At all events I put that case before the grand jury. When I came to the Soledad and Newhall case that was unexpectedly weak. Perhaps I had been careless, but at all events the case was weak in a sense which brought home to me one of my own theories. It turned out that the order in that case had been made by Mr. French, the chief clerk. Therefore, in that instance, we could not go to the grand jury with the force that we could command in these other cases, a force which depended on repetition, order after order; and, as one of the grand jurymen said to me, "Mr. French ought not to be indicted; that was an extravagant thing, but French may have been imposed upon." And I am bound to say that in that view of the case I was not surprised when that grand jury failed to indict on that route.

Q. To what combination did that route belong?—A. As I recollect, that also was one of the Salisbury routes. Now, on the Venita and Las Vegas route, which was one of the Parker routes, I was under this difficulty. In the first place, the route had never been thoroughly examined. It had been all broken up by advancing railroads, and nearly everybody who had been employed there had disappeared so that they could not be found, and the inspectors who had gone over the route had been over it somewhat by piece-meal. It has since been gone over very elaborately, I understand, and the missing evidence has been substantially supplied. One of our witnesses, who was an important witness, turned out to be absent when our officers got out there to subpoena him; he was driving a drove of cattle overland from California, and we could not get him.

Q. What was his name?—A. I do not remember. Another witness whom we got and brought here, a witness who, in the examination made by the post-office inspectors out there, had given valuable information, and with whom, in connection with the papers, even without other witnesses, I felt confident of an indictment, turned out not to be so good a witness as we had anticipated. His memory was not so good as it ought to have been. He did not remember things in the way they had been stated out there. I never was quite able to understand whether it was a case of honest weakening of memory or not.

Q. What was his name?—A. I do not remember it now; I cannot recall it. I have dealt with so many of these people that I am unable to retain all the names. The result was that while I thought that as a grand jurymen I should have indicted on the Venita and Las Vegas route, I could see that there might be some reason why the grand jury might not do so.

Now, as to the Rock Creek and Etchelah route we had this condition of things: An absolutely essential witness, without whom we could not do anything, was subpoenaed, but instead of obeying the subpoena he went off to Utah on some cattle business and staid away. He was a man who was believed to be, whether rightly or not, I do not know—at any rate he was a man who had handled pitch a little, even if some of it had not stuck to him. He turned up in Washington. By his own admission he had been wandering around the country, and he appeared here the very day that the grand jury had been discharged. The other witnesses were of no use before the grand jury without him, and therefore the expenditure of two or three thousand dollars that I had incurred in bringing them here was made useless by his absence. I refused to certify for that man's fees, and he had the impudence to take an appeal from me and to go to the Attorney-General and insist that he was entitled to fees and mileage, but he did not get it. The name of that man was Thayer; he was a son of ex-Senator Thayer, of Nebraska. The result on the whole was that, to my surprise, as I have said, after I had put these cases before the grand jury and had examined the witnesses, the papers came back to me indorsed in each case by the foreman, "Dismissed, John T. Mitchell, foreman." There were four of those cases, one on the route from Vinita to Las Vegas, another on a route from Wells to Hamlington, another on the route from Soledad to Newhall, and the fourth on the route from Fargo to Pembina, and I have the papers in each case as they were returned from the grand jury indorsed "dismissed."

Q. Were those the indictments that you prepared?—A. No; the indictments were not prepared beforehand. These papers that I have here are the briefs of the evidence. I put the witnesses before the grand jury, and then was requested to hand to the foreman a brief of what I thought the papers presented, and these are the briefs. In the other case a Price route, from San Antonio to Corpus Christi, and from Monroe to Shreveport, the grand jury ordered an indictment. I was pretty "sick" when I got these papers back from the grand jury with the indorsement that they were dismissed. The briefs here referred to are as follows:

A.

Vinita to Las Vegas. Route 32024, 725 miles. Once a week. Ten days. Virgil W. Parker. $6,330.

Sept. 27th, 1878. Hayes, Tascosa, and Wheeler were added.

(On the margin:) By another order 12 miles were added, and 535.77 for Seven Oaks, though it was directly on the route.

Of these offices, Hays cannot be found, Wheeler was discontinued. Wheeler and Tascosa were directly on the line, yet they were ordered to add 85 miles to the route, and $842.38 was added for that. This was before expedition and increased service. By expedition and increased service the cost of these paper miles was greatly increased.

Dec. 1st, 1878. Two trips were added and $12,000 allowed. This order, and that adding Tascosa, etc., were modified so as to allow together $23,573.79.

Nov. 16th, 1878. J. W. Parker became subcontractor at full pay.

Jan. 1st, 1879. Time was reduced to 7 days, and $31,846.31 allowed. This brought the total pay at that time up to $50,836.31.

Jan. 12th, 1879. The P. M. at Vinita wrote that the service was superfluous; that there were no intermediate office that amounted to anything, and that in over three months he had received less than 50 letters and a half dozen papers.

Feb., 1879. It appeared that the mails for Darlington and Fort Elliot, the chief intermediate offices, having been directed to be forwarded from Vinita over this route, but that for weeks none had been delivered.

P. M. at Darlington wrote that only 2 papers and two letters had passed over the route, and that there was no road to Vinita.

P. M. at Vinita made same report.

These facts were expressly called to Mr. Brady's attention March 17th, 1879, and he directed that no change should be made.

March 8th, 1879. Chambers, P. O. inspector, wrote the Department that a movement was on foot by interested parties to secure further increases, and he believes it wrong. The route as let was really 638 miles long, instead of 725, as advertised. This appears from distance circulars. By the addition already noted, the Department, on paper, made the distance on March 19th, 1879, 810 miles, and the time, having been by expedition put down from 10 to 7 days, was then, in consideration of the alleged increased distance, put up to 9 days.

July 6th, 1879. Service was increased to seven trips and 86,052.59 allowed. This carried total pay, which had began at $63.30, up to $136,883.90.

There were numerous petitions for this from St. Louis and members of Congress and Army officers.

Letters from E. W. Parker, the brother to Parish, show how this was done.

The revenues of all the offices were 520.22.

April 30th '79. P. M. at Vinita who had written against the route was removed as Brady's demand, though the inspector reported in his favor.

April 22nd, 1880. P. M. at Red River Springs wrote transmitting a letter from E. W. Parker, seeking to bribe her.

Aug. 1st, 1880. Service reduced to 3 trips, and $64,539.44 deducted.

Superintendent railway mail system. P. M. at Mohute or Fort Elliot, at Darlington, says route of no use.

Aug. 6th, 1879. An inspector reported to same effect.

March 19th, 1879. 69 miles were added to embrace several stations on the west end of the line, and $684.59 allowed. This was for another change from a route which they had never traveled, and which was impracticable.

In fact, with all the additions, the road is 1 mile less than advertised.

The fictitious distances took from the Treasury after expedition $31,973.97 a year, A saving of one day out of ten cost $94,336.39 a year.

Letters show a disposition to singe Hunt, superintendent of mail service.

Wells to Hamilton, No. 45132. Distance, 225 miles, 3 times a week, 108 hours. O. J. Salisbury, contractor, $10,700.

Originally let to Joseph Evans at $5,900 a year.

John T. Gilmer, of Gilmer, Salisbury & Co., had the order for the mails from Evans, who was a stage-driver under them. Gilmer arranged with Woodruff and Ennor to carry the mails. They did so. About January 1st Gilmer told P. M. at Wells he would not take the mails any more, so Evans did not or would not pay him; there-upon Evans was declared a failing contractor. Gilmer then got control of the bids next above Evans till they came to O. J. Salisbury, at $10,700, and he took the contract.

Woodruff and Ennor carried the mails right along while Evans was nominated contractor, after the failure, and under Salisbury.

Monroe Salisbury became subcontractor at full amount on July 8th, 1879.

July 23d, 1879. Time expedited from 108 hours to 48 hours, and $15,000 allowed.

For about half the distance from Wells to Hamilton, Woodruff and Ennor have carried the mails as subcontractors. They have always and for years carried the mail over their half of the route in from 12 to 14 hours, and when expedition was ordered they made no change, except that while they had in winter laid over-night at Sprucemount, during a month or two of last winter they did not do so.

On that end of the road expedition did not expedite.

As to the other end, there was no change in time after expedition. The mail was, moreover, not carried on the route let, but was carried by another route from Cheny Crick to Ely, where it intersected another route were by the chance contractor, and the mail from Ely to Hamilton was therefore carried on the latter route. The contractors 15 or 20 miles in this way. It would seem, however, that so far as the people everywhere, except at Hamilton, were concerned, this unauthorized change, while benefiting the contractors, certainly did not injure any one else. But it was a violation of their contracts.

To obtain expedition, Monroe Salisbury swore that on a schedule of 108 hours 7 men and 18 animals were required, and in 48 hours 18 men and 50 animals would be required. In fact, the number in use at the time of the oath were 10 men and 30 horses, and not more than that amount were used afterwards.

There was a number signed petition for expedition. But in point of fact it had not over half a dozen names of persons residing. Nine-tenths of the signers lived at Eureka, on an entirely different route.

As to Brady in this case, the question is, whether he was not bound to know or ascertain that no expedition was necessary, as the mail was already being carried in less than the expedited time.

As to O. J. Salisbury, he seems to have been a sort of dummy. Monroe Salisbury was the sole contractor. His route was certainly false. If Brady is not included there are not two conspirators, unless Gilmer can be included.

Soledad to Newhall. Route No. 46120. Let 7 times a week; time, 67 hours; distance, 304 miles. Contractors, M. V. Nichols, D. J. Salisbury. Pay is let, $29,000.

Case sought to be made out is against them and John L. French, who ordered expedition.

Oct. 4th, 1878. Time reduced from 67 hours to 53 hours, and $27,750 allowed therefor.

Expedition was granted upon an affidavit of Nichols that in the schedule there was required 130 horses and 34 men, and that a schedule of 53 hours would require 258 horses and 64 men.

Wm. Buckley, an old mail-carrier, swore that he had carried the mail over the whole of the route for some years before the present contract began, and that he has been, and is now, subcontractor for 115 miles from Soledad to San Luis Obispo, about one-third of the whole route, and at least as hard as the rest. Before expedition he employed 11 men and 32 horses = 43; after it, 13 men and 48 animals = 61. Applying the same proportion to the whole route, there would be before expedition 33 men and 496 horses; after it, 39 men and 144 animals. Mr. Buckley said that perhaps 160 animals were necessary after expedition.

OATH.

Before expedition, 34 men, 130 animals=164.
After expedition, 64 men, 258 animals=322.

BUCKLEY.

33, 96=129.
39, 160=199.

Mr. Buckley says that expedition did not hurry the arrival of the mail going north at their most important point, as they lay over night at Soledad.

As French made the order, he can be charged with none of the odium attaching to Brady. This fact, I think, I failed to call to the attention of the grand jury.

As to French, therefore, the case is not strong to show he acted in bad faith, which in his case is necessary to indictment. He had numerous petitions before him.

As to the contractors, the case rests in the oath.

There is evidence of sharp practice by the contractor with the subcontractor, but this does not concern the grand jury.

Route 35040. Dak. Fargo to Pembina. 156½ miles and back. 6 a week. Luke Voorhees, $17,000.

SCHEDULE.

Leave Fargo daily, except Sunday, at 4 a. m.

Arrive Pembina third day at 6 p. m.

Leave Pembina daily, except Sunday, at 4 a. m.

Arrive Fargo third day at 6 p. m.

1878, July 30th. Order 6056.

From August 1st, 1878, expedite schedule to 43 hours, from May 1st to Oct. 31st, and to 50 hours from Nov. 1st to April 30th, in each year, and in accordance with sworn statement of contractor, that it will require fifty per cent. more stock and carriers, allow $8,500 per annum additional pay. Increase service to seven trips per week, and allow contractor $4,250 per annum additional, being pro rata.

CONTRACTOR'S OFFICE.

Hon. THOS. J. BRADY, etc. :

I will perform service on Route No. 35040 from Fargo to Pembina on a reduced schedule from sixty-two hours to forty-three hours, in summer, and fifty hours in winter, for an increase of pay of eight thousand five hundred dollars per annum, this being pro rata pay, in proportion to men and horses required to perform said service on reduced schedule, and will perform the seventh trip per week for pro rata pay.

LUKE VOORHEES.

Oct. 10, 1878.

Reduced service to 6 a w., deduct $4,250, Aug. 1st, 1880.

Dist. increased one mile for new office (addl.), $162.94, Nov. 15th, 1880.

Dist. increased $\frac{1}{2}$ mile for new office (addl.), \$81.47.

Present cost of service, $25,744.41; six trips, $17,162.94.

Expedition, $8,581.47. Total, 25,744.41. Cost of service last term, being part of E. 2034 on a four-day schedule, $18,421.37 per annum.

The six times a week service was originally placed on the route after consultation with the Canadian P. M. General, as it is the main line for Manitoba mails.

Senator Windom and Hon. J. E. Kidder ask the increase and expedition.

Affidavit.

I hereby certify that it will take 50 per cent. more men and horses to perform mail service on Route No. 35040, from Fargo to Pembina, on a reduced schedule from 62 hours to 43 hours in summer and fifty hours in winter.

JOHN T. MITCHELL, Foreman.

That brings me to another little feature of this business. After the witnesses began to come here in these cases, Colonel Ingersoll (who was counsel for the Salisbury and Parker combinations) said they claimed they did not owe the Government anything and that it was not fair to indict them, and he said they were perfectly willing to make some arrangement by which, if they did owe the Government anything, it should be paid promptly, and were willing to leave the question substantially in the Government's hands, only that they desired to make the condition that criminal prosecutions should not be proceeded with. I replied at once that that condition I could not accede to. I assumed that those parties knew that the witnesses were here in those cases, though I never said so, and nothing was said to me that indicated that they did have that knowledge. However, the proposition was made from that side that we might pick our arbitrators, but they wanted criminal proceedings stopped, and they wanted that to apply to all the Salisbury routes. I said that I would not consider that proposition on such terms, because there were a great many of those Salisbury and Parker routes that I had not investigated, and I would not think of agreeing to stay criminal proceedings so far as related in any manner to the indictments. My impression is—I would not say it was a fact—that if I had been willing to negotiate with reference to all the Salisbury and Parker routes, probably there might have been some arrangement made; but at any rate we broke on that, and I went ahead with my indictments, or with my proceedings before the grand jury. I got these papers back from the grand jury late one night. So far as the overt acts relating to the orders were concerned, it was impossible to get another grand jury before the statute of limitations would run as to those. I hurried down to consult with Mr. Merrick, and it was agreed that we would see if we could not save something out of that wreck in some way, by resuming the dropped negotiations with Colonel Ingersoll, and we did that, keeping concealed entirely the fact that there had been a refusal to find indictments. They had never said to us that they knew we were trying to indict, or that they knew the witnesses were here, or anything of that sort; it never had been talked about between us at all. The result of that negotiation was that I finally came to an agreement with Colonel Ingersoll as to the Salisbury routes, which was reduced to writing. Before that was done the Attorney-General was consulted, and he said it was a matter that he knew very little about, and which he would leave for Mr. Merrick and myself to decide.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Did Mr. Merrick concur with you?—A. Yes. Mr. Merrick hadn't anything to do with it actively. I got this information about the action of the grand jury one night, as I have stated, and I saw that if I wanted to resume the negotiation I must do it as soon as possible; so I went right down to Mr. Merrick's house and told him what I proposed, and he concurred. We considered the mere general question as to what was best to be done. We consulted our authorities and discussed the matter, and concluded that it was best to give ourselves the benefit of all the doubts, and I resumed my negotiation with Colonel Ingersoll, and we made an agreement as to the Salisburys, confining it to four routes. There was another route which I had not put before the grand jury, but which I was sorry I had not—the route from Silver Bow to New Chicago. I made an agreement with Colonel Ingersoll in relation to these Salisbury routes, the substance of which was this: That the Salisburys were to stand in the gap; were to become responsible for Luke Voorhees, and for every stableman and driver that they had put up as a contractor, and to whom or to whose subcontractor the money had been paid. In very many cases the Salisburys were not the contractors, and the money they had got they had got as subcontractors, or frequently not even as subcontractors; but the men who were the contractors were their stablemen, drivers, and so on.

Of course as the grand jury had refused to indict, we were looking to get back the money as far as we could, so I looked upon it as a very important thing to get the Salisburys to stand in the gap and be responsible for all money that had gone to their drivers and to these other parties. Of course it was possible that we could not get those parties into court, at least it was involved in great difficulty, because we would have had to prove their connection with the fraud and so would have had to go into details. Moreover, owing to the subcontract law passed a few years ago, there are very serious difficulties interposed in such cases. You recognize the subcontracts and put them on file and the subcontractor gets his money on his subcontract, and although you may be able to show that the expedition and increase and so on are all fraudulent, yet he may be able to say, "I didn't know anything about that; that is the contractor's business." Well, it was agreed that Col. Ingersoll should be one of the arbitrators, Mr. Elmer, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, another, and I the third; it being avowedly understood that there were two representatives of the Government upon that arbitration, two who believed that the Salisburys owed the Government money; and it was agreed that the arbitrators should act by a majority and upon any evidence satisfactory to them. In my opinion it was about as one-sided an arrangement as was ever made. I regarded it as a very desirable arrangement for the Government, and I think so still.

Q. You say that was reduced to writing?—A. Yes; I have a copy of it here, and it happens to be one which was really submitted and signed by Colonel Ingersoll, and which bears interlineations showing changes that were made in it while we were going through the negotiations. It runs in this way:

It is claimed by the Government that Monroe O. J. Salisbury, Luke Voorhees, M. V. Nichols, or some other person or persons representing or connected with the Salisburys, has or have received moneys from the Government to which they were not legally entitled, on the four following postal routes, namely: Wells to Hamlington, Fargo to Pembina, Soledad to Newhall, and Silver Bow to New Chicago.

It is therefore agreed: That the claim of the Government in the said four routes, or any of them, shall be referred to Richard A. Elmer, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, George Bliss, or any one that may be designated by him, and Robert G. Ingersoll, or any one that may be designated by him, to determine whether the said parties, or any of them, have received from the United States any money to which they or any of them were not entitled for transporting the mails upon any of the four said routes mentioned.

It is further agreed that the said referees, or a majority of them, shall have full power to decide all questions submitted, and to act on any evidence satisfactory to them, or a majority of them, and if they, or a majority of them, find that on said routes, or any of them, money has been so illegally received, it shall be refunded on demand, or may be recouped by the Government.

If the Government hereafter institutes any other proceedings against the said parties, or any of them, on account of any matters growing out of the said four routes, then this submission shall be void.

This instrument does not affect the ordinary proceeding of the Post-Office Department as to fines, penalties, and stoppages during the pendency of this arbitration.

That was signed probably somewhere about the 15th of June, 1882. Colonel Ingersoll was able to say that he was authorized to represent the Salisburys, but on the question of the Parkers I think there was a little doubt about his authority, and he wanted to get some more explicit authority by telegraph. A similar arrangement, however, was made with the Parkers, identical in terms with this Salisbury arrangement. I do not think I have a copy of the arrangement with the Parkers. It related to the Venita and Los Vegas route. It was signed two or three days later than the other. Then, in point of fact, the condition of things was this: On the morning the grand jury were to come in, and when it would appear that they had refused to find a bill on the Venita and Los Vegas route, Colonel Ingersoll sent to me to say that he was prepared to sign the stipulation for the Parkers. I returned word that I would do it at any time before the grand jury came in, but I would not say that I would do it afterwards; and the paper was actually signed while we were sitting in court waiting for the grand jury to come in; and pretty soon they came in and it appeared that they had found no bill.

Q. What was done thereafter with regard to that compromise?—A. You can hardly call that a compromise.

Q. Agreement then?—A. An arbitration I should call it. We plunged at once almost into the first trial of the Dorsey case. This was about the middle of June, and I think we commenced that trial about the middle of June.

Mr. WOODWARD. The Dorsey trial was going on then.

The WITNESS. Mr. Woodward says the trial was going on then, and I believe it was. At all events it was agreed that we were none of us in any condition to proceed with the arbitration then, and it was arranged that it should be taken up when we got through the other trial. When we did get through we were all very thoroughly worn out, and at the time I was summing up the case my wife was supposed to be at the point of death, not expected to live from day to day, so of course as soon as I got through I went to her. We were all tired out. After a time I desired to proceed with the arbitration, and as it was very clear that I had authority to designate somebody in my place, it seemed to me that, for various reasons relating to expense, and also for other reasons, it was wise to select a Government officer, so I designated Mr. Lyman, now Second Assistant Postmaster-General. Therefore, if the arbitration had gone on it would have been conducted by Colonel Ingersoll, representing one side, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Elmer, the other, and his chief clerk, Mr. Lyman, as the third arbitrator. I transmitted this designation to Mr. Elmer, first writing a letter about desiring to proceed with the case, and then transmitting the original paper with my substitution. Mr. Elmer, however, was reluctant to proceed. He felt this way, and perhaps I did not blame him. He felt that public opinion was in a very excited condition, and that if he should go on with this arbitration, and should finally find that these parties owed the Government even $10,000 less than some gentlemen of the press or somebody else chose to say was due to the Government, there would be at once an allegation that there had been some "divide," or some corruption, or something of that kind, and for that reason he was unwilling to proceed; but he said that if it was found to be his duty to proceed he would do it, at the same time expressing in writing his very decided opinion that these gentlemen owed the Government a great deal of money. Mr. Howe became Postmaster-General, and then there was raised a question as to whether the arbitration was authorized, whether it bound the Government, or whether they could enforce it against the other parties, and it was decided, I understand—I never saw the correspondence until yesterday—it was decided, I understand, or at least all the correspondence that I have seen points to the conclusion, that there was very considerable doubt as to whether there was a right to proceed with the arbitration; but that if there were, in form, suits commenced, then they could be referred to arbitration, and to the same arbitrators, and it could be done by agreement provided the parties said to owe the money were acting in good faith and were willing to do it. I do not know whether they were willing to do that or not, but I do know this, for it appears from the papers, that they offered at one time to give bond to comply with the terms of the arbitration. My personal judgment was, and I put it in writing very strongly, that the proper course for the Government was to proceed with the arbitration until it got to a point where the defendants (I speak of them as defendants for convenience) should indicate that they were not going to be bound. They never did indicate that, so far as I know. I believed then and I believe to-day that that agreement was entered into in good faith by those parties, that they did intend to be bound by it, and that they certainly would have been bound by it if it had been proceeded with. But as to the question whether the Government was legally bound by our acts, I recognized that there was considerable doubt as to the right of attorneys to submit the claims of the Government to be decided in that way, and there was some doubt, perhaps, as to whether the decision of such an arbitration could be enforced against the Government. There was a decision of the Court of Claims which looked as if it could be, and another decision which looked as if it could not be. My idea was, that the Government should have gone on until it ascertained that those parties were not acting in good faith and did not intend to be bound by the arbitration; and, as I have already said, I never saw any reason to doubt they were acting in good faith and did intend to be bound. However, the arbitration never was proceeded with, but it was not my fault.

Here the examination was suspended and the committee adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 21, 1884.

GEORGE BLISS recalled and further examined.

The WITNESS. In connection with what I said yesterday about the matter of arbitration, I desire to put in one or two letters. I have a letter here, or a press copy, rather, of a letter written by myself on the 24th of November, 1882, addressed to Hon. Richard A. Elmer, Second Assistant Postmaster-General. That letter is as follows:

NOVEMBER 24, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I now inclose to you the original agreements of arbitration made in the Salisbury and Parker cases. I have indorsed on them a substitution of Mr. Lyman in my place. I remain strongly of the opinion that the cases should be at once proceeded with. Mr. Merrick agrees with me.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS.

Hon. R. A. ELMER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

That had been preceded about a month previously by a personal letter substantially taking the same ground.

The other letter is dated December 5, 1882, and is addressed to Hon. Benjamin Harris Brewster, Attorney-General. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, December 5, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your favor 30th ult., transmitting a letter of the Postmaster-General, inclosing a report from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, with reference to the arbitrations arranged of the claims on the Salisburys and their dependents and on Parker and others.

The Postmaster-General inquires as to the legality of the arbitration proposed, and suggests whether, if there is doubt of the power to enforce any award that might be made, it would not be well to abandon the arbitrations.

I do not suppose that you desire me to go into a discussion of the legal questions involved. The circumstances under which the agreements were entered into are known to you. My own personal opinion is that they are valid, and that any awards can be enforced either by direct proceedings upon them or by using them as evidence.

But whether this is so or not I should regard any failure to proceed by the Government as a fatal mistake, casting discredit upon the Government's case and reflecting upon its management. Indeed, I have been astonished at the hesitation manifested in proceeding.

Let me state the case. An agreement by arbitration has been entered into. It gives to the Government great advantages. There are three arbitrators, of whom two were understood to be and are biased in favor of the Government, and were selected with that understanding. They act by a majority. They act upon evidence satisfactory to them, uncontrolled by strict legal rules, though, of course, in procedure and otherwise they are bound to act fairly and justly. Moreover, they act here, instead of requiring the several cases to be submitted to civil tribunals in distant and scattered territories, among communities alike only in one respect—in the probability that public sentiment would be against the Government. Again, by the agreements, persons who are pecuniarily responsible agree to be accountable for their representatives, their "dummies," who are irresponsible, and as to whom the Government could not probably in court establish the responsibility of their principals.

Now, with such agreements in existence, with no suggestions from the other side that they do not propose to be bound by and to carry out the agreements, it is suggested that the Government, under a doubt as to the ability to enforce them, should withdraw. It seems to me, on the contrary, that the clear policy of the Government should be to proceed promptly with the arbitrations; to assume that the other side propose to act in good faith. If in the course of the proceedings it becomes, for instance, desirous to have a bond from the defendants, to ask it. If it should be properly asked and should be refused, it might then present a different question, though I think not. There is nothing to indicate that the defendants will not in good faith abide the result. I believe they will do so, for it is their manifest interest to do so. If they should refuse there is still power to resort to other proceedings in the courts, which, when the agreements were made, the defendants were anxious to avert.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS,
Special Assistant Attorney.

Hon. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

In connection with what I said about the proceedings against the Salisburys and others, I will state that on the 4th of November, 1882, Mr. Brewster addressed a letter to each of the counsel with reference to what had been done, and as to what should be done in the cases against the Parkers and others—what was known as the Salisbury combination. On the 6th of November I wrote the following reply, addressed to Mr. Brewster:

NOVEMBER 6, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of November 4 as to the star-route cases against the persons other than those already indicted.

In reply I have to say that last spring I selected, with a great deal of care, and after a great deal of labor, what appeared to be the strongest cases against what is known as the Salisbury combination and against the Parkers. At large expense I brought numerous witnesses to Washington, and placed them before the same grand jury which indicted Dorsey, Brady, Price, and others. While as to one case we were obliged to admit that my evidence failed, I thought that I was entitled to several indictments against the Salisburys, and to one against the Parkers. But the grand jury ignored the bills, some of which Mr. Ker had substantially prepared. I thought the grand jury made a mistake, and still think so. At the same time the result of the long trial served to convince me that if the grand jury had found bills, a conviction could not have been obtained on evidence in possession of the Government, though at the same time I cannot resist the feeling that if we could get at the real facts in these cases, we shall be able to make quite as strong a case as we have against the Dorseys and their associates.

One advantage we have had in the Dorsey case which is wanting in that of the Salisburys. The Dorseys so treated all their subordinates and subcontractors as to dissatisfy them, and to make them willing to aid the Government. The Salisburys on the other hand, so far as I have found, satisfied and attached to them their subordinates. Moreover, as a general rule the Salisburys did their own work, and had no subcontractors. The Salisburys were mail contractors, the Dorseys speculators in mail contracts. I know, therefore, of no cases against the Salisburys which I should feel justified in presenting to a grand jury, or in which, if indictments were obtained, we could hope for a conviction. I ought to add that in the Salisburys cases the files of the Post-Office Department are much more meager than in the case of the Dorseys, so meager, indeed, as at times to have raised a suspicion in my mind that papers had been removed. Yet, I know of no evidence of this.

As to the Parkers, I have never been able to resist the conviction that if the Las Vegas route were gone over carefully and thoroughly by persons who understood the business, evidence would be found to justify indictment and secure conviction.

The Post-Office authorities went only partially, cursorily, over it. The route was broken up by advancing railroads, and witnesses scattered. This was one of the routes I put witnesses before the grand jury on. One of them failed me, while others could not be found.

As to the other general combinations, that of Barlow, Sanderson & Co., of Kerens, and others, while I found plenty of facts to excite suspicion, I found nothing that would, in my judgment, secure indictment and conviction. I say this after going through all the papers relating to routes into which there was any reason to excite suspicion—apart from the general rottenness of the expedited routes—or as to which the Post-Office authorities had made any special examination. In other words, I examined all the evidence that I could find, and such was the conclusion I came to.

I think, however, that as to civil prosecutions the situation is somewhat different. I think there is evidence on which the Government could fairly claim a recovery as for moneys received for work not done, expeditions not performed, trips not made. But the evidence of this nature needs to be worked up with care and labor, and on the routes. On four of the cases against the Salisburys which I placed before the grand jury last winter, and on one against the Parkers, the evidence was brought together. When the grand jury failed to indict, I arranged, as you know, with the concurrence of Mr. Merrick, an arbitration by which the claims of the Government on those routes were referred to Mr. Elmer, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General; Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, the counsel of the contractors, and myself. Authority was given to act by a majority, to take and act on such evidence as they chose, and generally the terms secured to me to give the Government many advantages over an ordinary civil suit. A right was reserved to me to designate some one to act in my place, and the same right was reserved to Colonel Ingersoll. Nothing has been done under these arbitrations, for until the middle of September Colonel Ingersoll and myself were busy, as you know, in the Dorsey-Brady trial. After that came the necessity of some recreation. Some weeks since, however, I transmitted the papers to Mr.

Elmer, with a suggestion that a meeting of the arbitrators should be called and the work—which ought not to be long—commenced.

At the same time I suggested that I proposed to substitute in my place as arbitrator Mr. Lyman, chief clerk to Second Assistant Postmaster-General, who is thoroughly honest and thoroughly in earnest.

I made these suggestions, because I did not see how I could get the time to attend properly to the matter, and because that if I had the time I must charge the Government largely for my services, and I thought that money could be saved.

I subsequently visited Washington, chiefly on this business, but Mr. Elmer was absent, and I accomplished nothing. I have had no answer to my letter.

If public expectation is to be met by further prosecutions, civil or criminal, there must be further and detailed, accurate, and local investigation. Whether this should be made by the Department of Justice or by the Post-Office Department, I do not know. All local investigation has heretofore been made by the latter, and very well done.

I expect to be in Washington in a few days, and will talk with you on the matters.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS.

Hon. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

The arrangement I made for arbitration does not bar criminal proceedings against the parties, though as to the specific routes it may not go on pending the arbitration. If it does, it terminates the arbitration.

On the receipt of that letter, which was transmitted to the Post-Office Department, that Department commenced a series of investigations, one of which I think I referred to yesterday, in connection with the Venita and Las Vegas route, and which investigation resulted in making a very complete case, as I think, upon that route, for certain civil proceedings.

I will now proceed with my answer to the question addressed to me yesterday, relative to what I did in these star-route cases. After the first indictment against Dorsey was filed, it appeared that two of the defendants, Mr. Rerdell and Mr. Sanderson, had been designated only by the initials of their first names; and there had been omitted the additional clause which, if it had been inserted, I suppose would have made the indictments unquestionably good. I refer to the allegation that "the first names were to the jurors unknown." The indictments were attacked for the reasons stated, and of course it was the business of counsel for the prosecution to say what they could to sustain them. They were not sustained, however—that is, as far as Rerdell was concerned. I think Sanderson stood by awaiting the result in the Rerdell case. When this objection to the indictment was sustained we were presented with the question as to whether we should go on with the indictment as it then was, with the remaining defendants, and try them, leaving Rerdell out and Sanderson practically out, or whether we should procure a new indictment. Fortunately, we found that we could pursue the latter course without additional expense to the Government and without any delay. The witnesses had been before the grand jury, and as there could be no trial for two or three months, they had returned to their homes. They had been, or were to be, subpoenaed for the trial. At all events, they were subpoenaed. We brought them on a little in advance of the time for the trial, in order that they might go again before the grand jury, and thus enable us to procure a new indictment. Upon their testimony a new indictment was found; the error in the name of Mr. Rerdell was corrected; Mr. Sanderson's name was omitted altogether. That fact has been made the subject of some comment; in fact, has been made the subject of somewhat dirty insinuations before this committee. I have to say as to that, that the condition of things was this: The route with which Sanderson was connected, which was included in the original indictment, was the route from Saguache to Barnum, in Colorado. It had been let to Miner. It was a route which the inspector's report and the affidavit made by Sanderson seemed to cast considerable suspicion upon, and which had the appearance of being a fraudulent transaction. It certainly resulted in taking from the Government a good deal more money by the process of expedition than it ought to have paid. And therefore, in the original indictment in regard to that route, Mr. Sanderson was put in as a defendant. When the question came up with regard to the finding of the new indictment, we had time then to examine a little more carefully than we had done before into the condition of things. We determined, if possible, not to make any more mistakes; we went over, with great care, the whole case. Mr. Merrick, Mr. Ker, and myself had numerous consultations in regard to it. There was at one time a suggestion, for instance, that Vaile might be left out of the indictment. The result of an investigation on that point convinced us that Vaile was concerned very much more deeply in the business than we had supposed at first.

Rerdell's correct name was found and inserted. As to Sanderson, we found on examination that the only route with which he was connected that was included in the indictment was the one I have specified; that that had been let to Miner at the bidding; that Sanderson had taken it off of Miner's hands at the full amount. There was not the ordinary case of a subcontract, leaving a profit in the hands of the original party. We then found, by going to the post-office records, that every dollar of the money that had been paid out upon that route had been paid to Sanderson; that no money had gone to any of the other defendants. We were brought face to face, therefore, with this question which was raised in our minds, and which, in different forms, was argued with great persistency during the trial by the defendants, and presented some difficulties. That question was: whether we were not bound in an indictment, under the conspiracy statute of the United States, to prove that all of the defendants had conspired together as to all of the routes which were included in the indictment; and as to whether we would say that Dorsey and Brady conspired as to route A, and that Sanderson and Brady conspired as to route B, &c. We saw that if we made a mistake in that respect, the result might be that by improperly including Sanderson in the indictment we not only put in a party who ought not to be included in that particular indictment, but run the risk of invalidating our whole indictment as to the other parties. We could not find any evidence whatever that Mr. Sanderson had any connection with these parties in any other way with reference to that particular route, other than by having simply bought out Mr. Miner at the full amount. We further found on examination, that that particular region of Colorado was a region which, in the mail service, had been chiefly given up to Sanderson; that he had taken possession of it; developed it; even built many of the roads; run his mail coaches for passengers, &c. The combination was Barlow, Sanderson & Co. We found at the letting that this particular route had been let to Miner, right in the midst of Sanderson's territory. We thought we could see a good reason why Sanderson should come in and buy Miner out, and why he wanted to keep him out of what was known as his territory. For these reasons, not out of any consideration for Mr. Sanderson, but out of consideration chiefly for the other defendants, and for the value of our indictments against other defendants, we felt bound to omit Mr. Sanderson from that indictment. I do not know that I am any more responsible for that than anybody else, except that the detail of the testimony—the detail of the work of all that sort of thing—was imposed upon me. Mr. Ker was responsible only for the drafting of the indictments, with which I had nothing to do. Mr. Merrick was more of a general counsel. Therefore, I probably am more responsible for that than anybody else, and I am willing to accept the entire responsibility of the omission of Mr. Sanderson's name.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Was the question of whether he should be included in the second indictment a matter of consultation between all of the counsel?—A. Yes, sir; it was a matter of consultation between all of the counsel, and the result was arrived at with the assent of all. It was a matter about which we were all perfectly clear; there was really no discussion in regard to it; the question as to the relation of Vaile to the matter, we did have some discussion about.

I desire to say in connection with the matter of the omission of Sanderson's name from the indictment, meeting for once and for all the dirty insinuations which have been thrown out by gentlemen who were at one time counsel in the case, as well as by the defendants, that not only did Sanderson never offer or suggest the payment of any money to me, or give any valuable consideration, or do anything directly or indirectly looking towards consideration, but that no human being from the beginning to the end of these cases has ever directly or indirectly suggested to me the obtaining in any manner of any emolument, or any advantage in any way arising out of these cases. I want to make the denial as broad as any language can make it, and to meet any insinuations that may be made. I do not propose, unless the committee call me on cross-examination, to further say anything more upon that subject.

Let me say in this connection, that when the Dorsey matter was being gotten ready for indictment I went to the Attorney-General, and said to him that I did not claim to be a criminal lawyer; that I had not had a great deal of experience in drafting indictments, and that I did not feel myself competent to draft such an indictment as would be required in these cases. Moreover, that even if I were competent, that the labor would be very great, and that my time was needed for other portions of the case. I told him that I thought he ought to employ some one else. I told him farther, that I thought there was sufficient responsibility on me already, and that the responsibility which would arise from drafting the indictment, ought to be placed somewhere else. Mr. Brewster selected Mr. Ker, of Philadelphia, whom he stated had had very large experience, and had great knack and ability in these cases. Mr. Ker drew the indictment. It was a very lengthy, very elaborate one, and it stood all the racket of all the attacks and all the objections of all of the counsel, all the way through. No defect whatever was discovered in it; it was sustained throughout. I regard it as a great achievement in that respect.

By Mr. STEWART :

Q. Except in the first instance, in regard to the omission of the Christian name?—A. Yes, sir; with regard to the Rerdell indictment, the omission of the Christian name was an error, and, perhaps, carelessness.

Q. Then, this "supposed expert" had some knowledge of the business which he undertook?—A. I think he had very great knowledge. He had more knowledge than the gentleman who describes him as a "supposed expert" was competent even to judge of.

Now, let me say a word in regard to the indictment found against Dorsey. We reached a trial, I think, in May. There were all sorts of preliminary struggles. The defendants attacked everything; in every way, everywhere, and everybody. Demurrers, motions to quash; every description of motion that criminal pleading permits, and some things which it does not permit, were resorted to. As, I say, however, we finally got to trial. The trial continued along down into September. During that trial we were kept here under a continual strain. We were occupied in court from 10 until 3 o'clock; then it was my practice to go to the Post-Office Department and remain there until 6; go then to my hotel and get my dinner, and then have the witnesses who were to be examined the next morning come to my room. It was rarely that I ever got rid of the witnesses, and got ready to retire before 2 o'clock in the morning. It was the most exhaustive and confining work that I ever had imposed upon me. It had, necessarily, to devolve mostly upon me, as I was the only one familiar with the details, except Mr. Woodward, who had made up the statement, but he did not pretend to be a lawyer, and of course I had to put everything in a legal form. The examination of the witnesses in court also largely fell to me.

As to the conduct of the case in court I desire to say nothing. I would be very glad if the committee, at the proper time, would ask Judge Wylie to appear before them, and give his opinion as to the thoroughness of the preparation of the cases and their management during the trial. I am willing to abide by his judgment in the matter.

The case was prolonged; prolonged far beyond the length of time we expected it would be, and far beyond what we think it ought to have been. Judge Wylie was obviously disposed to give the defendants every possible opportunity to present their case; to present their objections. The result was that during a large portion of the trial questions were argued over and over again. Questions would arise one day, be discussed, and be determined, as it would be thought, and then they would be raised another day, and argument be again had on them. Of course this prolongation of the trial had an injurious effect upon the prosecution, because the jurors' minds necessarily became confused and fatigued. The trial resulted, as you gentlemen well know, in finding some of the little fellows guilty, and a disagreement as to the big ones. This presented, of course, a sort of anomaly, because it was actually and legally impossible that the little fellows could have been guilty, unless the big fellows were also. The verdict was a solecism and an absurdity. The Government could not afford to rest under such a verdict for a moment, and accordingly Mr. Merrick promptly, without my knowledge, for I was called away by sickness, but with my entire concurrence, went into court and moved, in behalf of the Government, to set aside the verdict in its own favor.

We subsequently reached the second trial. That was, as far as I was concerned, much less laborious. We had the testimony of the witnesses who had been examined on the former trial in print; therefore, conferring with them to ascertain what they would testify to, &c., became largely unnecessary, and much more of the labor was enabled to be thrown upon others than myself.

While I was preparing the papers in connection with the first trial, preparing the witnesses for the first trial, I found among the papers a memorandum that Mr. George E. Spencer, who had been Senator from Alabama, and who, I had found, had, in the early stages of the case, taken a great deal of interest in the matter, could give testimony of a very important nature; practically of the payment by Dorsey of money to Brady; and also testimony of Mr. Dorsey's statement that his clerk had gone back on him; of Mr. Dorsey's subsequent statement that he had recovered his clerk and things were all right.

I am free to say that at that time and under that condition of things, I had no doubt in my own mind that Mr. Spencer had made those statements, but doubted whether they were true. On going to Mr. James, I found that Mr. Spencer had made the statements to him. I found, also, that he had made almost the same identical statements to Mr. Van Wormer, who was Mr. Spencer's personal friend, and who is to-day his personal friend, who, during the proceedings in the matter of the arrest of Mr. Spencer for contempt, wrote him a letter which was used in his behalf, and in which there was great care taken to entirely avoid any statement that Mr. Spencer did not tell him precisely what Mr. James said he told him. I took the occasion to see Mr. Van Wormer, and he informed me that Mr. Spencer did so state. I subsequently saw Mr. Boynton, who was well known in Washington. Not the Mr. Boynton who has been connected with the recent Keifer matter, but another gentleman, a friend of General Garfield. I found that Mr. Spencer had made to him substantially the same statement, though, I believe, not so complete. I feel, however, bound to say that I did not feel certain that Mr. Spencer had not been doing a little blowing. I found myself in this position. If I did not put Mr. Spencer on the stand, or attempt to, with that statement among the papers, I should inevitably be met, and ought to have been met, in the event of the cases going against us, with the statement that I had in my possession the evidence, the statement of a witness who could give absolute and conclusive evidence, and I had failed to call him. I did not hesitate for a moment in subpoenaing Mr. Spencer, and I took a great deal of pains to subpoena him. He came here. He has made his complaint before you that I did not consult with him. I did not, and I did not mean to. I avoided doing so. I avoided doing so for precisely this reason. It would not have made any difference to me whether Mr. Spencer had come to me and told me he could or could not so testify. I could not afford not to put him on the stand with that paper and that information in my possession, because if I did so fail to put him on the stand I should then be exposed, and rightly exposed, to criticism. I did not care to raise any question of veracity with Mr. Spencer; I did not care to have him turn upon me and say, "Why, don't you believe me?" I therefore made up my mind that I would not have any conference with Mr. Spencer as to the case, and I did not.

One evening, while sitting in the Arlington Hotel, Secretary Chandler, who had been my intimate personal friend for more than 25 years, we having been in college together, came in with Mr. Spencer. We sat there with a dozen people, and after awhile Mr. Chandler said that he would like to speak with me alone. We went to one side. Mr. Spencer says we had an interview of two or three hours. I do not think it was half an hour, but that is immaterial. Mr. Chandler said, "Mr. Spencer says you won't talk with him, and he wants to know what there is about this matter; that he wants to go away." I said, "Now, Chandler," though I called him by his first name, as I was in the habit of doing, "here is this condition of things." I then stated the circumstance of the evidence. I said to him, "Now, there it is; I cannot let Spencer go. I do not want to talk to him, because if I do, I shall have to tell him I do not believe him, and I have made up my mind that I am going to put him on the stand. If he denies this statement, why, then, of course we have the right of cross-examination. The court will give it to us under those circumstances, I think, and we will find out whether the statements are true or false." Mr. Chandler, as the friend of Mr. Spencer, rather tried to urge me out of that position. I said to him, "If you were placed in my position, you would do just the same thing." "Well," he said, "I think I would, but," he added, "I am bound to say I do not know whether Spencer knows these things, or not; whether the statements you say he has made are true, or not. I think Spencer is that sort of a man, that if he knows them, and they will affect a friend, he will say he does not, and therefore you will get nothing out of him." I told him I would have to run that risk, and the conversation ended.

Mr. Spencer left here. When he got to Council Bluffs he wrote back a letter to Mr. Chandler, which Mr. Chandler brought to me. In that letter he said that he had been called away; that he had left here to go to New York, intending to return.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Was this pending the trial?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was under subpoena?—A. Yes, sir; he had been originally subpoenaed in New York. The fact was that he lived at Osceola, Nev., and I used a post-office inspector. I sent one from Saint Louis out there, expecting to get him. He had left Osceola to go to New York before that, and we thought with some view to concealment. We found that he stopped in Chicago, and then he went to New York. We got him, I think, the morning that he arrived at the Everett House, in New York, through another post-office inspector. He was very indignant at being subpoenaed there. The only conversation I had with him was when he came and expressed his indignation at being subpoenaed there, instead of in Nevada, from which place he claimed he would have been entitled to his mileage. I told him under the State decisions he was entitled to mileage from his home, and I was under the apprehension that he would be under the United States law.

Some time early in July Mr. Spencer went west, and wrote this letter to Mr. Chandler from Council Bluffs or Omaha, saying that he had left Washington, intending to return here. I think he said that. When he got to New York he said he received letters relative to his business which required his departure for Nevada. His mine having been left in charge of an inexperienced man, and there having been developments there, he had to go there, even if he did not stay but two or three days. He said he had to go there; that he wished him, Mr. Chandler, to see me, and to state that if I insisted upon his return that he would return. He stated, however, that he could not give any such testimony as that which it had been stated he could give. I think he used some profanity. At all events, he said this was a very bad Government, and he was sorry that he had ever fought for it. This being the condition of things, having found that he had actually disappeared and was not coming back, I went straight into court and had him called, and secured an attachment against him for contempt. I then, with the concurrence of Mr. Chandler, telegraphed him that he must return; that I had been compelled to issue an attachment for him; that I would take steps to prevent its being served if I learned that he had started to come here; that the time had already so far advanced that I was fearful that he would be too late. I sent the attachment to a post-office inspector at Saint Louis, with directions to start at once, but to keep in communication with me by telegraph, so as to prevent actual service being made unless I telegraphed to that effect. Not getting any information that Mr. Spencer had started—no dispatch from him—I telegraphed to have service made. It was then found that Mr. Spencer had left Osceola, and we could not find out where he had gone. It turned out that he had taken a carriage and was wandering around in Southern Colorado. He claims innocently. He says he left home the second time to come here, but finally changed his mind, and said if George Bliss wanted him he would have to find him. He went wandering around, as I say. We tried to find him, but could not. When we had closed our case we had not been able to get Mr. Spencer. We applied to the court to be allowed to examine him if he was secured at any time before the whole case closed. The court ruled against the objection made by the defendant to the application, and said he would allow us that privilege. The defendants went on with their case, and closed it rather suddenly and unexpectedly to us. We asked then to be allowed a few days' delay, inasmuch as we had learned, as we thought, where Mr. Spencer was. The court ruled that that application could not be granted, and the case accordingly closed without Mr. Spencer's evidence. In point of fact, we had learned that Mr. Spencer was at Hastings, in Minnesota or Nebraska, and we were subsequently told that the defendants had learned that we knew that fact, and that that led to their closing their evidence somewhat hurriedly. I cannot say that that was true.

In getting ready for the next trial, we started in for Mr. Spencer again. We could not find him. It turned out he was in New York. He says at that time he attended the consecration of a church at which I was present also. I think he did. He concealed himself, however. He received his letters under a disguised name, at a private house, to the care of a clergyman, and we could not find him. We afterwards heard of him as being up at Watertown.

Q. It was an ingenious device?—A. Yes, sir. We afterwards heard of him as being at Watertown, N. Y., and sent the attachment for him as soon as we could. That was in a different district from which the attachment was issued. It was necessary, therefore, to get access to a court and marshal of a different district; because, in that kind of process, we had to use marshals. Before we could get there Mr. Spencer went to Canada. He went over to Toronto. He remained at Toronto for some little time, and went from Toronto to Hamilton and various other places. We watched him; followed him; and among the interesting developments made up there, was the presence there of the immaculate late counsel of the Government, Mr. A. M. Gibson, who was, as reported to me, found in communication with him. Finally, in the dead of winter Mr. Spencer, never coming into the United States again, went to Halifax, and took steamer for Europe. He staid in Europe until he learned, by cable, that the case had so nearly closed that it must inevitably be closed before he could arrive here. Then he started for home and arrived after the case was closed.

Subsequently he was arrested upon an attachment, and we had a litigation here in which Judge Wylie held that the subpoena was a subpoena in improper form; that it was a subpoena used in civil suits, and not in criminal cases. I think that was the purport of it. It is difficult for me to make out quite the length and breadth of the decision. All I have to say about that is that the subpoena I got myself from the clerk of the court. I applied to the clerk for the subpoena, telling the clerk for what purpose I wanted it. I did not give him the name of the witness, but I told him I wanted it for a witness in a criminal case. I received that subpoena, and I used it. I think I was justified in using it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who was the clerk?—A. The clerk of the criminal court. It was one of the subordinates. I may say that, if I am not greatly mistaken, the subpoena was in the precise form of the greater portion of the subpoenas, certainly, which were used during both of the trials, and as to which no question was ever raised. The point with regard to which it was held not to be good was not argued before Judge Wylie at all. It was a point raised by himself afterwards. I do not mean to question the correctness of Judge Wylie's decision in any manner. I simply say that that was the condition of things.

As I have said, I originally had very great doubt as to whether Mr. Spencer could testify to any such thing as appeared on the record. His subsequent course; the careful way in which he avoided being given an opportunity to state it was not so, where he could be subject to cross-examination and penalties, led me to think that his statement was correct, and he could have given such testimony. I understand that he has said here now, that he could not. Mr. James stated here the other day that he did tell him so, and if the committee see proper to call Van Wormer, and the other witnesses, they can get further evidence of his statements to that effect.

Q. Do you know Mr. Boynton's address?—A. He did live in New York, next door to me. My number was 54 West Thirty-ninth street, and his number was, I think, 45. I cannot say that he lives there now.

Q. Did Mr. Boynton inform you that Mr. Spencer had told him?—A. Yes, sir. My recollection as to what Boynton said is not so clear. Mr. Boynton was brought to my house in New York by Mr. James one afternoon, and introduced to me. He went over what was said by Mr. Spencer, and my recollection is it agreed with what Mr. James had said, though I do not think we went over the whole in detail. I also had a talk with Mr. Van Wormer, who is a clerk at present in Mr. James' bank, and who was then chief clerk of the Post-Office Department.

Q. Did Mr. Van Wormer talk with you generally on the subject?—A. Yes, sir. I think he went over the whole ground. He was a little unwilling to talk, but I got the information out of him by plying him with questions; telling him what I already knew, saying so and so. He felt he was under such relations to Mr. Spencer that he ought not to volunteer anything; that he ought not to give me any additional information to that which I already had.

Q. Did Mr. Van Wormer state that Mr. Spencer had told him that he was in the room when Dorsey paid this money?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Van Wormer substantially made the same statement that Mr. James made in his testimony before you here.

Q. You were so well satisfied of the truth of those statements that Mr. Spencer made, that you, yourself, made an affidavit in court to that effect?—A. I made an affidavit in the proceedings. I think that is the general purport of my affidavit. I did not make an affidavit that I knew of my own knowledge that he had made these statements, but that I had been informed that he had so stated, and gave the names of my informants.

Q. That Mr. Spencer had made these statements?—A. Yes, sir; there was no question, I think, raised that the preliminary affidavit for attachment was sufficient.

Q. Is it your opinion, from all that occurred, that Spencer was evading the process of the court?—A. Judge Wylie, on the proceeding in contempt before him, announced distinctly that there could not be any question that Mr. Spencer was evading the process of the court.

Q. But, technically, he was not in contempt?—A. But technically he was not in contempt, because the subpoena did not state to him that he was not to depart without the order of the court or the district attorney. I think there was some other thing of that sort in it. It required his attendance on a defined day. And then Judge Wylie was troubled with another question arising as to the mode of service of a subpoena issued in this District. The subpoena was served in New York. Under the rule in New York, established by the State law, and established by the decisions of the United States courts there, anybody may serve a subpoena. Judge Wylie held the rule regarding the service of a subpoena must be governed by the law of this District. I think his ruling was that a subpoena must be served by the marshal. He left undefined—at least, in a way I was not able to make it out—the question as to exactly how it should be served where the subpoena was from this District to be served out of the District. Clearly, the marshal of this District could not serve a subpoena in New York. He had no such authority. Exactly how it was to be arranged that the marshal of the other district was to serve the subpoena, and that in that district the rule applicable to the United States courts in that district was not to apply as to the mode of service, I am not sure in regard to. If the committee desires a copy of Judge Wylie's opinion, I happen to have it here, and I will furnish it to them.

I desire to state in regard to Mr. Spencer, that it was only incidentally that I knew of his connection with the early stages of the case; but when I did learn of it, I was disposed to get into communication with him. I very soon found, however, such a condition of things as convinced me the course pursued with regard to Mr. Spencer was the proper one. Mr. Spencer's relations and conduct in connection with certain things satisfied me that however earnest he may have been originally in the prosecution of the cases against these defendants, that his interest had now entirely passed to the other side, and that he was in their interest, and not in the interest of the Government; and that that condition of things commenced as early as December, 1881.

Q. After that time, you think——A. [Interposing.] I do not remember that I saw him at all.

Q. He did not render any service to the Government after that?—A. No, sir; not after I came into the cases. And let me say here, as covering over what I ought to have said the other day, that after I came to Washington, the middle of September, while Mr. A. M. Gibson was in and out of the office occasionally, so far as I know, except in writing that report which eulogized himself and his labors, and appropriated to himself labors which I was satisfied were largely those of other people, I am not aware that he did any work whatever for the Government. As to that report, he first addressed it to the Postmaster-General. Mr. Woodward objected to its being so addressed on the ground that he was not an officer of the Department, and he was claiming to have done things which Mr. Woodward had done. Mr. James took that position very decidedly, and then he undertook to send the report to the Department of Justice by Mr. Phillips, who was then Acting Attorney-General, and they had some correspondence, Mr. Phillips, Mr. Milliken, then chief clerk, writing letters in which they substantially declined to receive the report. At that stage, I saw trouble brewing. I do not know whether I sent for Mr. Gibson, or whether Mr. Gibson came to see me. He came, however, to my room at the Arlington Hotel. I think he made two visits. He was there several hours. We took his report, and went over it, and with his entire concurrence I suggested to him that this matter and that matter ought to go out, and that and this ought to be changed. He consented to the parts going out that I suggested to go out, and accepted the changes that I named. He then rewrote that portion of the report, and sent it to the Department of Justice. It was received and transmitted by that Department to the Postmaster-General, and by the Postmaster-General published as an appendix to his own annual report. Mr. Gibson at that time professed a great deal of gratitude to me for the course I had taken with reference to it.

Since I have referred to Mr. Gibson, let me say a word further, and then drop that subject. When we got to the point of preparing the other indictments against the other combinations, the question came up as to who should be indicted. Among other routes in them was the San Antonio and Corpus Christi route, upon which Mr. Price was the contractor. We always felt, from the knowledge we acquired, that Mr. Price was the man out of whom we were most likely, if we could get hold of him, to get valuable information as bearing upon the general subject; and let me say here, that my theory in all these cases was that the officers were chiefly the guilty men, and that therefore I was at any time ready to recommend the granting of immunity to every contractor or anybody else who would give evidence which was conclusive as against any of the public officers. We procured the indictment on the Corpus Christi and San Antonio route. The evidence with regard to that is substantially contained in the letter transmitting the reports of the special agents, on page 146. The committee will find that it is the case of an expedited route; expedited upon affidavits which were subsequently shown by these inquiries not to contain the facts; and that the Government, therefore, was made to pay a good deal of money that it ought not to have paid. We took some special pains with that route, because we regarded Price as a valuable man to catch, and we sent an officer specially out West to find a Mr. Ellis, whom the post-office inspectors had failed to find, and whom they reported had gone out into the country somewhere, and they did not know where. We sent Inspector Foster there, and after a great deal of traveling around among the wilds of Texas, he finally found Mr. Ellis, and he was brought here as a witness. On his evidence an indictment was found as against Mr. Price, Mr. Brady being included. At that time there was not available to the Government a particle of evidence of payment of money by Price to Brady to support allegations of that kind.

Long subsequent to that Price indicated to Mr. Merrick a willingness to give evidence in favor of the Government. Then it was that it became possible to go into further evidence in connection with that case. I will have something directly to say about that. When we were talking up these cases and looking to indicting the other combinations; when we were seeking to indict the Saulsburys and failed; when I was going through the matter, we struck a route known as the Black Canyon route, running from Phoenix to Prescott. I brought the papers with me from my home, but I have left them at the Post-Office Department. I will see that the committee has some statement upon that subject. But, in general terms, it was a route where the original contract was $682. It had been expedited until the contractor was getting $32,000. It had been expedited upon an affidavit which presented a physical impossibility. As a test of the amount to be paid was a statement contained in an affidavit as to the number of men and carriers, the Government could be defrauded by understating the number of men and carriers who were employed at the original compensation, or by overstating the number of men and carriers who would necessarily have to be employed in view of the increased speed. The Government could be defrauded in either way, or in both ways. The affidavit showed, as I recollect it, that there was a single carrier employed, yet he would have to travel twenty-four hours a day for eight days in every week in order to get over the route; the mail could not be carried by a single carrier on the schedule time unless the carrier was going eight days in every week, and traveling every hour of the eight days.

Q. Eight days in the week?—A. Yes, sir. There is a mathematical statement, clear; there is not any escape from it. Moreover, in point of fact, the papers showed, I think, the mail had really been carried before the expedition within a time as short, if not shorter, than that to which it was reduced by the expedition, and for which the Government paid an increase from $682 to $32,000, this being paid because it was a stage route for the accommodation of passengers. There were other things connected with it. It is sufficient to say that on the papers it was a route which presented the appearance to me of being a fraud, as it evidently appears to those who at present administer the affairs of the Post-Office Department, for that Department has stopped $25,000 of the pay of that contractor, on the ground that it was a fraud. The papers indicated that it was one of the very worst cases of all.

Q. Who were the contractors?—A. That was one of the Kerns combinations; a man named Griffith, who had been driver or superintendent of Kerns, was the contractor. It is proper to state that between the time the contract was made and the time we were investigating it (though not between the time the contract was made and the time the orders were made, for one of the orders for expedition was made even before the service was commenced) the business had developed. They got the contract at a public bidding at one price, and then before they entered upon the contract, by some secret arrangement with the Post-Office Department, they got it increased from $682 to $32,000, with no competition. It is right to say that at the time we were investigating the subject, business had developed there; the route had become a much more important one, and therefore the increased service was in a great measure justified, though I think it was not justified at the time it was made. Moreover, there were two routes; one by way of Wickenburg, and this one. However that may be, the route was one, according to my view, which disclosed a very bad state of things. In December, 1881, when we got through the Dorsey business, Mr. Woodward, as I have stated to you, was always a little ahead of us in making the preliminary investigations upon the routes, and, to my surprise, he brought me a report upon the Phoenix and Prescott route, in which it was stated that "True, there were some things that looked a little suspicious; looked as if there were some indications of fraud, but there was not fraud, and, as a general thing, really the route ought not to be interfered with." I inquired how that report came to be made, and I found it was made because the post-office authorities, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's office, were disposed and had been disposed previously to stop the pay of the contractor, and there had been some intervention. The man wanted his pay, of course, and there had been some influence brought, and this report had been made. That report was signed "A. M. Gibson, special counsel for the Government." From the time that report struck my eye, or my eye struck that—

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Who do you say made that report?—A. Mr. Gibson made the report, but Mr. Woodward brought it to me. It had been placed on file. I think Mr. Woodward brought it to me some time in December. There had never a word been said to Mr. Woodward that that report had been made, nor had anything been said to me. By reason of that report, they got at least a quarter's pay. Mr. Woodward was as much astonished at finding this report on file as I was.

I was going to say that from the time my eyes struck that report, whatever remaining vestiges of belief I had that Mr. Gibson was honest and sincere in his efforts on behalf of the Government, were all dissipated.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. What is the date of that?—A. It must have been some time in the latter part of December, 1881, or first of January, 1882.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you say you would furnish the committee with a copy of the report?—A. Yes, sir; I have a copy.

Q. Has it been transmitted to either house of Congress?—A. I do not know.

By Mr. HEMPHILL:

Q. Mr. Woodward made a general report in which he embraced this report of Gibson?—A. No, sir. Mr. Woodward, in going through the post-office files for the purpose of examining the case, took up a great bundle of papers, and on looking over them he found this report of Gibson. He then brought it down and showed it to me. We then made inquiries as to how it came to be made.

Very soon after that we thought it behooved us to protect ourselves, and we concluded the best thing to do would be to change the combination of the safe in the office in which the papers were; and we therefore had it done.

Q. As against whom?—A. Against Mr. Gibson, and Mr. Finley, a boy who had been acting as clerk for Mr. Gibson. I do not think Colonel Cook ever had the combination. Those two, with Mr. Woodward, and some other person in the office, had the combination. Mr. Woodward thinks he originated the idea of a change of the combination, but I have an impression that it was my suggestion. At all events, it was done with the concurrence of both of us. We sent for the proper person, and had the combination changed.

Q. Who has had the combination since that time?—A. I think it was arranged that Mr. Woodward alone should have the combination, and I think when Mr. Woodward had occasion to go away, then it was given to me.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Whom did you want to prevent getting into the safe?—A. We wanted to preclude anybody from going into it except Mr. Woodward. I wanted to preclude Mr. Gibson, if you wish me to say so. I will remark right here that after the change in the combination no paper of ours, no evidence of ours, got out which we could not trace and show had gone out before that combination was changed. Immediately after the change in the combination, Mr. Gibson came to the office one day and tried to get into the safe. Finding the combination had been changed, he walked out of the office, and I do not think he ever came in again.

Q. Do you mean to convey the idea that before that time information had gotten out?—A. I mean to convey the idea that I had no question in my mind that Mr. Gibson and Cook had in their possession our evidence, and that some time before the trial of the Dorsey case portions of that evidence were given to the defendants. In an examination of the witnesses on the trial of the Dorsey case, questions were asked which never could have been asked except on information obtained from our papers, and which papers had never gone to anybody, had never been accessible to anybody that I know of, except Mr. Gibson and Mr. Cook.

Q. Your belief, then, was that Gibson and Cook were selling you out to the other side?—A. Yes, sir; and I have no hesitation, if you desire to know why I think so, in telling you. On the second trial of Dorsey, I subpœnaed James W. Bosler. Mr. Bosler I had known for two or three years. Before the second trial had commenced, Mr. Bosler came to me and said, “I want to know if you are going to indict me.”

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. J. W. Bosler, now deceased?—A. Yes, sir. He said to me, “I want to know if you are going to indict me.” I said, “Bosler, no; though I think you have been distributing this stolen money.” He said to me, “That is a little sharp.” I said, “I mean this: you advanced money to Dorsey upon assignments of contracts. I have not any evidence that you have done anything that subjects you to the criminal law. I think, however, you were instrumental in securing the arrangement by which Rerdell, after he had told his story to the Government, concluded to go back upon the Government.” He protested that that was not so. I then repeated to him in a subsequent part of the conversation that I had seen no evidence on which I thought he could be indicted. I said to him, “You are not going to run away, and I will, therefore, say to you without any hesitation, ‘possess your soul in patience.’” I added, “I will not tell you that I am going to indict you at any time. I will say to you, however, that if ever I change my mind as to your relations with this case, and find that you do come within the terms of the law, I will inform you that I have changed my mind.” He said he would glad to know it if I did so, and thanked me. I saw him at various times as we went along with the cases.

During the preparation for the second trial, and while looking for all the additional evidence that we could get, I made up my mind that it would be very desirable to have Bosler's books. He kept the accounts of this combination. Among other things claimed by the combination was that it did not make any money. I thought I would like to see how that was. I sent to Carlisle, and had Mr. Bosler subpœnaed. He came on at once to see me, and begged not to be examined. I said, “I will have to examine you.” He said, “You do not believe me guilty?” I said, “No; I do not.” He said, “Anybody who goes upon the stand who has taken assignments of contracts and carried them out is going to be more or less smirched all over the country; people will make no distinction and my character will be blackened; I do not think you ought to put me in such a position.” He came to see me two or three times about it. Finally I told him that I wanted to get at the books. He at first said there were no regular books kept, but finally admitted that there were books in which his other accounts were kept, in which certain entries were made relating to that business. I told him if he did not furnish the books so that I might inspect them privately I would put him on the stand and call upon him then to produce them. He said his books contained a great many other things that he did not want to have get out. I told him we did not have any right to examine anything but the particular pages of the books which related to this matter, and the court would not permit us to do so, even if we were disposed to attempt it. He was very angry at my efforts to get him to go upon the stand, and said he had accounts of some political contributions that he thought the Democrats might like to get access to.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Access to the money, or to the fact that contributions were made?
—A. I think he had in his mind the question of access to the fact; I do not suppose anybody wanted access to the money.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did he object to Mr. Merrick seeing the papers?—A. No, sir; I do not think he did. He said he did not want this exposure made, and finally it was agreed that I should examine his books in the presence of a clerk of his. I then went to Mr. Merrick to see whether I had better agree to this arrangement.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Who was the clerk?—A. I do not remember his name. It will be very easy to ascertain. I say "clerk"; it was somebody he had there. I told him myself that he had better have somebody there. This arrangement was entered into with the consent of Mr. Merrick. Before that examination was made, however, the fact developed itself that it would be necessary to put Mr. Bosler on the stand to prove the receipt, or the non-receipt of certain letters for the purpose of admitting secondary evidence upon that subject. That led to a delay, and the thing was off. I again subpoenaed him, fearing that the first subpoena, owing to the negotiations being carried on after its issuance, might not hold good. I therefore had him again subpoenaed. The result was that he brought his books from Carlisle. The first time he brought them, he did not bring the stubs of his check books. I went to his room, and went over his books. His accounts of his receipts and disbursements of the combination were kept in a book not as large as an ordinary journal, or ledger, rather—a thin book. There were various things in it. The entries had been made from time to time along apparently, and then at the end there had been a good many bunched. Those books can be gotten, if the committee desires them. At least I have been told they are still in the possession of Mr. Bosler's estate. Down at the end of the page were some entries that were written nearer together than the lines. Then there had been a settlement with Mr. Dorsey. That settlement had taken place within two or three months of that time, and it had resulted, I think, in showing a balance of $10,000 or $12,000 profit up to that time. I looked over the entries, and I found an entry of $2,500 paid to A. M. Gibson. I asked Mr. Bosler what that was. Bosler declared that he had not promised to explain anything. I had reserved all the while the right to put him on the stand if the examination was not satisfactory. I said, "Very well, then; if you are not disposed to explain I will have to put you on the stand." He then said that was money. I think he said he paid that in two items to Mr. Gibson. I think he said he paid it himself. I asked him what he paid it for. His reply was, "You know." I said, "I do not know, except I know you are not one of those men who pay something for nothing." I asked him again; he said, "You know." Then I persisted. I said, "What did you pay that money for?" He said, "You know." I said, "What was it for?" He said, "I paid it for information, you know."

I said, "A. M. Gibson had been Government counsel, and you paid it to him for information?" He said, "Yes."

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. What was the date of that payment?—A. My recollection is that he said it was after Gibson ceased to be counsel for the Government. I think to those closing items there was no date on the book. They had been put into the book at the time of the settlement between him and Dorsey. I think he told me they were paid in two items, and in that preceding summer. That is my recollection, but I may be wrong about it.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Was the information communicated by Gibson communicated while Gibson was in the service of the Government?—A. No, sir; I think not.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. It was information gained while he was in the service of the Government?—A. Mr. Bosler did not explain that.

Q. Have you any doubt about it?—A. No, sir; none whatever. You will bear in mind that this is charged up to the expenses of the star-route contracts.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Then Bosler was paying out the money to Dorsey & Company?—A. The books showed an arrangement under which Bosler, who took up the contracts—I will not say the books showed it—but the arrangement in point of fact was that Mr. Bosler was to make advances at a certain rate of interest, and then the profits were to be divided.

Q. Bosler was a partner?—A. Yes, sir; he became a partner in one sense.

Q. As you understood, these conspirators were paying this money to Gibson?—A. I understood it that those were Dorsey's accounts. This was only Dorsey's interest in the routes which had been separated from Vaile's and others. Dorsey had become assignee of all the interests in the routes except those of Minor and Vaile. He became the owner of J. W. Dorsey's routes; had become the owner of Peck's. Vaile and Minor had taken their interests, and separated them. This was the account with Dorsey, and Dorsey, in the settlement, had paid one-half of the expenses of this amount paid to Gibson, and that was charged in the these star-route cases.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Who paid the other half?—A. Bosler paid the other half; in the sense that the aggregate expenses were first to be paid, and then the profits were to be divided.

In the same account further on—I think it was further on, though I am not sure of that—but right on the same page, at all events, there appeared an item of $4,000 or $5,000 paid to Cole. I am certain it was not as small an amount as $2,500.

Q. Do you mean Mr. Cole, the partner of Mr. Cook?—A. Yes sir. His initials were given. I have forgotten what those initials were. I asked Mr. Bosler what that was. He said he did not pay that. That was paid by Dorsey. I told him he knew what it was. He said he did not know, except what Dorsey told him. I asked him what it was. He said, in substance, that when he and Mr. Dorsey were settling, Dorsey brought in some memorandum; and among other memoranda showed me, was this payment to Cole. He said at the time of the settlement he and Dorsey were not on entirely amicable terms. That is, their relations were a little strained, and he objected to this item.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who objected?—A. Bosler. He objected to having it put into this account. He was obliged to pay half of these items. Bosler feigned ignorance of who Cole was, and asked Dorsey. Dorsey said, "You know perfectly well who he is. He is Cook's partner." He said he remarked to him, "Why did you pay this amount to him?" He said "No matter, I paid it for the benefit of the interest."

Q. Did Cole perform any legal service?—A. Mr. Cole had been in the first trial as counsel for Rerdell.

Q. Did he appear in court?—A. Yes, sir; as counsel for Rerdell. He appeared on the record, and he got Rerdell to make an affidavit, which the published proceedings show, Judge Wylie denounced as perjury, and charged counsel with having substantially gotten his client to commit perjury; there was a general row. It was an affidavit in which Rerdell undertook to state what occurred in the grand jury room when I was there. It was an effort to attack the right of the assistant district attorney, representing the district attorney, to go before the grand jury. The proceedings are all published.

By Mr. FVAN:

Q. You have told us what Bosler told Dorsey; what did he tell you?—A. I saw Bosler. He told me that he had told that to Dorsey. He did not tell me when this service was rendered. I do not think the books showed when the payment was made to Cole. He did not tell me for what services it was rendered, or anything about it. He simply said Dorsey told him it was for the benefit of the interest. I think Mr. Cole did not appear for Rerdell, or anybody in the case after the first trial. That is my recollection.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When interrupted you were going on to state something about Mr. Gibson not having acted properly as Government counsel.—A. Yes, sir; I was led to believe that his action in regard to the Black Canyon route was not consistent with his position as Government counsel. There had been various things along which led me to think he was not acting as he should act in view of his relation to the Government. There was an earlier matter which I cannot undertake to go into here, which led me to believe that Mr. Spencer and Mr. Gibson, and somebody else were concerned in an improper arrangement as early as the time of Mr. MacVeagh's administration as Attorney-General. There was a claim which it had been confidentially arranged should be referred to Mr. Gibson for investigation. It came out incidentally afterwards that Mr. Spencer had gotten information of that fact, and then, when a change was made in the matter of the reference and it did not go to Mr. Gibson, that fact was treated as preventing the carrying out of similar schemes.

Q. What claim was that?—A. I do not remember in detail what it was; it was some post-office claim.

Q. When was that?—A. I did not hear of it until after I came into the cases, but I think the transaction must have been at or about the time I came into the cases; it may have been a little later.

Q. I do not understand the force of the suggestion.—A. The point is that the matter was to be referred to Mr. Gibson to investigate. It appeared that the matter to be so referred was in the hands of parties outside, and when the reference was not made to Mr. Gibson, the parties outside treated it as if the game was all up.

Moreover, I have no hesitation in saying, and I think all of the counsel agreed in that, that they were perfectly satisfied from matters that came to their notice that prior to the second trial there was a combined attempt, in which Mr. Gibson was concerned, to secure the absence of witnesses; of evidence; and that it was not confined to the Dorsey combination, but extended to the Salisburys and to others. I think the committee could be put upon the track of where evidence upon that subject could be gotten.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Was that while Gibson was attorney?—A. No, sir; not while he was attorney for the Government. All this happened after he ceased to be attorney for the Government. After he ceased to be attorney for the Government he went regularly into the employ of the other side. I think there is an indication in the testimony here that in one respect he did not serve them faithfully, for it appears here that having, as he said, received pay from Mr. Bosler, he subsequently, as he claims on the appeal of Mr. Merrick, went to work and got Mr. Walsh to testify against these parties. However that may be I do not know.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You stated yesterday that the information that he brought into the cases had been obtained while he was in the employ of Mr. Tilden?—A. I think I can give you the history of that, and yet, of course, I was not present at the transaction. I will give my authority, however.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Before you go into that, I should like to have you give any other evidence you have of Mr. Gibson's bad faith. Have you any evidence that Mr. Tilden had found fault with him as being untrue to him?—A. I have no evidence of that kind. If you desire to have me go into what I learned of the Tilden business, and Mr. Gibson's relations to the matter, I will do so.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Yes; let us have it.

The WITNESS. I will state the facts, and you can draw your own inferences as to what Mr. Tilden and others thought. The transaction briefly is this, as I understand it. I will state that Mr. Gibson is, undoubtedly, entitled to the credit in some way or other of having very early arrived at the belief, or knowledge, in a measure, of the star-route frauds. I do not think there is any question about that. Mr. Gibson, of course, wrote a great deal for the New York Sun. At some time or other Mr. Tilden became so far interested in the matter that he furnished money to enable that investigation to be quietly pursued.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. How do you know that?—A. I am going to tell as I go along. As I stated, Mr. Tilden undertook to furnish money to have the investigation quietly pursued. I will give you my authority for every statement that I make before I get through. That investigation was pursued. At a certain stage of the matter—

Mr. FYAN. As far as I am concerned, I would rather you would state the facts before you state your own conclusions.

The WITNESS. I am not going to state any conclusions; I am going to state the facts. At a certain stage of the matter Mr. Tilden sent Mr. Charles F. McLean to Washington. He is spoken of ordinarily as Mr.

Tilden's adopted son, though I do not think with any correctness. But he is a protégé of Mr. Tilden's. Mr. Tilden made him park commissioner in New York, and put him in various positions of honor and emolument. He is a gentleman and a lawyer, if both of those things can be combined. Mr. McLean came on to Washington to make some inquiry.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. How do you know that?—A. I will give you my authority for the statement.

Mr. FYAN. Mr. Chairman, if this is mere hearsay—

The WITNESS. What I am going to say is not going to affect Mr. Tilden.

Mr. FYAN. I am not afraid of that.

The WITNESS. Mr. Tilden sent Mr. McLean on to Washington to make inquiry about it. Mr. McLean came on and made inquiries, and went back and reported the investigation as being properly managed, stating that the star-route frauds already existed and that the evidence was being obtained properly.

Mr. McLean was a law partner of Henry E. Knox. Henry E. Knox was the college classmate, and I think the chum, of James A. Garfield. Mr. Tilden was obtaining this information in this way. Now, I am going to state an inference. In the opinion of those familiar with the matter, Mr. Tilden was obtaining this star-route information for the purpose, in the event of his nomination by the Democratic party for the office of President, of making his campaign for the Presidency on that issue, just as he made his campaign for the governorship of New York on the canal frauds; and I am inclined to think he would have done so as successfully as he did in that case. It would have taken two or three electoral commissions to beat him. But Mr. Tilden was not nominated, and he did not give the information to Mr. Hancock, who ran merely on "local issue." After Mr. Garfield was elected, Mr. Knox, having had some knowledge of these facts, and having gathered the information that Mr. Dorsey was concerned in this business, and ascertaining that Mr. Dorsey was on relations with Mr. Garfield of confidence and of influence, late in February he got permission to have these facts, as to Mr. Dorsey's connection with the star-route frauds, communicated to Mr. Garfield. They were communicated to him after Mr. Garfield got here, early in March. I think that is the explanation of the fact, which is undoubtedly a fact, that while Mr. Dorsey had had great influence with Mr. Garfield up to that time, that from that time on, although their relations did not cease; though General Garfield still saw him from that time on, yet every one knows his advice was not taken and his Cabinet was not made up as Mr. Dorsey wanted it.

Let me say a word right here about my feelings towards Mr. Dorsey. It has been stated in evidence here that my prosecution of Mr. Dorsey was influenced by personal feelings. Now, I wish to say, instead of that being true, that, on the contrary, all the relations I had with Mr. Dorsey were pleasant. I never knew him particularly. I had seen him in the Senate, but I never knew him much until after the Presidential election. After the election, I found out that he and I wanted the same gentleman appointed to a Cabinet position, and that fact appearing, he and I were thrown together somewhat. I was pulling my humble wire in the same direction that he was pulling his wire. Our relations were always pleasant. Mr. Dorsey did not have a very high opinion of my political intelligence, but our relations were always pleasant. I attended the famous Dorsey dinner. My political affiliations ran with Mr. Dorsey's.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What member of the Cabinet were you both urging the appointment of?—A. A gentleman who was not put into the Cabinet by Mr. Garfield. I have no hesitation in mentioning who it was; it was Charles J. Folger. I wanted him to go into Mr. Garfield's Cabinet, as the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Garfield offered him the Attorney-Generalship, but he declined it.

Q. You spoke about Mr. Tilden?—A. Yes, sir, I spoke about Mr. Tilden; let me follow right along and state some facts as bearing out my statement as to how Mr. Gibson has served him since he went out of the Government employ, and has done his best to make the cases a failure. Suppose two years to have intervened, as the play writers say. The Government is anxious to discover Mr. J. A. Walsh. Mr. Gibson is very indignant because we did not try a certain case, and we cannot try it without him. We set to work in an elaborate inquiry to find out where Walsh is. He is a gentleman who has no home. He gets his letters through his lawyers, and his lawyers have the ability to conceal everything; they are faithful to their client. We cannot find him. We find letters for Mr. Walsh are accumulating in the New York post-office. We established a watch to see who calls for the letters. Shortly a person with an order from Mr. Walsh calls and gets the letters. That gentleman is followed by persons who are in ignorance of who he is; followed to the Ebbitt House, and sure enough it is ascertained that that gentleman is Mr. A. M. Gibson. Fifteen days later another gentleman presents an order from Mr. Walsh for the letters, and receives a batch. He is required to state who he is. After some hesitation, he reveals who he is. His name is given as Charles F. McLean. He is followed to his office, and then to his home at the New York Hotel. A week or ten days more, the same thing is repeated by Mr. McLean. I am informed Mr. McLean sat near Mr. Gibson when he was testifying here.

Q. You are desirous now of obtaining the presence of Mr. Walsh?—A. Yes, sir; I have devoted a great deal of time to an endeavor to find Mr. Walsh, but have not succeeded, and for which service, it is understood, by the way, I can get no pay.

Q. Before you leave this subject, let me ask if you can explain the statement you made yesterday with regard to the papers in the Post-Office Department being very meager as to the Salisbury matter?—A. I stated I had no evidence on the subject. My impression is simply gained from this fact, that when you find a route of the Dorseys, a route 150 miles long with perhaps ten or a dozen post-offices on it, extending over four years, you will find a pile of papers very frequently 6 or 8 inches thick, and you will find a vast mass of papers which, if you could take up Mr. Woodward's analysis in the cases, you will see how these little things that are on file there dovetail in with affidavits and information with regard to the routes, and which go very far to make up a complete case. When we came to the Salisbury route, we found nothing there but the merest formal papers. There was not anything that inculpated anybody, except there was a big order of expedition. While it is of course possible that the Salisbury combination did their business in a different way, and they did not put on file such things, yet it is hardly probable, because a great many of those papers, for instance, would not come from the contractors; they would be complaints from people along the routes, stating the mail was not carried, and all that sort of thing, which would go on file with the papers of the route to which they related. We did not find anything of that kind in the Salisbury cases. The difference was very marked. Mr. Woodward discovered it and said nothing about it, because really I was so very busy that Mr. Woodward and I had very little time to confer except with regard to the more important matters. But when we did get an opportunity to talk over the matter I found the same thing, and yet there was no evidence that anybody had taken any papers at all.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who had had access to the papers to which you refer?—A. I cannot tell who had access to them. They were under the charge of a clerk. Of course an outsider could not get access, except with the knowledge and permission of the clerk in charge. Any one of the counsel could have gone there and taken possession of them, and done anything with them. At one time, quite early—I do not know but always—there was a system by which one or the other parties concerned for the Government would go up or send up and ask for all the papers on a given route, and down they would go, and sometimes there was not even a receipt given for them; at other times there would be a receipt given for papers on such a route. Of course, with the concurrence of the clerk, anybody might be allowed to see the papers. Nobody could be permitted to handle them, and have them in his possession, except some one of the counsel, or some one of the post-office inspectors detailed for investigation, I presume. I do not know, of my own knowledge, what the rules of the Post Office Department were as to access to those papers.

Q. Will you explain to the committee what evidence you had during the progress of either of the trials, that the defendants were in the possession of any part of the briefs, or information, that was supposed to be exclusively in the possession of the Government counsel?—A. I remember there were various questions asked, from time to time. For instance, there was a particular witness to a period in whose life the post-office inspectors' report referred, as not being very creditable to him, &c. It had turned out that the inspectors' report was, in that respect, erroneous; that as to the particular theme which it was claimed was not to his credit, the inspector had been erroneously informed about. When that witness came on the stand, the counsel asked questions with reference to that particular matter which had been erroneously charged by the post-office inspector, and which question showed very clearly that they had had access to that statement of the Post-Office inspector.

Q. What trial was that?—A. The second trial. There were other things of that sort that I cannot recall at this moment. I know as between Mr. Woodward and myself it was not infrequently the case, as we went out of court at the end of the day one or the other would say, "Those questions they asked show they have had access to our papers."

Q. From whom could they have obtained access to your papers?—A. With reference to that I can only say this to you: Mr. Woodward was making up these statements, which were very elaborate, of a very detailed character, and, although in his presence, I must say very able abstract of the cases, an abstract which any lawyer could use, and a very thorough brief, combining the advantage of having been prepared by a man thoroughly familiar with post-office matters and to which any lawyer might apply the legal rules of evidence. Sometimes Mr. Woodward made mistakes in the bearing of evidence, but those reports used to be written out by him, and certain of them I know copies were made of and sent to Mr. Cook. There was another copy made which was kept in the office, or the original, I do not know which.

Mr. WOODWARD. The original was kept in the office.

The WITNESS. Very frequently Mr. Woodward would be using his copy, and I would want another, and I did not have it. I do not know of my own knowledge that any of those copies were sent to Mr. Cook; but the record shows that certain of the reports from time to time as made up were sent to Mr. Cook.

On the 7th of March, 1882—I think it was about the time Mr. Cook resigned—and I think, perhaps, actually after he had resigned; the first letter was certainly written before I knew of his resignation. On the 7th of March, 1882, I called upon Mr. Cook for the return of some of those reports.

He replied by letter, which I do not know whether I have or not. On the 17th of March, however, I wrote a reply to him, which is as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 17, 1882.

Col. W. A. Cook:

SIR: I judge that I failed yesterday to make myself understood as to the papers that I wanted. Mr. Woodward prepared abstracts of statements appearing on the files, and of the information obtained from other sources as to each of the routes specified in the inclosed list. These abstracts were copied and one copy was, he informs me, furnished to you. I remember to have seen some of them in your possession, and you referred to others. It is these papers that I wanted independently of your retirement from the cases, but now that you have decided to retire you cannot have any use for them.

Your obedient servant,

GEO. BLISS.

He replied that he had not any such papers. Subsequently to that, I stated the matter to the Attorney General, and there was some correspondence between the Attorney-General and myself. He, I think, transmitted my letters, or a copy of them, to Mr. Cook. I thought I had a reference to one of those letters. Colonel Cook replied in the same way, and expressed himself as considerably insulted at my insisting upon it that he had any papers. I do not know at what time some papers were returned by him to the Attorney-General's office. I am informed that he produced a receipt here. I know that at one time, considerably subsequent to this correspondence in the Attorney-General's office, the clerk showed me, in a drawer, some papers which he said had been received within a short time from Colonel Cook. I do not know when that was, and I cannot tell. I am confident that amongst those papers were some of Woodward's reports. I make no concealment of my own belief that when those reports were called for they could not be immediately returned, because it was desired to have copies made of them, and that after copies had been made they came back.

Now, there was a Mrs. Gregg, who we had here as a witness, who was employed by Colonel Cook, and who made copies, as she states, of a large number of papers. She describes them generally, as to what they were. I do not know whether her description corresponds with Woodward's reports or not, but they were papers relating to star-route contracts, affidavits, number of horses, carriers, &c. She was employed by Colonel Cook to copy them, and was told not to let Mr. Woodward or the other counsel know anything about it. She was employed for many days in making these copies. Mrs. Gregg is living at Saint Louis. Her address can be secured if the committee desire to examine her.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. By whom was she employed?—A. By Colonel Cook. She lived at that time at Alton, Ill. Her father is quite an old man—Mr. Fisher. He had been a well-known mail contractor. He is very infirm. I saw the daughter at the time she was here. I have not seen her since.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was that lady employed by any other counsel for the purpose of making copies of papers?—A. She was summoned here as a witness. Mr. Cook summoned her here, and she was paid witness fees by the Government. In fact, she was kept here so long that the witness fees did not pay the expenses, and I had to make some arrangement by which she got something in addition to witness fees, and my recollection is that it resulted in my paying her some sum of money out of my own pocket, which I did not mean to do.

Q. Was she put upon the stand as a witness?—A. No, sir; she was not to be a witness in that case. I do not remember, at this moment, in what case she was intended to be a witness. I think she was used as a witness before the grand jury; that is my impression. She was brought here by Mr. Hinds. He was a former post-office inspector, who acted very largely with Mr. Cook. I have nothing to say against Mr. Hinds, and I want that distinctly understood.

Q. State whether there could have been any necessity, with a view to the efficient prosecution of these cases, for the copies of these papers to have been made by this lady.—A. If I knew what the papers were I could answer that question more definitely. If they were Mr. Woodward's reports, I say, decidedly, no. Not only could there have been no use in it, in that case, but, on the contrary, considerable impropriety in multiplying copies. If they were papers that consisted of our evidence—and Mrs. Gregg's statement seems to show that they were affidavits, or something of that kind—I do not see why any copies at all should have been made.

Q. Was any bill presented by her to the Government for the making of such copies?—A. I think not.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Were the copies made before Mr. Cook's services to the Government terminated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. While he was in the employ of the Government?—A. Yes, sir; that must have been so. Let me say that when the combination of the safe was changed, I then had a careful list of all the papers made; I tried to get things into some kind of systematic shape, and I had a record of everything made up.

Q. How long had that combination been changed before Mr. Gibson's service for the Government expired?—A. That combination must have been changed about the 7th of January. Mr. Woodward thinks it was earlier, but my impression is it was about that time. I know on the 7th of January I wrote a letter to the effect that if Colonel Cook had any of the original papers I wished he would return them. The discovery of the Black Cañon report was made at the end of December, I think, and that really precipitated this thing. Mr. Gibson's employment ceased in February, I think.

As to that, Mr. Gibson says that I did not want him in the cases. He states that I said I did not want him out of the cases, and yet I did want him out. My relation to that matter is substantially this: The Attorney-General consulted me as to the propriety of dismissing Mr. Gibson. He was very much disposed to dismiss him. I said that that would probably create a scandal. I remarked to him that Mr. Gibson would be of no use when the cases passed out of the realm of investigation into the realm of prosecution, and that they would go out of the former position within a very short time; that I thought he had better wait until we got along to that point, and that then Mr. Gibson could be dropped, his services be dispensed with without any scandal, and possibly without any feeling, though I did not know that. That was my relation to the matter; it happened just in that way.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was this combination in the lock changed before the trial began?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that any information secured must have been before the trials began?—A. Yes, sir. The combination in the lock was changed before Mr. Gibson went out, and I presume the change in the combination was the cause of Mr. Gibson going out, in this way: He came into the office one day, and finding the combination changed, marched out again. He was not in the habit of coming in when I was there, only occasionally. The room where he had his desk was where I had mine. I do not remember that he ever came to the office again after he found the combination had been changed. It was within a comparatively short time after that that he went out of the cases.

Q. In trying the Dorsey case, did you have additional evidence from that which Mr. Gibson furnished, mentioned in the paper you submitted yesterday?—A. Yes, sir. If there is any question about that, I would like to have you take that paper, and read the four volumes of testimony, and then you will see we had an immense amount.

Q. Did Mr. Gibson advise you that the statements he furnished with regard to the Dorsey combination were sufficient to convict the defendants?—A. That was the accepted view of both himself and Colonel Cook.

Q. Did that brief include the evidence of Walsh?—A. Not as applicable to the Dorsey case. He had mentioned Walsh in connection with the Prescott and Santa Fé route, but he did not mention that portion of Walsh's testimony which would have rendered it admissible, and which did render it admissible, in the Dorsey case.

Q. Had he mentioned in this brief, to which you referred yesterday, that the testimony of Walsh was necessary in the Dorsey case?—A. No, sir.

Q. He had not advised you of that?—A. No, sir; I do not think he connected that with the Dorsey case.

Q. Did you use all of the evidence that was material to the Dorsey case which had been furnished you by Mr. Gibson in the statement presented here yesterday?—A. I intended to use everything that was material.

Q. All you deemed as material?—A. Yes, sir; and I believe I did. There was in the Dorsey case some statements of outside transactions, which were disclosed by the accounts of the German National Bank, which had passed into the hands of the receiver. We endeavored to utilize them, but while there was some suggestive things about it, and while, I think, in that Mr. Gibson was right, we could not secure the evidence which would get that theory into court. We put the receiver on the stand, and we tried to get the evidence in, but that portion did not become available.

Q. On what does Mr. Gibson base his statement to the committee, that prior to the putting of Walsh on the stand as a witness in the case, you had failed to make out any case against the Dorseys, and were about to be laughed out of court?—A. That is Mr. Gibson's statement. I do not think so. Mr. Gibson is a lawyer who had to search the records to find out that he had ever been admitted to the bar, in order to get his pay. I do not think he ever tried a case in his life. He told me himself that he had never been engaged in actual practice. He undertook to judge of that case, and did judge of it in one way, while we judged of it in another way. Of course there were stages of the first trial of the Dorsey case at which, as in every protracted trial, counsel saw difficulties gathering around them. For instance, during the first half of the case, Judge Wylie was not very clear in his own mind that the Government had a case, and his rulings were universally against the Government; sometimes we thought very improperly so. The case went along, and at a certain stage of it Judge Wylie seemed (to use a slang expression) "to get his head"; he seemed to comprehend the bearings of the case, and from that time on we did not feel that we had any difficulty in the matter. Whether that was coincident with the time of Walsh's coming into the case, or not, I do not know, but I think, if you will send for Judge Wylie he will tell you that he did not attach the importance to Mr. Walsh's testimony that Mr. Gibson did.

Q. Can you state briefly to the committee the evidence against the Dorsey combination in that trial, before the introduction of Walsh, and then the testimony afterwards?—A. I indicated it here, in a measure, yesterday. It was this, that they had a large number of routes. We had, I think, seventeen or nineteen in that indictment. There was a case in which there was this series of orders which had been made in behalf of one and the other of these men; their interests were pooled; there was no question about that. These orders were based upon affidavits which were false; based upon affidavits which were altered; based upon affidavits which purported to have been sworn to before certain people, when they were not sworn to before them; when they were in blank; affidavits which stated that a certain number of horses, men, and carriers were then in use, when they were not in use. There were affidavits also, which stated—of course that was a matter of opinion—that a certain number of men and that a certain number of horses would be needed, when a much less number were actually needed. There were affidavits in favor of expedition; of the payment of large sums of money by the Government for carrying the mails at an increased rate of speed, when, in point of fact, the mail was at that time being carried at that rate of speed, and sometimes even at greater speed. There was a mass of that kind of testimony, which, as I said yesterday, if you took a single route, and introduced testimony of that character, applicable to that route, and showed Mr. Brady made such an order, that they made such affidavits, there still might be doubt as to the conspiracy of the parties. They might have been so acting as that one side or the other might have been deceived, or might have been acting in good faith. It took two, three, four, a lot of them, to show this combination as to all of the parties. That was the condition of things that was presented in the evidence. There were, moreover, papers, correspondence, statements of these people on file; various things of that sort, which we thought presented a case.

Q. What was the nature of the testimony of Mr. Rerdell?—A. He was not examined on the occasion of the first trial.

Q. How as to the second trial?—A. Mr. Rerdell on the second trial swore positively and distinctly to all sorts of frauds by these parties, going into detail as to their modes of doing business. He did not undertake to say that any money had been paid in his presence, in any way, but he disclosed a state of facts which was intended to leave an inference that money had been paid.

Now, as regards Mr. Walsh, he could not testify to the payment of any money in the Dorsey routes or anything of that kind. Walsh's testimony related solely to his own route from Prescott to Santa Fé. He claimed to have paid money to Brady; that he gave that to Brady from time to time as loans, and when he called upon Brady for a settlement, that Brady then said, "Why, I don't owe you any money; I have done enough for you. Have you not had a good contract, and various things of that sort?" That is the way it was presented in connection with the original statement regarding the route from Prescott to Santa Fé. On that basis of things, as a lawyer I should say it was exceedingly doubtful whether that evidence of Walsh would have been admissible in the Dorsey case, which related to entirely different routes; to entirely different parties. I thought it would hardly come within that class of decisions which allow you (where you are trying a man for false pretenses in a particular case) to prove that he made other false pretenses to other persons of the same general nature. At any rate, it appeared to be very doubtful whether it would be allowed as evidence against Dorsey. I remember that I gave the matter careful consideration. It turned out, however, that according to Mr. Walsh's version of his interview with Mr. Brady during that time, when he was having this discussion, that they went to work, and had some figuring, and that Mr. Brady said to him in substance, "You must pay such a percentage of expedition, and such a percentage of increase, just as the other contractors do," indicating very plainly by that that all of the other contractors were doing that thing.

After an elaborate argument, as I recollect it, extending over two or three days, Judge Wylie admitted that testimony into the Dorsey case. You will not find it in the original brief of what Mr. Dorsey would testify to in connection with the Prescott and Santa Fé route, which these gentleman produced at Long Branch. It came to my knowledge incidentally, considerably later on. With Mr. Walsh I had comparatively little to do. He early conceived a hostility to me. Mr. Merrick was the party who, after my first interview with him, had dealings with Mr. Walsh, as a rule. It was Mr. Merrick who ascertained from time to time what Mr. Walsh could testify to.

Q. Mr. Walsh did testify, then, that Mr. Brady said that he should pay the same as was paid by all of the other contractors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much was that?—A. I can only state from memory. My recollection is it was 30 per cent. or 33 per cent. of the amount of expedition; either of expedition for one year or of expedition for the whole term; I have forgotten that. Then there was a certain proportion of the amounts of fines and penalties remitted; a certain percentage. I have forgotten what it was. If it is important it can be ascertained from the testimony, which is all in print. We were very glad to have Mr. Walsh's testimony on the occasion of the first trial; there is no question about that; but we did not consider that we were going to be laughed out of court because of not having it.

Q. With all of this evidence to which you refer, the jury failed to convict the defendants?—A. They failed to convict any of them except Miner, who was one of the associates, and Rerdell, who was the clerk, the agent, who was doing these things. They were doing them for the benefit of their employers. Mr. Rerdell had no interest in the thing. It was not possible for those two gentlemen to have been guilty, acting under orders from Brady and Dorsey, and not to have found Brady and Dorsey guilty, the parties who gave the orders.

Q. They undertook to find the agents guilty, and not the principals?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. Colonel Cook testified here that he had great confidence in the integrity and honesty of a Washington jury. Are you able to confirm that testimony?—A. I do not think you ought to ask me to express an opinion about Washington juries.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I withdraw the question, if you do not wish to answer it.

The WITNESS. I am perfectly willing to say this, that during the first trial we caused the jury or many of the jurymen to be watched—where they went, their talks, and everything of that kind. We got reports. The result of the reports was to lead us to believe that some of the jurymen were not likely to find in our favor; yet we might have been mistaken. On the second trial there was no attempt to have the jury followed; that is, any systematic attempt. Prior to the first jury being empaneled, we discussed the propriety of asking the court to confine the jury, but we found that Judge Wylie was of the opinion that in a case of misdemeanor, which he considered that case, there was not any authority to shut the jury up.

I will state that what has come to be known as the jury bribery cases I had nothing to do with.

When the first Dorsey trial closed, my wife was supposed to be lying at the point of death. Her condition had been rather heroically concealed from me, and I was only told of it when I got through with my argument. I left here a day before the case closed. I learned of the verdict on the cars. I remained with my wife for a month or six weeks, and therefore I was not at all familiar with what took place in regard to the jury bribery matter, and cannot give any positive information in regard to it, as affecting the question of the standing of Washington juries.

Q. Do you know why Mr. Cook and Mr. Gibson did not continue to act as Government counsel in the star-route cases?—A. Both of them voluntarily resigned, Mr. Gibson with all sorts of professions of satisfaction, and Mr. Cook in a letter of dissatisfaction. They both went out, and I was very glad when they did go.

By Mr. FYAN :

Q. Did you advise the resignation or removal of Cook?—A. No, sir. I am free to say that if I had supposed Mr. Cook would go out, I should have endeavored to squeeze him out. I did not suppose that was a possibility, and therefore I did not try to do it. I went along with great discomfort to myself, feeling I was going along with associates in whom I could not afford to have confidence.

Q. You were satisfied they were betraying you to the other side?—A. Perhaps that is a little too much to say, that I was satisfied they were betraying me to the other side, but I felt they were not faithful to the Government's interest. I will state one fact which led me to this conclusion. At one time I was in Colonel Cook's office, and I met there Senator Kellogg. Mr. Cook said to me Mr. Kellogg was a client of his, and that he must not be hurt. I did not, at that time, know the relation of Mr. Kellogg to any of the cases, and it was not until we got down into the other combinations that Kellogg's name came to the front at all. In fact it came to the front so little—but I do not know that it is proper for me to refer to what took place before the grand jury.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection, I suppose.

The WITNESS. We went before the grand jury and had the Price case brought before it. When Mr. Walsh was asked how he got certain papers, he said they were brought to him by Mr. Kellogg. I did not at all take in the fact that the Mr. Kellogg referred to was Senator Kellogg. I did not think anything about it, as having the least importance in the world. That grand jury after having indicted Price adjourned. After that it was claimed by Mr. Walsh and others that the grand jury ought to have indicted Senator Kellogg as well. I was away in New York. I came back and learned of these reports. I said at once that if that was so, and if this statement of Walsh referred to Senator Kellogg, that the grand jury, not having adjourned permanently, ought to be reconvened immediately.

Q. When was this?—A. This was the grand jury that found the second indictment against Dorsey, as I understand it. It was the grand jury that first indicted Price, whichever one that was. I went to Judge Wylie and asked to have that grand jury reconvened. Judge Wylie was indisposed to do it. I then told him that I thought it was a case in which I had a right to make a personal appeal to him to do it; that by inadvertence I had not taken into proper consideration this statement of Walsh before the grand jury; that the statement referred to Senator Kellogg, as it seemed, and the report was being circulated that there was an attempt to protect Senator Kellogg. I told Judge Wylie that I did not wish to rest under that imputation. The judge, on my stating these facts, had the grand jury brought together a second time. When they were convened, Mr. Walsh, testified before them. At the end of the first day, the grand jury was anxious to dispose of the case. I was afraid all the testimony was not in. I therefore got them to hold over until the next day. The next day Mr. Walsh was there, and he testified on the two days to facts and circumstances, on which, if I had been a grand jurymen, I would have found an indictment.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In what particular case was that?—A. In the San Antonio and Corpus Christi route. The grand jury did not indict. It is possible that, in view of the evidence that was given before the grand jury, they might honestly and intelligently have assumed there was a little break in the testimony, and that Mr. Kellogg might have done everything it was alleged he had done, and yet have done it honestly. I do not mean to question the honesty of the grand jury.

Q. Were you before the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many witnesses were examined at that time?—A. Two, I think; all we could get. Mr. Price, you will remember, was not at our service then at all. He was hostile. We could not get him. We had this Mr. Ellis for whom we had sent to Texas. We regarded his testimony as so important that we had the post-office inspector come here with him. We had two or three others. We had all of the evidence that the post-office inspectors' reports showed was available. I think there was a very intelligent man here from San Antonio. His name was Devine. He had been a subcontractor, or something of that sort. They were called merely to prove fraud in connection with the allowance for expedition, &c. They gave no evidence except as against Price. Walsh is the only person who gave any evidence as against Kellogg.

Q. He came forward with his statements in regard to Kellogg and

Mr. Brady before that grand jury?—A. Whether the fact that payments were made to Brady in connection with the Prescott and Santa Fé route was put in before the grand jury then, I do not remember. We were not then seeking an indictment against Brady; we were seeking an indictment against Kellogg. The point was this. The theory was that Mr. Price, wanting expedition and being unable to get it, had gone to Mr. Kellogg to have him use his influence with Brady to get expedition; that he did get it, and that there were some very remarkable things about the transaction. For instance, there was an indication that a post-office draft for money to become due on expedition, dated before the order for expedition was made, and yet there was some indication on the paper that it had been arranged for. Mr. Kellogg, it was alleged, got $20,000 of those drafts. The moneys to become due in the future. Whether any portion of that money went to Kellogg, or whether any portion of it went to Brady, was, in a measure, unimportant in that view. If any portion of it went to Brady, then an indictment for conspiracy would lie; if no portion of it went to Brady, but a portion went to Kellogg, then an indictment would lie under the statute forbidding a member of Congress or a Senator going before any Department of the Government and, for a consideration, soliciting contracts. However that may be, Mr. Walsh, on that attempt at an indictment, did not produce before the grand jury all of the letters and papers which he subsequently did. I may also say that there was the question of the statute of limitation in the way. The statute of limitations had run as against the time when the order of expedition was made; as against the time when the post-office draft was drawn. If we treated any money received under that as having been received at the time when the draft matured, then the statute of limitation did not run. There were points of that kind in the case.

However, that grand jury, to my surprise, did not indict Senator Kellogg.

Q. Mr. Walsh stated before the grand jury that he had made certain payments to Kellogg?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was on account of his influence?—A. No, sir; Mr. Walsh did not know anything about that. That is just where the break came. Mr. Walsh had no knowledge, except that Mr. Price had given certain post-office drafts. We had the drafts. There may be some little inaccuracy, but I think not. Mr. Walsh stated that these drafts were brought to him by Senator Kellogg, and he cashed them.

Q. What drafts?—A. Post-office drafts given on account of these expeditions; money to come from expedition, and the question whether Senator Kellogg was honestly or dishonestly in possession of those drafts was a thing about which the grand jury might have a doubt.

Q. How could he have become in possession of them honestly if he was not interested in the Government contracts?—A. If you want to know he could have come in possession of them honestly, I will state one way in which he could have done so. I have heard outside, since then, that Mr. Kellogg was an influential man down in all that portion of country where Mr. Price had his routes, and that he made political contributions.

Q. For what purpose was that political contribution?—A. I do not know; have merely heard that story outside. You asked me how he could have honestly held these drafts. I have merely stated a way in which he might have honestly done so. I am free to confess if I had been a grand jurymen I should have voted to indict Mr. Kellogg, but the grand jury did not.

Q. One moment; about this contribution. How could Mr. Kellogg have made a political contribution with the proceeds of the star-route contract, legally and legitimately?—A. I do not know. I do not know that he ever made a political contribution, but this occurs to me. Suppose Mr. Price had a post-office contract that he had gotten legitimately. He is applied to by—not by any national committee, for we have civil service now—but he is applied to by a committee for a contribution, or applied to by the Louisiana State committee for a contribution. He says, “I have not any ready money, but I can give you a draft upon the Post-Office Department for money which is to be due to me three, four, five or six months hence. I will do that, if you can use it.” I never knew a political committee to refuse to take anything that they thought there was a chance of transforming into money; and I can imagine that they might take this draft, and then look around for a banker to cash it. That might be innocently done.

Q. Have you not heard that Mr. Kellogg represents that this was a political contribution on account of money that he had advanced in the preceding election in 1876, in order to secure favorable action by the Louisiana returning board for the Hayes electors?—A. I never heard anything of that kind.

Q. Did not Mr. Kellogg justify it on that ground?—A. I never heard of it. Subsequently there was some dissatisfaction at Mr. Kellogg's not having been indicted. There was a new grand jury. Before that grand jury Mr. Walsh went. I did not go. I understand that there were produced before that committee additional papers, and the grand jury indicted. That indictment is pending. We would have been ready to try it at either of the last two terms, but, as I say, Mr. Walsh could not be found. By the time the grand jury met, Mr. Price became available to the Government as a witness. I do not know whether Mr. Price went before the grand jury or not. I did not have anything to do with that. Kellogg was indicted at any rate. From Mr. Price, by that time, information was gotten, which explained things which were left to inference before, and explanations were given of things which were not before that understood.

Q. Was the question as to Mr. Price's appearance before the grand jury discussed between you and other counsel for the Government prior to his first introduction as a witness before the grand jury?—A. You are entrenching a little upon what occurred between counsel, but I think I may state that at the time, and before the additional documentary evidence was produced, I was inclined to take the view that, Mr. Price being already indicted, and being, in my opinion, a guilty man, it was not a wise thing to do, nor would the Government be justified in granting immunity to Mr. Price for the purpose of indicting Mr. Kellogg, because, in my opinion, his testimony would not go sufficiently far to secure the conviction of Mr. Kellogg. My view was that we should not let go of the one before we got hold of the other. At a subsequent period, when the additional evidence contained in the papers which Mr. Walsh had become known, I had no question whatever then as to the wisdom of doing it. The first time we had the discussion, I differed with Mr. Ker and Mr. Merrick and the Attorney-General. The matter was finally left to the Attorney-General for determination, and I was overruled. Let me say—

Q. The Attorney-General decided it?—A. Yes, sir; he decided in favor of using Price and prosecuting Kellogg. That was before the additional papers came. Let me say further that that is the only case in the whole history of these trials in which there was anything approaching to a disagreement between the three counsel, Messrs. Ker, Merrick, and myself. That was so in spite of the most persistent efforts by newspapers, by Gibson, and others to stir up trouble between counsel. We never differed.

Q. What was the nature of the evidence that Price offered to the Government?—A. I did not have that talk with Mr. Price. I had nothing to do with that portion of the case.

Q. You afterwards heard him testify?—A. No, sir; I never heard him testify.

Q. Did he not appear before the grand jury?—A. I did not appear. You will see the point was this: Mr. Walsh conceived great hostility to me, and at different times has said and done things that I have not felt I was at liberty to answer, because if I did so I might hurt the case. The result was that when Mr. Price became a witness I was engaged at a certain stage of the Dorsey case, second trial, in such a way that I could not have attended to the matter before the grand jury, even if I had been disposed to do so. Out of deference to Mr. Walsh's feelings it was considered that it was best that I should be left to one side; and therefore, by a tacit arrangement, without any positive agreement, it was understood after Mr. Price came into the case, solely for the purpose of having things go along smoothly, that I should stand to one side so far as Mr. Kellogg's case was concerned.

Q. Who went before the grand jury?—A. Mr. Ker.

Q. When the indictment was finally found against Mr. Kellogg and Mr. Brady?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you not advised as to the purport of Mr. Price's testimony, when it was a matter of discussion between the Government counsel, as to whether he should be accepted as a witness or not?—A. When it was a matter of discussion he had not offered to become a witness. We had reason to believe that we could get him as a witness. There had appeared some one of these intermediaries that every lawyer in practice has seen, who comes forward claiming to have no connection with the parties, but he says, if so and so consents to be a witness will you accept him. This matter did not come before me. Mr. Merrick can tell you all about it.

Q. You understood Mr. Price would testify?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if he testified fully to all the facts, and would tell the truth, he was to be granted immunity?—A. That was the theory; I differed with my brethren in the matter, because I thought from the statement we had of what Mr. Price could testify to, that while it would be morally, perhaps, convincing, I did not think it would secure the conviction of Mr. Kellogg.

Q. What was the evidence that it was represented to you he would give?—A. I cannot recall it with any accuracy; Mr. Ker, who is here, can probably tell you more about that than I can. My idea is that it was expected that Mr. Price would show affirmatively that those drafts were given to Kellogg for services in procuring the order for expedition, but he would not go so far as to say that any portion of the money went to Brady; that is my recollection. It was claimed that if Mr. Price would so testify that those drafts went to Mr. Kellogg for services in procuring the order, that that would put an end to any theory of political contribution. At that time, however, we were considering more particularly the question of an indictment for conspiracy than the question of an indictment under the statute for the offense of a Senator going before the Department and soliciting an order of this kind.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Why did you think Price would not testify that any portion of that money went to Brady? Because it really did not go to Brady, or because he would not testify so as to implicate Brady?—A. I think the suggestion of the testimony which it was said Price could give was limited by the statement that he could trace it no further than to Kellogg; and it is also proper to say that I understand that Mr. Price has always claimed that he himself was not concerned in any attempt at bribery, or anything of that kind; that he had not been guilty of any offense that involved general moral turpitude, though possibly he had been guilty of an offense of employing a Senator to go before the Department, which, while a statutory offense, he did not regard as involving moral turpitude. I am very confident when we talked about the necessity, the idea of using Price, that the testimony was chopped off right there; that he could not prove that any of it went to Brady.

Q. Did not Walsh's evidence and his together show?—A. No, sir; Walsh showed no connection with Brady; you are right; there was something in Walsh's testimony, as I recollect it now, going to show money went to Brady. I think Walsh made some statement showing that some of these drafts were in Brady's possession.

Q. The amount involved in these drafts was $20,000?—A. That is my recollection.

Q. They were drawn to be paid at a future time?—A. Yes, sir; I think so. It seems to me that the $20,000 was not all made up of post-office drafts.

Q. Part in cash?—A. No, sir; I believe some notes were due in New York.

Q. Some individual notes, and the rest were post-office drafts, orders, to be paid at a future time out of the proceeds of the contract?—A. Yes, sir. You are really asking me in regard to things that I know nothing about, only as I get the information second-hand; the other facts I have been testifying about are facts that I have personal knowledge of.

Q. Didn't the case, as presented by the evidence of Price and Walsh, tend to show that $20,000 were paid by Price, a contractor, to Kellogg, in notes and orders upon the Post-Office Department, to be paid out of the proceeds of contracts on the Corpus Christi and San Antonio route?—A. That is my impression.

Q. And collections by Walsh were to be divided equally between Brady and Kellogg?—A. No, sir; I do not think there was anything in the evidence which went to show that in the collection it was to be done in that way. There was something in Walsh's testimony which indicated that some portion of the proceeds was to go to Brady, but my recollection is that it was not very direct, because I never felt confident that Brady ever did get any money in that case. I never felt confident that the order he made was not gotten from him by personal influence and solicitation. That is the impression I received, whereas, if Walsh's testimony had been absolute and direct of the payment of money to Brady, or something of that sort, I could not have gotten that impression. I did not get that impression, I assure you, because I thought Brady was too good to take money.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In the testimony of Mr. MacVeagh, he stated that he called President Garfield's attention to the fact that some of these prosecutions might result in changing the majority of the United States Senate from a Democratic to a Republican majority. I desire to ask you whether your attention, pending the efforts of procuring an indictment against Kellogg, was called to the fact by any one; and, if so, by whom?—A. I do not remember that my attention was called to the matter at all.

Q. Was there any suggestion made before the grand jury at the time the Kellogg case was being examined, to the effect that it would be a serious matter to indict a United States Senator?—A. Yes, sir; one of the colored jurors said it would be a serious matter to indict a United States Senator. Let me say here that the grand jury I refer to had knowledge of the matter outside of the evidence that was introduced before them. I do not mean to say that it was knowledge that they had not a right to have. For instance, while I was waiting in the ante-room to be allowed to go before the grand jury, somebody was sent out, and that person came back after a little while with a book. When I got into the room, I ascertained it to be a book from the Congressional library, containing testimony in the contest with Kellogg regarding his seat. Some member of the grand jury knew that in that contest there was testimony given by Walsh.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Did they have that book before them in the grand-jury room?—A. Yes, sir. It appeared there that Walsh had been a witness in the case of Spofford against Kellogg in the matter of the contest over Mr. Kellogg's seat.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Could you maintain an indictment found upon such testimony as that?—A. I considered that question very carefully, and I satisfied myself that the grand jurors had a right to make their own inquiries within a limited scope, though it was not testimony in any sense. I did not get the indictment, however, and, therefore, the question did not arise. I examined into the question more from curiosity than anything else. From the examination I gave the matter, I rather came to the conclusion that the introduction of that book into the grand-jury room would not have invalidated the indictment had I succeeded in securing one. At the same time I beg to remark that the book was not there by any instigation of mine, and I would have been sorry to have had that question to meet on a motion to quash.

Q. Did you learn what the book was?—A. It was the Congressional report of the testimony in the case. I may say this, that after we had gone through with Mr. Walsh, and got such statements from him as he was enabled to give, Mr. Walsh recognized the book, and picked it up and turned to his testimony. I saw what it was, and I saw just where there was a point there. Mr. Walsh had testified before the Congressional committee, in a sort of general way, that he had never had any dealings with Kellogg, or something of that sort. Of course this question of his drafts there seemed, in a measure, to be inconsistent with that theory, and, therefore, I took the book and questioned Mr. Walsh about it right there. One of the grand jurors remarked that there was no use in going into that. I went on and brought out, as I thought, evidence of the fact that the answer of Mr. Walsh before the Senate committee—if it was a Senate committee—was confined to the particular matter which was then before that committee, and that the answer did not cover the general ground of saying that he had never had dealings with Kellogg.

Q. What member of the jury was that?—A. Somebody was sent out for the book; the attendant went, I believe. I always believed, with out knowing the fact, that the party went to the district attorney's office, and the district attorney sent up to the Congressional library and got it.

Q. District-Attorney Corkhill?—A. Yes, sir; I do not know whether he was there or not.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Mr. Price, as I understand it, was to testify under promise of immunity?—A. I understand that is so, and yet I do not know it. I had nothing to do with it. I say the moment after Price was accepted as a witness, after it was decided to accept him as a witness, I was entirely aside in the matter; put aside freely, with my concurrence, because Mr. Walsh took the position that he would not give any testimony, would not render any assistance, would not do anything whilst I was in the case and whilst there was a sort of personal mortification in connection with it of being bulldozed, apparently, I yet accepted the situation and said, very cheerfully, "Leave me out."

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Then the indictment was found at a subsequent term when you were not present before the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that indictment is still pending?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. You testified some time ago that Mr. Cook severed his connection with the Government, complaining; what was his complaint?—A. That confidence was not placed in him. The trouble was that we could not traverse the fact.

Q. There was not much disagreement between you all then about his going out?—A. No, sir; not at all. His going out was certainly very agreeable to me.

The usual hour of adjournment having arrived and the examination of the witness not having been concluded, he asked of the committee the favor of allowing his further examination to be postponed until Tuesday, April 2, 1884.

This request being complied with the committee adjourned until Monday, March 24, 1884, at 10 o'clock a. m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 1, 1884.

GEORGE BLISS recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. You may proceed, Mr. Bliss, with any further statement which you desire to present. If there are any corrections that you wish to make in your former testimony perhaps you had better begin with that.—Answer. I expressed a doubt whether I had ever seen the letter of Mr. Gibson to the Attorney-General, written in January, 1882, urging that we should proceed with Route 40101. I find, by reference to my correspondence, that I did see that letter. When I was examined before I believe I stated in relation to it that it would not have made any difference in my action whether I had seen the letter or not, and that is true; but I did see the letter.

I spoke also in my former examination of the endeavor to get certain papers from Colonel Cook. I find the condition of the record in regard to that matter to be this: On or about the 27th of December the combination of the safe was changed. On the 6th of January I wrote to Colonel Cook saying that I was trying to get things in shape, and I wished that anything he had in the way of papers should be returned. He replied that he had nothing. The matter remained in that way for a time. Before that, however, he had written Mr. Woodward urging him to send him additional abstracts for the routes which were known as the Dorsey routes. Mr. Woodward did not send him any in consequence of that letter, but previously, on the 15th of October and the 1st of November, he had sent Colonel Cook abstracts as to sixteen routes, all of which except one were included in the original Dorsey indictment. One of them, the route from Dalles to Lake View, was dropped out from the second Dorsey indictment, because it was thought the statute of limitations had run against the overt act alleged, to wit, the making of the order. The abstracts on those sixteen routes were sent, as I say, by Mr. Woodward to Mr. Cook on the 15th of October and the first of November. On the 6th of January succeeding, as I have already stated, I had written to Colonel Cook, asking him to return the papers, and on the 9th of January he replied, stating that he hadn't any papers. Then the matter ran along until, I think, the 16th of March, when I again wrote to him for the papers, specifying more in detail the fact that the papers I wanted were abstracts of these reports. I got a reply from Colonel Cook in writing, stating that he hadn't any of the papers. On the 17th I wrote him again. I never got any answer to that, but on or about the 17th, within a day or two of that time, he resigned, and I think on the 27th, at my instigation, the Attorney-General wrote him, transmitting a letter of mine to the Attorney-General, dated on the 24th. This, the committee will perceive, was some ten or twelve days after I had called upon him to return the papers, and after he had stated to me that he had none of the papers. On the 28th he did finally send to the Department sixteen papers, which were the very reports I had been calling for—Mr. Woodward's abstracts, containing the statement of our evidence as to each and every one of those routes; and it is a little remarkable that in "ways that are dark," and which I cannot state here because I have only discovered this fact of the return of the papers to the Department this morning—I saw something in New York yesterday which suggested it to me, and I telegraphed about it—it is a little remarkable, I say, that long before I got this information we had learned that the other side had abstracts of our evidence on sixteen of the routes. These papers, you see, were returned by Colonel Cook to the Department on the 29th of March, after he had been out of the cases ten or twelve days, and after he had previously asserted that he had no such papers; and I simply say that, in my opinion, they were retained for the purpose of being copied for the benefit of the other side.

By Mr. HEMPHILL:

Q. Were they the same sixteen?—A. The same sixteen. Well, we did not know what the other side had, except that we identified the questions put by them along during the trial as based upon the evidence in regard to those routes to which these abstracts related. We simply learned that they had sixteen of our abstracts, and it appears that there were just sixteen returned by Colonel Cook to the Department. I never saw these until to-day.

Q. Some of the sixteen which Colonel Cook returned you discovered, from the examination of witnesses by the defendants' counsel, to be the same that they had?—A. Some of the sixteen related to routes as to which their examination of the witnesses showed that they had information from our papers.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Was there any other means by which they could have obtained that information or got access to those papers?—A. No, sir; the reports were Mr. Woodward's, and they were kept so closely that there never was any copy made of them, except the one that went to Colonel Cook, and, other than those sixteen, we never had any copies made of the reports at all; I used the originals.

Q. Then the only two copies that were in existence were the one that Mr. Woodward had and the one that Colonel Cook had?—A. The only two copies, so far as I know, and the only two copies that could be legitimately in existence.

By Mr. HEMPHILL :

Q. By two copies you mean the originals and the copies which Mr. Cook had?—A. Yes, sir; the originals and those copies.

Mr. WOODWARD. Both of them were copied into a letter-press copy-book, which was locked up in our safe and never went out of the room.

The WITNESS. They were kept so confidentially that even I never got into the safe. Mr. Woodward would not let me into it. So much for that. Now, perhaps I ought to say a word or two in regard to some things which have been stated in evidence here before I submit myself to what may be called cross-examination. In the first place, Mr. Cook testifies that Mr. Brewster, on a certain occasion, which was apparently about the time when Mr. Cook was going out of the cases, told him, substantially, that he could not do with me as he wanted to, because I had procured his appointment as Attorney-General. In the first place, the statement is wholly absurd on its face; and in the second place, Mr. Brewster is a truthful man, and he knows I did not procure his appointment; so I do not believe he ever said anything of the kind. In point of fact, I suppose there is no harm in my saying that, as to Mr. Brewster's appointment as Attorney-General, my whole knowledge of it in advance arose in this way. I was very much with the President when he first arrived here, but I never exchanged a word with him as to Mr. Brewster's being Attorney-General until, one evening, I did say to the President that, after looking over the whole field, I wished things were in such shape that Mr. Brewster could be Attorney-General, and to my surprise, the President then informed me that things were in such a shape, and that Mr. Brewster was to be Attorney-General. That was the first of my knowledge on the subject; so that I do not think Mr. Brewster could ever have said anything like what Colonel Cook attributes to him.

Now, as to the question about Colonel Corkhill at the interview at Elberon, both Colonel Cook and Mr. Gibson expressed very great doubt as to Colonel Corkhill, stating substantially that he was in the interest of the other side; and they referred to a former attempted investigation in which Mr. Hinds had tried to get the district attorney to go before the grand jury. I confess that what they said impressed me a good deal at the time. I did not know Colonel Corkhill, and had never seen him. Mr. Gibson and Colonel Cook took this view, and I found also that Mr. MacVeagh shared in the distrust of Colonel Corkhill, as appears by his evidence here, and, coming into the cases as I did, I shared very largely in it at the time.

When we got fairly to work, in October or November or somewhere along there, the question of whether or not we could go on with Colonel Corkhill as district attorney came up, and I guess we all agreed that we could not—I confess that I did—and we looked around to see who should be appointed or recommended to take the place of Colonel Corkhill. To my surprise I found, in the first place, that Colonel Cook wanted to be made district attorney. I took occasion to say to him in conversation, and, I think, by letter also, that that would not do. I knew none of the lawyers here, so I asked him to consider the matter and recommend some one for district attorney, and by and by he came back and recommended Mr. Cole, his partner. I did not bite very well at that, and then Colonel Cook, with some formality, claimed that he was entitled to be heard by the President, and to have a peculiar influence with the President in the appointment of the district attorney, on the strength of the fact that he was in the cases, and he wanted that I should take him and introduce him to the President some evening, which I did not do; but I took occasion to write him that there was no use talking about that; that I did not believe the President would think that he should have any more right to say who should be district attorney than any other citizen of Washington. We went along, Colonel Corkhill being still in office and the Guiteau case going on. Senator Edmunds, as the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, took the position very decidedly that he would not under any circumstances assent to the confirmation of anybody in place of Colonel Corkhill as long as the Guiteau case was going on (at least so I was informed by others; Senator Edmunds did not make any such statement to me), and I understood that the President was very decided in the same view—that he ought not to remove Colonel Corkhill at that time; though he was prepared to do so if the Attorney-General would recommend it. This was after Mr. Brewster came in. The Attorney-General was influenced, in a measure, apparently by what all of us had thought on the subject, and did intend to recommend the removal of Colonel Corkhill; but he finally changed his mind and did not do it. We went along, and whenever I came to sit down and see what I really knew about Colonel Corkhill, beyond what was alleged to have occurred in connection with the previous investigation, and of which I knew nothing, I felt bound to say that there was nothing I knew of that would justify his removal. He had, I believe, been on good social relations with some of the defendants and had probably been disposed in their favor, but we were going on without him, and without any communication with him except communications of a formal kind, and he was doing promptly everything that we required him to do; so when, after the first trial or before the second, I wrote a letter to the President complaining of certain officials, while I did make some remarks about Colonel Corkhill, I expressly excepted him from those officials as to whom I was suggesting removal. As I have said, at the outset of my connection with the cases, I did share very strongly in the distrust of Colonel Corkhill. I do not know anything about any action of his preceding that time, but from the time I came into the cases, while we were always a little distrustful of him, yet our experience was that every time we asked Colonel Corkhill to do anything he did it.

By Mr. MILLIKIN:

Q. What is your opinion now as to Corkhill's fidelity in the matter?
—A. Well, from the time I came into the cases there was no chance for him to have been other than faithful, because he had substantially nothing to do with the cases. There was one time during the progress of the cases when we had a little doubt of him. We wanted to get our indictments filed promptly, and the story came to us that he had said that he was not going to sign the indictments that we had drawn; that he was going to assert his dignity, and so on, and we were a good deal worked up about it; but upon the Attorney-General sending the indictments to Colonel Corkhill there was found to be no such disposition on his part, and he signed the indictments, and we went on. If you ask me what I learned of his previous relations to the matter——

Q. (Interposing.) No; I do not ask you that. I ask your present opinion as to his fidelity at that time.—A. There was really no question of fidelity or infidelity after I came into the cases so far as I know, because Colonel Corkhill had nothing to do with them except in a most formal way. For instance, if I wanted a case to go before the grand jury I would write to him to say that we desired at such a time to put evidence before the grand jury, not even telling him what the case was or anything about it, and he would send word to the grand jury about the matter. That was all the connection he had with the management of the cases; therefore you see, there was really no question of fidelity or infidelity, so far as I had knowledge of anything he did. I do not think that, as a matter of fact, he was in entire sympathy with the prosecution. All the local influences with which he was connected were on the other side; the people with whom he was in the habit of associating socially had been friends of Mr. Dorsey's, and of course were not favorable to the prosecution.

Q. But he had no opportunity, according to your statement, to "give away" the Government, even if he desired to do so?—A. He never had knowledge of the details of the cases, nor of a particle of the evidence.

Q. So that it was really of no consequence whether he was in sympathy with the Government or not?—A. After the time when I came into the cases it was not of consequence. The only thing that he did that may be said to have injured the Government was that adjournment of the grand jury while we were at Elberon, as to which Mr. MacVeagh and Mr. Cook have spoken, and about which I know nothing. But even that did not injure the Government in the long run. It was unfortunate, however, that that grand jury was adjourned. Mr. Corkhill always claimed that he had seen the Attorney-General about it and had asked him if there was anything more for the grand jury, and told him they were going to be adjourned. Mr. MacVeagh remembered the interview otherwise. It was unfortunate that the adjournment occurred, but I know nothing that would lead me to distrust the good faith of Colonel Corkhill in that respect, from anything that occurred to my knowledge after I came into the cases. At the same time I am frank to say that I should not have selected Colonel Corkhill for district attorney.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Do I understand you to say that you withdrew your request for the appointment of some one else as district attorney?—A. We never made any formal request. The matter was talked over, and the other gentlemen rather relied upon me to look around and ascertain who there was in Washington who would be a fit and competent person to appoint. Mr. Merrick was not then in the cases, and I knew nothing about the lawyers here and did not know any of them personally, except Colonel Cook. I talked with him about it, and, as I have said, he at first wanted to be appointed himself, and afterwards proposed the appointment of his partner, Mr. Cole, and he raised objections to everybody else that was mentioned. However, the matter went along without anything being done about it, until gradually I reached the conclusion, or it seemed to me, that there was not any justification for recommending the removal of Colonel Corkhill, or any necessity for it. Then there was this Guiteau trial, which was going on at the time, and Colonel Corkhill's relation to which I perhaps had not appreciated. So we went on through the first trial. I would have always preferred to have had somebody else in the district attorney's office, because I would have liked to have had somebody in that office to whom I could have gone and with whom I could have talked the cases over and learned his views about the local law and the practice here, but we had no such person and no such aid. At a later period there was a recommendation of mine for Colonel Corkhill's removal, a recommendation made one day and withdrawn the next. It was at the time this question arose about signing the indictment, but that was settled, and the recommendation was withdrawn.

By Mr. MILLIKIN:

Q. He came the next day and signed the indictment, did he?—A. The transaction is this. I suppose there is no harm in my stating it. We learned of Colonel Corkhill having said that he would not sign any indictments; that he was going to assert his manhood. I rather think there was no question that he so asserted. We were in such a position that the indictments had got to be filed to save the statute, in some views of it, within two or three days; and, of course, they could not be filed without the signature of the District attorney, and therefore I addressed a letter to the Attorney-General upon the subject. After I had written that letter and left for New York, I think, and was on my way there, it occurred to me that that was a pretty serious step to take, if for no other reason, because Colonel Corkhill would, of course, be exasperated by anything of that kind, and that we might fail to get his successor confirmed in time by the Senate, because, of course, it must be done very promptly in order to serve our purpose. Therefore I addressed a dispatch to the Attorney-General suggesting that view, and urging that we had better go slow about it. Mr. Edmunds, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, was consulted, and the thing was stopped right then and there. I am free to say now that I think Colonel Corkhill had talked as it was reported to us that he had, but I think I was somewhat misled in the matter. I think the original virus that was put into my mind with reference to Colonel Corkhill had held up to that time. I never had any personal relations with him in any manner.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were any efforts made to have Colonel Corkhill removed after the conclusion of the Guiteau trial?—A. This matter that I speak of was after the conclusion of the Guiteau trial. That is my recollection.

Colonel Cook testified here that I procured the discharge of a number of detectives of his. The fact about that is that some time after Mr. Brewster came in as Attorney-General he said to me that he wanted to control the outside expenses, and that they must be kept down. I told him I knew of no such expenses. He told me he had learned that there had been bills for detectives filed, and asked me if I had seen the detectives that were employed. I told him I had not, and that I did not know anything about them. He said that the bills had been filed and paid, but that the vouchers had not gone on file; they had been certified by the Solicitor-General as Acting Attorney-General, who certified that certain vouchers had been produced, but they had not gone on file in the Treasury Department, and I see that that transaction appears in the printed return furnished in response to Senator Van Wyck's resolution. Thereupon the Attorney-General addressed me a letter, and, I think, one to Colonel Cook also, saying that he wanted all these outside expenses stopped, or, at any rate, that none must be incurred without his knowledge, and asking whether I had any detectives employed. I replied that I had none. He asked me if I knew of any. I told him Colonel Cook had some, and thereupon he wrote to Colonel Cook to discharge them. I never saw the detectives, and do not know who they were, and I never saw any advantage from their employment. They had been at work and were being paid for two or three months before I came into the cases, but I knew nothing about them, and I had nothing to do with their discharge, except in the connection I have stated. I did think, however, and I think now, that they were of no earthly use.

Q. Were those the detectives who were watching the jury?—A. Oh, no, sir. These detectives were employed long before that—along in October, November, and December, 1881. Some of them were gentlemen who have since been under indictment in connection with these District matters. Some of them, I think, were in the District service at that time. An idea has been given out here that the Dorsey case was not early selected as a case to be tried. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that that case was brought before us in the conference at Elberon, and that a letter (which is already in your record), dated the 1st of October, 1881, from me to Colonel Cook, calls for the papers in the Dorsey case. All of these papers, which Colonel Cook was calling upon Mr. Gibson for, the papers which he got, and those which he did not get, including those which he asked for on the 27th of December, and which Gibson had sent to him, expressly related to the Dorsey case. His letter of the 27th of December asked for the papers in the Dorsey case. I say this merely because it has been given out that I got up the Dorsey case, and they had nothing to do with it, when the fact is that that was the only case, except the case of the route from Prescott to Santa Fé, that Colonel Cook and Mr. Gibson had dealt with in any detail.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Quite a good deal has been said here about the Dorsey case not having been a proper case to commence with. Will you state, as briefly as you can, the reasons why the Dorsey case was taken as a pioneer case instead of route 40101, or any other of the other cases?—A. The Prescott and Santa Fé route was a route of this kind in general terms: it had been let to contractors who had failed and had been declared failing contractors. While they were the contractors Mr. Walsh had advanced money to them, claiming to act simply as a banker; he had advanced a considerable amount of money. Under the rule of the Post-Office Department, when a contractor fails the Department officials go up the list of bidders, that is, they offer the contract to the next highest bidder, but he is not bound to take it, and after that they give the contract ordinarily to anybody who comes in and makes a bid for a sum less than this next highest bidder. After these parties were declared failing contractors Mr. Walsh came in and made a bid for a little less than the next highest bid and the route was given to him. Prior to that time there had been expedition and increase of trips, but that had been cut off, and when Mr. Walsh bid it was on the original service. After that time there was other increase and expedition, and there was quite a large sum allowed in the aggregate, $64,000 or $74,000. Then after a time Mr. Walsh himself was declared a failing contractor and the route was taken from him. But prior to that there had been changes in the route. The terminus had been swung around so as to reach Albuquerque and there had been various other changes. Now there was a case which simply presented on the record, and apart from the testimony of Mr. Walsh, this condition of affairs: that the original contractors had been declared failing contractors; that Walsh had been allowed to come in and bid at less than the next highest bid; that then the number of trips had been increased and the speed expedited; and then Walsh himself had been declared a failing contractor and the route had been taken from him. Now, in that state of things, apart from the testimony of Walsh as to his dealings with Brady, there was nothing in the case that would lead to a conviction, or even secure an indictment; and, in fact, it was a weaker case than almost any of the others, because, even if Walsh had been at one time in the favor of Brady, he had passed out of that favor, the contract had been taken from him; and, therefore, the record seemed to show that Brady had been in that respect a faithful officer. Mr. Walsh came in and claimed that he had had dealings with Brady which were corrupt and had paid him money, but Mr. Walsh at that time had quite a claim against the Government. After the investigation commenced he had induced the Government officers to stretch things to the very outside in allowing him pay. When he was declared a failing contractor his pay was stopped, and he now came in and claimed that, in some form, he had been made a failing contractor through the unjust action of the Department, and, therefore, that he ought to be paid the balance due him, $6,000 or $8,000, I think it was, that he claimed, and they gave him the benefit of the doubt and paid him the money, and then supposed that his case was all settled. But pretty soon Mr. Walsh came around with a claim for a month's extra pay. When a contractor's contract is terminated by the Department not for any fault of his own, he has a right under the law to a month's extra pay, and Walsh claimed that paying him this $6,000 or $8,000 on the ground that he had been made a failing contractor through some unjust action of the Department showed that he was not at fault and was a failing contractor through no fault of his own, and that, therefore, he was entitled to this month's extra pay, and he was very earnest to get it. On the other hand, the officers of the Department considered that when they had paid him that money there had been an agreement that that was to be the end of the matter, and the present Second Assistant Postmaster-General was very earnest in that view, and regarded the assertion of this later claim as an act of bad faith on the part of Mr. Walsh. I may say in passing that Mr. Walsh has since gone into the Court of Claims in an endeavor to establish that claim, and that the Government is fighting it there.

Q. What is the amount of that claim for the extra month's pay?—A. I think it is $14,000.

Q. One-twelfth of $105,000 a year?—A. No; that would be only eight or nine thousand dollars. There were so many changes on these routes that you cannot take the pay at any given time as a basis of such a calculation. I think the amount is about $14,000, but I may be wrong. So much for that. There was Mr. Walsh in that position, with a claim upon the Government and making an allegation that he had paid money to Mr. Brady. His claim was that he had loaned money to Mr. Brady. The impression was very strong on my mind from the outset that if Walsh had had these money transactions with Brady they probably would turn out to have been of a different character from what he stated. He did not admit and would not admit at any time that he had had any corrupt dealings with Mr. Brady. The idea he gave out was that Brady had undertaken to blackmail him—at all events he claimed that he had paid this money to Mr. Brady.

Q. Do you know whether that claim of Walsh's for the extra month's pay has ever been paid?—A. No, sir; it has never been paid; it is in litigation in the Court of Claims, and from what I learn of the evidence I apprehend that it never will be paid.

Q. Did Walsh demand that pay in consideration of testifying before the grand jury?—A. I cannot say as to that. I had nothing to do with it. I know that he did time and again insist upon it to me that he should have that pay, and that that matter should be arranged before he went further; but all that was later.

Q. You say that in this case of which you have been speaking there was no evidence of corruption except the testimony of Walsh as to some corrupt transaction between him and Brady?—A. Money dealings—not corruption. He denied corruption. Mr. Walsh never admitted that he was engaged in any corrupt transaction with Mr. Brady.

Q. What interest had the Government to prosecute this matter between Walsh and Brady?—A. None whatever, sir. I was going for every Government officer in the first place, and next for the contractors. I had been brought into the cases through Mr. James solely or chiefly because I had insisted upon procuring the indictment and conviction of a deputy collector in New York, a man whom I had myself recommended for appointment. I may say, however, that although he had my recommendation and that of others, he was appointed to that place chiefly because under the then existing civil service examination he passed the highest examination of any applicant for the position.

Q. Who was he?—A. I cannot think of his name at this moment. He was indicted for conspiracy and the fraudulent passing of invoices at the New York custom-house, by which the Government lost over a million of dollars.

Q. Was that the fellow that the civil service rules put in?—A. Yes, sir; but not the civil service that we have now. The reform had not got so far at that time. [Laughter.] I prosecuted him, and he was indicted, and we had a very hard trial; but he was convicted and went to State prison and served out his time. It was on the general idea that I thought it was to the interest of the Government to convict Mr. Brady first as a Government officer that I proposed to conduct the cases, and there were other Government officers also that I was looking after.

Q. Was there anything in what Walsh asserted in relation to his dealings with Brady that, if true, would have convicted Brady? Did the transaction, as stated by Walsh, involve Brady's official integrity so that the Government would be interested in prosecuting him?—A. There were certain matters that suggested things against Mr. Brady, but I do not think there was anything at that stage of the case which squarely affected his official integrity, though it is possible there may have been. Later on Mr. Walsh's memory became better and then he remembered that Mr. Brady had made a statement that Walsh must do—yes, I now remember that there was something at that date. Mr. Walsh claimed at that time that when he went to Mr. Brady to get a settlement for the money that he alleged he had advanced to him, Mr. Brady replied that he had done enough for him, Walsh, that he had got his pay as he went along, or something of that sort. Mr. Walsh said he had claimed that he had not, that it was not so; that he had made a loan of this money to Brady, but that Mr. Brady took the ground substantially that it was bribe money. That was Walsh's statement at the time. His statement, however, was intensified at a later stage of the case, and he then said that Brady at the same interview had told him that he "must do as all the other contractors did." Mr. Walsh did not make that statement, however, until a long while after this time of which we have been speaking. I think he made it first to Mr. Woodward.

Q. Was there any other testimony except Walsh's own statement as to that state of facts?—A. No, sir; there was not.

Q. So that if you had prosecuted Brady on that transaction you would have had simply Walsh's testimony with Brady contradicting it?—A. Yes, sir. I have here Mr. Walsh's statement which, if you desire, I will read.

Q. That is hardly necessary, perhaps. I will state to you the object of my inquiry and then you can perhaps make your answer without reading that statement. As I said before, considerable testimony has been put in here by Mr. Cook, and I think by Mr. Gibson, that in selecting the Dorsey case you took the most complicated case, the one in which you were least likely to succeed, and that it was not a proper one for a pioneer case. Now I simply desire to have you state whether that is the fact or not?—A. I think that in my previous examination, at a time when you were not present, I went fully into that question. As to Mr. Walsh's statement, I testified that there was a statement of what Walsh knew which had been prepared by Mr. Gibson, and that I got Walsh here and read it over to him and corrected it by striking out certain things which it turned out he was unable to testify to of his own knowledge. I have here the original statement.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If you have already testified on that point in my absence, you need not go over it again.

The WITNESS. I have stated the reasons why the Dorsey case was the best case to begin with. As to this other case I think there can be no question that Mr. Walsh did at that time make assertions which implied corruption on the part of Mr. Brady; but I regarded Walsh's statements as certain to be contradicted by Brady, and then when you came to the circumstances of the case my idea was that the record evidence as to that route was not so strong as the evidence in regard to other routes which we were investigating, and I regarded Mr. Walsh as in this position—that if the transaction was truthfully stated by him, and if Mr. Brady thought that he was in danger from Walsh's testimony, the probability was that if we took up that case Walsh would take a trip somewhere before we got to the trial and we would be left without any evidence. In other words, that he would collect from Mr. Brady the twelve or fourteen thousand dollars that he was claiming of the Government, or perhaps more, and would disappear. We would be resting in that case entirely upon a single thread, the testimony of Walsh, and for these reasons I did not think that a proper case to put ahead.

Q. You felt that you would be resting upon a single thread and you considered that it was a thread that you could not rely upon?—A. Yes, sir; I so considered, and I think that the result has shown the correctness of that view.

Now as to the Dorsey case, as I have already said, that was a case of successive orders made in favor of the same set of men, always in their favor, never declaring them failing contractors, but everything always to their advantage. We put nineteen routes into the original indictment, but we could have extended it much beyond that number.

In that case you had these repeated reiterations of orders by Mr. Brady in favor of these same parties, and that was the strength of the case. He might have been imposed upon in the first instance, or perhaps in the second, but when you found these orders coming along one after another and found these increases and everything of that sort being made regularly and continuously in favor of the same parties, I considered that we had a case which would carry conviction to every fair mind. I have got here a tabular statement which we used; and I may as well show you at this point how those routes and the orders upon them ran along. Bear in mind that Peck, Miner, and John W. Dorsey were the three original bidders, and that they were admittedly in combination. Stephen W. Dorsey was in the Senate and could not become a contractor for a year, or for about eight months after the contracts were let, but we had evidence of his having been interested from the outset, evidence that the bids were made up in his house, and evidence of his connection with the matter in various ways. These three others, Peck, Miner, and John W. Dorsey, were the bidders. After Stephen W. Dorsey went out of the Senate he promptly became directly interested in a considerable portion of the routes. That was admitted. Peck was Dorsey's brother-in-law. Miner we had reason to believe had been his business associate in Ohio, but I think that was probably an error. Now, let me take up these routes and show you how they run along. The route from Kearney to Kent was let as 125 miles long and they were to perform the service, one trip per week, in 60 hours; that is about 2.08 miles per hour. The contract price was $868 a year. Within three months after the contract took effect there was a small increase made of about $112. Then, in less than a year after the contract took effect there was an increase of $3,322, and that was made upon an affidavit which we thought was abundantly proved to have been false.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Was that last increase made after Senator Dorsey became interested?—A. This was on the route from Kearney to Kent. Stephen W. Dorsey did not become interested in all the routes of the combination. The combination had 134 routes. We put 19 of them into the indictment. Stephen W. Dorsey became interested in only certain of the routes. Certain others passed to Henry M. Vaile. The parties interested in all the routes were Peck, John W. Dorsey, Miner, and Vaile, Vaile being an old mail contractor and the only real mail contractor in the party, the others being speculators in mail contracts. The next route from Vermillion to Sioux Falls was let at \$398, and in less than a year there was something over \$5,000 added to it; so that a route which at a public letting was let for \$398, one trip a week, was run up to five trips a week, and from $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles an hour was carried up to five miles an hour, and for this difference of $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles an hour the pay was increased to \$3,680. The pay on this route was run up from \$398 to over \$6,000. On the route from Bismarck to Tongue River the original contract price was \$2,350, and the pay on that route was run up within a year to \$70,000. There was some justification for a reasonable increase on that route as Dakota was developing very rapidly and there was considerable increase of business. Then take the route from White River to Rawlins. That was originally let at \$1,700, and within a year it was run up to \$13,000 or \$14,000, within two years, to nearly \$32,000. The contract on the route from Pueblo to Rosita was let originally for \$388; within a year it was run up to \$7,700, the distance being only 49 miles. The route from Saint Charles to Greenhorn, 35 miles, was let originally for \$548, and was run up within about a year to nearly \$4,000. The route from Trinidad to Madison, 45 miles long, was originally let for \$338, and within a year was run up to over \$4,000. The route from Garland to Parrott City, 288 miles, was let originally for \$2,745, and within a year it was run up to \$13,000, and within two years to over \$31,000. The route from Saguache to Lake City was let originally for \$3,426; within a few months it was run up to \$15,000. That was the route in which Sanderson was interested, and in which he took all the money. The route from Ouray to Los Pinos was let originally for \$348, and there was never any increase. The route from Silverton to Parrott City was let for \$1,488, and within a year it was increased to \$15,000. The route from Mineral Park to Pioche was let for \$2,982, and within six months it was run up to over \$20,000, and in about a year to over \$49,000; then it was put down and then it was put up again. The route from Tres Alamos to Clifton was let for \$1,568, and within a year was run up to \$13,000, and within eighteen months it was run up to \$27,000. The route from Toquerville to Adairville was let for \$1,168, and within a year it was run up to about \$20,000. The route from Eugene City to Bridge Creek was let for \$2,468, and it was run up within a year to over \$18,000. The route from The Dalles to Baker City was let at \$8,288, and within a year it was run up to over \$60,000. The route from Canyon City to Camp McDermott was let for \$2,888; in six months it was run up to \$16,000, and within a year and a half to over \$50,000. The route from Julian to Colton was let for \$1,188 and was run up within a year to \$8,000. The route from Redding to Alturas, California, was let for \$5,988; within six months it was run up to \$30,000 and within two years to about \$40,000.

These were 19 of the routes belonging to the combination, but there were 134 routes as to which similar things were done.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were those the routes upon which the indictments were based in the Dorsey-Brady case?—A. Yes. These increases were made upon affidavits as to the number of men and horses which were being used on the routes and which would be required for the increased and expedited service; which affidavits were shown by abundant evidence to have been utterly false either in one respect or in both. Then, too, there were bogus petitions gotten up, and everything of that sort. There were all sorts of little frauds in connection with the business. They were routes as to every one of which, except the route from Bismarck to Tongue River, the parties had made sub-contracts, and the work was being done by men who were being paid very much less than the Government was paying the contractors, and in several of the cases the routes were being run and the mails carried, before these large amounts were allowed for increase of speed, by the carriers themselves, for their own convenience, at a rate as quick or even quicker than that at which the Government was undertaking to have them carried under this costly expedition. There was one case, at least, in which the sub-contractor who carried the mail carried it on the expedited time and never knew that there had been any order of expedition, but was doing the work for his original pay, although there was a provision in his contract that he was to get 40 per cent. of any increase that might be allowed, and after he came here, at the time of the trial, he began a suit to recover the money.

Now, let me show you the revenue derived from these important routes. On the route from Kearney to Kent, where the original pay was only $868, the entire amount of revenue from all the post-offices on that route was $2,348.22. Kearney was a railroad station and got a large portion of its mail revenues from other sources than this route. The other offices on the route earned in a year only $227; yet the contract price was carried up from $868 to $4,302. The original price on the route from Vermillion to Sioux Falls was carried up from $398 to $6,133. The entire receipts of offices dependent upon the route were $261.51, and after the expedition of the service the receipts fell off $20! The price on the route from Bismarck to Tongue River (where there was, however, a rapid development going on) was run up from $2,350 to $70,000. Excluding the Bismarck office, which was also on other mail routes, the entire receipts of the offices on this route, and dependent upon it, were $710.75. On the route from White River to Rawlins the pay was run up from $1,700 to $31,981. The entire amount of the receipts of all the offices on the route, including Rawlins (which was an important station on the Union Pacific road, and, therefore, not dependent upon this route) was $1,245.43, and all the offices on the route other than Rawlins produced only $79. The pay on the route from Pueblo to Rosita was run up from $388 to $8,148. Pueblo is a large town on the railroad, fed by six other routes, and the entire emoluments of the offices on this route were only $6,621, leaving only $2,179, excluding Pueblo. The pay on the route from Saint Charles to Greenborn was run up from $548 to $3,945.60. The emoluments of all the offices on the route amounted to a little over $5,500, and the emoluments of the offices dependent on the route amounted to $60. On the Mineral Park and Pioche route the original pay was $2,982, which was run up to $22,300, and afterwards to about $50,000. The emoluments of all the offices on the route were but $761, which after the expedition ran down to $597. It afterwards recovered to $653, but never got so high as it was originally. There was a regulation requiring each postmaster to state in his return how many bags of mail left his office on any given day, so that the contractor should not have a chance to cheat by taking just a day longer than the time allowed, say by carrying the mail in 48 hours instead of in 24 hours. In order to obviate that, the Department required that there should be a record to show the date of the mails leaving the offices. The postmasters on this route, in their innocence, did not suppose there could be anybody in Washington who thought that there were really bags of mail matter passing over the route; so, instead of making a return of bags, they went to work and counted the letters and papers, and they made reports showing the entire number that had passed during 70 or 80 days, and it appeared that for 39 days there did not pass a letter or a paper over that route on which the Government was paying $40,000 or $50,000 for carrying the mail.

The CHAIRMAN. For carrying the bags, you mean.

Mr. WOODWARD. I think there were two or three letters in that period, but during 20 days there were none.

Mr. BLISS. I will put into the record at this point these two tabular statements, one showing the contracts and their modifications on these nineteen routes, and the other the revenues from the post-offices on those routes:

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. You showed the state of things which you have stated here at the trial, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the jury found a verdict of acquittal?—A. The jury the first time found that M. C. Rerdell, who was the clerk of these parties, employed on a salary, was guilty, and they found that John R. Miner, one of these contractors, was guilty. They could not agree that Mr. Brady was guilty. They could not agree that John W. Dorsey, who was in the business as much as Miner was, except that he had not as large a pecuniary interest, was guilty. They could not agree that Peck, or that Vaile, who was a mail contractor, and who got away with a good deal of swag, was guilty.

Now we selected these nineteen routes of this combination as the basis of the indictments. I might have put a dozen more routes into the indictment, but I thought when I had got these nineteen I had got specimens of all these variegated frauds, but you would be amused if I should go through the record and refresh my memory and give you a little details of the different kinds of minor frauds that were connected with the business.

Then we proved also that they had sent out agents on the routes to sublet them, and we proved the statements of those agents and parties out there that there would be an increase of pay; we proved their statements that there would be an increase of pay on a given route to a certain sum within a given time, and so much within another given period; these statements being made as inducements to the subcontractors to take the subcontracts, because, under those contracts, the subcontractors were to have 40 per cent. of the increases that might be allowed. We proved also that in three successive cases the increases were made precisely according to the predictions made by these agents. We put on the stand the agents who had made the statements, we put on the stand the men who said they had made the subcontracts with that understanding, and we proved that the orders of increase were made precisely as those agents had predicted, except that in one case where the increase was promised in a year they got it in eight months.

Q. You proved all that, and yet the jury did not convict?—A. No sir; they did not convict.

Q. And Mr. Cook thinks there is nothing so high-toned as a Washington jury?—A. Except a Washington lawyer. Then as to one of those routes, let me say that it appeared in the evidence that these agents who were sent out said to one of the parties that they thought they would get the pay on that route increased up to $30,000. The man replied, "That is absurd; you can't do anything of the kind; I can carry all the mail that goes over this route in my hat." And we actually proved that in point of fact he did go over the mountain from day to day carrying the entire mail in the leg of his boot!

By Mr. HEMPHILL :

Q. How much did it cost the Government to have that mail carried—$30,000?—A. Oh, $50,000; that gave the speculators a profit of $30,000.

Q. Yet this wise Washington jury thought that was a legitimate transaction?—A. It seems so. However, I do not care to pitch into anybody. There was a distinguished judge of our court of appeals in New York who said that when a lawyer got beaten in court there was one of two courses open to him, but he had no right to adopt both. One course was to take an appeal, and the other was to go down to the tavern and abuse the court. I have my own opinion on this subject, and it will probably crop out some time what was done. But we selected these routes for the reasons I have stated. If we had taken any one of these routes and gone along with it by an indictment for conspiracy, we should never have succeeded in establishing any conspiracy, and we had to satisfy the court of the existence of a conspiracy before we could get this additional evidence in. But by taking this variegation of frauds we got the benefit of that, and we got the benefit also of Walsh's testimony as to the transactions which had been alleged in the Prescott and Santa Fé route, but the jury did not believe Mr. Walsh, either. I took the idea of prosecuting the case in this way very largely from having come fresh from a knowledge (though not as counsel) of the way in which Tweed was prosecuted and convicted in New York. They tried him on one fraudulent warrant and on another, separately, and could never accomplish anything, but when they went into court with an indictment based on a combination of, I think, eighty-nine of these fraudulent warrants, the proof became overwhelming and carried absolute conviction to the minds of the jury.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. Did Mr. Cook or Mr. Gibson protest against your taking up this Dorsey case?—A. Not in the least. They encouraged it. They produced it at Elberon as the case that was to be taken up next after the Prescott and Santa Fé route. My letter of the 1st of October, addressed to Colonel Cook, which I have put into your record, relates to this Dorsey combination, and the papers that Colonel Cook was himself calling for related to that case. As late as December 21, 1881, he wrote to Mr. Woodward, for the reports upon the Dorsey case. There never was an intimation from the beginning to the end of Mr. Cook's connection with the cases that he had any question in his mind as to proceeding with the Dorsey routes, until in his letter of resignation he said, "Whether the strongest routes have been selected remains to be seen." There never was a dissent on the part of anybody. Colonel Cook and Mr. Gibson did want the Prescott and Santa Fé case to go ahead, and I did not want that case to ahead. There was a transaction at one time which looked very much like an attempt on the part of Colonel Cook and Mr. Gibson to use the Department as a means of pushing things along to a certain point, but I take all the responsibility and, as I think, all the glory of the selection of the Dorsey case as a greatly stronger case than any of the others.

Mr. Gibson comes here and tells you that he wanted the Santa Fé and Corpus Christi case, among others, to be followed up. Now, let us see what that case was.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Before you proceed with that, let me ask you what was the evidence adduced in the trial which connected ex-Senator Dorsey with this combination?—A. Ex-Senator Dorsey was admittedly interested in the contracts—he became interested within a month after he went out of the Senate.

Q. Was that admitted by him?—A. Yes, sir; certainly.

Q. To what extent was he interested?—A. He owned them all, except what went to Vaile. Vaile and he divided up. Vaile and Miner went together, taking part, and Stephen W. Dorsey took the rest.

Q. Was that the arrangement as to the whole of these nineteen routes?—A. Oh, yes; and it extended away beyond them. The bids, in the first place, were all prepared at the house of Stephen W. Dorsey while he was Senator, and he furnished the bondsmen to a considerable extent.

Q. Who were the bondsmen?—A. D. W. C. Wheeler was one. There was a variety of bondsmen, some good and some not good. S. M. Hoyt was one. Those were on the bids.

Q. Were any of those bondsmen unreliable parties?—A. Mr. Wheeler subsequently, and not very long subsequently, became bankrupt, but I think at the time he became a bondsman he was considered good, and I think he so considered himself. Mr. Hoyt was not so, I think.

Q. Was Mr. Wheeler on all the bids?—A. I think not; but, about the bonds, I am liable to get a little mixed, because I know there were bondsmen on the bids and bondsmen on the contracts.

Q. I am speaking about the bondsmen on whom the Government could have recourse in case of the failure of the contractors.—A. Both the bondsmen on the bids and the bondsmen on the contracts would probably be liable, although that is a matter as to which there is some dispute. Ordinarily, when the Department seeks to hold anybody, I think it proceeds upon the bond given upon the bid.

Q. Was there any evidence on the trial as to the character of the bondsmen?—A. No, sir; we did not go into that. In addition to what I have stated there was evidence connecting Dorsey with the getting up of the bids at his house. Mr. Dorsey also furnished the money which started people out there to go over the routes and get up petitions to have the service put on.

Q. To find good places to have expedition?—A. Not exactly; he claimed that he was making loans to those parties. Mr. Dorsey was, I believe, really concerned in the matter right along while he was in the Senate. The business was done with a boldness which might be regarded as, to some extent, implying innocence. Letters were written on United States Senate paper, and statements were made by these agents who were sent out that Senator Dorsey was interested. For instance, when some of the parties out there said, "You cannot get any expedition on this route," the answer was made, "Oh, you never had a contractor before who was in the United States Senate." There was a great mass of evidence in detail which we thought showed clearly Senator Dorsey's connection with the business while he was in the Senate. It was claimed that he had no formal connection with the business, but that he was helping relatives and friends, and he certainly did lots of things that were very obliging.

Now, it has been claimed that among the routes that we ought to have proceeded with was that from San Antonio to Corpus Christi. That is the route in connection with which Mr. Kellogg comes into the matter. The details of that route appear in the document containing the inspector's reports, which you have called for, on page 146. The route was 148 miles long. The original bid was $2,733 for two trips a week, on 40 hours time. On the 26th of August, 1878, before service actually commenced—because on that route the service was not commenced on July 1st, the ordinary time of commencing service—on the 26th of August, before the service was actually commenced, the pay was increased to $8,199. On the 1st of August, 1879, a year later, the time was decreased from 40 to 29½ hours, and in consideration of that $20,204 was allowed; making the total pay $28,403 on a contract on which the original bid was $2,733. Then there was a subcontract to a man named Ellis, which was subsequently rescinded and a new contract made, by which he got only $12,750, but that was subsequently increased to $15,500. I think that gives you, in brief, the history of the case. In that case the affidavit was false, in the sense that the increase of service required in fact no increase of men or animals, because for local reasons, for the business of carrying passengers, they were using just as many men and horses before the increase as afterwards. That is the history of that route from San Antonio to Corpus Christi as it appeared before us at that time. Mr. Gibson says that we ought to have taken up that route. Now, a year or more subsequent to that time we did get an indictment upon that route; and Mr. Price, there being a twist around him, came forward and gave us some evidence which made our case a much stronger one, but I am treating it now from the point of view from which we regarded it at the time when we came in and had to select the cases with which we should proceed, and I have stated all the evidence we had at that time. We could not get this Mr. Ellis, who is spoken of as the subcontractor there, and who the inspectors said they thought could give us considerable evidence. Finally, we did find Ellis out in the interior of Texas on a cattle ranch somewhere, and we sent for him and brought him here, and had a post-office inspector come with him for fear he should get away. He did give us some evidence in the case, but until we got Ellis we could not have got any indictment, and when we did get his evidence we got an indictment by the same grand jury that indicted in the Dorsey case.

The route from Phoenix to Prescott was let as 140 miles long, a trip once a week, on 106 hours' time; price, $680. On the 2d of December, 1878, there was an increase to two trips, the time was reduced to forty-eight hours, and the pay was increased $8,170, the increase being made in gross violation of law. There was only one intermediate office on that route, and there was an entirely different route on which there was mail service, I think, six days in the week between Phoenix and Prescott. On the 11th of June, 1879, four trips were added, and $11,800 additional pay was allowed, and the time was reduced to thirty-two hours, and $11,990 was allowed for expedition. So that this route which was originally let for $680 a year was thus run up to over $32,000. There was at that time daily mail service by the other route. This route being, in fact, only 104 miles long, there was paid $27,880.32 to get a slight gain in speed. The speed at which the service was let was 1.08 miles an hour. You could not walk a horse so slowly as that. Then the speed was increased to 3.25 miles per hour, and it would be pretty difficult for a horse to walk, even as slowly as that; yet for that increase of speed there was paid $27,880.

I have here a memorandum made by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General as to that route, without any suggestion from me or anything of the kind. After stating the case, he goes into the matter and figures it out, and he says:

The original schedule of ninety-six hours required a departure from each terminus on every Wednesday at 6 a. m. Therefore to comply with the schedule would require at least two carriers instead of one, as given in the oath.

The affidavit of increase was based upon the idea that there was only one carrier originally employed. The second assistant goes into a calculation on this point and he shows that, on the face of the thing, the affidavits on which increase was allowed could not by any possibility have been true, and then he makes this recapitulation:

Allowance in first part of order No. 5270	$11,800 00
Deduct that portion allowed for four additional trips.....	2,720 00
Overpayment	9,080 00

Allowance in first part of order No. 5270	$11,990 32
Deduct proper allowance on the basis of $4,760 per annum for seven times a week service	2,763 87
Overpayment	9,226 45
Total overpayment per annum	18,306 45

The overpayment per annum by order No. 10520 was $6,810 from December 16, 1876, to June 15, 1870.

Thus it appears that the total overpayment was over $18,000, and the committee will remember that that service started at $680 per annum.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who were the contractors?—A. A man named Griffith, a stage-driver for Kerens—the Kerens combination.

Now, Mr. Gibson says the San Antonio and Corpus Christi route, to which I have called attention, ought to have been taken up and pushed along. I have here the “opinion” of Mr. Gibson, in which he says as to the Phoenix and Prescott route, of which I have just been speaking:

There is no proof of fraud in this case. There are suspicious circumstances, such as the advertisement of the route as 140 miles long, while in reality it is only 108 miles, and the bid of $680 and the subsequent raising to $32,640; but, in the first instance—the advertisement of the distance as greater than it really is—the contractor cannot be held responsible for the laches of the Post-Office Department; and, in the second place, while the enormous increase of price is suspicious, still the Department cannot base its action upon mere suspicion. There must be absolute proof of fraud, either in obtaining the increase or in performing the service after the increase has been obtained. In this case there is, as remarked above, no proof whatever of fraud. The service is, according to all the evidence, capitally performed, the contractor employing first-class stock and equipments, and making faster time by several hours than the terms of his contract calls for. The necessity of the present schedule time is admitted by all who speak or testify in regard to this route. There have been large reductions already made in the service leading to and from Prescott, and I don't believe the Department would be justified, either by the evidence or public policy, in making any change in this route. Inspector Sharpe does not recommend that the old schedule be restored, but, on the contrary, says it would be unwise to do so. The schedule cannot legally be changed unless proof of fraud is clear and positive. There can be no half-way work; it must be either left where it is or put back to the original schedule. The latter, in my judgment, as before stated, would be illegal, and, of course, unwise public policy.

J. H. R.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. What did you do in regard to that route?—A. Mr. Woodward having heard, in a way that he will explain to you, that there had been an undertaking on Gibson's part to protect the contractor on that route, went to the papers to see if there was any deviltry there, and he came down to me with those papers of which I had already spoken, and, as I told you, if I had had any confidence in Mr. A. M. Gibson, special counsel, before, it disappeared from that time. What I did was this: This knowledge came to us in December or January, when we were in the midst of the Dorsey case. I wrote a letter to the Postmaster-General, in which I insisted that he should stop the pay of Griffith on that route, and the Department is now holding on to $25,000 or $30,000 which would have been obtained by the contractor if we had not interfered; and as to the letter which I wrote on that occasion, I am credibly informed that any man who has sufficient influence to get that letter withdrawn can have $5,000 for doing it.

Q. Who is interested in having it withdrawn?—A. Mr. William M. Griffith, the contractor, who was a stage-driver for Kerens.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The withdrawal of your letter would imply the payment of the contractor, would it?—A. Well, I suppose they think that if that letter is out of the way there will be one obstacle out of the way. This memorandum, from which I have read an extract, was prepared in connection with the recommendation of Judge Gresham that a suit should be commenced to recover from the contractor upon that route, not only the money that has been stopped, but an additional amount, the overpayments already made.

Q. What is the nature of your information as to the opinion of those parties as to the desirability of having that letter withdrawn?—A. Simply that a gentleman came to me and asked me about the letter, and finally said that if he could get the letter withdrawn he could get $5,000.

Q. What is that gentleman's name?—A. I do not think I have any right to give you the name.

Q. Was he attorney for the contractor?—A. I presume he was; I do not know.

Q. What reason did he assign?—A. Simply that he thought that if that letter was out of the way they could get their pay. I did not know but what I might be like the Vicksburgh quartermaster who asked to be recalled, and when the authorities did not recall him he asked again to be recalled. Finally they asked to be informed why he wanted to be recalled, and he said he did not know how much temptation he could stand; that certain parties had offered him $20,000, and if they should make it $25,000 he was not certain but he might accept it. [Laughter.] The result in this case was that I went to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General and told him that if that letter of mine was ever withdrawn he might conclude that somebody had made $5,000 out of the withdrawal.

Q. Did you understand that what this gentleman said was an offer of $5,000 to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. To whom, then?—A. The offer was to this gentleman himself, to induce him to get the letter withdrawn.

Q. You did not understand that the offer was to pay you $5,000?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who was to get it?—A. This gentleman who told me about it; he was a lawyer; he came to press me about it; I told him I could not do anything about it, and finally I asked, "What difference does it make to you?" And then he said, "Well, if I could get that letter removed I could make $5,000."

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. He simply wanted you to facilitate a prosperous transaction on his part?—A. Yes, sir; I had already refused, and he had given the thing up. I had told him that I could not do anything about it, and then I turned upon him and asked him why he was interested, and he said what I have stated.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. He wanted you to do him an act of kindness?—A. Well, he did not say anything about that at all after I told him I would not do it.

Now, I have given you a statement of the case of these two routes, one of which Mr. Gibson says ought to have been prosecuted immediately, and as to the other of which he reported that there was no evidence of fraud.

Q. Is this Phoenix and Prescott route the one where you say the speed was expedited from one mile and a fraction to three miles and a fraction, leaving it still below the minimum of the rates of an ordinary horse's walk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does the report state something about the speed?—A. No, sir; I think the report simply states that the contractor is doing the service at a higher rate of speed than is called for. The route from Phoenix to Prescott had developed a good deal, and the stages were going through and carrying the mail at a faster rate than the contract required. On the subsequent reletting the price, though the route was extended 16 or 18 miles further south, it was relet for $6,000 or $8,000 by public bidding.

Mr. Gibson, in his capacity as a lawyer, stated here that productiveness had nothing to do with the question of price; that the law about productiveness was an old law dating away back, and had been repealed. The difficulty about that is that Judge Wylie differed with Mr. Gibson on that point, and ruled in that evidence as to productiveness, and there is one stage in the case where you will find in the record about 20 pages of tabular matter put in solely as to productiveness, after elaborate argument by counsel.

Q. So that productiveness did have something to do with it?—A. Yes.

There is one other thing that I want to say. I want to call attention to the fact that Mr. Cook states that Mr. Cole, who got that $4,000 from Dorsey, was his (Cook's) partner only in civil cases, and that he had nothing to do with criminal cases, yet Mr. Cook, on page 115 of your record, expressly testifies that Mr. Cole had access to the safe in which he says were the copies of our papers. Of course I do not mean to say that Mr. Cole ever saw them; I presume he did not; but Mr. Cook says that Mr. Cole had access to that safe.

One other thing I ought to say. There has been some reference made to the fact that Mr. John L. French was included in the information, and that his name does not appear subsequently in any of the indictments. When we went before the grand jury in the Dorsey case we included Mr. French among the persons we were endeavoring to have indicted, and the grand jury declined to indict French, and I must say that I do not think that was unjustifiable action on their part. Mr. French carried out many of the orders of Brady, and made orders in pursuance of Brady's directions, but I am bound to say that while it was evidence that would have justified the indictment of Mr. French, at the same time all that we showed him to have done was consistent with the conduct of a subordinate carrying out, in good faith, the orders of his superior. I mention that because the disappearance of the name of Mr. French from the indictment has attracted attention, and ought to be explained.

One other thing, and then I have done, so far as regards these details. It was stated by Mr. Cook twice over that the bogus bond cases in the police court might have been disposed of very quickly, and that they were finally disposed of in my absence. The records of the police court are not very full, but the records of the press show that the complaints were filed on the 7th of January; that on the 11th of January Mr. Bliss and Mr. Cook appeared and represented the Government, Mr. Bliss making the opening; that Mr. Tidball and Mr. Woodward were examined (the examination, I should say, was begun each day after Judge Snell had got through with his current business); that on the 11th of January Mr. Bliss and Mr. Cook were present; that on the 13th Mr. Bliss and Mr. Cook were present, and that there was argument and the examination of witnesses; that on the 17th Mr. Bliss and Mr. Cook and Mr. Gibson were present, and that on the 19th witnesses failed; that on the 20th Mr. Bliss and Mr. Gibson were present, and Mr. Gibson testified; that on the 24th there was a further hearing, Mr. Cook and Mr. Gibson being the only persons mentioned as present to represent the Government, and, without looking the matter up, I presume that is true, and that it was on a Monday, before I had got back from New York; that on the 25th Mr. Bliss was present for the Government; that on the 26th Mr. Bliss was present; that on the 27th Mr. Bliss was present; that on the 31st Mr. Bliss was present; that on February 1 Mr. Bliss and Mr. Cook were present; that on the 27th the defense opened; that on the 2d of February Mr. Bliss and Mr. Cook were present, and that on the 3d of February there was argument; that on the 7th of February Mr. Cook and Mr. Gibson represented the Government; that on the 9th of February the case was continued until the 14th on account of a death in the family of Colonel Bliss; that on February 14 Mr. Bliss, Mr. Cook, and Mr. Gibson appeared for the Government, and, after consultation, the hearing was adjourned; that on February 15 Mr. Bliss opened the argument, followed by Mr. Hine and Mr. Totten for the defense; that on February 16 there was additional argument, and the decision of Judge Snell that there was sufficient evidence to hold the defendants for the grand jury. Now, whether I was present or not on the 16th, when Judge Snell gave his decision, I cannot say, but you see that the record shows that I made an argument on the 15th; that I was followed by counsel on the other side, and that on the next day the defendants were held by the judge. I think, therefore, that this record disposes of the intimation of Mr. Cook and Mr. Gibson that, I being absent, they took advantage of my absence to shorten things up, and get the case disposed of.

Mr. Cook testifies that in the fall of 1881 he had an interview in New York with Mr. Price, who told him that he did not know anything wrong about this route, which Mr. Gibson says we ought to have taken up and proceeded upon at that time, and he lugs in the information which we obtained from Price a year later, after Cook & Co. had gone out of the case, and assigns that as a reason why we ought to have proceeded with the case a year earlier, although by Mr. Cook's own testimony he had been told by Mr. Price that he had no knowledge of anything wrong about it.

One other thing. It may have been inferred from my testimony when I was before the committee the last time, that Mr. Bosler's clerk was present at the time the books were examined. There was a gentleman present when Mr. Bosler first brought the books there, but, not having his check-book, there was no examination made that amounted to anything, and subsequently, when he did bring the books, there was nobody present. When I speak of this gentleman, Mr. Bosler's clerk, that is rather an assumption of mine than anything else. I do not remember just who the man was or what his position was.

It has been claimed before you that my employment in the star-route cases was of a political nature on account of my relation to General Arthur. I think that the letters written by me to Mr. James, which I have produced here, are perhaps sufficient to dispose of that proposition, but it is probably not improper for me in this connection to go into a little personal history. I had known General Garfield for a good while, and I had charge of the investigation in New York consequent upon the publication of the Morey letter, in which we did some pretty sharp work in the courts just before the election. I was in constant correspondence with General Garfield in connection with that matter, and he was exceedingly grateful to me, and I received a most flattering letter from him upon that subject. General Garfield twice in March and April, or April and May, authorized the offer to me of the position of United States district attorney at New York. The first time the offer did not reach me, owing to some complications which arose here. The second time the offer did reach me and the position was declined. Now, consequent upon the publication of my testimony in this matter the other day there called upon me in New York Mr. Henry E. Knox, who was General Garfield's intimate friend at college, and, I think, his chum. Mr. Knox stated to me, what I had never known before, that early in April of that year he saw President Garfield and told him that from what he learned of these star-route cases, there was a bigger job on hand than he might suppose, and he thought it was necessary to have some other counsel in the cases than the people who were engaged—that he did not think they were the right men. He says that President Garfield asked him whom he would suggest, and that he (Mr. Knox) replied that he would suggest me. General Garfield concurred, and asked Mr. Knox to go to Mr. James and say so to him. This I never knew anything about, as I have said, until the information reached me through the publication of my testimony the other day; but I do know that Mr. James spoke to me about the matter early in July in a casual way, and that prior to that, as early, certainly, as May, Mr. Knox, when I met him on the cars, asked me if I had heard anything from Mr. James about the star-route cases. I told him I had not, and he did not pursue the subject. As Mr. James had been here already, and I did not think the matter of sufficient importance to justify bringing him back, I wrote him a letter, reciting what Mr. Knox had said, and asking Mr. James if he had any recollection on the subject, and in reply I have received from him this morning the following letter:

[Lincoln National Bank, East Forty-second street, opposite Grand Central depot, Thos. L. James, president, A. Van Santvoord, vice-president, J. H. B. Edgar, cashier.]

NEW YORK, March 31, 1884.

DEAR SIR: Referring to yours of the 28th, reciting the fact that Henry E. Knox, esq., of this city, in a conversation with President Garfield, which took place early in 1881, suggested your name as that of a proper person to take charge of the star route cases; that the President concurred, and that Mr. Knox communicated with me to this effect, I have to say that this is my recollection of what transpired.

Very truly yours,

THOS. L. JAMES.

The Honorable GEORGE BLISS.

Without concluding the examination of the witness, the committee adjourned.

WASHINGTON, April 2, 1884.

GEORGE BLISS recalled and further examined:

Mr. Chairman, I was interrupted yesterday when I was about to make a statement as to one of these tables I have presented here, and I desire simply to say that this table of revenues shows the following results on nineteen routes which were included in the Dorsey indictment. The original pay of the contractors on all those routes was $41,135 a year. It was increased so that it became $448,670.90. The revenues received at all the offices on all those routes, whether dependent upon the route solely or upon other routes also, amounted in the first year to $41,654.44; in the second year to $54,942.14; and in the third year to $68,595.88. The revenues from offices dependent solely upon the routes amounted in the first year to $10,297.68; in the second year to $13,168.29; and in the third year to $11,622.36—actually diminishing during the third year.

I referred yesterday to a letter addressed by myself to the Attorney-General, and transmitted by the Attorney-General to Mr. Cook, calling for papers. I was unable to lay my hand upon a copy of the letter yesterday, but I have it here now. It is dated at the Post-Office Department, where my office then was, March 24, 1882, and is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 24, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I hand you herewith copies of two letters from myself to Col. W. A. Cook, late special assistant attorney, and his reply to the first one of these letters. No reply has been received to the last one.

As Colonel Cook's relations to the Government in the star-route cases have ceased, I beg to suggest that he should be called upon to surrender all papers which he has relating to the cases, or which he received by reason of his former relations as counsel, and to state whether any copies have been made while they were in his possession, or to his knowledge, and that, if so, he return or account for the copies also.

As to the special papers referred to in my letter to Colonel Cook, there can be no doubt that they were in his possession. I believe they still are so, unless he has parted with them to some person not representing the Government. I have some reason to believe copies have been made of some papers belonging to the Government, but whether these are included or not I am unable to say.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS,
Special United States Attorne

HON. BENJ. HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. What were those special papers that you referred to there?—A. I testified about that yesterday. They were the abstracts that Mr. Woodward had made up. In what I said in reference to the discharge of the detectives, I referred to a letter of the Attorney-General on the subject. I have the original letter here, and will read it:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, January 14, 1882.

GENTLEMEN: As I have before said to you verbally, I now write to say that I desire that the expenses of prosecuting the star-route cases must be kept within restraint, and I desire that all extra outlays hereafter will be first submitted to me, and all that have been engaged in extra services may now be reported to me, so that I may know what has been done and is now doing in such extra service, and so that if I think them no longer required I may say so.

I am truly, &c.,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

To Messrs. BLISS & COOK,
For U. S.

Going back to the discharge of Mr. Gibson, I have come across a letter from the Attorney-General, which shows that my recollection was correct, and that Mr. Gibson's was not. It is dated February 2, 1882, and is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 2, 1882.

MY DEAR COLONEL BLISS: Now, when Mr. Gibson's account is to be paid, I wish to talk with you about his further retention, and what it will be proper to detail him to do. Pray see me about that before you leave for the week.

Truly, yours,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER.

When I first came into the cases there were certain reports current that there had been assurances of immunity given to different persons. My letter to Mr. James, which I have already put in here, refers to that matter; but I also heard other reports about it, and I addressed a letter to the Attorney-General, saying that I wished to know whether anything of that kind had been done. In reply I received a letter from Acting Attorney-General Phillips, which also I will read:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, December 1, 1881.

DEAR SIR: The chief clerk of this Department tells me that there is no arrangement of the sort you mention, i. e., that certain of the parties indicted or charged or otherwise concerned in these star-route matters shall, upon paying up what they owe in the civil cases against them, receive favor in the criminal cases that are now or may hereafter be pending against them. I know of no such arrangement, and have heard of none such. I will communicate your letter (copy) to Mr. Valentine with this reply. I make my reply broad enough to cover all cases of this class everywhere.

Very respectfully,

Acting Attorney-General.

Col. GEORGE BLISS,
The Arlington, City.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as a final reply to your original question as to what was done in the star-route cases, it may be well to give you a statement of the proceedings that were commenced. Besides the case against Dorsey, and the indictment found in June against Price and Brady, upon the routes from Monroe to Shreveport and from San Antonio to Corpus Christi, an indictment was found in the same month against Brady and George Meserole for conspiracy, the alleged fraud being perpetrated on the route from Gardner to Rosita; and also a second indictment against Meserole alone upon that route. Then there was an indictment against Brady and A. H. Brown for conspiracy, in connection with the route from Monument to River Bend. Then there were indictments against Price, and Brady, and Kellogg, which have been already referred to. Besides that there were six indictments against Lilley and two against Brott, which have been already referred to; one against John N. Minnix for perjury; one against C. H. Dickson for perjury; two against John W. Dorsey for perjury; one against John R. Miner for perjury; one against Kate M. Armstrong, James W. Donohue, William W. Jackson, A. E. Boone, and S. G. Cabell for conspiracy, the indictment being subsequently quashed as to Miss Armstrong; one against J. B. Henderson, Donohue, Jackson, Cabell, and Boone for conspiracy; one against W. W. Jackson for perjury; one against Donohue for perjury; one against Cabell for subornation of perjury; one against W. S. Barringer, A. E. Boone, and A. O. Buck for conspiracy; one against Boone and E. J. Sweet for same; one against Buck, Barringer, and Boone for same; one against Kate M. Armstrong for perjury (which was quashed); one against Meserole and Brady for conspiracy; one against Price and Brady for conspiracy; one against Brady for receiving a bribe; one against Kellogg, and one against Kellogg and Brady for conspiracy. Besides these, there were subsequently three other indictments found, of which I have no memorandum here. They were found after all these others, and on a subsequent set of bids. There came up from Mobile and its vicinity (I mention this because it may be of interest to you in connection with some other proceedings), there came up from Mobile two parties who had become sureties on bonds given on bids, and they were indicted for perjury and suborna-tion of perjury. The facts were that within a month or so previous to the time of their going on these bonds, based on lands which they said were worth $200,000 or $300,000, one of these very men had been before the tax commissioners down there, and had sworn that the same lands were not worth over $15,000 or $16,000, and had got the valuation put down to that amount; and as to another there had been substantially the same proceeding. There was the record evidence that the land on which those men undertook to qualify as bondsmen had, by their own statement within a very short time previous, been valued at very much less. One of those gentlemen was, and I think still is, a United States commissioner.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Who drew those indictments?—A. My impression is that most of those indictments I drew. I think Mr. Ker drew nine of them. I think he drew those later ones against these Mobile parties, but whether the earlier ones against the bondsmen were drawn by him or not I cannot say. I know I drew some of them, and my impression is that I drew these, but I would not be certain.

Q. Were those cases prosecuted to conviction?—A. No, sir; as to the cases in which Boone was a party, he was used as a witness on the second trial of the Dorsey case, and that of course involved the necessity of nolleing as to Boone. As to the other defendants in those cases, the ground was taken that Boone having been relieved the others ought not to be proceeded against. That view I did not concur in. As to the Mobile indictments, I was and have been very strenuous in insisting that they should be proceeded with, but I have been overruled.

Q. Are they still pending?—A. They are still pending.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who has overruled you?—A. The Attorney-General.

Q. Upon what ground?—A. Well, not upon the ground that those cases should not be proceeded with, but on the ground that he did not want anything more done at present. This was after the last star-route trial. If you wish to know my opinion about it, the fact is that you gentlemen, or some gentlemen, had begun making considerable talk about expenses and so on, and I think the Attorney-General wanted to cry a halt on those; at any rate, that was my view.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. What reasons did he give?—A. The Attorney-General simply said to me that he did not think it was desirable to proceed with any of those cases at that time.

Q. Did he give any reasons?—A. No, he did not. I ought to say, perhaps, that I think Mr. Merrick concurred with him. I think Mr. Merrick said that after the end of the Dorsey case, and with the Kellogg case in the condition in which it was, he did not think it was advisable to go on and try any cases of such minor importance as he thought these cases were.

Q. Then these reasons which you are giving here are a mere speculation of your own?—A. What?

Q. That we gentlemen, or some gentlemen, were crying out about the expense, and that therefore the Attorney-General wanted to halt?—A. Not entirely a speculation of my own.

Q. What do you base it on?—A. Not entirely a speculation of my own, because, while I would not undertake to say that at the time these indictments were spoken of the Attorney-General said anything about the expense, he had at or about that time said to me that he desired that no further expense should be incurred, but that the matter should remain in abeyance for the present.

Q. But you went on to give his reasons, and you said it was because somebody was crying out about the expenses, and you thought that influenced the Attorney-General.—A. Precisely.

Q. Now, I want to know upon what that opinion of yours was based?—A. I said that because the Attorney-General and I had spoken upon that very subject.

Q. What did the Attorney-General say about it?—A. He said in general terms that there was getting to be a good deal of talk about the expenses of the trials of these star-route cases, and that he desired that no further expense should be incurred.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Was there any want of evidence?—A. In the Mobile cases—no, sir; I regard the Mobile cases as absolutely certain.

Q. Were the witnesses accessible?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the only reason, so far as you know, for suspending the prosecutions was that to proceed would incur expense?—A. That it would incur expense was one reason, and then, too, the Attorney-General desired to stop and consider the whole subject of these cases.

Q. Were those expenses that would be incurred by going on the expenses incident to the procuring of witnesses and the ordinary routine of court business, or did the Attorney-General refer to the counsel fees?—A. I think the counsel fees were the most influential element in the matter. That is my judgment.

Q. Was there any suggestion that the funds for that purpose were exhausted or about to be exhausted?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then funds for that purpose were available?—A. Nothing was said about that.

By Mr. FYAN :

Q. What counsel fees did the Attorney-General complain of?—A. No complaint was made about any counsel fees.

Q. Were your fees going on?—A. My fees would have gone on, sir, if those cases had been tried.

Q. Have your fees increased or diminished in any degree from the failure to prosecute those cases?—A. Well, probably they have decreased in the sense——

Q. (Interposing.) You are charging less now?—A. I am not charging anything now.

Q. Do you intend to charge anything less on account of the Government not going on with these cases?—A. No, sir: my charge is precisely this: If I am taken away from my office I charge $100 a day.

Q. That is not the question now. I understand you to say that the Attorney-General complained of the expenses, and now I want to know whether you are going to charge any less on account of the non-prosecution of these cases?—A. Of course, because I do not render any service now.

Q. You are still counsel for the Government?—A. I am not; but even if I were still counsel for the Government, I would not be charging anything, because, you understand, I get paid only for the time I am employed. I do not get paid straight along.

Q. When did your relation as counsel for the Government cease?—

A. Practically, I should think, early in January. I have been called upon to do some things since that time, perhaps down to the 1st of February, but nothing for which I have made any charge or expect to make any charge, and my relations to the Department formally ceased last week.

Q. When was this conversation with the Attorney-General of which you have spoken?—A. That was away back last summer.

Q. And you continued in the Government service from that time down to the 1st of February?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From that time down to the 1st of February were your charges any greater or any less because of these cases not being prosecuted?—

A. They were not affected by them in any manner.

Q. Then the Attorney-General was not alluding to your charges?—

A. Not, except in this way: I suppose he assumed that if the cases were tried I should be employed to try them, and if I was employed to try them I would have to be paid.

Q. Do you think you were one of the attorneys he was talking about?—A. I think I was one of them in those cases.

Q. But still you say the failure to proceed with those cases did not diminish your charges?—A. Only indirectly, by the fact that I was not employed.

Q. But still you were employed up to the 1st of February last, and made charges?—A. I made charges only when I did anything for the Government. I think that from November down to February I made charges for absence from my office only for six or eight days. One of those occasions was the Spencer case, and the other the Kellogg case. On both those occasions I came here in response to a peremptory order from the Attorney General, and against my own protest.

Q. State whether the unfavorable result in the prosecution of the Dorsey case and the impression that the atmosphere of Washington was not favorable to the trial of any case successfully for the Government was not a consideration in the Attorney-General's mind.—A. It may have been in the Attorney-General's mind, but it was not the subject of conversation. The fact about the matter was this: I left here after the close of the last trial of the Dorsey case, which must have been in June, and I was brought back here for a motion in the Kellogg case on the 30th of June. When I left here I took with me a carefully prepared memorandum of all the pending cases for the purpose of considering while I was away during the summer, in the light of all we had learned in the Dorsey cases and the others, which of these pending indictments ought fairly to be proceeded with, and which I thought there was hope of our maintaining in court by conviction. I have said in the summer, but it must have been in September or October. It was the first time that I came back and saw the Attorney-General after the summer vacation that this conversation occurred in which I recommended proceeding with those Mobile cases. I suggested also at that time, as bearing upon the question of my compensation, that it was not at all necessary that I should come here to try those cases; that I thought other counsel could be employed and "loaded up" to try them; that they were simple cases, and that there were probably local counsel who could be employed in them and who would work for less pay than I would. That was the connection in which this conversation occurred. I think the Attorney-General at that time desired to look over the whole field in connection with these star-route cases, to see what should be done with reference to all the proceedings pending, and he expressed the desire that they should be stopped right where they were; and they have been stopped except as adverse motions have been made on the other side and several motions in the case of Mr. Spencer.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. And the recent effort to set down the Kellogg case for trial?—A. That was an adverse motion on the other side.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Fix the date when the Government resolved not to prosecute those Mobile cases?—A. Well, sir, I cannot say that the Government ever resolved not to prosecute the cases.

Q. Well, to suspend their prosecution?—A. I should think the conversation I have stated must have occurred in October last. It would seem so to me now, because I do not think I was here in the fall so as to see the Attorney-General until October.

I started at one point in my examination to say something in reference to Mr. Merrick's coming into the star-route cases. All that I have to say about that is that when Colonel Cook went out the Attorney-General spoke to me on the subject of employing Mr. Merrick. He said he had had a conversation with Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, and that he proposed to employ, or was thinking of employing, Mr. Merrick. I think the Attorney-General had a little idea that perhaps I might want to be left in charge of the cases—there seemed to be something in his manner that implied that—at all events, he expressed very great gratification when I said that it would suit me entirely to have Mr. Merrick come into the cases; that I did not know Mr. Merrick, but from what I had heard of his standing at the bar I would be very glad to have him employed. The Attorney-General gave me a letter to Mr. Merrick and I went down and saw him and went over the cases with him as far as I could, and subsequently Mr. Merrick assented to being employed.

Q. The first time that you had any intimation that it was the intention of Attorney-General Brewster to suspend the prosecution of these cases was in this conversation that you have related which came up about prosecuting those Mobile cases?—A. Yes, sir; if that was a conversation of the nature you describe—an expression of an intention to “suspend the cases.” The Attorney-General expressed an intention to stop right there, so as to enable him to look over the whole ground.

Q. You wanted to prosecute those cases?—A. I wanted to have the Mobile cases prosecuted.

Q. Had the Government lost any money by those men?—A. As to those particular Mobile cases, I cannot say whether the Government had lost or not on those bonds. Those parties were bondsmen for Boone, and he had, on some of his contracts, become a failing contractor, and the Government had lost some $18,000 or $20,000 by his failure; but whether that failure related to the particular contracts upon which those men were bondsmen or not, I cannot tell you.

Q. How much did you charge for examining those cases?—A. I don't remember that I made any specific charge for those cases. I charged for the days covering whatever service I rendered.

Q. Can you approximate the amount which the examination of those cases by you cost; did it cost as much as $5,000?—A. No, sir; not so much as $500, or $200. Those cases were examined on days when I was here in connection with other cases, and when I should have been charging the Government just the same without reference to those particular cases. As I was here upon other business, I do not think that practically the examination of those cases added a dollar to the expenses, so far as my fees were concerned. Of course, the cases did add to the expenses, on account of bringing witnesses from Mobile, and such things.

Q. The Attorney-General, then, did not allude to your charges when he spoke of the expense in connection with those cases; I mean in the conversation that he had with you on the subject?—A. He did not. I have stated the whole conversation as I recollect it, and he did not make any such allusion, further than as I have already stated.

Q. Did the suspension of prosecutions spoken of in the conversation which you have mentioned relate to discontinuing efforts to procure indictments in other cases?—A. No, sir; nothing was said about that.

Q. In your former examination you spoke of certain briefs of evidence that were used in the efforts to procure indictments against the Parkers and Salisburys; and I desire to call your attention to brief A, which you put in evidence, and which appears on page 173 of our printed record. That brief is as follows:

A.

Vinita to Las Vegas. Route 32021, 725 miles. Once a week. Ten days. Virgil W. Parker. $6,330.

Sept. 27th, 1878. Hayes, Tascosa, and Wheeler were added.

(On the margin:) By another order 12 miles were added, and 535.77 for Seven Oaks, though it was directly on the route.

Of these offices, Hays cannot be found, Wheeler was discontinued. Wheeler and Tascosa were directly on the line, yet they were ordered to add 85 miles to the route, and $842.38 was added for that. This was before expedition and increased service. By expedition and increased service the cost of these paper miles was greatly increased.

Dec. 1st, 1878. Two trips were added and $12,000 allowed. This order, and that adding Tascosa, etc., were modified so as to allow together $23,573.79.

Nov. 16th, 1878. J. W. Parker became subcontractor at full pay.

Jan. 1st, 1879. Time was reduced to 7 days, and $31,846.31 allowed. This brought the total pay at that time up to $50,836.31.

Jan. 12th, 1879. The P. M. at Vinita wrote that the service was superfluous; that there was no intermediate office that amounted to anything, and that in over three months he had received less than 50 letters and a half dozen papers.

Feb., 1879. It appeared that the mails for Darlington and Fort Elliot, the chief intermediate offices, having been directed to be forwarded from Vinita over this route, but that for weeks none had been delivered.

P. M. at Darlington wrote that only 2 papers and two letters had passed over the route, and that there was no road to Vinita.

P. M. at Vinita made same report.

These facts were expressly called to Mr. Brady's attention March 17th, 1879, and he directed that no change should be made.

March 8th, 1879. Chambers, P. O. inspector, wrote the Department that a movement was on foot by interested parties to secure further increases, and he believes it wrong. The route as let was really 638 miles long instead of 725, as advertised. This appears from distance circulars. By the addition already noted, the Department, on paper, made the distance on March 19th, 1879, 810 miles, and the time, having been by expedition put down from 10 to 7 days, was then, in consideration of the alleged increased distance put up to 9 days.

July 6th, 1879. Service was increased to seven trips and 86,052.59 allowed. This carried total pay, which had began at $63.30, up to $136,888.90.

There were numerous petitions for this from St. Louis and members of Congress and Army officers.

Letters from E. W. Parker, the brother to Parish, show how this was done.

The revenues of all the offices were 520.22.

April 30th, '79. P. M. at Vinita who had written against the route was removed at Brady's demand, though the inspector reported in his favor.

April 22nd, 1880. P. M. at Red River Springs wrote transmitting a letter from E. W. Parker, seeking to bribe her.

Aug. 1st, 1880. Service reduced to 3 trips, and $64,539.44 deducted.

Superintendent railway mail system. P. M. at Mohute or Fort Elliot, at Darlington, says route of no use.

Aug. 6th, 1879. An inspector reported to same effect.

March 19th, 1879. 69 miles were added to embrace several stations on the west end of the line, and $684.59 allowed. This was for another change from a route which they had never traveled, and which was impracticable.

In fact, with all the additions, the road is one mile less than advertised.

The fictitious distances took from the Treasury after expedition $31,973.97 a year. A serving of one day out of ten cost $94,336.39 a year.

Letters show a disposition to bribe Hunt, superintendent mail service.

Q. I desire to ask you whether the facts stated in this brief were by you brought to the attention of the grand jury at the time they ignored that bill?—A. Yes, sir; the facts that are stated there were all in evidence from the files of the Post-Office Department, and the original papers referred to were placed before the grand jury in succession—proved as coming from the Department, and placed before the grand jury. Then there was oral evidence besides.

Q. Did you call the individuals who were cognizant of these facts to testify before the grand jury, and did they testify to these facts?—A. All of those individuals did not. Judge Wylie having ruled incidentally, and it being our opinion that the records from the files of the Department were proof, we then undertook to supply the salient facts outside. I have already stated that one witness whom we brought here, and whose name I do not recall, had a failure of memory; that his memory when he testified here as a witness was not so good as it was in the statement that he had made to the post-office inspector out on the route. When he got here he did not come up to time; and, as I before remarked, I never was certain whether it was a real failure of memory or not. I also mentioned an important witness on that route that we had counted upon but failed to find.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Were you present with the grand jury?—A. I went before the grand jury and put all the papers in.

Q. Was the grand jury advised that this record evidence from the Department was competent evidence?—A. Yes, sir; and they acted upon such evidence in other cases. There was no question about that, because they acted upon the record evidence in other cases. This very grand jury found the indictments in the San Antonio and Corpus Christi case upon record evidence, with a single witness, or perhaps two, in addition.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you call the attention of the grand jury to the facts specifically set forth in this brief?—A. Before the grand jury I took up each paper in its order and called the attention of the grand jury to what each paper showed. There was a package of papers, probably so thick [indicating about nine inches]. I think Mr. Woodward brought the papers from the Post-Office Department; at any rate I had some Department officer to prove the papers, and then, having gone through them, the foreman of the grand jury said to me that he wished I would give him a little abstract of those papers for his convenience, and I did so, and that and one of those is the brief that you are now inquiring about.

Q. Did you call the attention of the grand jury to the fact that over this route, for a period of three months, when the expenses were at the rate of $50,000 a year, there had passed less than fifty letters and half a dozen papers?—A. I do not remember that specifically; but I can say in general terms that I called the attention of the grand jury to every fact that is there stated.

Q. Was there proof of the fact that the postmaster who had written that this service was unnecessary was removed by Mr. Brady?—A. Yes; that is my recollection of it. That was in the papers.

Q. Was the letter from the postmistress at Red River Springs, saying that the brother of the contractor had sought to bribe her, put in evidence?—A. That was put in evidence; that I remember.

Q. Was there any dispute as to the genuineness of the letter?—A. No, sir; the letter bore the post-office stamp.

Mr. STEWART. There is no controversy as to facts before a grand jury in my part of the country.

The WITNESS. No, sir; and there was none there. That letter was from the recognized postmistress, who wrote as such, and it was quite an indignant letter.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you remember what was the nature of the proposition to bribe her?—A. I do not recall it definitely. I think it was an offer of $50, or something like that, for which she was to—well, there were so many of those things that I have got them somewhat mixed; but my recollection is that that related to something about the reports of the arrivals of the mails. Mr. Woodward reminds me that the case was this: To get to this post-office the mail-carriers were required to diverge a little from the direct road, and if they could be allowed to pass by that post-office without calling there at all, they would save considerable time; and as the mail was not heavy, they proposed to pay the postmistress if she would let them go by and say nothing about it.

Q. Was that fact in evidence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it in evidence that this route was being paid for as 810 miles long when in point of fact it was, with all the increased distance, one mile less than the number advertised?

Q. You say in this brief that the route as let was really 638 miles long instead of 725 as advertised, and that with all the additions it was one mile less than advertised. That fact, you say, was presented to the grand jury?—A. I remember that there was a question as to the distance put before the grand jury, but the precise figures I do not recall. I repeat again, however, that anything that is stated in that brief was called to the attention of the grand jury.

Q. And you considered the facts here set forth as sufficiently proven before the grand jury to warrant an indictment?—A. I did, sir; and yet, owing to the failure of this one outside witness to appear, I did not make so absolutely conclusive a case as I had expected to make. Still, I thought the grand jury ought to indict.

Q. Was there anything said about the failure to find the post-office by the name of "Hayes"?—A. Yes, that was in the paper.

Q. Was that post-office named for the late President?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then it was a fraud. [Laughter.]—A. Well, sir; it was about as difficult to find as it would be to find him now. They got up post-offices out there and named them after various men, but "Hayes" could not be found, and it is evident from the facts proved that several of the others might as well not have been found. Let me say at this point that those offices were all established on the recommendation of United States Senator Stephen W. Dorsey.

Q. The offices were established on the recommendation of Senator

Dorsey, and they could not be found?—A. One of them could not be found. The others that were on the road were found.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Has there ever been a United States expedition to discover those post-offices? [Laughter.]—A. Well, they sent a post-office inspector out there to look for them.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were the petitions that are mentioned in this brief from Saint Louis, and from members of Congress, and from Army officers, put before the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir. Well, I remember that there were Saint Louis petitions and a good many petitions of one sort and another. Whatever there were, were presented to the grand jury, and I remember that they were quite numerous.

Q. Was Mr. Woodward called before the grand jury in reference to this route?—A. I don't remember. There was nothing that Mr. Woodward could testify to upon that route as of his own knowledge. He could merely have brought the papers, but whether he did bring the papers, as the officer in charge of the files, to prove that they were from the files, or whether they were brought by some other clerk, I do not now remember.

Q. Do you remember whether Mr. Woodward testified at all in the case?—A. My impression would be that he did not. It does not now occur to me what evidence he could have given in that case.

Q. Can you name the witnesses who did appear to testify in this case before the grand jury?—A. No, sir; I cannot.

Q. Can you state the name of any witnesses who appeared before the grand jury when this case was being considered to testify with reference to the route from Vinita to Las Vegas?—A. I cannot. I presume the minutes of the grand jury will show.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Did the grand jury keep minutes?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Do you know?—A. I do not. I can undoubtedly ascertain some of the names by the marshal's accounts showing the payment of witness fees. Those accounts would show the places the witnesses came from. That is the only way I know that I could recall the names.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You cannot now remember the name of any witness who appeared before the grand jury to testify in regard to this route?—A. I cannot recall any name at all.

Q. Do you know how long the grand jury were considering this case and the papers in it?—A. No, sir; I cannot tell you that. The way it was done before the grand jury was this: We took up a route—for instance, that route; the papers were proved and the witnesses were examined. Sometimes the witnesses were examined before all the papers had been gone through, or when we came to a paper which related to a matter as to which there was a witness waiting in the outer room, he was called in; and we went through the route in that way. Then another route was taken up and dealt with in the same way, and then another route, and so on. I think that particular grand jury, after they had got through the evidence in all of the cases that I placed before them, took them up and considered them together; at any rate I received these notices of their action all at the same time.

Q. Do you know whether the minutes of the proceedings of the grand jury were kept?—A. I do not.

Q. If there was any failure to keep minutes, whose fault would that be?—A. The grand jury's.

Q. The fault of the foreman?—A. I cannot tell you that. I don't know whether the grand jury elected a clerk or not. I know that several of the grand juries that I went before had clerks who were apparently keeping minutes, and while I do not identify this particular grand jury as to that point, my impression is that they did keep minutes, though I never saw the minutes.

Q. Then you do not know whether minutes were being kept at the time you were present?—A. I do not know as to this particular grand jury, but I do recall the case of a grand jury in which at some time while I was present I did see minutes being kept.

By Mr. FVAN:

Q. You say that if you could see the marshal's account of the payments made to witnesses you would then know the names of the witnesses who were examined in this case.—A. The account would remind me of the witnesses.

Q. Would it enable you to say whether they were before the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir; because no man was paid by the marshal except upon my certificate that he was before the grand jury.

Q. Suppose a witness came here and was not examined, would you refuse to pay him?—A. I was in the habit of stating in the certificate of such a witness that he had been summoned to attend but was not examined.

Q. Did you make memoranda of that in those cases?—A. I usually wrote it on the notice to the marshal, but I am very sure that on the Vinita and Las Vegas route no witness was paid whom I did not call before the grand jury.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Do you know why that grand jury ignored this bill?—A. No, sir; I have not the remotest idea of the reason.

Q. Was any statement made by any of the grand jurors to you as to the sufficiency of the evidence?—A. No, sir; there was not.

Q. Was there any call upon you for additional proof?—A. No, sir. The grand jury had taken their action, and I did not feel that I had any right to remonstrate with them. I do remember saying to some member of the grand jury, I don't remember whether it was the foreman or not, that I was a good deal surprised at their action, and he replied, "Well, we tried to do right."

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you not regard this route from Vinita to Las Vegas as one of the most fraudulent of all the routes?—A. I regarded it, if we could get at the bottom of all the facts, as likely to develop quite as much fraud as any route that we had; but I regarded the investigation on that route as having been by no means so complete as the investigations of other routes. The post-office inspectors had started out there to go over the route, but it had been broken up by advancing railroads, and many of the witnesses were Mexicans—a floating population that had gone off and disappeared, and the inspectors had not had time to look them up. At my instigation there was a subsequent investigation made, which I understand brought in all the missing evidence.

Q. Was there not evidence sufficient to show that the expedited service on that route was not performed?—A. I do not recall the evidence absolutely. My own impression is that there was enough evidence in the papers to satisfy anybody morally that the service was not performed; but whether it was so stated squarely, as a matter of evidence, I have some doubt. I think that was one of the points as to which missing witnesses were desired.

By Mr. FVAN:

Q. Was Mr. Crowley employed by any of these men who anticipated being indicted?—A. I never knew of his being employed.

Q. You never had any conversation with him to that effect?—A. No, sir; never about his being employed.

Q. Or about the propriety of his being employed?—A. No, sir. The only conversation with him relating to the matter that I remember is this: On one occasion he said that Colonel Ingersoll wanted to see me about something in connection with this arbitration business. Colonel Ingersoll had called me a liar in court, and I said to Mr. Crowley that I did not see any public exigency that required me to have a personal interview with Mr. Ingersoll, and I had none.

Q. That is not the point of my question. My question is whether Mr. Crowley ever consulted you as to the propriety of his taking a fee from any of these defendants?—A. No, sir; not that I recall. I do not see why he should have done so, and I don't think he ever did. If he did I do not recall it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were any indictments prepared by you to cover the Vinita and Las Vegas route?—A. No, sir. The indictments at that time were being prepared by Mr. Ker, and my recollection would be that drafts of those indictments had been prepared by him. I am very confident that that was so, because we were working against the statute of limitations, and if the grand jury found bills we expected to get them right in.

Q. Was this grand jury that considered the cases of the Parker-Salisbury routes in session pending the first or the last trial of the Dorsey-Brady case?—A. Oh, it was prior to the last trial. This was in June, 1882. Now, whether the first trial of the Dorsey case had then commenced or not, I am not able to say. I think it had not absolutely commenced, but it commenced very soon afterwards, I think. I think the first trial of the Dorsey case began about the 20th of June, and I think these transactions were about the 14th of June. That is my recollection.

Q. You have stated that the return of these briefs to you with the indorsement that the cases were dismissed was a surprise to you, and that in fact you were pretty "sick."—A. Yes, sir; that is a fact.

Q. Please state now what caused that surprise.—A. Simply because I thought we had made a case that would secure indictments in all the cases we had placed before the grand jury except on the Soledad and Newhall route, where the order turned out to have been made by Mr. French, and upon that case we felt that we had broken down.

Q. Did you make any efforts to have these cases considered by any other grand jury?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has the statute of limitations run as to the Parkers and Salisburys in reference to those routes?—A. According to my view, it has not. July 6, 1879, this route was increased and $86,000 was allowed. Now, if you take that order made on the 6th of July, 1879, as the overt act from which your statute of limitations is to be calculated, of course it would have expired on the 6th of July, 1882; but, as I have always regarded the matter, if a fraudulent order was made by Mr. Brady in 1879, and quarter after quarter the contractors went on taking their pay under that fraudulent order, each time they took their money there was a new overt act and the running of the statute ought to be calculated from that. Now, as to what time they did take their last quarter's pay on that route I cannot say, and therefore I can't say absolutely whether the statute of limitations has now run or not.

Q. Has the court decided that question about the running of the statute?—A. No, sir; we always avoided it. We never presented that question because we always succeeded in every case we brought into court in presenting an order less than three years old, upon which, as the overt act, the indictment was found.

Q. Were there any sessions of the grand jury subsequent to the one at which these cases were dismissed?—A. Not of that grand jury.

Q. Was there any subsequent grand jury by which indictments could have been found against these parties?—A. Oh, yes; if you had had the proper evidence and the witnesses to put before them.

Q. Did you make any effort to have these parties indicted by any subsequent grand jury?—A. I did not.

Q. Did any of the other Government counsel?—A. I think not.

Q. Do you attribute the failure to indict these parties by the grand jury, of which Mr. John T. Mitchell was foreman, to the want of sufficient evidence, or to the incompetency or other fault of the grand jury?—A. I did not consider that the grand jury was incompetent, because, if I recollect right, in the first place, that grand jury did find an indictment on the Corpus Christi route, and in the second place, I think that same grand jury found the second Dorsey indictment, which we tried. My feeling therefore was that that grand jury was not incompetent. I saw nothing to indicate that it was so. The foreman was certainly very competent as I recollect, and the jurors were gentlemen quite up to the average of intelligence. For that reason, and also because they found indictments in the Dorsey case and in the Corpus Christi cases, I felt that I had no right to say that they were not competent or that they were not acting intelligently or weighing evidence, and while the evidence conveyed to my mind a different conclusion from that which they reached, I did not feel at liberty to find any public fault with them.

Q. You have been district attorney in New York for many years?—A. For four years.

Q. During that time you had a great deal of experience, I presume, in bringing cases before grand juries?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It does not require as much evidence to find an indictment as to secure a conviction?—A. Nothing like as much.

Q. A merely ex parte case is sufficient?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you, then, account for the fact that with this absolutely conclusive evidence before them that grand jury failed to find an indictment in these cases?—A. I cannot account for it any more than I can account for the failure of the jury in the Dorsey case to convict.

Q. That was a trial in which the other side was heard, and in which the arguments of counsel were heard and the rulings of the court; but before this grand jury you had only to present one side—it was a mere ex parte proceeding?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The other side were not present and had no opportunity to be heard by counsel, and you presented as you thought a strong and convincing case?—A. I presented the case that is shown there in that brief, and I think it is strong and convincing.

Q. For instance, a route let originally at $6,330, and increased to over $136,000, when the postmaster at Darlington, a post-office, wrote that only two papers and two letters had passed over the route, and that there was no road to Venita. With these and all the other facts in this brief placed before the grand jury, and with nobody present to dispute them, that jury failed to find an indictment. Now, can you account for that?—A. I cannot, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I am sure I cannot.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. What has become of the Salisbury papers relating to these routes?—A. They are undoubtedly in the files of the Post-Office Department; and as I see here there is considerable additional evidence as to this particular route.

Q. Were any of the papers in these cases abstracted?—A. None that I know of. None of these papers were abstracted unless it was done after they were put before the grand jury and I have no idea that any of them have been. The combination of the safe was changed before that time.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What you have stated about the Venita and Las Vegas route may also be said, I suppose, of the Wells and Hamilton route?—A. Yes, sir. In the Wells and Hamilton route and of the Pembina and Fargo route I considered that the evidence was far more complete. There was nothing more to be sought in order to have tried those cases. If there had been an indictment found on the Venita and Las Vegas route, before going to trial I should have endeavored to supply additional evidence, but on the Pembina and Fargo, and on the Wells and Hamilton routes I considered that the evidence was sufficient to go to trial—sufficient not only to secure indictments but to convict.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Indictments were not found on those routes?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were those Salisbury routes?—A. They were routes that were in the names of representatives of the Salisburys, Luke Voorhees, a stage driver, and others. Mr. Woodward reminds me as to the Venita and Las Vegas route that, although an inspector had been over a portion of the route, it was not one of the routes over which inspectors had been sent specially after the star-route investigation began. An inspector had gone over a portion of that route previously, and had made a report, but it was not one of those exhaustive reports such as you find here. Such an examination was made afterwards at my request.

Q. From all you know of the failure of the grand jury to indict in these case, is it your opinion, or was it then your opinion, that any undue influences had been brought to bear upon that grand jury?—A. So far as related to the Salisbury and the Parker combination, I saw no indication that any undue influences had been brought to bear upon the grand jury, because, while I watched pretty carefully, I never got anything which led me to think that the friends of the Parkers and Salisburys knew at that time that their cases were before the grand jury. I never got any indication of such knowledge on their part, and yet things are done here in Washington so publicly that I cannot see how they could have failed to know it. For instance, you cannot summon a witness before the grand jury unless he is taken into the clerk's office and sworn there, and that is a matter of record, and usually they require it to be stated what case he is sworn in; but I got around that as well as I could, and pretty successfully, because Mr. Brady had a good deal of litigation on hand at that time, and I returned my witnesses as in the case of "The United States vs. Brady and others."

By Mr. FVAN:

Q. Have the grand jury no right to administer oaths?—A. They consider here that the grand jury cannot administer oaths, and the witnesses are always sent to the clerk's office to be sworn. I think on one or two occasions the foreman of the grand jury did in my presence administer an oath, but when I mentioned it somebody expressed doubt as to whether it was legal. I have always been accustomed to think that the foreman of the grand jury was the proper person to administer the oath, but the practice here is otherwise. I was going to add that when a witness was sworn and it was made a matter of record and he went before the grand jury, the Star or the Critic would probably have an item announcing that John Smith was sworn to day as a witness in the case of the United States vs. Parker and others, or whatever case it might be. That was the practice; but, as I have said, I avoided that by putting in my witnesses as in the case of the United States against Brady and others.

Q. You have not answered specifically as to whether any undue influence was used to prevent the finding of indictments.—A. I have nothing to justify me in the expression of such an opinion. There was more chance for undue influence and more invitation of undue influence in the Dorsey case, yet the grand jury indicted in the Dorsey case, and in these cases they did not. They also indicted in the Price case, where I should have said a priori that undue influence was more probable to be used.

Q. Who presented the Dorsey case?—A. I did.

Q. Was Mr. Woodward before the grand jury in that case?—A. He was.

Q. For what length of time?—A. I cannot tell you. I think he went before the grand jury several times in that case; as the papers on each route went in, I think he gave his testimony in relation to them.

Q. Was he before the grand jury in the Salisbury cases?—A. I don't remember whether he was or not; but my impression is that he was not in all of them, though he may have been in all.

Q. Why didn't you have him before the grand jury in the Salisbury cases?—A. Simply because he could not testify to anything in those cases of his own knowledge. He had never been out on the routes. We wanted evidence of post-office routine, and that he could give, but that had already been explained before the grand jury.

Q. Could not he explain that better than anybody else in the Department?—A. No, sir; you will bear in mind that we had no right to put him before the grand jury to make explanations, but only to give testimony.

Q. Then how did he get there in the Dorsey case?—A. Because he went as a witness, stating his knowledge of Post-Office routine, and also producing and identifying papers. He may have taken the papers before the grand jury in the other cases also, but he had no right to explain.

Q. He had as much right in the one case as in the other, had he not?
—A. To explain—yes; but I do not think he did.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did he take the papers and read them to the grand jury, or did he just take the package there and let the foreman read them?—A. I remember that when we started out before the grand jury they were rather particular and required positive proof as to where the papers came from, but as we went along they became less so. A clerk from the Post-Office Department would come in with a bundle of papers and would be examined somewhat in this way: You are a clerk in the Post-Office Department? Yes, sir. You are in charge of certain files of papers? Yes, sir. What have you there? The papers relating to the Vinita and Las Vegas route. Those papers come from the original files? Yes, sir. Then he would put them down and I would take them up and read them.

Q. Did you read all the papers that were laid before the grand jury in the Vinita and Las Vegas route and the Parker-Salisbury routes?—A. I read them in this sense: I did not read every word, but I said, "Here is a petition," and then I stated the substance of it, and said there are so many signatures, and so on. Then I took up another and read it in about the same way, and they were all gone over in that way.

Q. You had no reason to believe that there was any undue influence brought to bear upon that grand jury in reference to the Parker and Salisbury routes?—A. I had no belief of that sort, because I had no evidence on which to found it; but in thinking over why it happened that that grand jury, which did indict in the Dorsey case and in the Price case, failed to indict in those cases, of course there ran through my mind the question, "Well, could there have been any undue influences there?" and I looked for traces of anything of that kind, but, other than the fact that the grand jury had failed to indict, I did not find any.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Was Mr. Salisbury here at that time?—A. No, sir; I do not think he ever came here. I have understood that he never did come here. The nearest I ever heard of his coming to Washington was at one time a good deal later, when he came to Baltimore.

Q. Mr. Dorsey has stated in a published interview that he was offered immunity, by preventing indictments and prosecutions, on condition that he would pay a certain sum of money, and that he refused to contribute anything for that purpose. Assuming that that was true, might not that explain why indictments were easily found against him, when cases equally strong against others were ignored by the grand jury?—A. Well, sir; you will have to draw your own inference. You are supposing a condition of things which I am confident never existed. Mr. Dorsey never was offered anything of the kind by any human being who had any authority to offer it, in any manner; that is, after I came into the cases; for you will notice that, in a letter which I have put in here, I carefully provided against any such offer being made by anybody else and precluded myself from making any such offer. If the offer was made earlier it was long before there were any indictments, and could have had no bearing upon them; and if it was made after I came into the cases it was utterly unauthorized.

Q. Were the same efforts made by the counsel for the United States to secure indictments against the Parkers and Salisburys that were made to secure indictments against Brady and Dorsey in the cases that were tried?—A. Yes, sir; I personally made, perhaps, greater efforts, because we were met by the statement that we were persecuting Mr. Dorsey and letting other people go; and you will remember that in one of the earliest written of my letters which I have produced here I referred to the fact that we must get after the Salisbury combination, and I felt that we were liable to be criticised if we did not pursue them. Therefore, as I have said, I personally, perhaps, took more pains in these cases; and that was one of the reasons which made me feel so “sick” when I got these notices that the cases were dismissed.

Q. Were you also of the opinion that your associate counsel, in behalf of the Government, were making, and did make, equal, or even greater, efforts to secure indictments against the Parkers and Salisburys than were made to secure indictments against what was known as the Dorsey combination?—A. The matter of procuring indictments was chiefly in my hands, and probably I must take the responsibility of it. Mr. Ker was drafting indictments. Mr. Merrick came into the cases somewhere about the 1st of October, 1882, and he was chiefly familiarizing himself with the evidence in the Dorsey cases, but I went over with him also the evidence upon these other routes. The counsel, other than myself, certainly were as strenuous and did as much with reference to securing indictments in those other cases as they did in the Dorsey case; but, as I have said, in all these cases the matter of procuring indictments fell chiefly upon me.

Q. Were you of the opinion that the evidence was as clear and convincing upon which you relied to secure indictments against the Parkers and Salisburys as the evidence against the Dorsey combination?—A. Taking individual routes it was as clear, but there was not the same aggregation; we had not the evidence to make that aggregation of routes and to show the same class of orders and the same procedure with reference to the Salisburys that we had in the Dorsey case. The Salisbury routes were many of them in the names of different people, stage-drivers and others, so that the case could not be presented, as it seemed to me, with the same force as the Dorsey case. But take the route from Wells to Hamilton and the route from Fargo to Pembina; I think the evidence in those two cases, or in either one of them, was as strong as the evidence in the Dorsey routes.

Q. Did you make any statement pending the trial that the case against Dorsey was a weak one?—A. No, sir; I never thought so, and never said so.

Q. Was there not published an alleged interview in the New York Herald, in which it was stated that you had made a remark to that effect?—A. I do not recall it. I do not remember to have ever heard of that statement until Mr. Gibson or Mr. Cook stated it here. I never heard of it in any interview, and I do not think they said that I had ever so stated in any interview. At all events I never heard of it and never thought so.

Q. And you did not say that you did not think it was a strong case?—A. No, sir; Mr. Cook, you will bear in mind, stated that I said that Dorsey was one of the “head devils,” and I was going for him.

Q. He said you had made contradictory statements.—A. That may be. I have been making contradictory statements.

Q. You made an argument in the Dorsey case when it was tried?—A. I opened the case.

Q. After that, did you make a declaration, which was published in the newspapers, that you did not think Dorsey was as guilty as the others?—A. No, sir. I never have made any such declaration. I never saw it stated that I did. I never expressed any doubt of his guilt.

Q. You never had an interview with a correspondent of the New York Herald to that effect which was published?—A. Not that I saw.

Q. Then you did not have the interview?—A. I never said any such thing, and if any such interview was published I never saw it. I certainly was not fool enough to undertake to run down publicly a case that I was prosecuting.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In this connection, let me ask you whether you have at any time complained of the manner in which those prosecutions were being conducted?—A. Have I at any time complained? No, sir.

Q. Complained or criticised the manner in which the prosecutions were being conducted and the failure to convict?—A. No, sir.

Q. If any interviews to that effect have been published they were unauthorized?—A. Certainly they were. I cannot imagine that there have been any such interviews published; but I have got through following interviews in the newspapers. On several occasions I was "interviewed" here when I was in New York, and on one occasion I was interviewed here when I was at Alexandria Bay, and had been there for some weeks.

Q. You spoke some time ago about the Attorney-General having recommended a suspension of effort in the direction of the prosecution of these persons.—A. Perhaps that word "recommended" puts into the Attorney-General's mouth a little stronger language than is fair to him. He said he desired nothing should be done in those cases at present.

Q. On account of the great expense?—A. As I have stated, the Attorney-General did not at that time say anything about the expense, but that had been mentioned in a conversation just prior to this one, or there was something said in a conversation just after it, which led me to think that the question of expense was in his mind. He was contemplating reorganizing his force.

Q. Was there any question raised as to how much you should be paid for your services?—A. Not at that time. I had always told him the terms on which I had been employed and the terms on which I would serve, and had always notified him that I would be very glad to go out of the cases, but that if I remained I would not serve for less compensation.

Q. Did he insist that you should serve for less compensation or that your fees were excessive?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Chairman, would it not be better to let Mr. Bliss begin at the beginning of that subject and state what his contract was with the Department of Justice?

The WITNESS. I will do so with pleasure.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Did you make any contract?—A. When I first saw Mr. MacVeagh at Long Branch, I introduced the subject of compensation and stated in a measure my reasons for it.

Q. Had you been previously employed?—A. No, sir; I went down to see Mr. MacVeagh as to whether I would be employed or not.

Q. How came you to go?—A. After that letter which I wrote to Mr. James, and which I have put in evidence here, I got a request to go to Long Branch to meet Mr. MacVeagh and Mr. James.

Q. Who first made the proposition to employ you?—A. As it came to me, the first proposition to employ me came from Mr. James. Perhaps I can shorten this matter. The Attorney-General called upon me to enable him to respond to a resolution of the Senate asking information in regard to this matter of compensation, and I wrote him a letter of which I have a copy here, and I think I had better read it because it presents the matter in brief, and will lay a basis on which you can question me. I will read the letter of the Attorney-General and my reply :

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 28, 1884.

SIR: I have received a resolution from the Senate inquiring when and by whom compensation for special attorneys in the star-route cases in the District of Columbia was fixed, and to furnish copies of any agreements or memoranda relating thereto, and the facts relating to the reasonableness of such compensation, and my reasons for paying the same; also whether such attorneys, or any of them, are now in the employ of the Department of Justice, and at what compensation.

I have to request that you will furnish me with copies of any papers or data which you may possess that will enable me to make a prompt and full answer to this resolution.

I have written a similar letter to Mr. Merrick and Mr. Ker.

Your early attention will oblige,

Yours, very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

GEORGE BLISS, Esq.,
Special Counsel, 160 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

SIR: In reply to your favor of 28th instant, asking any information I can furnish to enable you to answer fully the resolution of the Senate as to the compensation of counsel in the star-route cases, I have to state as follows :

First. When first informally approached by Hon. Thomas L. James, the Postmaster-General, as to being retained as counsel for the Government, I expressed my unwillingness to being retained upon the double ground that, however faithfully counsel served the Government, they got no thanks, and that there was always difficulty in collecting the compensation. I remember that in a personal letter then written, I stated that my experience was that the reasonable compensation was always cut down a half, and that then "you had to employ a corkscrew and a claim agent to collect it." Experience shows that I was right.

Second. In spite of my expression of unwillingness, I was invited to meet Mr. James and Hon. Wayne MacVeagh, then Attorney-General, at Long Branch, and as a result I agreed to be retained. The proper rate of compensation was then talked over. It was my impression then (in which I think Mr. MacVeagh concurred) that the statute did not give the Attorney-General authority to agree absolutely upon the compensation beforehand. I subsequently found that I was wrong in this impression. Acting, however, on the impression, I stated to the Attorney-General that I had not for some years received less than a hundred dollars a day and expenses for professional services away from home; that it was calculated at that rate for all the time of my absence, and that there was no right to require me to travel at night; that I should expect to be paid at that rate, and that I did not consider that that covered the labor involved in the preparation of any elaborate argument that might become necessary as to the law or the facts, and that for such labor I should expect to be allowed something additional.

As for time devoted to the matter at my home, I stated that that must necessarily be left for arrangement after the services had been rendered.

I added that if the services were prolonged, but not continuous, leaving me opportunity to return and attend to my other business, I should think some deduction might be made from these rates. I referred in this connection to the fact that for the last services I had rendered involving absence from home I had been paid by private clients at a much higher rate in an account involving several thousand dollars. I also either then or subsequently referred to the rate of compensation allowed myself and other counsel by the judges of the United States courts in custom cases, as showing that the rates I named were not excessive. Mr. MacVeagh, as I remember, concurred in my views; but I am bound to say that as I was under the impression that he could not make an absolute agreement, I did not regard what then passed as in the nature of a contract absolutely binding.

At this conversation I agreed to be retained, and was informed you were also to be retained. Subsequently after I met you, I informed you of this conversation, and you had a conversation yourself with Mr. MacVeagh, as the result of which you wrote him a letter, of which you furnished me a copy, and which is as follows:

“706 WALNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA, October 28, 1881.”

“MY DEAR SIR: After we parted last night Mr. Bliss advised with me as to our fees in the star-route cases, as you said we should do.

“We have arrived at the following result, and agreed that I should promptly communicate it to you, so that we may have your immediate action while you have the authority to act.

“First. We now request you to pay us each twenty-five hundred dollars for the services thus far given.

“Second. That your successor may be informed of the understanding between us, and be prepared to fulfill your engagement with us. I repeat here what was expressed last night as to the rate of compensation to be allowed us, while we are in of these cases; and that was, we are to be paid each a hundred dollars a day while occupied in the cases, either out of court in the preparation of them or in court in the trial and argument of them, together with our expenses.

“I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

“BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER.

“Hon. WAYNE MAC VEAGH,

“Attorney-General of the United States, &c., Philadelphia.”

Mr. MacVeagh emphasized his substantial concurrence with these views by sanctioning the payment to me of an itemized bill of $6,000 for fifty-two days' services, in Washington and elsewhere away from New York, and of intermittent services in New York—a bill, by the way, which you informed me he stated he regarded as very moderate. As to facts “relating to the reasonableness of compensation, it is probably not proper for me to refer to anything further except the matter to which I made general reference in my conversation with Mr. MacVeagh, and which I have since brought to your attention more or less formally.

The district attorney of the United States at New York received by law a salary of $6,000 a year, and the Government pays his assistants and clerks salaries amounting to some $25,000 to $30,000 a year, besides furnishing office, stationery, &c. The district attorney also receives 2 per cent. in all collections in revenue cases. The latter item prior to 1875 amounted to a large sum annually. Whenever the district attorney appears for any officer of the Government sued individually, he is entitled under the law to be paid such further sums as are certified by the district or circuit judge of the United States to be “just and reasonable.” The district attorney at New York is most frequently called upon to appear for the collector of the port, against whom thousands of suits are brought yearly. But he also appears for the postal officers, for the officers of internal-revenue, and for officers of the Army and Navy. In all these cases he makes up accounts which are certified by the circuit or district judge who tried the case as “just and reasonable.” I was district attorney at New York from 1873 to 1877, and presented many such accounts. From an abstract in my possession of such bills, the originals of which are on file in the Treasury and other Departments, I call your attention to a few as showing what rate of compensation the judges of the United States have deliberately and repeatedly certified as reasonable and proper for one of the counsel employed in the star-route cases. These rules, I may say, did not differ in my case from those certified in behalf of my predecessors and successor.

Thus in the summer of 1873 Hon. D. A. Smalley, the district judge of Vermont, who during his incumbency of the office tried a large number of cases in New York, certified as “just and reasonable” an account containing the following charges, all in cases against the collector of the port tried before him:

For services in the case of Societe, &c., vs. Bronson, three days' trial, $500; in Chapon vs. Smythe, seven days' trial, $1,500; in Hutton vs. Schnell, ten days' trial, $1,500; in Leng vs. Grinnell, three days' trial, $300; in Watson vs. Barney, two days' trial, $250; in Ogden vs. Draper, one day's trial, $300.

These services were all within about thirty days. In 1875 the present circuit judge, Wallace, certified “as just and reasonable” an account in Fowler vs. Schell (two days), $200; Same vs. Arthur (two days), $500; Lackey vs. Arthur (four days), $500; Rceknagel vs. Murphy (four days), $500; Davies vs. Arthur (one day), $250.

In 1876 the same judge certified in Furman vs. Arthur (three days), $400; Unkart vs. Arthur (four days), $400; Rhiems vs. Arthur (two days), $250.

These are the only items in which the number of days are specified in a bill amounting to $2,450. In a bill immediately following are items, respectively, of $500 for two days, $300 for three days, $300 for two days, $200 for one day, and late in the same year the same judge certifies $100 for one day, $350 for two days, $250 for one day $250 for two days, $200 for one day.

Judge Shipman, of the Connecticut district, certified in the same year $500 for each of two days, $200 for one day, $500 for three days, $1,000 for two days, $200 for one day, $300 for two days, $100 for one day, $350 for three days, $700 for three day, $200 for one day, $100 for one day.

Judge Shipman certified other similar bills at the same rates. Judge Blatchford, now of the Supreme Court, certified in the same year, in different cases, items of $350, $350, $250, $500, and $300, but I have no record of the number of days covered.

The amounts certified varied in the different cases according to the intricacy of the cases, and to some extent the amount involved.

The times I have given was the length of the trial, and the preparation was of course considered in arriving at the allowances, though that was known to be made chiefly by the salaried clerks and assistants.

You will perceive that though the rates vary they are in no case less than $100 a day, and these allowances were certified as "just and reasonable" to an officer drawing a salary of $6,000 a year.

I trust what I have said will enable you to fully answer the resolution of the Senate as far as I am concerned. If, however, you desire any further information, I shall be in Washington early in the coming week and will furnish it.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS.

HON. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

The letter to Mr. James, referred to in this letter to the Attorney-General, was written at a time when Mr. James, as I recollect, was sued for his action as postmaster in using the Yale lock, and, as was claimed, violating a patent. He wrote me about it, and I wrote him a personal letter, and that letter was shown to Mr. MacVeagh, and, as I am informed, that was Mr. MacVeagh's first knowledge of me. The fact is that after I was district attorney I was employed by the Government in some important cases, and carried them through and made what was regarded as a rather brilliant success; but the Government haggled over my bill and paid me inadequately, and I quit, and declined after that any Government retainers, simply for the reason that I did not want to do any more Government business on such terms.

In connection with what I say in this letter to the Attorney-General about the rate of compensation being talked over at Long Branch, it is right for me to say that since the letter was written, on some consideration and some examination of papers, I am satisfied that I perhaps ascribed more of the conversation about compensation to that interview, and less to subsequent interviews, than I ought to have done; the subject did, in fact, come up at several interviews.

I say there that it was my impression at the time that the statute did not give the Attorney-General authority to agree absolutely upon the compensation beforehand; but my impression now, from an examination of the statute, is that it not only gives him that right, but makes it his duty to do so.

As to what I say in this letter of the interview at which it was arranged that Mr. Brewster and I were to be retained, at which time I was under the impression that the Attorney-General could not make an absolute agreement, I find that I had a subsequent interview with Mr. MacVeagh about the 10th or 12th of October, about a month after the interview at Long Branch, in which also the question of compensation was a matter of discussion. I cannot say definitely now what occurred at the one interview and what at the other; but I do say that in conversation between us it was arranged that the terms which I have named were the terms on which I was to be employed and paid. Mr. Brewster had not been at Long Branch, so the question as to compensation thus became a matter of more or less conversation between him and me and we considered and agreed that should be arranged definitely, particularly as it appeared likely that Mr. MacVeagh was to go out of office, though Mr. Brewster had not at that time the remotest idea of coming in as Attorney-General. We wanted to have the matter settled, and to have it made in some way a matter of record, so that there should not be any subsequent trouble about it. We had a meeting at Mr. Brewster's house in Philadelphia, and the question of compensation had been brought up, and Mr. MacVeagh had said to us, "You and Brewster talk the matter over;" and the letter of Mr. Brewster to Attorney-General MacVeagh, dated October 28, 1881, was written after we had talked the matter over. The committee will perceive that Mr. Brewster in his letter makes no difference between the rate of compensation for services, whether they are performed at home or away from home, but in my conversation with Mr. MacVeagh there was a very marked line drawn between those two cases. I notice that in this connection Mr. MacVeagh refers to a letter to Acting Attorney General Phillips, which he says we must have seen, and which seems to show that there was no agreement as to our fees. I never saw or heard or dreamed of that letter, until I read it in the copy of the printed testimony which you were kind enough to give me after I was examined here the first day. I have always supposed that it was a recognized thing that there was a contract agreed upon and made with the Attorney-General of the United States at the rate I have stated.

Q. You mean with Attorney-General MacVeagh?—A. Yes, sir; and I do not hesitate to say that if I were dealing with a private client, where it would be possible to establish the claim in court, I am perfectly confident that it could be established. Mr. MacVeagh would not naturally remember the whole of this matter in so great detail as I would; but I had felt so badly treated by Mr. Devens, the former Attorney-General, in this matter of compensation, and had experienced the way the Government generally acts in such cases, that I was determined that I would not have anything to do with this employment unless I had an agreement as to the rate at which I was to be paid, and I have always considered that I had such an agreement, and I think so now.

Q. Did you at that time change your mind and consider that the Attorney-General had a right to make a contract?—A. I had by that time changed my mind.

Q. You remarked a while ago that at Long Branch you and the Attorney-General thought he had no right to make a contract?—A. Well, it was assumed that he had no such right.

Q. Then at this interview at Philadelphia you had changed your mind?—A. As I have already said, I went and looked at the statute, and the statute seemed to me not only to give him the right very clearly, but to make it his duty to make an agreement. It rather seemed to me to impose that obligation upon him.

Q. Did Attorney-General MacVeagh agree to that view?—A. I did not discuss that question with him at all. Here is what the statute says: "The Attorney-General shall"—

Q. I am not speaking about the law now, I am speaking about the facts.—A. Well, I am going to call attention to the statute. It provides that, "The Attorney-General shall, whenever in his opinion the public interest requires it, employ and retain in the name of the United States such attorneys and counselors-at-law as he may think necessary to assist the district attorneys in the discharge of their duties, and shall stipulate with such assistant attorneys and counsel the amount of compensation."

Now it looks to me as if that law makes it the duty of the Attorney-General to make a contract.

Q. Now, I want to get you back to what I was asking about.—A. All right, sir.

Q. This letter that you have just read is dated on the 28th of October, is it not?—A. I think it is.

Q. You had then changed your mind in relation to the right of the Attorney-General to make a contract or agreement?—A. I had then examined the law and made up my mind that the Attorney-General had a right to make an agreement.

Q. Had Attorney-General MacVeagh changed his mind on that subject?—A. I have said that I had no conversation with him on the subject. I do not remember that at either interview the question of his power in that matter came up, but the conversation at Long Branch proceeded, on my part, on the theory that he had not the power to make an absolute binding contract, and I supposed he had the same view.

Q. I understand that. Now, you say that you regarded the agreement with you as an absolute contract after you and Mr. Brewster had communicated with Attorney-General MacVeagh?—A. I so regarded it.

Q. Did you see Mr. MacVeagh's letter to Acting Attorney-General Phillips, of October 31, three days later than the date of the letter which you have just read?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have read Mr. MacVeagh's evidence?—A. I have read that letter here; I never saw it before.

Q. It appears that he did not concur with you as to his power to make a contract?—A. I presume not; I never saw that letter before.

Q. It appears, then, that the Attorney-General did not regard that as a contract?—A. I do not know whether he did or not. The letter which I have read was written asking for certain things, among them $2,500. I promptly got the $2,500, paid on account. I never heard of any dissent from that letter. I remember, though, that there was a correspondence of Mr. Brewster with the Attorney-General. I consider that prior to that time I had my verbal contract with him, which was substantially the same, except that Mr. Brewster had, I think, by inadvertence, failed to put in a proviso that there should be less compensation when we were performing service at home than when we were called away from home.

Q. You understood it to be a contract entered into between you and the Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir. Bear in mind that I was not present when this letter was written by Mr. Brewster.

Q. I understand that; but at that time you understood that the statute authorized the Attorney-General to make a contract, and when you made this proposition, and it was accepted, you understood that to be a contract, and understood that you were employed at a specific sum?—A. At some of the interviews prior to the 25th of October, or as the result of all the interviews, I so understood; but not at Elberon did I consider that there was any contract made, because I proceeded upon the idea that there was no authority to make it, and that, therefore, there had not been any made.

Q. And you always so understood, up to the time you read this letter in the evidence here?—A. Oh, no; after I got back from Long Branch I looked at the statute and came to the conclusion I have stated.

Q. That is not the point. You always understood that you were employed at a specific sum until you read Mr. MacVeagh's letter in his testimony here the other day?—A. Yes, sir; I would have sworn to it right along.

Q. Mr. Brewster was the Attorney-General?—A. Not at that time.

Q. But afterwards?—A. Afterwards.

Q. This letter of Wayne MacVeagh, dated October 31, was on file in the Attorney-General's office, was it not?—A. I do not know; I never saw it.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Attorney-General Brewster afterwards as to whether that proposition had been accepted?—A. No, sir; I never had any conversation of that kind with him, but I told him time and again that I was employed under a contract.

Q. I want to call your attention to Mr. MacVeagh's letter to Mr. Phillips, printed on page 39 of the record, which reads:

402 WALNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA, October 31, 1881.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to inclose you a letter I have received from Messrs. Brewster and Bliss, special counsel in the star-route cases. Considering the professional standing of these gentlemen, I have no doubt you will agree with me in thinking it proper to pay them the fees they now ask; but they are doubtless aware that you cannot bind the Government to any contract in the matter which would control the action of my successor when appointed.

I think, however, it would be proper for you to say that you recognize fully the gravity of the cases in their charge, the very great amount of labor connected with their prosecution, and the entire reasonableness of their expectation that the Department will compensate them fairly and justly for the industry, zeal, and ability it knows they will devote to the matter in question.

Of course, I only offer these suggestions for your consideration and decision, for you are acting Attorney-General, and I am only awaiting the appointment of my successor, but I thought you would be glad to know my views on the subject.

Sincerely yours,

WAYNE MACVEAGH.

Hon. SAMUEL F. PHILLIPS,
Acting Attorney-General.

Q. You say you had never seen that letter until you read it here?—A. I never saw that, never heard of it, never dreamed of its existence, until after my examination here the first day, when the chairman was kind enough to give me the testimony previously taken, and I saw that letter in Mr. MacVeagh's testimony.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. That letter of Mr. MacVeagh's was addressed to the Solicitor-General?—A. Yes, sir. I never heard of it before; it was a revelation to me.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Did you ever make any new contract with Mr. Brewster, as Attorney-General?—A. No, sir; I never made any new contract with him.

Q. Then you were acting under what you supposed to be a contract made with Mr. MacVeagh when you and Mr. Brewster were engaged as counsel in these cases?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Please state what you understood to be that contract, and the rate of compensation for which it provided?

Mr. STEWART. He has already stated that.

A. I understood that I was to have $100 a day during all the time that I was absent from my home on business connected with these cases, and that I was not to be required to travel nights. Then, I understood that as to services rendered at home at my office it was impossible, from the nature of the case, to make any bargain beforehand, but that I was to be paid for such services what was fair and proper, the amount to be left substantially to the Attorney-General for his decision at the time or times when bills were rendered; but I also understood that I was to have my expenses paid. Then there was something said like this: that if there was a long argument, involving a continuous strain upon the brain and the body, I did not consider that $100 a day paid me. Then, there was the further condition that, of course, if these cases were prolonged, but not so much as to necessitate continuous absence from home and prevent my attending to my private business, I should think there ought to be some reduction from these rates.

Q. Some rate below $100 a day?—A. Yes. But that if the business kept me away continuously from my office, so that my other business could not be attended to, there should not be any reduction. I would not undertake to say that it was ever expressed, but I will say that I always felt that on the one hand Mr. MacVeagh would not have employed me on such terms and under such circumstances if it had been supposed that the service was to be very prolonged, while, on the other hand, I would never have consented to be employed if I had supposed the service would be so prolonged as it turned out to be.

Q. Then, briefly, your contract was this: $100 a day for the time you were actually employed?—A. Away from home.

Q. And if the service was prolonged and laborious, your compensation was to be more?—A. Not absolutely if it was prolonged and laborious generally, because that condition was specified with reference to argument—if the arguments were prolonged and laborious.

Q. But that for service performed at home you were to be paid less?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the contract had an outlet at both ends?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. FYAN. I have no doubt as to how Mr. Bliss understood this contract. What I have been endeavoring to direct his attention to is how Mr. MacVeagh understood the matter, and whether it was a contract.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. MacVeagh has stated in his letter how he regarded it.

Mr. FYAN. But I want to know of this witness if that matter was brought home to the attention of either Attorney-General MacVeagh or Attorney-General Brewster by him.

The WITNESS. It never was.

Mr. FYAN. It takes two to make a contract.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Chairman, allow me to remark that, having all the facts before us, the committee can judge for themselves whether it was a contract or not.

The WITNESS. I simply say that I regarded it as a contract, and if I were dealing with a party that I could sue, I am satisfied that I could establish such a state of facts that I could recover.

Mr. FYAN. Of course we will come to our own conclusions, as a committee; but I want to know on what facts this witness came to his conclusion on that subject.

The WITNESS. I have given them to you, all that I know.

Mr. FYAN. I wish to call your attention again to the latter part of this letter of Attorney-General MacVeagh.

Mr. STEWART. That was not a letter addressed to Mr. Bliss.

Mr. FYAN. No; but it was on file in the Department.

Mr. BLISS. I had no access to the files of the Department.

Mr. FYAN. What I want to find out is where the responsibility rests in the matter. If Mr. Brewster knew of this letter, and knew what Mr. MacVeagh's idea was, it follows as a consequence that he must have known that Mr. MacVeagh had decided that he had no authority to make any such contract as Mr. Bliss claims he did make.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, but Mr. MacVeagh recognizes the propriety of the charge, and merely says or implies that he cannot make a contract because he is not empowered by law to do so.

Mr. MILLIKEN. A contract that will bind his successor.

Mr. FYAN. Then the question arises with us as a committee whether this was a proper contract to be made or a proper charge to be allowed, and if it was improper who is responsible for the allowance.

Mr. STEWART. And that is a question that Mr. Bliss naturally does not want to discuss.

Mr. FYAN. Of course, but we shall have to discuss and consider it.

The WITNESS. I relied upon the conversation I had with Mr. MacVeagh.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Did you understand from Mr. MacVeagh that the arrangement was to bind his successor?—A. At that time I assumed so, and yet I will not undertake to say that anything of that sort was stated. I know we were discussing the question of fixing the rate of compensation, in view of the fact that Mr. MacVeagh was soon going out of office, for he had told me, with great frankness and in detail, about his going out. He informed me of that confidentially as early as the day after President Garfield's funeral, and therefore the subsequent conversation had reference to the idea of his going out of office.

Q. Did he not inform you, however, that he could not make a contract that would be binding on his successor?—A. Never; he never said anything of that sort; that question was not up for discussion between us.

Q. Then, upon what hypothesis did you conclude that there was a contract existing between you and the Attorney-General?—A. On the hypothesis of my conversation with him, in which I had told him what I should expect to be paid.

Q. What did he say in reference to that?—A. Oh, he agreed that it was right.

Q. What did he agree was right?—A. He agreed that he did not think $100 a day was excessive.

Q. Was that the verbal contract?—A. Yes, sir; a verbal contract.

Q. Then Attorney-General MacVeagh agreed with you that the proposition embraced in your letter was not unreasonable?—A. My letter that I am now reading.

Q. And that he would allow you that amount?—A. Yes, sir; that proposition, however, you will bear in mind, was different from the proposition of Mr. Brewster in his letter, inasmuch as mine was $100 a day when away from home, while his made no distinction between services rendered at home and those rendered away from home.

Q. Then you understood that the contract you had made was a verbal contract between you and Attorney-General MacVeagh?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that he assented to it as well as you?—A. Yes, sir; that is the contract which I have briefly stated to the committee.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Then you did not rely upon the contract in that letter?—A. I relied upon the letter of Mr. Brewster, not as making a contract for me, and I never claimed its terms. I never have claimed $100 a day for services rendered to the Government at New York, but always less.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. You stated to Mr. MacVeagh what your terms would be, and that they would be $100 a day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he employed you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he ever afterwards say that he did not wish to continue to employ you on those terms?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Brewster know what price you had claimed for your services in your arrangement with Mr. MacVeagh?—A. He did, sir.

Q. And did he, as Attorney-General, continue to employ you?—A. He did, sir. The first bill that I rendered——

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. (Interposing.) If Mr. Brewster understood the terms of your employment, why is it that he differs with you about it, as he does in his communication to Mr. MacVeagh?—A. Well, he understood my terms, because I told him.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. Mr. Brewster's terms would have given you more?—A. Yes, sir. The first bill that I rendered was made out in detail. I received $2,500 on account somewhere about the 1st of November. There was a bill made out in detail until the end of December, specifying everything by days and in full detail. That bill was approved by Mr. MacVeagh, the $2,500 that I had received on account being credited upon it; and when I received it, with Mr. MacVeagh's approval, I received also a message through Mr. Brewster that the bill was very moderate. I understood that message as referring to the charge therein made for services other than those away from home.

By Mr. STEWART :

Q. In that bill which you rendered you charged in accordance with the terms as you had talked them over with Mr. MacVeagh?—A. Precisely.

Q. And he approved the bill?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. FYAN :

Q. Now, you have read this letter of Mr. MacVeagh's, in which he uses this language : "Of course, I only offer these suggestions for your consideration and decision. You are acting Attorney-General, and I am only awaiting the appointment of my successor." If you have read that letter you have seen that he entirely disclaims any authority to make a contract.—A. I have read it.

Q. That letter, you say, was never brought to your knowledge until you came here?—A. Never.

Q. Never until you were put upon the stand here as a witness?—A. I never heard of it, or dreamed of it, until I came here.

Q. In those cases which you have enumerated where they allowed you those large amounts per day did it take a good many days to prepare the cases for trial?—A. Yes, sir. You may not have observed what I say here in this letter about that.

Q. You do not mean to convey the idea that there was only one day given to the examination of those cases in which those large fees of $300 and $350 a day were allowed?—A. Not at all, sir. But I do mean to convey the idea, that while of course there was a good deal of time devoted to the cases out of court, the preparation was made largely by the assistants of the district attorney, who almost always took part in the trial of the cases; and, you may think it an abuse, but I can say further that in some of these cases very likely I did not myself appear in court at all, but they were tried by my assistants.

By Mr. HEMPHILL:

Q. But still you were paid those fees?—A. Yes, sir; paid them right along. But that does not tell the whole story. I have got a memorandum of a number of fees which shows the current rate of fees certified by the United States circuit judges in New York. I have known them to be certified by Judge Blatchford as circuit judge, by Judge Johnson as circuit judge, by Judge Woodward as circuit judge; by Judge Shipman, the district judge in Connecticut, who held court in New York a great deal; by Judge Smalley, of Vermont, who held court in New York; by Judge Wallace, and by all the judges—they all certify them as just and reasonable and proper charges for a lawyer practicing in New York according to the rates of charge prevailing there.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Does not the law require the district attorney to cover into the Treasury all fees accruing to his office in excess of a certain amount—$6,000?—A. It does require him to cover in all fees, but not these charges. These are counsel fees. That question has been passed upon in court again and again. You will bear in mind that the district attorney in such a case is defending an individual, not the Government.

Q. Section 835 of the Revised Statutes provides that “no district attorney shall be allowed by the Attorney-General to retain of the fees and emoluments of his office, which he is required to include in his semi-annual return, for his personal compensation, over and above the necessary expenses of his office, including necessary clerk hire, to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department, a sum exceeding $6,000 a year, or exceeding that rate for any time less than a year.”—A. You see these fees are not required to be included in the emolument return or anything of the kind. They are entirely outside of it.

Q. Then, in relation to the district attorney in New York, the law provides that “there shall be paid to the district attorney for the southern district of New York in addition to his salary at the rate of $6,000 a year such sum as shall be necessary, together with the costs and fees allowed him by law, to pay such amount as may be fixed by the Attorney-General for the proper expenses of his office. But nothing in this or in the preceding section shall forbid the allowance of additional compensation for services in prize causes,” &c. You are familiar with that provision?—A. Yes. You will see in this report made by the Secretary of the Treasury that it appears that the district attorney there is getting $4,000 additional as a special allowance. In 1877 or 1878, when Mr. Sherman was Secretary of the Treasury, the Department made an order that while the judges in New York certified to the district attorney these additional counsel fees, so far as related to customs cases, there should be paid in any such case only—

Q. (Interposing.) What are the net emoluments of the district attorney of the southern district of New York?—A. What they are now I do not know, but I have no doubt that they are about $16,000 a year.

Q. What were they when you were district attorney?—A. They varied. For two years they were between $30,000 and $34,000 a year. I got 2 per cent. in revenue cases which in one year must have amounted to over $10,000.

By Mr. HEMPHILL:

Q. Those fees were in suits brought by individuals against Government officials whom you were appointed to defend?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the officials were not required to pay the fees out of their own salaries?—A. No, sir; there are probably six thousand cases pending against the collector of New York. He is, of course, merely the nominal defendant, but when a suit is brought, it is against him and not against the Government. You sue William H. Robertson as an individual, claiming that he has taken so much money from you improperly.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Please state now the whole amount that you have received for your services as special counsel in the star-route cases, and the number of days you were employed.—A. I think the aggregate of the bills that I have presented, including services and expenses, foots up $57,732.15. Of that, $4,342.20 is for expenses, leaving $53,389.95 for services. Up to a certain time my expenses were paid. Then the accounting officers of the Treasury took the ground that, though the Attorney-General might employ a man as counsel at $110 a day, the Attorney-General in his calculation estimating $10 of that for expenses, yet that he must certify it all as counsel fees, and that if he put in anything as "expenses" they could not allow it; that while the Attorney-General might divide it up in the records of his own office, and say that $100 was for services and $10 for expenses, he must certify the whole amount as counsel fees. They have paid expenses in such cases from time immemorial; they have paid them not only to me, but to everybody else, until about a year ago, but from that time down I have had no payment for "expenses."

Q. You included then what would otherwise have been your charge for expenses in your charge for compensation?—A. No; I have never made out any bills in that way. I have lost the expenses since that time. Of the amount that I have charged there still remains due to me I think about $6,700.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. The amount you have stated includes all the bills you have presented whether paid or not paid?—A. Yes, sir; that is my recollection.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Up to this time?—A. No. There is a small bill since that. This only comes down to the 19th of November. There is a small bill since that of perhaps $1,500; I have not a memorandum of it. That will make more money that has not been paid me.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. What is your total claim against the Government, including legal services, expenses, and everything?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Both what has been presented and what has not been presented.

The WITNESS. I think I have got no claim that has not been presented. It does not occur to me that there is any other item that I have a right to claim pay for. As to the accounts I have presented I do not remember that last account precisely, but I think it is about $1,500. Assuming that one to be $1,500, the accounts I have presented would amount to $59,232. Of that some $4,342 would be for expenses, actual expenses for which I have filed vouchers; $8,200 is still unpaid.

Q. Your whole charge against the Government for legal services and expenses amounts to $59,000 and some odd dollars?—A. You may say that, assuming the last bill to be $1,500.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How long a period do those charges cover?—A. From the 10th of September, 1881, until February, 1884.

Q. Are those accounts rendered for so much each day or so much each case?—A. They are rendered by the day.

Q. Mr. Gibson stated in his testimony that your account would average $150 or $156 a day.—A. Well, the committee will see in a minute that that is not true. After seeing that statement, I took occasion to go over Mr. Gibson's calculation. He says, in the first place, that I was paid $6,000 on the 1st of January, 1882, and he says that amounts to $170 a day. That was a bill rendered as from the 9th of September to that date, and the bill on its face shows by dates, going through each day, fifty-four specified days of absence from home, at $100 a day, and shows also some time in New York. The committee can see that from the 9th of September to the 1st of January is about 100 days, and yet Mr. Gibson says I was paid $170 a day. The way he has calculated it is this: I was paid $2,500 on account, some time in November; so he reckons the $6,000 in this bill as from November down, though on the face of the bill it shows dates away back of that, and the $2,500 is credited on account.

Q. But did he not reckon it upon the number of days of actual attendance in the city of Washington?—A. No, sir; because the bill on its face shows 52 days' attendance in the city of Washington.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. How many men did you convict that were punished?—A. We convicted only two.

Q. Were they punished?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was the verdict set aside?—A. Yes, sir; on our motion.

Q. Then there has been nobody convicted or punished?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you collect any money for the Government?—A. No, sir; I have not gone into the insurance business.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Was it your fault that the parties were not convicted?—A. I do not think so. If it was, I should like somebody to point it out, and I should like this committee to ask the presiding justice whether he thinks it was my fault.

Then Mr. Gibson takes another bill which was paid on the 4th of March, and he says that it is at the rate of $140 a day. There are specified 48 days of absence from home, in addition to time in New York. The bill of expenses shows 55 days away; he is nearer right, of course, in his calculation in this case. He takes another bill and figures it out at $156 a day. Now, in point of fact, taking from the date of the preceding bill, there are 83 days for which the charge is $6,800. It is very evident that Mr. Gibson counts simply the days for which he finds hotel bills annexed to my account, showing that I was here, and takes no account of the time spent in coming or going or anything of that sort.

Q. Did you charge for the time spent in coming and going?—A. I charged for the time I was away from home. But if I could get home by going on a day that I was here, of course there was no charge. For instance, if I went home Friday night instead of staying here over Saturday and Sunday, if I could save any money to the Government I went home, and made no charge for that time.

Q. You usually came on the limited express train, did you not?—A. Oh, I came on every train. I should think that I came oftener on other trains than on the limited express. I got in the way of leaving New York on a train that leaves about 3 o'clock, and traveled a good deal on that train.

Q. State whether you charged $100 a day for the days on which you were traveling between Washington and New York?—A. Always, provided I had not charged that day for attendance in Washington. I charged from the time I left home until I got back home.

Q. Then, if you traveled two days in the week, one day coming here and the other going back, you charged for both those days?—A. No; I bore this in mind, that if I went home in that way I had no right to charge the Government more than it would have had to pay if I had staid here.

Q. You stated when you were here before that you went home at times for the purpose of attending to your private business; did you charge for those occasions?—A. I went home in the early stages of the case, for the purpose of attending to my private business, and I never charged for those occasions.

Q. You did not charge for the time you were in New York, but you did charge for the time coming and going?—A. No, sir; save in this way: Suppose I was here on Thursday night, and the case adjourned until Monday, I had my option to either stay here or go home. If I had staid here I should have charged for Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. Now, in those cases I generally went home, and I usually charged for the two days but not for the third.

Q. Did you charge $100 a day for your legal services on Sunday?—A. I think my bills will show that I charged for services on Sunday. I know I worked as hard on Sundays as on any other days.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. You say you do not think it was your fault that the defendants in those cases were not convicted. Whose fault do you think it was?—A. I think it was the fault of the jury.

The CHAIRMAN. If you have any further statement to make about your bills you may proceed.

The WITNESS. Then, again, Mr. Gibson says that one of my bills covers only seventy-one days, making an average of $211 a day. In point of fact there were covered by that bill one hundred and twenty-four days. That bill covers the first trial, including eighty or ninety days in court. The next bill of $4,000 he says shows an average of $133.35 per day, but in point of fact that bill covered one hundred and fifteen days.

Q. But you were not engaged in serving the Government during all those one hundred and fifteen days?—A. I was thirty-seven and a half days serving the Government here in Washington. The next bill is $5,700, which he reckons as covering only fifty-one days, and puts at the rate of $111 a day. In point of fact the period covered by that bill is sixty-nine days, and during that period I was absent from New York on the business of the Government fifty-eight days. Those are the only bills that he analyses in that way. I say distinctly that I have never charged more than $100 a day, except possibly during the period covered by the trial. I have not figured it up, but it is possible that there is in that account some additional amounts of perhaps $10 or $15 a day for the time spent in the arguments that were imposed upon me in that case. I say that it possible, but I do not think that even for that period it is the fact.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. If you have no objection, I would like to have you state what your time is worth per day in the practice of your profession in the city of New York?—A. Well, sir, it varies, but I consider it a mighty poor day in New York when I don't get $100 a day.

Q. I mean taking the year through?—A. I mean that, taking the year through, I consider it a mighty poor day when I do not get $100.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. What is your practice in New York worth for a year, three hundred and sixty-five days?—A. Well, that is trespassing a little or going into private matters. I will state, however, that while my increase for services has varied in amount, it has oftener been above $30,000 than below that for some years back. After I ceased to be district attorney there was a time when it was much less.

By Mr. HEMPHILL:

Q. Do you mean the share that comes to you individually?—A. Yes, sir; from my own clients and work.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. How long have you practiced law?—A. Twenty-five years.

Q. How do the charges which you have made against the Government compare with the charges that you make against individuals?—A. In the last previous services that I rendered away from home I was employed by the united steamship owners of New York. I was away 23 days and they very gladly paid me $5,000.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What case was that?—A. It was in connection with the tax on immigrants.

Q. Was that a case against the Government or against the State of New York?—A. It was a question with the State of New York. I have not gone around and asked for information about the proper rate of charges or about the charges of other people, but various gentlemen, some of whom are known to the members of this committee, have voluntarily come to me and made statements on the subject. For instance, I met, the other day, Mr. Dorman B. Eaton, the chairman of the Civil Service Commission, who was for a great many years a lawyer in large practice in New York. He and I have been associated together in a great many cases. He said to me: "I see they are finding fault with your fees, $100 a day. I did not for years and years, before I went out of practice, think of leaving New York City for less than $100 a day." I met Mr. Joseph H. Choate, who came to the bar in New York at the same time that I did, and is about the same age in the profession, and he voluntarily said the same thing. Another gentleman with whom I talked on the subject was Mr. Willard Bartlett, whom the Democrats have just elected a judge of the supreme court in New York, and who is a younger man than I am at the bar. I did consult Mr. Bartlett incidentally—that is, I talked with him at the time I rendered the bill for $15,000 for the first trial of the Dorsey case, and he said that the bill never should have been less than $25,000; and I have met him since this committee has been in session, and he remarked that the idea of questioning $100 a day to a New York lawyer was an absurdity. Mr. Dunning, Mr. O'Connor's former partner, sent me a message to the same effect. I mention these cases simply as showing the rates paid to lawyers of standing at the New York bar.

Q. During the time that you were engaged as special counsel for the Government in the prosecution of the star-route cases, did you attend to any other business for the Government than the star-route cases?—

A. I attended to other business for the Government, but not for compensation.

Q. Did you attend to any business in which the parties on the other side employed you at a compensation?—A. In one case I did.

Q. What was that?—A. I filed a brief with the Attorney-General on behalf of the banks of the New York Clearing House with reference to the liability of the banks to pay the tax on their circulation or dividends under the tariff act of 1883. I filed that brief, and Mr. Sidney Bartlett, of Boston, filed a brief, and also some Philadelphia lawyer, I think.

Q. That was a question of the remission of taxes under the law?—A. No; it was a question whether the banks were liable to pay the tax. The period for paying the tax was a six-monthly period, and the law said that the act abolishing taxes should take effect at a certain time, and the question was whether they should be collected for a fraction of two or three months.

Q. In that case what amount of fees did you receive from those private parties?—A. In that case I got, I think, $1,000.

Q. Was that all?—A. I think so.

Q. How much was involved?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was there not $4,000,000?—A. For my clients, nothing like that.

Q. What was the amount of the fee?—A. I think it was $1,000; it may possibly have been $1,500.

Q. Did you appear before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you appear before any officer of the Government?—A. No, sir; I never appeared before anybody. I staid at home, and prepared a brief which I made turn upon the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the legacy and succession cases.

Q. What was done with that brief?—A. Well, the Attorney-General decided the matter the way I argued, but he dissented substantially from the view I took.

Q. You were successful in the case, though?—A. I was successful.

Q. And you received a fee of $1,000?—A. I think so.

Q. That was during the time that the star-route cases were pending?—A. Yes, sir; that brief, allow me to say, was prepared upon two days, for which no charge was made to the Government.

Q. Then you devoted only two days to that matter?—A. Only two days; I did not consider it a hard or difficult matter; I considered that the Supreme Court had decided it; I went into the internal-revenue office and asked their position on the question, and I found that they were really of the opinion that there was no fair question involved, but that as the question had been raised, the opinion of the Attorney-General ought to be taken. The New York Clearing House got somewhat alarmed, and Mr. Tappan, I think, the chairman of the clearing house, came to me and wanted to retain me; they said it was not a matter of sufficient importance for them to go to Mr. Evarts, and they came to me because they thought I would perhaps do it cheaper; so I made a bargain then and there, and I think it was for $1,000.

Q. Was there any other case in which the Government was interested in which you appeared during this period?—A. I do not recall any.

Q. Were you not employed in the case of the San Pedro and Cañon Del Agua, in New Mexico?—A. I believe I never got any fee there, though I ought to have had one. I was employed to this extent: The defendants wanted the case tried. The parties out there were seeking to proceed by injunction; seeking to tie them up by injunction and not by a trial, and I was employed to urge a direction from the Attorney-General's office to the district attorney to proceed by a trial of the case and not by injunction.

Q. Did you procure an order from the Attorney-General to discontinue the injunction proceedings?—A. I procured an order. I do not think it was an order to discontinue the injunction proceedings, though.

Q. What was the order?—A. I never saw it; what I got was a direction to the district attorney to proceed by trying the case, and not to undertake to anticipate it by injunction.

Q. You say there was no request made by you for instructions to the district attorney in New Mexico to discontinue the injunction proceedings in that case?—A. Well, that was the tangible result to which it would come, but I don't think that was the form of the request. The parties came to me and said: "We are perfectly willing to have a trial and to dispose of the case on the merits, but if we are to be tied up by injunction we object to it; we have spent $800,000; we are just ready to start a mill, on which we have spent $400,000, and we don't want to be tied up in that way."

The Attorney-General referred it to some one of his assistants. It was a case in which the name of the United States was allowed to be used for the benefit of a private claimant, but the Government was not really interested in the litigation.

Q. It was interested to the extent of declaring the patents void upon which the litigation depended?—A. Yes; and then to let these other parties come in upon the lands. The United States might in a certain phase of the case have got certain benefits, but very trifling ones. There may have been some of the lands on which there was no other claim, but certain claimants claimed the lands, basing their claim upon the fact that the patents issued by the United States under which the defendants held were fraudulent, and they were seeking to set them aside and were allowed to use the name of the United States to do it. Now, I think there had been no injunction, but I think the district attorney had given notice that he was going to move for an injunction, and our application was that the district attorney should be directed to try the case instead of proceeding by injunction. The Attorney-General referred the matter to a law clerk.

Q. What law clerk?—A. I do not know. I never saw him. The Attorney-General referred the case upon the question whether they could find an instance where the name of the United States had been used in that way, and the parties had been allowed to proceed by injunction, and I think the report was——

Q. (Interposing.) Who employed you in those cases?—A. Mr. George William Ballou.

Q. He has stated, I am informed, that he paid you a fee of $5,000?—A. He did not pay it.

Q. Did he pay you any fee?—A. I have got a claim against him now, or I did have a claim before he failed. I think he did make me a small payment, but my impression is that my whole charge against him was $1,000.

Q. How much of that has he paid?—A. I guess he has paid half. When Ballou & Co. failed I dismissed the matter from my mind. Up to that time I looked upon it as a good asset.

Q. Your service in that case was during the time when the star-route cases were pending, was it?—A. It was after my retainer in the star-route cases. I came from New York specially to attend to that case.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Did you charge the United States in any instance for time which was occupied in trying any other cases than those in which you were employed by the United States?—A. No, sir; I was very careful on that point.

Q. Now, you have stated what your practice in New York is worth, and what you have charged in individual cases, and I will ask you this question: Have you charged the United States for the time during which it employed you in the star-route cases any considerable amount more than your practice was worth to you during the same length of time?—A. No, sir. I cannot stop to do it now, but I will say now that I propose to ask the committee to hear read various letters which I wrote to the Department of Justice from time to time commencing in the summer of 1882, asking to be allowed to retire from the cases on the ground that it did not pay me to stay in them.

Without concluding the examination of the witness the committee adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 3, 1884.

GEORGE BLISS recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. I asked you yesterday about your services in connection with the Cañon del Agua Mining Company. Did you present a brief to the Attorney-General in that case?—Answer. Since yesterday I have been shown this paper from the Department of Justice, which is a request that I presented to the Attorney-General with reference to the San Pedro and Cañon del Agua Company. After stating the facts, the nub of the application is in this:

In view of the facts already stated as to Judge Axtell's declarations, and in view of other matters, which it would be long to explain upon paper, the company desires your intervention. It does not now ask you to interfere with the suit, though it believes that as a new matter you would not authorize its commencement; but it does ask that you will, by telegraph, direct district attorney of New Mexico to take no proceedings to enjoin the company until you can have a full opportunity to examine into the question of the propriety of such a course. * * * To seek an injunction against innocent parties on such a ground, before a final adjudication, would be in the highest degree unjust. I think I may assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that no instance can be found in which the United States has so proceeded.

The reference there is to these facts: The Government had issued a patent that had been located; the company had spent $400,000 in erecting a mill upon the premises, and were just about to commence operations, when there was notice of a motion for an injunction by parties claiming that the patent was void, and in behalf of the company I made that application. The Attorney-General indorsed the application as follows:

Referred to Mr. Dutton, who will at once report as to the correctness of Mr. Bliss's statement in paragraph No. 2, that it has not been the practice to seek an injunction in such cases.—February 8, 1883.

I saw yesterday Mr. Dutton's report, in which he says:

I have examined the case of the Cañon del Agua, a Mexican grant, confirmed and patented by the United States, which patent the Attorney-General has brought into court by proceeding in equity with a view to a judicial determination of the question whether the said patent was illegally issued or fraudulently obtained.

Pending this issue the ownership of the land is in the patentee or his assignee. Until trial and judgment against them they have full right to treat and use the property as their own.

But an injunction has been moved for by the United States attorneys to prevent these owners from going on with their mining operations.

These attorneys have gone beyond their instructions. They were directed by bill in equity to try the validity of the patent—nothing else. To do this there is no need of an injunction. Let the case be tried first on an open, square issue. I am not aware that in a proceeding to set aside a patent or to try the title to lands an injunction was ever allowed. I am quite sure that in such cases the Government does not ask for injunctions against the use of lands by parties holding under the Government's grant.

It is clear to me that the Attorney-General, who controls this suit, should interpose and stay the hands of the district and special attorneys and direct them to proceed no further with the injunction until he shall have time to examine into the matter and to hear both sides.

Q. The Attorney-General issued the instructions you desired, did he?—A. I have now seen for the first time the instruction that he did issue. He sent the following telegram:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 9, 1883.

SIDNEY M. BARNES,
Santa Fe, N. Mex.:

In the Cañon del Agua cause stop all injunction proceedings. Let the case be tried upon open, square issues as you were before instructed, and not upon injunctions.

BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Q. You appeared in this case for the Cañon del Agua Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You stated yesterday that you were employed in this matter by Mr. George W. Ballou?—A. Yes, sir; he was the president of the company, I think.

Q. And you stated that he had paid you part of your fee?—A. Yes; I think it was $500. As I said before, I don't recollect the amount distinctly. After Mr. Ballou failed I dismissed the matter from my mind.

Q. Did you see the Attorney-General at all in reference to the cases?—A. I simply wrote that application out, and handed it to the Attorney-General, and said to him: "I have but one request to make upon that subject. It is a question requiring immediate action. I wish you would refer it to some one who will examine it and report to you." He did not tell me who he was going to refer it to, and I never saw the report until now. The next thing I knew of it was that a few days afterwards he informed me that he had sent a dispatch to New Mexico, directing that the injunction proceedings should be stopped.

Q. It seems that the Attorney-General referred this matter on the 8th of February, and his telegram was dated on the 9th, so that he did act promptly?—A. He did act promptly. I think now, on the whole, that I did know that the reference was to Mr. Dutton.

Q. Did you speak to Mr. Dutton about it?—A. Never sir. Mr. Dutton and I are not on good terms. He was chief clerk of the Department when Judge Pierrepont was Attorney-General and I was district attorney in New York, and things did not go very smoothly between us. Let me say that I find, on looking over these papers, that Mr. George C. Hazelton, a member of Congress from Wisconsin at that time, was appointed special counsel in the case, and I find also in various papers in the case the name of the Hon. William M. Springer.

The CHAIRMAN. I am very glad that the witness has called attention to that fact, because it gives me an opportunity to state what I had to do with the matter. I was in New Mexico when this suit was pending in the summer, and there were some serious difficulties there growing out of the matter. The judge had imprisoned three attorneys and their clients for disobeying a supposed injunction that he had issued in the case.

Mr. FYAN (jocularly). You were practicing there? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; but I was there, and I found that a friend of mine was in prison. I visited him in prison and signed a dispatch, together with the Delegate from that Territory, Mr. Luna, and the ex-Delegate, to the President of the United States, remonstrating against the course of the presiding judge in that respect. That, I think, is the only paper on which my name appears.

Mr. MILLIKEN. This committee, in its wanderings in all directions and towards every point of the compass, is liable to catch up everybody at some time or other. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. That is all right; and if I am never accused of anything worse than visiting those who are in prison I shall be content.

Mr. STEWART. Did you get $100 a day? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Not a cent. I was an officer of the Government and not entitled to any fee even if I had rendered any service.

The WITNESS. Were you differently situated from Mr. Hazelton?

The CHAIRMAN. He was an ex-member.

The WITNESS. Not at the time he was appointed. He was appointed while he was a member of Congress. Let me say further that on looking over the papers I find that what I stated yesterday distinctly appears, viz, that the Government had no actual interest in the order. It was a mere question between the two claimants, and whichever way it was decided it would not inure to the benefit of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. It was believed when I was out there that the imprisonment of those parties might lead to very serious breaches of the peace, and for the purpose of averting that, at the request of some of the interested parties, I, in conjunction with the Delegate and the ex-Delegate, signed that dispatch to the President.

The WITNESS. I do not remember whether you asked me yesterday the general question whether I had been in any other matter connected with the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. I did.

The WITNESS. I was employed in one case; in that case, I was employed to procure the Attorney-General to bring a suit to set aside the Maxwell land grant, and he did order it. The suit was brought on the complaint of settlers, but with the allegation that there was a million or two millions dollars worth of the land that belonged to the Government; I understand that the suit was brought. My interest in the matter ceased after that application, but I understand the suit has been brought and the Attorney-General sent one of his assistants, Mr. Fay, to the West to look after it, and he has prepared a careful opinion and has, I am told, reached the conclusion that the Government has very large interests to be established by that suit.

Q. That is a case pending at Denver?—A. Yes, sir; that suit was brought at my instigation after there had been a refusal to order it; I got a fee there, $400.

Q. Were you representing the Government?—A. No, sir; my fee came from the settlers. They claimed that the patent had been wrongly located and that it had lapped over on to their lands; that a patent intended to cover 100,000 acres had been, by misconstruing the boundaries, made to cover five or six hundred thousand, and in that way had lapped over not only onto the Government lands but onto the lands of settlers.

Q. Were you interested also in the Johnson cotton case?—A. Never with the Department of Justice.

Q. With any of the other Departments?—A. I was interested with the Treasury Department. I was asked to secure the dismissal of the suit.

Q. Where was that suit pending?—A. In New York. The Secretary of the Treasury declined to dismiss the suit, and employed special counsel and went on with the case; tried it; paid I don't know how much special counsel fees, and was incontinently beaten.

Q. Who represented the Government in that case?—A. Mr. Douglass Campbell as special counsel. It was an informer's case, brought by a special agent of the Treasury Department.

Q. Was Mr. Herrick an assistant attorney for the Government?—A. Mr. Herrick was one of Governor Woodford's assistants. He has since died.

Q. Did he represent the Government as an assistant attorney?—A. I do not know.

Q. What was done?—A. I made an application and an argument before the Secretary of the Treasury on the ground that Mr. Sherman, as Secretary of the Treasury, had promised in writing that before suit was brought Mr. Johnson should have an opportunity to present his case and to be heard out of court, and that that promise had been violated, and I asked that the suit should be discontinued. The Secretary of the Treasury said substantially that the suit having been commenced, and there being an interest of the informer in the case, and it having remained after Mr. Sherman went out of office, and gone over to another Secretary, it could not be discontinued.

Q. You were not successful in your application to have it discontinued?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was involved in that case?—A. The Government started out by claiming $60,000 or $70,000, but before they got done they got up to claiming $500,000 or $600,000; it was a cotton claim; it was being prosecuted on the halves. It was tried in New York, the trial was a long one, and the Government was beaten.

Q. When was it that you appeared before the Treasury Department in that matter?—A. I do not know exactly. I have been trying to fix the time, but have been unable to do so.

Q. Was it during the time you were engaged in the star-route cases?—A. I think it was. You may take it that it was.

Q. It was at least since these prosecutions began?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. It was under Mr. Folger's administration of the Treasury?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Did you receive compensation for that service?—A. I did, sir.

Q. How much?—A. Three hundred dollars, I think.

Q. Did you devote much time to that matter?—A. Well, if you want me to state it, I devoted one Sunday in New York to looking over the papers.

Q. Another Sunday's work?—A. Yes, sir; the star-route cases demoralized me. I subsequently came here and filed, as I recollect it, a written application or brief. I think I devoted perhaps an hour to preparing that application here. The papers were voluminous. It was the case of a cotton agent who had collected and turned into the Treasury more cotton than any other agent the Treasury had appointed. He had received from Mr. McCulloch, after an investigation, a certificate of discharge in which his services were spoken of in the highest terms. Then ten years later came on the informer's suit, with an allegation that he had not accounted for all of his cotton. Harrison Johnson was a wealthy citizen of Columbus, Miss., and represented to me by friends as one of the few men there who had remained loyal to the Union during the entire war.

Q. Was there any other case in which you assisted the Government or private parties during the time you were engaged in the star-route cases?—A. I don't remember, but I think it very probable there was. I considered myself at liberty to practice my profession, and I did it; but always bearing in mind that I should never make any charge to the Government for any day on which I did any business for a private client.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Did you charge the Government for any days except days when you were engaged in serving the Government?—A. I did not, sir. And I may say here and now, without going into the question of relative income from my business for any given year, that it is capable of demonstration that pecuniarily, in dollars and cents, I have lost more money in a professional way than I have received by being employed by the Government in these cases.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you refer to the time during which you have been employed in the star-route cases?—A. Yes, sir; distinctly.

Q. Does your private business, business in which the Government is not interested, pay you better than you have been paid since you have been engaged in the star-route cases?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Is your private business worth $100 a day?—A. Yes, sir; ordinarily it is. It has not been, of course, since I have been engaged in these cases. For instance, take my private business the present year, when I have been practically out of the cases, it has fallen off almost entirely.

Mr. FYAN. I understood the witness to say before that his annual income from his profession was $30,000.

The WITNESS. Not every year. Sometimes it is higher and sometimes lower.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. During the time you were district attorney?—A. During that period I had no time for private business. When I went out of that office I did not have a case or a client.

Q. Did I understand you to say that your fees and emoluments as district attorney amounted some years to $32,000?—A. There were two years when they amounted to between $30,000 and $33,000.

Q. The emoluments of that office of district attorney?—A. Yes, sir; that is money that I could not have got if I had not been in that office.

Q. You said, also, that you thought the emoluments of the office at present were quite large?—A. I don't know about that, but I see by the returns that in addition to the salary of $6,000, the district attorney gets $4,000 allowed in customs cases on the certificate of the judges, and I think the other emoluments of the office must make the total reach several thousands higher.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Is that any more than a man who is competent to discharge the duties of that office in New York ought to have?—A. In my opinion, it is not. I told the chairman here the other day that you could not get any competent lawyer there for less than $10,000 or $12,000.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How much does the judge get?—A. The judge gets an absurdity, three or four thousand dollars, and the result of that has been that when the district judgeship was vacant the profession had to go around begging lawyers who had private means to take the office.

Q. Have you a good judge there now?—A. He is a good judge. He has private means. When the office was vacant the judges and the prominent lawyers got together and sat down and looked over the list of lawyers to select a fit man for the position, and the first consideration was to see whether the man had means which would enable him to take the office, and the next to bring pressure to bear upon the men selected to try to get them to become candidates. They did me the honor to try to get me to become a candidate, Judge Blatchford did.

Q. But you would not consent?—A. I simply said that I did not think my make up was judicial.

Q. Did Judge Blatchford agree with you in that?—A. Well, he did not file a dissenting opinion. [Laughter.]

Q. Was it your opinion that your appointment as special assistant attorney-general, or special assistant district attorney, did not disqualify you from accepting employment in cases against the Government, and receiving fees for that service?—A. I did so consider.

Q. Had you read in that connection section 366 of the Revised Statutes?—A. I do not remember it now.

Q. Which provides that the special assistants to the Attorney-General and to the district attorney shall take the oath required by law to be taken by district attorneys, and shall be subject to all the liabilities imposed upon them by law?—A. I remember that section, sir.

Q. Is not the district attorney forbidden by statute from accepting any case against the Government, or representing any person in antagonism to the Government?—A. I don't remember whether he is or not. I don't recall that provision. Very likely he is, but I do not remember.

Q. Would not you be under the same liability?—A. Well, sir, that is a matter of law which you must judge of for yourself.

The CHAIRMAN. The district attorney would not be allowed, undoubtedly, to take any case against the Government or to prosecute any case in any Department against the Government and receive compensation therefor; and it might be a question whether a special assistant, who is by law made subject to the same liabilities, would not be also forbidden by the statute to do those things.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Are you employed by the Government now as a special assistant attorney-general?—A. No, sir; I never was a special assistant attorney-general. I was a special assistant district attorney. I was to have been appointed a special assistant attorney-general, but my commission was made out as a special assistant district attorney.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Were you not appointed a special assistant district attorney to go before the grand jury?—A. Subsequently I was by Mr. Corkhill, but that was an entirely different matter with which the Attorney-General had nothing to do.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. Do you occupy that position now?—A. No, sir; Mr Corkhill is out of office, and I am out of office ipso facto.

Q. So you hold no position under the Government now?—A. No position, I am happy to say.

By Mr. STEWART :

Q. Your appointment was expressly for the star-route cases?—A. Yes, sir; for them and for nothing else.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. Has your employment in that connection ceased?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose there is no harm in my saying that the employment of all the counsel in the case except, perhaps, Mr. Ker, has ceased.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. When did that take place?—A. Within a week or ten days.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. How many cases connected with these star-route matters has the Government now pending?—A. There are now pending of the indictments probably thirty, speaking in round numbers. I do not know whether there can be said to be any civil suits pending or not. I don't think any civil suits have been commenced. I have tried to have some commence, but I do not think that any have been commenced.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. When did your employment cease?—A. Last week.

Q. You state that all the counsel, except Mr. Ker, are now out of the cases?—A. Well, I know that Mr. Merrick is out of the cases.

Q. What has become of the case of the United States vs. Brady and Kellogg? I thought Mr. Merrick appeared for the Government in that.—A. He did; but after the order of Judge Wylie in court the other day, Mr. Merrick ceased to appear, and has retired from all the cases—not on that account necessarily, but after that order it became clear that that Kellogg case was not to be tried substantially, or at all events properly tried. Mr. Merrick is out of the cases; that is a fact within my knowledge.

By Mr. HEMPHILL :

Q. Why are all the counsel out of the cases?—A. I am out of the cases because the Attorney-General—I have repeatedly asked to be allowed to go out, and I have some letters here on that subject which I may ask the committee to let me put in evidence; and Mr. Brewster finally wrote me a letter last week agreeing that I should go out.

By Mr. MILLIKEN :

Q. Was that in answer to a request on your part to be let out?—A. No; not in answer to a request made at the moment, though I had previously made such a request. I will give you a history of that presently and will ask leave to read these letters.

By Mr. FYAN :

Q. Before you come to those letters let me ask you, was there ever an indictment prepared against Salisbury?—A. My impression is that Mr. Ker prepared indictments against all those parties whom the grand jury failed to indict. He did not perfect the indictments, but he got them all blocked out up to such a point that if bills had been found the indictments could have been completed within twenty-four hours, probably.

Q. Was Salisbury included in those indictments?—A. My recollection is that he was, and yet I would not be certain—oh, yes; he was.

Q. What was the reason that he was not indicted?—A. I cannot tell you.

Q. Was it on account of the absence of any witness?—A. I do not think there was any witness on the Salisbury routes that was absent.

Q. Do you know a witness by the name of Parrish?—A. No; I don't recall any such witness. I do not recall the absence of any witness that was essential.

Q. You do not think he was a material witness?—A. He may have been a good witness; but on the Salisbury routes which we put before the grand jury we had all the witnesses that we wanted; in fact, I had some witnesses on the Pembina and Fargo route, and also on the Wells and Hamilton routes, that I did not put on the stand.

Q. Were you here about the middle of June, 1882?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who represented Mr. Salisbury here?—A. Colonel Ingersoll.

Q. Did not General McKibben?—A. I don't know General McKibben by sight, and I have never understood that he represented Salisbury.

Q. Do you know that there were propositions made to Salisbury, or to McKibben, as his agent, that unless he paid a given sum of money by the 15th of June, this indictment would be presented to the grand jury and this witness Parrish brought on here?—A. I never heard of any such thing. If there was any such proposition made, it was made by somebody not then in the cases.

Q. Were Cook and Gibson in the cases then?—A. They were not.

Q. Do you know whether this indictment prepared against Salisbury was carried down to a certain part of this city and there presented to these parties, and they told that if this money was not paid by the 15th of June that case would be presented to the grand jury and this witness Parrish brought here?—A. There never was any indictment prepared by any one authorized in the case that was so taken, because Mr. Ker had an office in the Department of Justice, and the indictments were kept there very carefully, and unless there was infidelity——

Q. Do you know that the money was paid on the 16th of June?—A. No, sir; I never heard anything about it until this minute. If Mr. Salisbury paid any money he was fooled.

Q. Or if anybody paid it for him?—A. Or if anybody paid it for him.

Q. You have no recollection of the witness whose name I have mentioned?—A. No, sir; no present recollection; but in the Salisbury cases that were before the grand jury, we had no deficiency of witnesses.

Q. Then what reason do you give for not pressing the indictments? The Salisburys had a larger share in these routes than anybody else, hadn't they?—A. The Salisbury combination were understood to have had a large share, and I have no doubt they had, but Salisbury put forward his stage-drivers, Luke Voorhes, and other parties.

Q. Nominal parties?—A. Yes, sir; and, of course, in some cases where we were told that these men represented Salisbury, in point of fact they did not.

Q. But your belief was that the Salisbury combination represented a large per cent. of the total interest in these routes?—A. Yes, sir; a very large per cent. They had, however, this thing in their favor: they were actual mail contractors performing the services themselves, while the Dorseys were mere speculators in mail contracts, proposing to make their profit by letting the contracts out to other parties.

Q. If I understand you, it was not on account of the absence of any witness that there was a failure to indict Salisbury?—A. I never heard that it was because there was not any essential witness absent. Of course there may have been some witnesses that I never heard of who would have testified to actual corruption; but there was no one absent that I ever heard of whose absence would have made any difference so far as the indictment was concerned.

Q. Then how do you account for the failure to indict Salisbury?—A. Well, sir, I told you yesterday about the Vinita and Las Vegas route; and there is one thing that ought to be said which occurred to me after I went away. It may be that the grand jury were influenced somewhat by the petitions. There were a large number of petitions in regard to those routes, and while I do not recall the particular cases, it would be very extraordinary if among those petitions there were not letters and recommendations from Senators and Representatives, and the grand jury may have thought that although it was not wise to make the expedition, or to do this, that, or the other thing about the routes, yet that in view of those papers there was not sufficient evidence of corrupt intent. They may have thought so; I do not know.

Q. You are speaking now of the grand jury of which Mr. Mitchell was foreman?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you immediately after the adjournment of that grand jury say that you were perfectly satisfied with their action, that there was perhaps one other case that should have been included, but that on the whole their action was satisfactory to you?—A. No, sir. I said that of the cases we presented to them, there was perhaps one in which they had been right in not indicting.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What case was that?—A. The Soledad and Newhall route; and I think possibly I did say that I could see how by the absence of the witness of whom I have spoken they might consider the Vinita and Las Vegas case crippled, though I could not so regard it.

By Mr. F'YAN:

Q. Were there a large number of witnesses brought from a great distance who were not used before the grand jury?—A. There were witnesses brought here on the Wells and Hamilton route, and also on the Fargo and Pembina route, who, I think, were not used. They were tendered to the grand jury, but it was found that they would testify to things as to which the grand jury thought their testimony would be merely cumulative, and, therefore, I think there were probably three or four witnesses in all who were not examined; that is my present impression.

Q. Did you buy the mileage accounts of any of those witnesses at a discount?—A. No, sir. I may say here——

Q. Did you buy any of them at all?—A. Never. Let me tell you what I did: The Government, in its wisdom, has passed a law that there shall be no advances made to anybody. I was at one time $8,000 out of my personal pocket in advancing money to bring witnesses here, and for that money so advanced I had not a dollar of security. If any witness had not obeyed the subpoena and come here, I could not have got my money by any possibility, and always during the first trial I was out of pocket for advances to witnesses to pay their board bills, and so on, not less than $5,000; I never got a dollar interest on that money, and when Congress passed a bill increasing the witness fees of witnesses from west of the Mississippi River, and the witnesses had gone home, I remitted the amounts to them by money order or registered letter, and paid the expenses of transmission out of my own pocket, and have here the receipt for it.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. You mean that you remitted to them the increased fees?—A. Yes, sir; every cent of it, and paid the registration fees on the letters, and I have the receipts here.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. That is the way you got possession of the scrip of those witnesses?—

A. I never got possession of their scrip; I never had any of it.

Q. How did you get your pay?—A. I will tell you; for instance, there was a post-office inspector, Mr. Sharp, the present general inspector of the Post-Office Department, going from San Francisco up into Oregon to get witnesses, and I think I advanced out of my own pocket over $2,000 or $4,000 which was sent to him; he paid the witnesses sufficient for their traveling expenses to enable them to get here, and took their receipts; those receipts were sent to me; I held them here, and when the marshal was to pay the witnesses, they were paid upon my order, and I would give an order to pay the fees to the full amount, and would give one of the clerks in my office the man's receipt for the money that he had already had.

Q. The receipts were turned over to the marshal as vouchers?—A. No, not those receipts; the marshal took a full voucher, but my clerk went with the witnesses when they drew their pay and got their $600 or $800, or whatever it was, they turned over the amounts they had already received; there was one man, however, that "beat" me—got the whole of his money and went West without paying me.

Q. Do you say that this post-office inspector of whom you speak was Inspector Sharp, of Saint Louis?—A. That particular inspector who went up into Oregon was Mr. Sharp; he is now chief of the inspectors; that money was simply advanced to him to pay the witnesses so that they might be able to come here.

Q. And you think you advanced as much as $8,000?—A. I know that at one time I figured it up and it was as much as $8,000; some of the witnesses came from a long distance; there were witnesses from away up in Dakota and Montana, and they were quite numerous; I advanced money to be put into the hands of the different post-office inspectors to enable those witnesses to come to Washington.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Why did you make these advances?—A. The witnesses could not come here without it. They were mostly stage drivers and men engaged in that sort of business, who were unable to pay their traveling expenses for such a distance, and the statute provides that there shall not be any money advanced to witnesses. Money could be advanced to a bonded officer, but the trouble was that that bonded officer would not advance the money to the witnesses, and there was no way out of the difficulty except by raising the money outside. We were trying for some time, but when I sent out subpoenas for the witnesses to appear before the first grand jury, the question came up how we were going to get them here, and it was very clear that they could not travel those long distances for nothing, and as they were men who had no means to pay traveling expenses this difficulty arose, and I finally solved the difficulty by going to my bank account. I went and made a loan and paid interest on it and never got the interest back.

By Mr. STEWART :

Q. Did you make any profit on that transaction?—A. Not a cent; I lost. I lost in that way probably $200 or $300, but incidentally there was another class of expenses paid. There was a witness here from Missoula, Mont., who received a dispatch stating that one of his children was dead, and the rest of his family down with the scarlet fever, and that his family were suffering. That witness had been examined, but we knew that he would be attacked and we wanted to retain him here to use him in rebuttal. When he got this dispatch he was nearly crazy, and, of course, entirely unwilling to stay. He said that his family were out there in the woods and were suffering, and that he must go to them. But we wanted him to stay, and the result was that we used the Signal Service telegraph to have money advanced to his family, and the money was advanced and he staid. We did not get a report of the amount advanced until after the man had been paid his fees and had left, and the consequence is that I am that much out of pocket.

By Mr. FYAN :

Q. Did you hear Mr. Walsh testify?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you remark that you were utterly disappointed with the character of his testimony?—A. Never, sir. Let me say, further, about these advances, that while my accounts to the Government show, as I have said, $4,000 or $5,000 of expenses, in point of fact I paid out here for clerk hire and other matters which were not charged to the Government, matters where the clerks were working squarely on the Government business and nothing else, a considerable amount. I can put my finger on $2,890 that I paid out of my own pocket, and I have no doubt I paid more.

Q. That you never received back?—A. That I never received back and never presented any claim for. They were clerks that I had to employ, and time and again I worked the clerks all night. I suppose Mr. Merrick did the same thing in the way of paying clerk hire, though not to the same extent; and Mr. Ker the same, though not to the same extent. I think neither of those gentlemen, however, advanced money to witnesses.

Q. I understand you to say that you never made the remark that the testimony of Mr. Walsh entirely disappointed you?—A. Never, sir. Mr. Walsh testified so many times that I do not know what I may have said about some of his testimony.

Q. Did he testify before the Mitchell grand jury?—A. He testified before three grand juries, two of which I was before, and also twice in court.

Q. But you have no such recollection of making such a remark as I have asked you about?—A. No, sir; I have not. I recollect making a remark about Mr. Walsh's testimony before one of the grand juries, but it was not of that nature.

Q. You speak of having lost faith in Mr. Cook and Mr. Gibson?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of your own personal knowledge of any act of infidelity on the part of either of them?—A. No, sir; I know of no act of infidelity. I do not want to look farther than Gibson's report on the Phoenix and Prescott route, in which he reported practically that there was no fraud on that route. No, sir; I know of no particular act. They did not take me into their confidence.

Q. I understand that you were dissatisfied with them and were satisfied, in your own mind, that they were selling you out to the other side?—A. I became satisfied that they were selling the Government out to the other side, and I have given the facts which led me to that conclusion.

Q. Do you know of any fact within your own personal knowledge which justified that conclusion?—A. No, sir. There are certain other facts which I do not know even sufficiently to testify to; but when you get Mr. Woodward on the stand you will get the benefit of some of them.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if there are any witnesses to be called to testify to something Mr. Bliss has said it would be proper, in questioning Mr. Bliss about the matter, to suggest the time and place.

Mr. FYAN. I understand the rule to be that if you wish to impeach a witness you must refresh his memory in that way. I do not know that I desire to do any such thing as that in relation to these other matters, or in relation to this combination to prevent the Salisburys from being indicted; but there may be some witnesses on that point.

The WITNESS. I would be very glad to have them brought before the committee. I will now, with the permission of the committee, read some letters which show that I have from time to time desired to get relieved from service in these cases. The first is a letter which I wrote the Attorney-General after the termination of the first Dorsey trial:

SEPTEMBER 14, 1882.

DEAR SIR: The result of the Dorsey trial precipitates upon me a troublesome question which I have foreseen, but which I hoped to avoid by postponement.

I assume under the circumstances a second trial of this case will be deemed a necessity this fall or in the early winter.

I think a new trial would take much less time than the original one, still it must take many weeks. I came into the star-route cases reluctantly and under assurances, which I fully believed, as did those who made them, that they would require in the aggregate only a few weeks absence from my office and home, and much less prolonged labor than has in fact been indispensable. They have been found to require my continuous absence for weeks and months; for one entire year they have absolutely prevented me from undertaking any new business.

For this, as you know, no compensation which I could ask or you could grant could be a sufficient return, for it is the breaking up of a business built up by twenty-five years of devotion to my profession. Were this the only consideration, though, in view of the circumstances in which I came into the cases, I should deem myself at liberty to retire from them; still I should be disposed if it was thought important to make the sacrifice which would be required by my remaining in hope that some arrangement would be made by which less constant absence on my part would be required.

But the condition of my wife's health introduces another and imperative consideration. Circumstances have rendered her always, far more dependent on me than is ordinarily the case between husband and wife, and we have in nearly thirty years never been so much separated as during the last year. This has affected her spirits and indirectly her health. She is now in a condition which requires constant watching and care, a freedom on her part from all anxieties and annoyances, and a keeping up of her spirits.

She feels that my continued and constant absence would be greatly injurious to her, and an invalid's fixed belief in such a matter cannot be trifled with. The effect on her spirits of constant or continuous absence, or the prospect of it, would certainly be very injurious.

Under these circumstances, I desire that some arrangement should be made by which I may be allowed to retire absolutely from the star-route cases, or by which the "laboring oar" in them should be in other hands, and my presence in Washington should be exceptional.

Indeed, I do not see how I can undertake to promise any attendance in Washington which would be of any advantage to the Government.

Of course I need not assure you that I could not under any circumstances lose my personal interest in the cases or my conviction that every consideration requires that they should be vigorously pursued, and I should feel not only bound, but anxious at all times to render any aid in my power consistent with the facts to which I have called your attention.

Nor does it seem to be that my absence need be seriously felt.

The same ground is to be traveled over in the new trial which has already been traversed, and new counsel will have no difficulty in filling my place, though he will, of course, until he becomes familiar with the facts, labor under some disadvantages, but this will be an inconvenience to himself, not an injury to the case.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS,
Special Assistant United States Attorney.

Hon. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

I got no answer to that except a verbal message from Mr. Brewster, who was away from Washington at the time, that he had received the letter and would consider it when he returned to Washington.

By Mr. HEMPHILL:

Q. When was that letter which you have just read written?—A. On the 14th of September, 1882, after the termination of the first Dorsey trial. Subsequently, on the 7th of October, I wrote Mr. Brewster to say that my wife's health had improved, and that that consideration, therefore, which would have made me go out, whether he consented or not, had ceased to have force, and that the other reason, the loss from remaining in, was not one which, as a lawyer, I would have a right to insist upon if my withdrawal was thought likely to injure the cases. I got no definite answer to that. On the 25th of October, I wrote again, as follows:

OCTOBER 25, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I stayed over in Washington on Saturday to talk to you, and hung around the Department all day, but you were absent or busy; so I must resort to paper.

I appreciate your kindness and note your remarks passing my account. It was not intended to be a bill strictly confined to the days of trial but rather to cover these and bring up back charges from January 1 last. But that is unimportant.

When I went into the cases no one foresaw they would take so much time. Had I foreseen it I never should have consented on any terms to go into them. I, however, fully informed those who employed us, of the terms. I ordinarily charged and they agreed to them. When you came into the cases you agreed with me also.

I say this only as preliminary to what I am about to say.

A new trial commences in a few weeks. It will take most of the winter continuously. These, and also one or two other cases which must be tried. The condition of my wife's health has so much improved since I wrote you some time since that what I regarded as the imperative reason binding upon, overriding all questions of professional duty, has ceased to exist. I feel, therefore, not at liberty to withdraw if it is desired that I should remain, but rather than give such continuous attendance in Washington as I have hitherto done, I should prefer to withdraw, though on the other hand my belief that we shall succeed on the next trial, and especially that we shall convict Dorsey with the new evidence, gives me a desire to see this case at least through.

I therefore leave the question of my remaining in your hands, suggesting that it should be speedily settled; that you confer with my associates and see if they do not concur with me in thinking that I could be dispensed with without serious injury to the case.

In considering the question of withdrawal bear in mind that, with Merrick, Ker, and myself in the cases, the counsel fees must necessarily, in the amounts paid to each and in the aggregate, become large, so large that there will be and must be public criticism. No reduction in the rate of fees, even if counsel consulted to them, would prevent this. Lawyers' bills always have been and always will be criticised when paid by the public, no matter what their rate.

As for myself, when I went into the cases I distinctly notified those who employed me that I knew my bills would be criticised any way, and that I should therefore charge what I thought my services were worth, what others paid me, and would accept, personally, any criticism made, and they must be prepared for their share. You are not necessarily their successor in this respect, and have a right to reduce the number of counsel and their bills. I only desire to suggest these considerations to you. I have floating in my brain a theory of adjustment, under which no counsel would be dispensed with, and expenses would be reduced. But it has not crystallized into shape, nor if it had, could I place it on paper without liability to misconstruction.

One thing more. The First Comptroller has hung up my bill, saying he wanted to see you. I call your attention to, and assume you will now allow any subordinate officer to revise an exercise of discretion which the law rests in you.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS.

Hon. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Subsequently, in connection with the civil suits, as late as July, 1883, I wrote Mr. Brewster the following letter:

JULY 24, 1883.

DEAR SIR: One or two paragraphs in the newspapers remind me that it is possible I may be held to a responsibility while not aware of it.

As to the civil suits in the star-route cases I wrote you at some length—early last month I think it was—and also had a conversation with you. I called your attention to the fact that while I had been employed in these cases by Postmaster-General James, and with your approval had done something in them, I did not feel sure that you had ever directly sanctioned my employment; that if the cases were to be tried in various forms where jurisdiction could be got, I did not feel that I ought to undertake the responsibility of trial, nor that you ought to incur the expense of employing me to leave home continuously; that, however, if it was desired I should be glad to continue in charge of all that class of cases as special counsel, preparing the papers, selecting and securing jurisdiction in the places where it seemed probable the fairest trial could be had, and instructing the district attorney or whoever else might be selected to try the cases. This is to be done at a compensation to be fixed by you, either beforehand or after the work was done (though the statute probably looks somewhat to the former, which, however, is, I think, not followed in practice).

This idea seemed in conversation to commend itself to you, yet I did not understand that you decided it finally.

Now I see it stated in the papers that I am “in charge of the civil suits.” If you consider me so, please say so, and I will endeavor to justify your confidence. But, on the other hand, consider yourself free to act wholly without reference to the past.

Yours, truly,

GEORGE BLISS,
Special Assistant Attorney.

Hon. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Whoever has charge of the cases, permit me to say that they should be brought with great, and, so far as the pleadings are concerned, in a form outside of the usual ones in P. O. cases.

To that last letter Mr. Brewster replied that the civil suits should remain as they were, with nothing done about them. To the other letters he finally replied, saying that I must not retire, that he would not consent, that I must remain in the cases.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did he communicate that to you verbally or in writing?—A. I think he communicated it in writing. He certainly did say so in writing. On the 15th of September, 1882, he wrote me from Newport, in reply to the first letter that I have read here, saying:

I can hardly entertain the idea of your leaving the case. You have been and are essential to its safe and prosperous conduct. Do not proclaim this proposed withdrawal in any way till we see each other, or at least until I can be back in Washington and be able to adjust matters. As to this I must respectfully and kindly insist that you will withhold your public or private announcement of it in any way for the present.

Then on the 9th of October, 1882, he wrote me again :

As to the star-route cases and their future management. As I wrote you before, I will leave things, as far as you are concerned, suspended and subject to future necessities and future considerations.

On the 25th of October he wrote me as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, October 25, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 25th of October is now in my hand. I read it with great care. It is a letter such as I supposed you would have written to me.

In the star-route case you have done your duty faithfully, industriously, ably, and with the strictest integrity. Your bill I indorsed and mean to stand by. I regretted that so large a sum at once was asked for, and wished you had presented it at different times before, so that you might have collected it by installments. What was agreed to be paid to you by those who retained you must be paid to you; good faith must be kept with you. In allowing it I have not merely exercised a discretion; I have only ratified what others contracted to do.

As to the future, my conviction is that your presence in these cases is essential, and it is my desire that you will remain in them. The good of the cases requires your presence, and every consideration of prudence would make your absence a thing to be regretted. However, we will talk further or write further about this hereafter. It is a happy thing that the health of your wife will permit you to act in them.

As to your colleagues in the case, I have not conferred with them, for Mr. Ker is away, and I only retained Mr. Ker for a special duty, because you asked for such a person, and that was the preparation of the pleadings. He has been of value since then in many other ways, but the general charge of the case I did not confide to him. I intended that he should be detailed to act under your immediate and special direction in the preparation of the pleadings, and in such other duties as you might require him to do. Mr. Merrick was retained to fill the vacancy occasioned by my withdrawal.

Upon reflection I would prefer, as at present advised, to leave the matter of your remaining to be the subject of our consideration. It is due to your position and dignity that it should be a matter that would rest exclusively between us. The case is under my control officially, and I am responsible, no matter what is done, and that responsibility I would assume after a conference with you hereafter. At present hold yourself as being advised by me that any suggestion of withdrawal is declined.

You intimate that you have in your mind some unadjusted thoughts as to the arrangement of compensation in the case, which you would convey to me hereafter. I will gladly hear anything you have to say, for I never have yet had a conference with you without feeling its advantage. My presence in the case is no cost to the Government, and what is paid to other counsel for their services is but their due. In view of all this, it seems to me that, expensive as the cases are, by my presence without any fees paid to me for extra and unusual labor, the cost is abated and reduced pro tanto from that which would otherwise be added to them.

I again congratulate you upon the happy recovery of your wife, and send to you my most cordial, earnest, and sincere expressions of unbroken good feeling and constant regard for you.

Truly yours, with respect,

BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

GEORGE BLISS, Esq.,
Care Bliss & Shley,
No. 160 Broadway, New York.

POST SCRIPTUM.—I inclose you a copy of the Cincinnati Daily Gazette, in which there is a letter written upon the subject evidently of pursuing those Salisbury cases. I desire you to give them attention. Do not let any delay benefit them. The statute may run, and then you would be censured. As to the tone of the article, I understand it and the purpose of the people who wrote it. I do most earnestly call your attention to this Salisbury matter, and all these other cases where the statute may possibly run.

BREWSTER.

Q. That was between the first and the second trial of the Dorsey case?—A. Yes, sir. Prior to that, on the 28th of September, he had written me from Newport, urging me to go on and prepare for the second trial, and stating that he must have the second trial of the cases in December, and that I must go on.

Subsequently, in the fall of 1883, I made another application to be allowed to withdraw.

Q. That was after the second trial?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that a verbal application, or was it made in writing?—A. It was made in writing, but I do not seem to have it here. The Attorney-General replied to me on the 20th of September, 1883, saying:

In the meanwhile I propose to be in Washington myself in the early part of October, and then I will take up your letter and be able to answer it as to the necessity of your presence in the case. I am reluctant to even entertain your suggestion of withdrawal until I confer with Mr. Merrick. I have taken this early opportunity to advise you that the case will not be heard until November, so that you may arrange your business with reference to that fact. As soon after I reach Washington as I conveniently can, I will confer with Mr. Merrick, and then come to a conclusion with reference to your proposed withdrawal from the case or retention in it, which thought, you must remember, has been prompted by yourself, and, if adopted to suit your convenience and your wishes, I will be obliged to reorganize the whole staff of counsel, as intimated in your note to me. However, I will in time advise you, and take especial care not to take you by surprise or have it interfere with your business in New York.

And he subsequently told me that I must not go out of the case.

Q. Which suit was referred to in that letter?—A. That referred to the Kellogg case, which was then expected to be tried, and I represented that I was not important in that case.

Q. Was there any suggestion as to the propriety of beginning civil suits at that time?—A. Not at that time.

Q. When was that matter discussed between the counsel, and what was done with reference to it?—A. Let me finish about this proposed withdrawal. I do not know that subsequently I ever made any application to be allowed to withdraw, but I sought to be allowed not to come here. For instance, on some of the motions that were made, I wrote representing that I did not think I was needed, and that it would simply run up the aggregate of the bills for me to attend, and I recollect that in one case I said that it would be very convenient for me to come to Washington at that time, but that I did not think it was necessary for Mr. Merrick and Mr. Ker and me to be here on the same motion and that as it would increase the expenses I did not think I would come, but I received a peremptory dispatch from Mr. Brewster, directing me to attend. I have not, I think, at any other time, sought to retire, but I may say that I had a theory that during the trial, or during the summing up (the summings up, as you remember, were very long), it was not necessary for all the counsel to remain here, and that it might be so arranged as each counsel got through his argument he could retire, leaving but one counsel at a time to remain there while the others were talking; but I received a letter from Mr. Brewster, dated the 29th of April, 1883, in which he stated that he desired that I should remain during the argument; that I was known to be the one who was very familiar with all the details of the case, papers, &c., and qualified to correct any misrepresentations or mistakes, and that he desired that I should remain. I merely mention that as bearing upon the question of any desire on my part, such as has been alleged, to prolong the case for the purpose of running up fees. The matter went on in that way until last week, when at the time the motion was made to bring on the Kellogg case, I did not come here and the Attorney-General after that addressed me a letter saying he thought the time had now come when he could yield to my repeatedly expressed wishes to go out of the cases.

Q. Have you that letter with you?—A. Yes. Here it is. I will read it.

In re United States vs. William P. Kellogg.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, March 29, 1884.

SIR: To-day, upon an application upon the part of the defendant, Mr. Kellogg, the court ordered his case to be tried upon the 21st day of April, and this makes it necessary for me to express to you a determination I have had in my mind for some time past, and which certainly will not be unpleasant for you to learn, as it conforms to the frequent offers made by you to me to surrender your charge of the star-route cases, to wit, that I will for the future dispense with your services in any of these star-route cases.

I do so for two reasons. First, because there is no necessity for your services; secondly, because it relieves the Government of large expense necessarily incurred by bringing you here, and requiring your action in the cases.

It was for this reason that I did not give you or Mr. Ker notice of this Kellogg matter to-day, for inasmuch as at present Mr. Merrick has had the charge of endeavoring to find Mr. Walsh, he alone was required in court to state what he had done, and how he had done it. All that you had done was made plain in the former application, and I therefore did not think it necessary to expose you to the trouble or the Government to the expense of bringing you here to appear in the case and answer the application, knowing it could not be very agreeable to you to be so vexed with this matter.

Mr. Merrick will withdraw from the cases also. This is a piece of personal information that I give you. He has for some time past, by letter and orally, urged me to be permitted to withdraw. I never have intended that he would try the cases after the vehement charges made by Mr. Kellogg that Mr. Merrick was instigating the cases for malicious reasons. I thought that Mr. Merrick's own dignity of character and self-respect would forbid his taking charge of the case when he rested under such accusation from the defendant, and so Mr. Merrick thought himself. All papers that you have in the star-route matters properly belonging to the Government—all of them—you will please transmit to this Department at your earliest opportunity, for they are of value and it may be necessary to use them at some future day. Of course I do not mean those papers that are strictly your private papers, but I mean those that were received from the Government; and also, without invading your private rights, if there be any that have been prepared by yourself, which if surrendered would be of service to the Government, I desire them. Please give this your early attention.

Very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

GEO. BLISS, Esq.,
Attorney at Law, 160 Broadway, New York City.

Q. Have you responded to that letter?—A. I have not. I received that letter in New York when I was preparing to come here. I did not get it until, I think, the 31st of March. I believe I got it Monday, and I left Monday afternoon for Washington.

Q. Have you conferred with Mr. Merrick with regard to his retiring from the cases?—A. I saw Mr. Merrick last night for the first time for some weeks, and I learned from him that he had retired from the case.

Q. Was it for the reason stated in that letter?—A. We did not go very much into the reasons. It was assumed that that was so. He read that letter and there was no dissent from it. We did not discuss the reasons except that I knew he wanted to go out.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. There is no special counsel in the cases now except Mr. Ker?—A. Not to my knowledge. I have no knowledge of anybody else being in the cases but Mr. Ker. Mr. Ker is here now, and I suppose is engaged in getting ready for the trial (though I have not asked him about it), and I presume somebody else is to be brought into the case with him, but I have no knowledge as to that.

By Mr. HEMPHILL:

Q. Mr. Ker, you say, is still in the case?—A. I understand so. I have had nothing to do with the Kellogg case. Mr. Walsh set me aside, and I have had very little to do with that case, while Mr. Ker has had a great deal.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Is that all that you desire to say on that subject of discontinuing your service?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I desire to ask you what was done by you and the other counsel for the Government in reference to bringing civil suits against star-route parties to recover the amounts improperly received by them from the Government?—A. Well, in December, 1881, the Postmaster-General, acting under the clause of the statute which directs him to take measures to see that any moneys improperly withdrawn from the postal funds are refunded, addressed me a letter, asking me to take charge of the civil suits. There was a question as to whether that clause of the postal laws contained in the Revised Statutes overruled the provision of the Department of Justice act, which provided that no counsel should be employed except by the Department of Justice. I thought they went along pari passu. Mr. Brewster was about to become Attorney-General. He saw in the papers what Mr. James had done, and he wrote me a private letter, saying that he had seen that announcement, and that as soon as he reached Washington and became Attorney-General he would approve the action, if that were necessary.

Q. Do you refer to section 4057 of the Revised Statutes relative to the Postmaster-General instituting suits?—A. Yes, sir; that is it. It provides that—

In all cases where money has been taken out of the funds of the Post-Office Department under the pretense that service has been performed therefor, when in fact such service has not been performed, or as additional allowances for increased service actually rendered, when the additional allowance exceeds the sum which, according to law, might rightfully have been allowed therefor, and in all other cases where money of the Department has been paid to any person in consequence of fraudulent representations, or by mistake, collusion, or misconduct of any officer or other employé in the postal service, the Postmaster-General shall cause suit to be brought to recover such wrong or fraudulent payment or excess, with interest thereon.

Then there is the provision in relation to the Department of Justice, which says that nobody but the Attorney-General shall have a right to employ counsel, and my view was that it would require the authority of the Attorney-General for anybody to act.

Q. Was there any difference between the Postmaster-General and the Attorney-General on that point?—A. Not the least.

Q. The Postmaster-General agreed that the Attorney-General must bring these suits?—A. That was the understanding. I said to Mr. James that that was so, and he did not dissent. After Mr. Brewster became Attorney-General he sanctioned my going on, but not in writing, I think. However, I had as much as I could do, and I told him that the statute of limitations could not run against the civil suits, and that in my opinion we had better fight the parties in the criminal cases. Under that retainer, therefore, I did nothing, and all that I considered as done in that connection was the matter in relation to the arbitration. And let me say here about that arbitration that as these men were still contractors, and their contracts were still running, it was possible for the Government at any time to hold their pay, and in that way it would have security for the carrying out of the arbitration arrangement.

Q. In view of the section of the statute requiring suits to be brought, was not that arbitration arrangement absolutely extrajudicial and illegal?—A. I regarded the arbitration as a matter about which there was doubt as to whether it was enforceable, but it was a one sided arrangement, and if those parties were willing to come in and agree to it I believed it was for the interest of the Government to enter into it.

Q. Would not this statute require a suit to be brought first in the courts, and then the arbitration to be made on the suit, if there was to be an arbitration?—A. If we were proceeding under that statute I think it would, but I proceeded, as to that, on the general idea of the authority of the Department of Justice to seek to recover money for the Government.

Q. Was any specific amount certified to you as chief counsel for the Government in these cases by the Postmaster-General or the Attorney-General as the sum claimed to be due, or found to be due, from the star-route contractors in those cases, and for which civil suits should be brought?—A. Nothing was done in that civil suit matter until pending the Dorsey trial, which ended, I think, on the 12th of September, 1882. We were all pretty well fagged out then, and we went away to take some rest. Subsequently I urged proceeding with the arbitration which, as I have explained, was not done. The matter remained until after the second trial. Before that time, however, Mr. Brewster had intimated to me, in connection with the question of my retainer to proceed in the civil suit, that he thought that matter had perhaps better stand suspended. I had a conversation with him in which I told him that it was very clear to my mind that the civil suits ought not to be brought in Washington.

Q. Why?—A. Because I hadn't any faith in Washington juries. I told him that the suits ought to be brought where we could get jurisdiction. Salisbury lived at Salt Lake City, and I said I didn't think it was wise to bring suit there either.

Q. What was the objection to that?—A. Simply because it was his home, and because I thought the Government of the United States would not have a very good show in Salt Lake City. At all events I expressed the opinion that it would be wise to have these suits brought somewhere in the Western States—Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, or somewhere out there; and I know that after Mr. Gresham came here as Postmaster-General I talked with him about that.

Q. Where could the Government bring those suits and have jurisdiction?—A. Any place where you could get jurisdiction of the persons.

Q. You could get that only where the persons resided, or might be found?—A. Well, I had ascertained that by a little care personal service could be obtained upon all the parties whom we desired to proceed against in localities where both sides would be fairly treated, and I suggested that some attention be devoted to doing it in that way. The other plan would involve bringing suits all over the country, and I suggested that I could not afford to attend to them, and one of these letters that I have read shows the same general idea. That idea I repeated in conversation, and urged in various forms, and it seemed to commend itself.

Q. If these parties who were indebted to the Government by reason of having made illegal or improper charges were willing to arbitrate the cases and to pay the judgments that might be found in arbitration, why could not you have proceeded against them civilly in the District of Columbia or anywhere else and obtained a fair offer from them?—A. My theory about that was this: That after that proposed arbitration proceeding was thrown over and the Government had refused to stand by it, we were remitted to the position of ordinary litigants, and would have to fight just as if no such negotiation had ever been proposed.

Q. But couldn't you have obtained their consent to the institution of suits and then the reference of those suits to arbitration?—A. I thought with reference to that that perhaps it might have been done. You must remember that in speaking here of the arbitration, I read my letter expressing my own opinion on that subject and calling attention to the fact that perhaps that might be done. The last letter that I saw was a letter to the Attorney-General looking to that view, but I don't know what was done with it. The arbitration was taken out of my hands entirely.

Q. State whether you had any knowledge of the facts as to the responsibility of these defendants, and their ability to pay any judgment that you might obtain against them.—A. I was going on to state what I did about that. Afterwards, as you saw, I addressed the letter that I have read to the Attorney-General, and then in June the Attorney-General asked me to see Judge Gresham with reference to the civil suits, saying that he was very earnest in his desire that they should be proceeded with. I have here the letter of the Attorney-General, which is dated June 4, 1883, and which I will read :

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, June 4, 1883.

DEAR SIR: To-day Mr. Postmaster-General Gresham called upon me to learn what had been done with reference to suing these indicted star-route men, under the act of Congress, to recover back the money that they have defrauded the Government of. I told him it was my impression that I had, in conjunction with Postmaster-General James or Postmaster-General Howe, requested you to take charge of those matters, and that you had suspended action in them because of the existing criminal proceedings, thinking it more prudent to wait until they were done. He also alluded to the Salisbury case, and that reference; is very eager about both; wants them both to be prosecuted for the purpose of collecting the money, and thinks it his duty not to delay the matter, and I rather coincide with him. I wish you would see him at once upon this subject. I told him you and I had much correspondence upon the subject of that Salisbury matter. I wish you would explain it all to him. It is important that you should see him and explain all you know about it.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

GEORGE BLISS, Esq.,
*Special Assistant United States Attorney
in the Star-Route Cases, Washington, D. C.*

I went and saw Judge Gresham and had a long talk with him, going over the whole subject, and suggested to him that it was necessary that there should be prepared detailed statements—not only the ordinary formal statements of account which are prepared by the Auditor and sent to the Solicitor of the Treasury (which is a mere balancing of accounts), but very detailed statements on the subject; that there were difficulties arising from the fact that by the subcontract law the Government had recognized the subcontractors' rights, and that money going to the subcontractors, even though, apart from the fraud, they could not have obtained it, yet the subcontractor having no knowledge of the fraud and having done the work, there was a question presented as to whether such money could be recovered; that there were subcontracts on file and off file, and a great deal of detail of that sort that ought to be attended to. Judge Gresham informed me that they were having prepared just such detailed statements as I had spoken of.

Q. Have you seen those yet?—A. After that interview I wrote to Mr.

Brewster on the 24th of July with reference to this matter, again suggesting, as I recollect it, that the cases proceed. I think I have not a copy of that letter here. He replied to me from Long Branch on the 25th of July as follows:

HOWLAND HOTEL,
Long Branch, N. J., July 25, 1883.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 24th of July was handed to me to-day. Some month or more ago—perhaps two months—as I have advised you, the Postmaster-General communicated with me upon the subject of the civil suits arising out of the star-route cases. In consequence of that I put you in the direct communication with him, and I conveyed to him copies of all the correspondence between the Department of Justice and yourself as to these cases. You gave me a verbal but brief account of your interview with the Postmaster-General, and I understood you to say that you were to be retained to assist, in some general way, in the prosecution of those civil suits. [The Postmaster-General assumed that I was to be retained. I said that it was not by any means certain that I was; that it rested with Mr. Brewster, but I certainly would not be retained to try the cases.]

I have not the correspondence by me at this place, or probably I would find in some one of your notes written to me at or about that time a statement of the result of your interview with the Postmaster-General, and what you understood your position to be. My recollection now is that you were to have charge of them in some general way, and much to be left to your discretion as to when and where you would appear, your desire being that you would not add expense to the case by going to any remote point if it would be necessary to bring suits other than in Washington or New York, or in some other jurisdiction. Indeed, if I am not much amiss, I now remember that it was your purpose mainly to supervise such suits as might be brought in Washington or in New York so as to avoid expense that would be occasioned by your absence from your business in New York.

Since that time the Postmaster-General has verbally said to me that he was having the papers prepared for the purpose of directing suits to be brought. I believe much labor was necessary to arrange the papers and adjust the accounts, and get things ready for the suits. You know that by statute it lies with the Postmaster-General alone to direct suits or not to direct them. I have no power, except as I am requested by him, to direct action to be taken, or to take action myself. When he reports to me the result of his preparations and requests me to bring certain suits to recover claims, of which I can know nothing unless they were so reported to me, I will then be ready and prepared to communicate with you.

When I first became Attorney-General, and we advised together upon this subject, it was after you conveyed to me the information that Mr. James had deputed you to take charge of these civil cases, and I understood from you that before you intended to act it was your wish that I should know that you so proposed to do, that I should know by what authority you would undertake to act, and that you wished to have my sanction as the head of the Department of Justice to any such suits as you might think it proper to bring under the authority given to you by Mr. James. Then I promptly accepted your proposals and suggestions, and assented to your immediate action if you thought it necessary, under the instructions you had received from the Post-Office Department.

The impression I had soon after that communication made by you, and to which I responded, I believe, in writing, was that it was considered inexpedient to begin those civil suits at that time, because of the urgency of the criminal proceedings; and from time to time since then, in my letters to you, I have adverted to these outstanding cases and reminded you of them, indicating my intentions to speed them whenever the Post-Office Department and yourself were ready to act, and I have been ever since prepared to sanction such suits, and instruct and direct them when they were brought.

The suggestion of your letter of the 24th of July I will remember. I will also send a copy of that letter to the Postmaster-General, and of this also.

Very respectfully yours,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

GEORGE BLISS, Esq.,
Special Assistant United States Attorney in the star-route cases, New York City.

Since that time I have written Mr. Brewster two letters on the subject, suggesting proceedings and a mode of procedure. The last plan that I suggested to him was that he might employ some bright young attorney at a salary, who should have general charge of these suits and at the same time confide the more important matters of the preparation of the pleadings and various things of that character to some counsel whom he should select in Washington or elsewhere, and that in that way the matter might be done without any considerable expense. I learned that the Attorney-General received on the 25th of October the detailed statements to which I have referred.

Q. Were they laid before you?—A. They were not laid before me. The question of what should be done with the civil suits and who should have charge of them was kept in abeyance by Mr. Brewster. He talked at one time of sending them to Mr. Valentine, the district attorney in Philadelphia, who had shown himself very competent in some of these matters, and after a time I thought I saw a way to get jurisdiction of a civil suit against Mr. Dorsey in a forum where I thought there would be no question of fair treatment. I then made personal application to Mr. Brewster, saying that I did not want to be bulging into the cases, but that there was such a condition of things that I wished he would let me have the papers in that case, that I did not care to continue in it, and that all questions of compensation might be left in abeyance for his subsequent consideration. He then did send me statements of all the routes which were embraced in the Dorsey indictment. It turned out, however, that the Postmaster-General had made those statements out in the ordinary skeleton form, referring to the evidence upon the trial as applicable to them. When I came to look at those statements in connection with the subcontract law, I found that that law came in my way. It did not appear how much of the money had been paid to or on the orders of Dorsey himself, and I wrote to Mr. Brewster that fact, and said that I thought it would be necessary to make an examination in Washington on that point. Subsequently I came here and made an examination and got the details.

Q. What did you find?—A. As against Stephen W. Dorsey I found between $100,000 and $200,000 that I thought the Government could recover from him. That was between $100,000 and $200,000 which had been paid either to him upon these nineteen routes, or upon orders given to him or drafts indorsed by him. That left out the subcontractors. Accompanying those were sent me also the papers against Peck, Miner, Vail, and John W. Dorsey. I wrote to the Attorney-General, saying that Peck was dead, leaving substantially no estate, that John W. Dorsey and Miner were irresponsible, and that it seemed to me not wise to be sending good money after bad by suing irresponsible men; that as to Vail, he was rich and was out in Missouri. I said that I did not suppose the Attorney-General desired to send me the case, if he did to let me know, but that what I was looking after was the case against Stephen W. Dorsey. The arrangement I had made to get jurisdiction of Dorsey was this. It would have been an action in rem, and it failed in consequence of the sudden death of a gentleman.

Q. Mr. Bosler?—A. Mr. Bosler. He, as president of the company, had purchased Dorsey's ranch, and under other circumstances had in his possession property of Mr. Dorsey, and when Bosler came to New York I proposed to attach it. But Mr. Bosler suddenly died the very day, I think, he was leaving for New York. Therefore, subsequent to that I wrote to the Attorney-General saying that my efforts to secure this attachment as against Dorsey had failed; that I had retained the papers, because I understood that Dorsey was in Washington, and my information was that he was likely to come to New York, so that personal service might be had there. However, I learned that he would not come to New York and was going to start for New Mexico early in the following week. My letter was written, I think, on Thursday, and it suggested that in going there he would pass through Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, in either one of which States Judge Gresham had assured me the Government would have fair treatment, and as either one of those was nearer the place where witnesses would have to be brought from than any place in the East, it seemed to me that the proceedings should be taken to get personal service upon Dorsey there. The Attorney-General wrote me saying that he had received my letter and had referred it to the Postmaster-General, and that is all I know about it.

Q. You have had no further answer?—A. No further answer. I understand, though, that no suit has been commenced. I understand, from something that has been told me since I came here by one of these omniscient press gentlemen, that while the gentleman who was expected to travel with Mr. Dorsey left by the ordinary train, Mr. Dorsey went by a little different and somewhat circuitous route, and this gentleman said he supposed that my plan of securing personal service might have reached Dorsey, and that he tried thus to avoid it by going that way. I have no knowledge, however, on that subject beyond what has been told me.

Q. It has been suggested, Mr. Bliss, that in order to retaliate upon Dorsey for eluding you you have interfered with a suit affecting him in the Territory of New Mexico, and have secured there some action unfavorable to him.—A. Nothing of the kind is true.

Q. You are not acquainted with the proceeding?—A. No, sir. Now that you speak of it, I did see it in the papers that he had got into a row with Bosler's company, but I had nothing to do with it in any way.

Q. State whether these defendants were responsible for the sums that the Government might reasonably claim from them.—A. Except Stephen W. Dorsey, they were not. I suppose him to be so. As to the Salisburys and the Parkers, I understand that they are responsible.

Q. They are still contractors, are they not?—A. I do not know. I understand them to be still responsible. There is a difficulty, however, which was one of the things that was to be avoided by the arbitration. Luke Voorhees, for instance, is the contractor. Now, Voorhees makes a subcontract with O. J. Salisbury, and the increase and everything of that sort which is alleged to be fraudulent is done while Voorhees is the contractor and before there is any subcontract on file. Now, you can trace the money probably to Salisbury, but there comes in the question, which is a matter of evidence very largely, as to whether you can prove the connection between Salisbury and Voorhees. It is the same with Kerns and Griffith and various other cases of that kind. The Salisburys did a great deal of business in that way by putting forward dummies.

Q. Did you see the statement that the Postmaster-General had prepared of the amounts claimed to be due from these star-route contractors?—A. I never have seen it in possession of the Department of Justice. Since you have summoned me here, when I went to the Post-Office Department for the purpose of getting some facts about this Phoenix and Prescott route, the present Second Assistant Postmaster-General showed me a thick paper that had been prepared, but I did not feel that I had any right to go over it, and I did not go over it except as to the Phoenix and Prescott route. Technically, my relations with the Government had ceased, and as I saw that that was a paper that this committee had called for, and there had been some question as to whether it should be published, I thought I must regard myself as an outsider, and therefore I did not go over it.

Q. You do not know the aggregate amount?—A. I do not; I don't know whether it stated the aggregate; it was quite a thick paper, and I looked over only three or four pages.

Q. So far as you know no civil suits have been brought against any of those contractors?—A. I am very confident no civil suits have been brought. Now, if I may state what I understand to be the facts I will do so. I understand that within a few days the papers in the civil suits have been referred to a gentleman bearing the same name that I do, and yet no earthly relation to me, Mr. William H. Bliss, United States attorney at Saint Louis, who is, by education and experience, I think, as competent a man as can be found in the country to take charge of such cases. He labors, however, under the difficulty of having no knowledge of the interior arrangement of the business of the Post-Office Department, and without considerable special education you cannot appreciate, in my opinion, the force of the cases. If suits are to be brought and prosecuted, Mr. Bliss's experience and the results of his action show that he is as competent a man as can be found anywhere. I understand that he is now in the city engaged in the examination of these cases.

Q. In regard to the employment of detectives, I see in Executive Document No. 40 (matter called for by the Senate), beginning on page 37, a number of accounts of detectives for expenses and services in cases connected with the star-route frauds?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who employed these detectives?—A. Well, sir, that was done in this way. We were about to go to trial in the first Dorsey case. As I have already testified, we considered the wisdom of applying to have the jury kept confined during the trial, but we ascertained that Judge Wylie was of the opinion that it could not be done in such a case, and moreover that if it could be done, it was not a wise thing to do. We did not agree with him in relation to that, but it was pretty clear before we got through that in one phase of the case he was right. I think that if the jury had been shut up during that entire summer we certainly would have had a mistrial. Under that condition of things people brought us various stories of this jurymen and that jurymen, that he was doing queer things and meeting with queer people, and in consultation with the other counsel it was decided to recommend that detectives be employed to watch certain jurymen. Of course there were certain jurymen that were of such high standing in the community that we did not think they could be approached. The Attorney-General was communicated with, and he authorized the employment of the detectives, and Mr. Ker sent to Philadelphia for Capt. Lyndon, who was in charge of Pinkerton's service in Philadelphia, and he came here and brought his operatives, and they were employed in that way. I never saw them or had anything to do with them. I think I did once see Lyndon, but that whole business was more in charge of Mr. Ker and Mr. Merrick than of myself.

Q. What were the duties of those detectives?—A. Either of the gentlemen I have named can tell you that better than I can. I can simply state in a general way what we learned which led to their employment. For instance, that a jurymen was in the habit of meeting at a particular place such a man, who was known to be in the employment of the other side, and he was "shadowed." That was the general idea. They were shadowing the jury, with instructions under no circumstances to ever say a word to any jurymen. They also made reports which I never saw.

Q. Did they continue to be employed during the whole of the first trial?—A. I think not. I think we became satisfied that while we got an enormous amount of suspicious matter it would not lead to anything practical, and therefore I think their employment was stopped before the close of the trial.

Q. Did you examine the reports of those detectives to know what they had been doing?—A. I never saw their reports.

Q. How did you know, then, that they were giving suspicious information?—A. I never saw the reports.

Q. Who approved the reports?—A. It is possible that my name appears upon some of them, though I think the bulk of them were approved, not by me, but by Mr. Ker and Mr. Merrick. I think so, but I cannot say so with any certainty. This statement (in Ex. Doc. 40) does not show. Here is one that I approved. That reminds me. In New York I sent for the Pinkerton people there, and made an arrangement with them by which their charge should be $2 a day, which was less than they charged to ordinary private parties. I communicated that fact to the Attorney-General, and it was approved. The amount that they were to be paid per diem was arranged in that way beforehand.

Q. You say that the information that these detectives obtained was not furnished to the counsel in the case?—A. Oh, yes, sir; it was furnished to Mr. Merrick and Mr. Ker; but in the Dorsey case we put 3,600 exhibits, and all of those involved an infinitude of detail, and all of that was in my charge, and so were the witnesses, and I had as much as I could do, or as any man would want to do, and for that reason this other business was thrown onto these other gentlemen.

Q. Then you never received any reports from the detectives?—A. I never received any from them. I saw at Mr. Merrick's office certain reports, and I may have fingered over one, and it is possible that some particular one may have been taken up and my attention called to it or to some passage in it.

Q. Was your attention called to that passage which contains a charge for "expense with Mahone and two Congressmen seeking information, 45 cts."?—A. (Laughter.) No, sir; I think my attention was not called to any of those items of expense.

Q. From the accounts the principal occupation of these detectives seems to have been to take drinks and ride on the street cars?—A. Well, that was for the benefit of two influential classes in the Washington community.

Q. I did not know whether the detectives were useful in the trial or not.—A. If you ask my opinion about that, my opinion always was that that business did not pay expenses. I thought it was a wise thing to undertake it, but as it turned out it did not pay expenses, and therefore we did not repeat the experiment on the second trial. I think it was abandoned even on the first trial before we got through with the trial. I feel quite certain that if the detectives were not all discharged the number employed was very much reduced.

Q. Among your personal expense accounts I see that your bills were generally for board at the Arlington; is that the place where you usually stopped?—A. Yes, sir. I see there is some criticism by Mr. Cook as to certain items in my expense accounts. I paid $10 a day for the simple reason, as I have told the committee, that it was necessary for me to spend my entire evenings and very far into the night in seeing witnesses, and therefore it was absolutely necessary that I should have a room in which to do it.

Q. Did you stay at the Arlington all the time?—A. No, sir. Last winter I made an arrangement and took rooms at the Arlington, undertaking to pay a certain sum per day; I have forgotten just what it was. Subsequent to that Mr. Secretary Folger was desirous of keeping house, but his family were not here, and Mr. Sperry, his private secretary, took a house. I lived with him, and the Secretary of the Treasury lived with him, and I paid my share of the expenses, stipulating—that is, not stipulating but arranging—that the amount presented for expenses charged to the Government should be less than the amount which would have been paid under the arrangement I had made at the Arlington and had subsequently broken up. That arrangement continued, but I never got those expenses, or at least I got but a small portion of them, because about that time the Comptroller changed his ruling as to expenses. I did, I think, get expenses for a month or so.

Q. You paid those expenses, then, to Mr. Sperry?—A. Yes, sir; to Mr. Sperry.

Q. How much did you pay Mr. Sperry for your expenses?—A. I can't tell you. There are some vouchers on file which will show.

Q. I find in Ex. Doc. No. 40, page 87, two bills of Mr. Sperry, one dated February 1, 1883, for board from January 1, $183.36, and the other for the month of February, $164.73; do you remember those?—A. Those I paid.

Q. You say that about that time the Comptroller reversed his ruling in relation to expenses, and you were not allowed anything for expenses?—A. Yes, sir; I think those expenses have never been paid; yes, I guess they have been paid, but after that I was not paid for expenses.

Q. All the rest of the time you were at the Arlington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you pay their usual prices?—A. I usually made a bargain, and did not pay more, but usually less. I know, for instance, that the rooms I paid $10 a day for had been rented to my predecessor at $20 a day.

Q. They were accessible rooms?—A. Yes, sir; quite accessible. Now that you have got on to those accounts, let me say that somebody has made some criticism upon an item there. Mr. Cook's virtuous soul, I believe, was shocked at the item of washing which he found in one of those bills. I suppose he confounded it with the washing of dirty linen in public that he was then engaged in. The fact is that that item of washing should not have been there. If you will go to my original vouchers, you will find a number of things in the hotel bill that I struck my pen through, and although this item would be within my strictest legal rights, as I was to have my expenses paid while I was away from home, I intended to strike it out, and I did strike out everything else of that kind, so far as I know.

Q. Were any of your expense accounts disallowed at the Department?—A. Oh, I think there were some little items disallowed, a few dollars at a time. Now, as to these items, when you talk about expenses, let me call your attention to Mr. Cook's own bill, which I find in this same executive document, as he has gone into a criticism of mine. It appears here that Mr. Cook presents a bill: Expenses, two trips to New York, $30; hotel expenses, New York, $60; incidental expenses, New York, $30; expenses, trip to Philadelphia, $25; clerical services, procurement of papers, and other incidental expenses in preparation of cases, $300; hack hire, New York and Washington, &c., $50. Everything, you see, is in round numbers, with no pretense of giving items or details, or anything of that kind. I merely suggest that there is a maxim about people who live in glass houses.

Q. As to these detectives, I understand you to say that they were not used during the second trial?—A. The detectives were not used during the second trial. There may have been a detective or two employed for some special thing, but they were not employed generally.

Q. Was there a detective by the name of Moore employed?—A. No, sir; not that I know of. Let me tell you about him. Mr. Moore is a clerk in the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury. Before going there he had been a clerk of the court in Philadelphia, and had been particularly in charge of all matters connected with witnesses, and at my request he was detailed to take charge of the accounts of the witnesses and various things of that sort, and he drew his pay as a clerk of the Solicitor of the Treasury. The Solicitor is of course a subordinate of the Department of Justice.

Q. Was Moore of any service to you in the business?—A. Oh, of a great deal of service.

Q. What was the nature of his duties?—A. Well, he took charge of of all the witnesses' accounts. We had the witnesses here—forty or fifty of them—hanging about for several weeks. There was a good deal of trouble in keeping them here and having them on hand when we wanted them. They would go off. Then, too, we had to go into a regular system of becoming guarantors for their board bills, and arranging all that. There was a great deal of that sort of business. With reference to my own compensation, I desire to say, further, that I can put my finger upon business which I actually had, and which I gave up in consequence of being in these cases, out of which there would have come to me at least half as much as I have received from the Government. There was one single case which I was in, and which involved $3,000,000, which I had to go out of, after being in it, prior to the argument in the final court where we succeeded, and by not being in the case at that time I lost a fee of thousands of dollars which had been arranged for.

Q. What was the case?—A. It was the case of the New England Iron Company against the Metropolitan Elevated Railway Company. I desire before leaving the star-route cases to say one or two things additional. Mr. Spencer claims in his evidence that what he told was confidential and that we had no right to use it. About that I want to say that there was nothing in the matters that I found among the papers indicating that there was to be anything confidential about it, and, moreover, as I got knowledge that he had told the same things to various people outside, I should have considered myself entirely relieved from any such obligation. But I never heard any suggestion that the matter was confidential until the time when Mr. Spencer sent Mr. Chandler to me, and Mr. Chandler said that Spencer seemed to have a kind of indefinite idea that he was a sort of counsel in the cases, and, therefore, ought not to be obliged to testify.

Q. In what respect could Mr. Spencer be regarded as counsel?—A. He could not be counsel. He is not a lawyer. He was not in any such relation. There was no pretense that he was in any such absolute relation, but only that he had some sort of vague idea that in some sense he was of counsel in the matter.

Q. Was not this Mr. Spencer's idea: that he had an agreement with the President or with Postmaster-General James that he was not to be used as a witness, and that, therefore, he ought not to be required to testify?—A. It was never so stated to me at any time, and I understand that Mr. James does not agree that that was the view.

Q. There was no pledge given to Mr. Spencer, so far as you know?—

A. No, sir. In fact, after the question was raised, I was told that Mr. Spencer said that he could testify to certain things, but that he did not want to testify; but if we could not prove the matters in any other way he would testify. At all events it would have presented to me a very serious question whether, if I knew of a witness who had information which he chose to regard as confidential, it would not be my duty to call him and examine him.

Q. What was said at that interview at the Arlington between Mr. Chandler and you when Mr. Spencer was with Mr. Chandler?—A. Well, Mr. Chandler said, "Spencer seems to have a sort of idea that he is a counsel in some sense, and that he ought not to be required to testify."

Q. Did Mr. Chandler request you to let up on Mr. Spencer?—A. No, sir. When I stated my position to Mr. Chandler, and that I could not help putting Mr. Spencer on the stand and examining him, Mr. Chandler agreed with me entirely and said that I was right; but of course he was obliging Mr. Spencer as far as he could.

Q. That would seem from Mr. Spencer's statement to have been a very long interview between you and Mr. Chandler?—A. It was not. I think Mr. Spencer is mistaken about that. The fact is we were all sitting in the bar-room of the Arlington Hotel, six or eight people, when Mr. Chandler and Mr. Spencer came in, and I think that they both sat down and both took some Apolinaris water (or something else), and then Mr. Chandler said to me that he would like to talk with me a little, and we went aside I think into a public room, and I should say that we did not even sit down. I should say that my conversation with Mr. Chandler that time didn't last over 15 minutes.

Q. Mr. Spencer stated that it began at 11 and concluded about 1 o'clock in the morning?—A. That was not so. And let me say that I have taken occasion to see one or two people who were present at the time, and asked them if it occupied any such length of time, and they said not at all, so that Mr. Spencer is mistaken about that. We did not talk enough to occupy any such length of time.

Q. He was waiting and he might have thought it a long time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Perhaps he thought there was too "long a time between drinks" [Laughter]?—A. Well, we were the only people that could have suffered in that way. The others were free to drink as often as they pleased.

Q. Did Mr. Chandler seem desirous of having Mr. Spencer testify, or desirous of having him excused?—A. Mr. Chandler seemed desirous of obliging Mr. Spencer, but he did not fully understand the position when he came to me. He supposed that Mr. Spencer could not be of any benefit as a witness, and did not see why I should not let him go; but when I explained the situation to him he recognized the fact that I must go ahead and make Spencer testify, and I understood from Mr. Chandler that he expected he would testify.

Q. Did Mr. Chandler ever express any desire or wish in reference to the prosecution of any of the star-route contractors or persons interested in the business?—A. No, sir. That reminds me—I see that somebody somewhere has testified—your correspondent Mr. Walsh has testified, to some meeting with Kellogg and Chandler at Mr. Chandler's house.

I never had any meeting at Mr. Chandler's house nor anywhere else at which I ever met Kellogg when Chandler was present or through any instigation of Chandler, or through any communication with him in any way whatever.

Q. Did Chandler ever in any way express a desire to you that you should suspend the effort to procure an indictment against Kellogg?—A. No, sir.

Q. He did not?—A. No, sir. The most that Mr. Chandler ever did was that on one occasion he said: "Kellogg is in a terrible state of mind. He wants that I should talk to you. I can't talk to you—in the position that I am in I can't talk to you. All I want to say to you is that I am confident you will see that he is fairly treated. If he has done anything wrong let him suffer for it."

Q. Did he in any way show any concern in regard to the Kellogg matter or any desire to have you let up on him or deal gently with him?—A. No, sir. I think that Mr. Chandler did not believe Walsh, and therefore thought that the case against Mr. Kellogg was not very good.

Q. Did he ever suggest to you the fact about which Mr. MacVeagh testified, that Kellogg's indictment would interfere with the Republican majority in the Senate?—A. No, sir; no human being ever suggested that to me except William A. Cook.

Q. What was Mr. Cook's suggestion in that regard?—A. Very early, prior to December, 1881, when I met Mr. Kellogg in Mr. Cook's office, Mr. Cook told me that Kellogg was a client of his, and that there had been some mention of his name in connection with the case, but that we must not hurt him, because it would endanger the Republican majority in the Senate.

Q. Was Mr. Cook then counsel for the Government in the star-route cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he say that Kellogg was then his client?—A. He did, sir.

Q. Where was that?—A. In Mr. Cook's own office.

Q. About what time?—A. I know it was prior to the 1st of January. I should think it was as early as October or November. That was one of the things that first raised a doubt in my mind about Mr. Cook.

Q. That was pending the time when efforts were being made to secure the indictment of Kellogg?—A. No, sir; not at that time. There were no efforts being made at that time, and I don't think that at that time I even knew of any route with which he was supposed to be connected, or anything upon which any prosecution could be based. In fact, I was so green in the case that my first knowledge that Mr. Kellogg was said to be connected with the matter came from Mr. Cook through the suggestion then made.

Q. And Mr. Cook, you say, expressed a desire that nothing should be done against Kellogg because of the danger to the Republican majority in the Senate?—A. Yes, sir; something like that.

Q. What did you say?—A. I don't know that I said anything. I didn't know that there was any case against him. I know the remark set me thinking.

Q. Did you indicate any disposition to Mr. Cook at that time to suspend or cease any efforts that might have been made, or making, to secure the indictment of Kellogg?—A. No, sir. There was not any such suggestion at that time. I did not know Mr. Kellogg by sight.

Q. You knew who he was?—A. No; I did not until Mr. Cook told me that that gentleman who was just going out was Senator Kellogg, and he then said something in a mysterious way about his name having been mentioned in this case, and added, "but he is a client of mine and we must not hurt him. It will affect the majority in the Senate." That is what he said, or something of that kind.

Q. Mr. Chandler never had any conversation of that sort with you?—

A. Mr. Chandler had that conversation of which I have already told you, in which he said, "Poor Kellogg is in a terrible state of mind. He wants to me speak to you. Now you know I cannot. All I can say is treat him fairly." And I think Mr. Chandler did say that he did not believe that John Walsh was to be relied upon.

Q. Did he say that he had received any letter on the subject from any member of the Cabinet?—A. I do not remember anything of that sort, sir.

Q. Have you heard whether he did receive a letter?—A. I have heard that there was some correspondence between Mr. Brewster and Mr. Chandler, but my recollection about it is that Mr. Walsh made a public statement that there had been something of that kind, and that that led to some correspondence. I don't know anything about it, however.

Q. Mr. Chandler did not call your attention to it and show you any letter that he had received?—A. I don't remember having seen anything of the kind, and I do not think it is possible that I could have seen anything of that kind and not remember it. But I have on my mind an impression that I learned in some way that there was some correspondence on the subject between Mr. Chandler and Mr. Brewster. It must have been pleasant correspondence.

Q. You never saw it?—A. I am very confident I never saw it. I have no recollection of it at all.

Now, with regard to the witness Walsh, inasmuch as he is in communication with the committee, and the committee will perhaps be successful in finding him, I suppose that I may be permitted to say that he was always a pet of Mr. Gibson. I have already narrated the interview with Walsh when I read over to him Gibson's statement as to what Walsh would testify to, and I have mentioned that Walsh made corrections and changes in it. After that Mr. Walsh was put before the grand jury (I do not remember the time exactly), and gave evidence and produced certain papers. As the result of that at that time before that grand jury, as I recollect it, the only mention of Mr. Kellogg's name that was made was in connection with the production of these papers. We were going for Brady and Price. Certainly when I went into the grand-jury room I had no idea that there was any question about Mr. Kellogg in the case. In the course of that meeting some of the jurors asked Walsh about certain papers, and as to where he had got them—the Price drafts, I think—and he said that Mr. Kellogg had brought them to him. I confess that the mention of Mr. Kellogg's name at that time did not convey to my mind the idea of Senator Kellogg. I did not remember anything about him in connection with the matter. The grand jury then adjourned. Mr. Walsh told me that he had not told that grand jury everything about the case. I asked him why he had not. He said he was not going to tell them, that there were some of Brady's men on the jury, and that he was not going to tell anything more than was necessary. I see that in an interview with him that has been published in the papers, he takes substantially the same ground—an interview published in the Herald on the 25th of November, 1882.

Q. To whom did he refer there?—A. I do not recall who it was, but he pointed out several people; he pointed out a colored man on the jury that he said was in the interest of the defense, and he said he was not going to throw himself open to them. That was a peculiarity of Walsh's that we had to deal with at various times. We found when he went into court on the Dorsey trial and undertook to testify as to his money dealings with Brady that he had sued Brady, and had made claims very different from those which he testified to upon that trial as existing, different in respect to dates and in other respects. He was pressed a good deal by the defense in that case, they claiming that his whole evidence was untrue. He said that this difference of dates arose from a mistake of his lawyers. Then he had commenced attachment proceedings in New York, and the same error was found there; and finally he said that he did not tell his lawyer any more than he thought it was necessary to tell him; that that was not his way. He made this statement as to the grand jury. I heard nothing more about it at that time; but one morning I went to New York, and when I came back here and got to the court-house, Mr. Merrick said to me, "Look here, I want to see you"; and then he told me that Walsh was telling all around that I had endeavored to protect Senator Kellogg. I said to Mr. Merrick, "You know better than that. There is nothing in that"; and he replied, "That is so. But," said he, "Walsh says that he has got all this evidence, and that you did not draw it out." I said, "I never saw the evidence." "You never saw the evidence?" said Mr. Merrick. "No, I never saw it," I answered. "I hear of it for the first time." Mr. Merrick, I see, thinks that he made the suggestion that the grand jury should be reconvened. My recollection is that I made it. However that was, I said that the grand jury must be reconvened, and we went right into court, and Mr. Merrick took the ordinary counsel seat, and I went to Judge Wylie on the bench and told him that I wanted that grand jury reconvened. I think it was in summer, and the judge was unwilling to bring them together again; but I finally told him why I wanted them reconvened, that the statement was made that I had suppressed evidence; and thereupon he reconvened the grand jury. Walsh came and was put before the grand jury. He produced more papers than he had before, and he testified in a way, as I have already stated, that if I had been on that grand jury I should have found an indictment against Kellogg. The grand jury were obviously anxious to dispose of the case that day. They knew they were there only for that case, and they wanted to get rid of it. I asked Walsh on the first day, "Have you produced all the papers you have got?" He said he had. I asked him, "Do you remember anything more that affects Senator Kellogg?" He said "No," that he did not. He was asked by somebody if he had kept any books. He said he had kept books, and that when he broke up here they were carried to Welker's. I fastened upon that as an excuse for getting an adjournment of the grand jury to see if anything could be found. We got the adjournment. In the mean time I had some little talk with Walsh. The next morning I went in and endeavored to probe him as thoroughly as I could to ascertain whether he knew of any papers, or of anything, that would give us any additional evidence of any kind. He said distinctly that he did not, that he could not give any additional evidence. The grand jury did not indict. His evidence before the grand jury was given in an offensive way—in a way not likely to win consideration for it—and the jury did not indict. Subsequently there was a third grand jury, and although before this previous grand jury Walsh has assured me that he had no other papers of any kind, if I am correctly informed, he produced a lot more of papers which had never been seen before, which were undoubtedly Kellogg papers, and undoubtedly pertinent papers, and an indictment was obtained. All that I have to say about it is that I did my best to get an indictment against Mr. Kellogg, and used all the evidence that was within my control or reach and all the power I could command to press the case against him.

Q. There was no delay in that case, so far as you were concerned in prosecuting it, on account of the position of Mr. Kellogg as a United States Senator?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or for any other reason?—A. No, sir. As I have already told you, before Kellogg was indicted by the third grand jury the indications were that Price would be an available witness to be used in some way. That, of course, involved the giving up of Price, if we used him as a witness, for the purpose of taking Kellogg, and I differed with the other gentlemen as to the wisdom of doing that. I assumed that we would get an indictment against Kellogg, but it did not seem to me that we would get enough evidence to convict. There was the troublesome question that I have referred to already about the statute of limitations, and on the papers and evidence we then had I thought the statute was a conclusive bar, so far as regarded anything that we had knowledge of. After Price was indicted I said that we had better hold on to him; that there was reason to believe Price was concerned in a good many other schemes, and that we had better not let go of one man until we got a firm hold on the other. Mr. Merrick and Mr. Ker differed with me about that. We had a meeting at the Attorney-General's house, and we set forth our respective views about this matter. That is the only case in which there has been any difference of view between counsel. The decision was left to the Attorney-General, and I learned subsequently that he had decided to use Price and to proceed against Mr. Kellogg.

Q. Were you in any way dissatisfied with that determination?—A. Immediately upon learning it I wrote the Attorney-General a short letter, stating that I had received his decision; that, of course, he had a right to make the decision, and I was bound by it, and should act under it in good faith, but I respectfully asked leave to place on record my opinion that it was not a wise decision. Then came the proceeding before the grand jury, and the production of the additional papers by Walsh. The moment I learned of the production of those papers, and what was in them, I stated to the Attorney-General that in my opinion that changed the position of the case entirely, and that it was a proper one to be proceeded with, and that it was proper to let go of Price and proceed against Kellogg, and I have not changed my mind or view upon that subject.

Q. You are still of the opinion that the Government has a good case against Mr. Kellogg?—A. Now, have I a right to give my view here upon a case which is liable to come up for trial? I am willing to do it if the committee desire.

Q. Use your own discretion about that.—A. Then, without going into details, I will say, in general terms, that as the case stood after Mr. Kellogg had been indicted upon the information which Walsh gave, and upon the papers which he produced—as the case then stood, with Price available as a witness, and with Walsh available as a witness, and not so badly injured as I think he has injured himself since, I did consider that it was a case in which the Government might have a very fair reason to expect to succeed, and a case that the Government ought to proceed with the trial of. Mr. Walsh has since so conducted himself that Judge Wylie did not hesitate in court last fall to express the opinion that he did not suppose the Government cared anything for the testimony of such a witness, and that all they could want from him was his papers. In a hearing the other day in court that was reiterated substantially by Judge Wylie, and Mr. Merrick, representing the Government, took substantially the same view, saying that he wanted Walsh, not for his testimony, but for the papers, and he referred to Walsh as possibly writing from a lunatic asylum, or something of that sort. Now as to these papers, if they do not turn out to be dependent upon Walsh's testimony to furnish connecting links to supply dates, or anything of that kind, if Walsh were here to produce them, I should still think it would be a fair case, although it is a case that has been weakened a good deal by Walsh's course. Those papers I have never seen. I think there was an error committed in the case, and I do not think I should have committed it. When Walsh produced those papers before the grand jury I should have impounded them. My theory is that all papers produced before the grand jury pass into the control of the Government, and, as a prosecuting officer, I should always hold them until the case is over, and then return them. In that case Walsh produced the papers before the grand jury, but afterwards took them away.

Q. Did you see the papers that he produced?—A. No, sir; I saw the papers that he produced before one grand jury—the one that refused to indict—and kept a portion of them in my hands.

Q. Please look at the list of papers I now hand you, and state whether you have ever seen those papers.—A. (After inspecting the list.) Now, as to these papers, here is a subpoena prepared by Mr. Ker; some of these papers I undoubtedly saw before the first grand jury; I recognize certain papers in which Mr. Buell's name appears; I saw one or two letters from Walsh beginning "My Dear Walsh"; I did not see as many as there are here; I think that possibly I saw the letter signed "J. B. Price"; I have an impression that I saw that; copies of some of these papers were subsequently published in the Herald, I think, and I may have seen them there; but I do recognize some things that are here.

Q. That is a copy of the subpoena duces tecum that was issued?—A. Yes.

The subpoena is as follows:

In the supreme court of the District of Columbia, holding a criminal court for said District, the eleventh day of December, 1883.

UNITED STATES	} vs.
WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG.

The President of the United States to John A. Walsh:

You are hereby commanded to attend the said court immediately, to testify on behalf of the United States, and not depart the court without leave of the court or district attorney, and bring with you the drafts or checks, and letters or copies of letters, and memorandums or accounts of the payment of money, as follows:

The drafts or checks, and letters or copies of letters and memorandums or accounts of the payment of money or drafts or checks signed by you, or endorsed by you, during the years 1880 and 1881, for the payment by you, either directly or indirectly, of money to William Pitt Kellogg; and the letter or letters written and sent or handed by the said William Pitt Kellogg to you during the years 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882; and the copies of letters or copies of the letters written by you and sent or handed to the said William Pitt Kellogg during the said years 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882; and the memorandums or accounts of the payment of money or memorandums, accounts, or statements made by you of moneys paid, sent, transmitted, or handed by you, during the years 1880 and 1881, to the said William Pitt Kellogg, the said drafts or checks, and letters or copies of letters, and memorandums or accounts of the payment of money or relating to and concerning certain sums of money collected or to be collected by you from the Post-Office Department, and the Treasury of the United States under and by virtue and authority of certain drafts or orders for the payment of money commonly called "post-office drafts," and "contractors' drafts," two of which were dated July 13, 1879, each signed J. B. Price, contractor, each for payment by the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department to the order of the said J. B. Price, the sum of twelve hundred and fifty dollars out of any money due him, the said J. B. Price, on route No. 31120, Indianola to Corpus Christi, in the State of Texas, one for the quarter ending September 30, 1880, and the other for the quarter ending Dec. 31, 1880, and each endorsed on the back thereof, J. B. Price; and the five others of which are dated July 16, 1879, each signed J. B. Price, contractor, each for payment by the Auditor of the Treasury of the Post-Office Department to the order of the said J. B. Price, the sum of three thousand dollars out of any moneys due him, the said J. B. Price, on route No. 31148, San Antonio to Corpus Christi in the State of Texas, one for the quarter ending March 31, 1880; another for the quarter ending June 30, 1880; another for the quarter ending September 30, 1880; another for the quarter ending Dec. 31, 1880; and another for the quarter ending March 31, 1881, and each endorsed on the back thereof J. B. Price; which said two post-office drafts for the payment of moneys due on route No. 31120, Indianola to Corpus Christi, were received by you for the collection by you of the moneys mentioned in each of said drafts; and which said five post-office drafts for the payment of moneys due on route No. 31148, San Antonio to Corpus Christi, were received by you from the said William Pitt Kellogg for the collection by you of the several amounts of money mentioned in each of the said drafts, and for the payment by you to the said William Pitt Kellogg, from time to time, of one-half of the amount of money mentioned in each of the said drafts as often as the several amounts should be by you collected, and which said several amounts of money were by you from time to time collected, and one-half thereof paid by you to the said William Pitt Kellogg.

The aforesaid drafts or checks, and letters or copies of letters, and memorandums or accounts of the payment of money which you are required to bring with you, are: Drafts or checks signed by you, or endorsed by you, or signed and endorsed by you.

Draft or check No. 151, dated Washington, D. C., July 23, 1879, John A. Walsh, banker, pay to the order of Shellabarger and Wilson four hundred and ninety-one dollars and seven cents, endorsed Shellabarger and Wilson.

Also, draft or check No. 187, dated Washington, D. C., Oct. 28, 1879, John A. Walsh, pay to the order of Wm. P. Kellogg, five hundred dollars, endorsed W. P. Kellogg.

Also, draft or check No. 205, dated Washington, D. C., Dec. 23, 1879, John A. Walsh, banker, pay to the order of W. Pitt Kellogg two thousand dollars, endorsed W. P. Kellogg.

Also, draft or check No. 251, dated Washington, D. C., May 4, 1880, John A. Walsh, banker, pay to the order of W. P. Kellogg six hundred and twenty-five dollars, endorsed William P. Kellogg.

Also, draft or check No. 268, dated Washington, D. C., June 28, 1880, John A. Walsh, banker, pay to the order of W. P. Kellogg six hundred dollars, endorsed W. P. Kellogg.

Also, draft or check No. 211, dated Washington, D. C., Jan. 5, 1880, John A. Walsh, banker, pay to the order of A. C. Buell seventy-five dollars, endorsed A. C. Buell.

Also, draft or check No. 214, dated Washington, D. C., Jan. 7, 1880, John A. Walsh, banker, pay to the order of A. C. Buell one hundred and twenty-five dollars, endorsed A. C. Buell.

Also, all other drafts and checks signed by you, or endorsed by you, or signed and endorsed by you, for the payment by you or through you, either directly or indirectly, of any money during the said years 1880, 1881, to the said William Pitt Kellogg on account or by reason of the money collected by you under and by virtue authority of the above-described post-office drafts, or either of them, or in any way relating thereto.

And also letters written, sent, or handed by the said William Pitt Kellogg to you.

Letter headed United States Senate Chamber, Washington, Feb. 8, 1881, addressed My dear Walsh, and signed W. P. Kellogg.

Also, letter headed United States Senate Chamber, Washington, Feb. 10, 1881, addressed My dear Walsh, and signed W. P. Kellogg.

Also, letter headed Astor House, New York, May 18, 1881, addressed Mr. John Walsh, and signed J. B. Price.

Also, telegram, Washington, Jan. 18, John Walsh, New York; Yes; I think so; W. says come. K.

Also, telegram headed Washington, D. C., Feb. 2, 1881, addressed John A. Walsh, East Twenty-seventh, New York, and signed W. P. Kellogg.

Also, letter or telegram headed Neenah, Wis., August 5, addressed John A. Walsh, 3 East Twenty-seventh street; without any signature.

Also, letter, John, I leave for West to-night. See P. at once, and give him that statement. Also relieve his mind regarding any suit against Brown and others.—Cato.

Also, all other letters written, sent, or handed by the said William Pitt Kellogg to you, during the said years 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882, in any way relating or pertaining to or concerning the said money collected or to be collected by you, under and by virtue and authority of the above-described post-office drafts, or either of them.

And also, all copies of the letters written by you and sent or handed to the said William Pitt Kellogg during the said years 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882, in any way relating or pertaining to or concerning the said money collected or to be collected by you under and by virtue and authority of the above-described post-office drafts or either of them.

And also, all memorandums, accounts, or statements kept or made by you of moneys paid, sent, transmitted, or handed by you during the years 1880 and 1881 to the said William P. Kellogg, in any way relating or pertaining to or concerning the said money collected by you under and by virtue and authority of the above-described post-office drafts or either of them.

And also, all letters, telegrams, drafts, or checks, receipts and papers produced and exhibited by you before the grand jury in the District of Columbia at the time of their finding the bill of indictment in above case.

Witness D. K. Cartter, chief justice of said court.

[SEAL.]

R. J. MEIGS, Clerk.

The WITNESS. We wanted Walsh as a witness. Mr. Merrick came over to New York for the purpose of getting into communication with Walsh. Walsh had always spoken kindly and rather enthusiastically of Mr. Merrick, and Mr. Merrick had always been able to get along with him. Walsh had tabooed me a good deal earlier. As I have said, Mr. Merrick came over to New York last fall and tried to get in communication with Walsh. Walsh never has had any known address in New York. He has always directed his letters to be addressed in care of E. H. Grandin, a lawyer. When we wanted him before for the second Dorsey trial we could not get him. We spent several hundred dollars in detective work without finding Walsh, and finally only discovered where he was through a lady with whom he was very intimate. She was taken out sleigh-riding by somebody or other, and in some way they got from her information as to where Walsh was, and we went and got service of a subpoena upon him. He has always been very troublesome to find. Mr. Merrick went to see Mr. Grandin, and finally told him that he wanted to see Walsh, and Grandin said he would try to arrange an interview. Mr. Merrick then came to my office, and we talked over the whole business of Walsh. I said, "Look here, Walsh's trouble is me; now let me stand aside; I will go out of the case in any form you wish; you may give him any assurance you desire that I am entirely out of the case. I will submit to anything, except public degradation in connection with the matter." Mr. Merrick said that that was very handsome of me, and he would tell Walsh. The next day he came to my office with a letter from Grandin, in which Grandin said that he had caught Walsh eating a good dinner somewhere the day before, though he took care not to say where, and that Walsh replied without hesitation that he would not see Mr. Merrick, or anybody else connected with the Government; that he had addressed a letter to the President on the subject, and that when his demands in that letter were complied with, he would be glad to see Mr. Merrick. Mr. Merrick remarked, "Mr. Walsh is making some demands there, and you must not go out of the case until we see what they are." Mr. Merrick came on to Washington and saw the letter to the President. I came here a day or two afterwards, and the first thing that Mr. Merrick said to me was that he insisted upon it that under the circumstances I should not go out of the case; that it was due to the dignity of the Government that a counsel should not be driven out of the case by a witness in that way, and that I must remain in. So in a quasi manner I did remain in. We set to work to find Walsh. We shadowed Grandin's office, but it is in a building with three or four entrances, and therefore rather difficult to watch. We watched Walsh's letters in the post-office. I got authority from the Attorney-General to employ some detectives, and I did employ them, and we followed Walsh very carefully. We tracked a letter in Walsh's handwriting, postmarked at St. Catherines, Canada, just about the day the Kellogg case was to come up. While I believed it to be a "stall," I thought it was only proper to send somebody to St. Catherines to see whether Walsh was there, or had been there, and I did so, but could not find evidence that he had been there. I have no doubt at all that he has been at all times in New York, or nearer to New York than that. I have tried earnestly to find him. I am told that at some particular time he rode up town in a car on the elevated road in which I was. All I can say is that I did not see him. And the reason why I can say that is that at one time I had a consultation with Mr. Merrick, in which I suggested to him that there was a provision of the Revised Statutes under which Walsh could be arrested (I think it is section 827). Mr. Merrick was not familiar with the provision. When I came over here the following week, we consulted with the Attorney-General, and determined to apply for process for the arrest of Walsh. I made the affidavit, and went before Judge Wylie and got a warrant for the arrest. We kept it so secret that we did not even let the clerk's office know anything about it. We had to go there to get the seal attached, but the paper was turned down so that they could not know what it was. The papers were deposited with the marshal to be kept as Judge Wylie's personal property, and that warrant was taken to New York. Upon that, I procured a warrant to be issued; that is, I procured it, as the saying is, to be "backed," and a commissioner's warrant to be issued for the arrest of Walsh, and I got duplicates of them and had them in the hands of two or three people, to be served upon Mr. Walsh, if he could be found; but all my efforts to get them served were vain. Now, if I had ever seen him in the car, I think that, knowing of the existence of the process for his arrest, I should have had very little hesitation in having him arrested, and my relations to the New York police are such (though that statement may be regarded as somewhat ambiguous) that I think I could have got a policeman to act in the case without having the warrant in his possession, upon my assurance that it had been issued. The fact is we made an earnest and strenuous effort to find Walsh, and have continued to make such efforts, but have been unable to find him. We found Mr. Gibson in communication with him, and in possession of his letters, and also Mr. Charles F. MacLean. Finally I wrote to the Attorney-General that in my opinion, as we had no clew in New York, the way was to begin from here, and to look out for Gibson; and after that time whatever was done with reference to searching for Walsh was done from here. I am told (I do not know whether it is true) that the committee, or some committee of the House, were very well satisfied that they could find him, and took a little hand at the business, but did not succeed. I employed Pinkerton's men in New York, and I also employed a private detective, whom I had personally employed previously in other matters, who was very devoted to me, and in whom I had great confidence. That is all I can say about that. Mr. Walsh addressed various communications to the President and to other people, pitching into everybody and everything. Those communications have led to various answers of mine. I have got them here, but I do not suppose the committee cares to encumber the record with them.

Q. I believe you have stated that, so far as you know, there was never any condition proposed or implied in reference to the payment of that claim of Walsh's provided he would appear as a witness for the Government?—A. No, sir; on the contrary, very decidedly not. The officers of the Post-Office Department were of opinion that Mr. Walsh in the first place had no claim, and in the second place that if he had a claim had released it when he got the other settlement. However, the paper that was taken from him as a release did not clearly cover it. Walsh went into the Court of Claims, and he had this plausible ground there, that the fines in his case having been remitted on the ground that his becoming a failing contractor was caused by the fault of the Government officers, therefore he was not a failing contractor by any act of his own, and was consequently entitled to this pay. He said in substance, "My contract was not taken away through any fault of mine; it was taken away because of the wrongful action of the officers of the Government, and therefore I am entitled to this month's extra pay." That was the plausible way in which the claim was put in the Court of Claims. All that was ever said to me on that subject—I will not say that it was said to him, but I have understood it was said—was that the Government would facilitate getting a decision on the subject. Mr. Walsh made various claims, and demanded various payments. For instance I have got here a letter of his dated New York, October 26, 1882, in which he says:

G. BLISS, Esq.,
Special Counsel Star-Route Cases, New York:

MY DEAR SIR: You will oblige me by directing payment to me of the $350 for which I submitted to you a voucher in Washington.

This is what he calls the voucher:

United States, to John H. Walsh, Dr.

To services rendered in star-route cases $350

Q. Did you pay that?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is the service for which that bill is made?—A. I have not the remotest idea. I think the claim was for being in Washington here.

Q. It is not paid yet?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has that claim been filed in the Department of Justice?—A. No, sir. This is simply a letter that Walsh wrote me.

Q. Is the bill made against the Government or against you individually?—A. It is made out to the United States.

Q. Did he expect you to pay it?—A. I do not know what he expected me to do about it.

Q. You are not paying bills of the United States?—A. No, sir; only the witnesses'.

You asked me if I put the papers in the Vinita and Las Vegas route before the grand jury. I have the papers here [producing a large package of papers]. All these that I have here were before the grand jury. There are some other papers in another bundle which came in subsequently that were not before the grand jury. There were certain papers that preceded the contracts, bids, &c.

Q. Did I understand you to say that you read those papers before the grand jury, or that you just left them there?—A. Oh, I picked out the particular papers that we regarded as important and read them to the grand jury. For instance, here is Mr. Brady's letter, asking the removal of the postmaster at Vinita. Then I had a memorandum in which Inspector Shorty reported that there was no foundation for the charges against the postmaster there.

Q. What did Brady charge against the postmaster?—A. He charged that the postmaster had not made proper reports and various things of that sort. That reminds me that the witness we wanted, and who was missing, was J. C. Blythe. He was the removed postmaster.

Q. And the post-office inspector reported that the charges against the postmaster were not sustained?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But still the postmaster was removed, was he not?—A. Well, if you ask me whether he was actually removed or not, I cannot tell you at this late day.

Q. It was stated in the brief that he was removed.—A. Then that statement is undoubtedly correct.

Q. Who was the First Assistant Postmaster-General at that time?—A. Mr. Tyner. Here is the letter of Blythe, the postmaster at Vinita, dated Vinita, I. T., January 12, 1879, and addressed to Hon. D. M. Key, Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

In this letter Mr. Blythe says:

I have the honor to call your attention to route 32024 from this office to Las Vegas, N. Mex., on which service commenced October 1, 1878, 720 miles, once per week and return, increased to three times per week and return, commencing December 1, 1878. That, in my opinion, is wholly superfluous and a burden to the Department for the following reasons: First, that during the whole distance, 720 miles, there are only two intermediate offices, and they of minor importance, and can be easier supplied. Second, that there is no country through which the route passes—wilderness and desert—to build up the offices, perhaps two neighborhoods. Third, that during the time I have not as yet received to exceed perhaps fifty letters and half a dozen papers since the route was established and went into operation. Fourth, that the contractor is not complying with the terms of the contract.

Q. Vinita is near the eastern border of the Indian Territory, near the Arkansas line?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Las Vegas is near the center of New Mexico?—A. It is some distance into New Mexico. The route runs across what is known as the Panhandle of Texas.

Q. At that time the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad had been completed to Pueblo, had it not?—A. I believe it had been completed part of the way there, because I remember that there was at some time a question about supplying those places by a drop from the line above. Here is the report of the post-office inspector that the route was unnecessary, and here are the papers which show that the postmaster was removed, the letter of removal "for cause," and the report of Inspector Shorty, that "an investigation of the above charges resulted in finding them not sustained in any particular whatever."

Q. Then the "cause" for which Postmaster Blythe was removed was that he faithfully discharged his duty?—A. That seems to have been it.

Q. Vinita is on the line of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad, which runs through the eastern part of the Indian Territory, and it must be a place of some importance?—A. Yes. It appeared among the complaints, as I remember, that formerly Darlington used to get its mail by a “drop” from the railroad, and got it satisfactorily; but, for the purpose of getting some post-offices on to this route, it was ordered that the Vinita mail should go that way, and then they never got it satisfactorily. There was a row about it, and an agent went out there, and found that all that was necessary to remedy the trouble was to order the Vinita mail back on to the drop, and when that was done, it came all right.

Q. Was this map which you have here, exhibited to the grand jury?—A. I do not undertake to say that it was. My impression is that there was a smaller sketch shown to the grand jury.

The following is the map referred to:

The WITNESS. Now, with reference to the question of compensation of counsel, as bearing upon that question, I learn that some of this correspondence has been sent in reply to an inquiry from the Senate, and I may perhaps be permitted to put in one or two letters that passed on that subject between Mr. Brewster and myself. Here is a letter from Mr. Brewster:

706 WALNUT STREET,
Philadelphia, October 24, 1881.

MY DEAR SIR: Since you were here I have been reflecting upon the whole of our interview about the star-route cases, and have concluded to submit my thoughts to you by this letter. It was my impression and hope that Mr. MacVeagh would continue as the Attorney-General till December, or, if possible, while the star-route prosecutions were pending. Indeed, as I told you in my interview with him, I dissuaded him from leaving his position, and urged him to continue to be the Attorney-General if it might be acceptable to the President. He told me that he must leave, but that he would remain till December, or till after Congress would meet. Now, by a series of uncontradicted publications it is given out that Mr. MacVeagh will leave in a day or so and some other gentleman appointed to his office.

If that is to be so, I fear we will not be able to adjust with him the measure of our compensation as you suggested we must, and a stranger, not understanding the case and its necessities as Mr. MacVeagh certainly does understand them, will be our paymaster, and we will have difficulty in settling our compensation. What, then, shall we do?

It is plain that much time at home and at Washington away from our homes must be given to the preparation, argument, and trial of these cases; indeed, much of this has been given by you, and some study and labor by myself. I cannot consent to take all of this severe labor without some definite understanding with those in authority. My affairs here occupy all of my time, and I look forward with considerable misgivings to the propriety of my continuing in the cases, as a burden it will not be prudent for me to take up.

At any rate it is as plain as you said when you introduced the subject to me that we must have our fees settled and agreed on now so that we may have some understanding that will enable us to know if we are to be properly provided for and if not so we can withdraw in time to permit those in charge of the cases to supply others instead of you and myself if either of us will think proper to surrender our briefs and withdraw before it is too late.

Had Mr. MacVeagh been here and called to see me as he said he would when I last saw him in Washington I would, as you requested me to do, have presented this matter to him to take an early opportunity to see us together and enter into some stipulation with us, determining the compensation that must be paid us now and hereafter. Your voluntary introduction of this subject to me, and your request that I would speak of it to Mr. MacVeagh when I next saw him, has induced me to write you about it now.

I foresee trouble and dissatisfaction before us if we do not act now. You can probably learn if it is true that Mr. MacVeagh is now to leave the office and if a successor will be soon named.

It seems to me that we must act promptly with Mr. McVeagh and obtain his action in the matter.

For my part, the more I feel the presence of my affairs here, and the more I consider the prospect of absence from home and the amount of labor I must give to these cases at home and at Washington, so as to do my full duty, a sense of hesitation as to my remaining in them presents itself plainly to my mind.

I am, sir, truly with great respect, your obedient servant,
BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER.

Col. GEORGE BLISS,

Attorney, counselor at law, &c., Pine and Nassau Streets, New York City.

It was after this letter that we got at Mr. MacVeagh. On the 28th of October, Mr. Brewster transmitted to me the letter which I have introduced here, which he had written to Mr. MacVeagh, asking the payment of $2,500, and stating the terms, and informed me that they had been acceded to. I merely refer to that to show that we at any rate intended to have a definite arrangement about compensation, and supposed we had got it. As bearing upon the same point, I may mention that Mr. Brewster, writing me from Washington when it was supposed that Mr. Phillips was called upon to do something, used this language, "I will not incur expenses and turn my back on my home and affairs to be hereafter higgled with and probably maltreated and slighted. That I will not bear." I believe I know nothing more that you have not got out of me in relation to the star-route cases.

THE OTTMAN CASE.

Q. In reference to the Ottman case, have you any paper that you desire to lay before the committee, in addition to the report which you made to the Attorney-General, and which is already in evidence?—A. I do not know that I have. I desire, however, to submit myself to examination in reference to that matter.

Q. I did not know but that you had some statement that you were prepared to make about that case.—A. No; I have prepared no statement, but I would like to answer any questions that the committee desire to ask.

Q. Did you understand at that time that the same rule of evidence applied in a civil suit against Ottman to recover the money stolen that would govern in a criminal prosecution?—A. Probably not absolutely the same rule of evidence. A jury undoubtedly has a right to act upon less convincing evidence in a civil than in a criminal suit, but it was a question of the general nature of the evidence.

Q. Who first called your attention to the Ottman case?—A. The Ottman case, as I recollect it, was first called to my attention one morning at the Arlington Hotel. After breakfast I was in the office of the hotel, and Mr. Crowley came to me, and addressed me, and asked me, I think, whether I was going to see Mr. Brewster that day. I think I told him that I was not, and inquired why he had asked. He said that Mr. Brewster had before him a case which he (Crowley) wanted him to act upon. I asked what the case was. He said it was a case of which he gave the name, "the Ottman case," and that he had applied to Colonel Corkhill in connection with it, but that Colonel Corkhill had been counsel in the case, and could not act, and had referred the matter to the Attorney-General, and that the case was before the Attorney-General, and Mr. Crowley wanted to know if I would not speak to the Attorney-General and try to get him to act upon it in some way. I never had heard of the Ottman case. I remember that I took down the name "Ottman" on a slip of paper. I do not know whether it was that day or not, but very soon after this conversation I spoke to the Attorney-General about it. I was in the habit of seeing the Attorney-General nearly every day. It was rather a request of his that I should do so. He was green in his office. He did not know very much about the details of the office, and he had not a great deal of confidence in many of the subordinates about him.

Q. Those were subordinates that he had inherited from his predecessor?—A. Yes, sir; he did not know much about the details of the office, and I knew a good deal about the Department. At any rate, within a short time after Mr. Crowley spoke to me, quite likely the same day, I said to Mr. Brewster, "I have been asked to speak to you about the Ottman case," and I pulled out this slip on which I had written the name and asked him about the matter. He manifested some little knowledge of the case, though I think he knew nothing of the details, and he referred to the fact that it had been referred there by Mr. Corkhill. That was at a period when we all distrusted Mr. Corkhill. The Attorney-General said he must refer the case to somebody, and asked me to suggest a person. I told him I did not know anybody here to suggest, and then he asked me if I would not oblige him by inquiring around and ascertaining who was a fit person, and I did make some inquiry. I looked first to see about gentlemen who had been in the case. I found that one of them was Jere Wilson, but he seemed not to be available, because he was just then fighting against the Government in the star-route cases, and while he was not manifesting a very hostile spirit, some of his associate counsel were indulging in a good many personalities against Mr. Brewster and the other officers of the Government. I found that Mr. Totten had been suggested, or I thought of him, but he was put aside for the same reason. The matter was talked over all round, but I could not find anybody I could well recommend. I thought of Mr. Nathaniel Wilson, and I think I mentioned him to the Attorney-General, but when I went back to the Department I stated some reason which had been suggested, or which had occurred to me, why Mr. Nathaniel Wilson was not available. As I have said, I made inquiry, and several names were suggested and rejected. I think there were one or two interviews on the subject, though I won't be certain about that, and then it was somehow or other suggested that I should undertake the investigation of the case. I think Mr. Brewster suggested it himself, or at any rate said something that implied a wish on his part that I should do so. I told him I would undertake the investigation, but that I could not consent to be paid for it; that I would do it as a matter of personal favor to him. He said he did not see any reason why I should not be paid. I said that I was in the star-route cases, and I did not think I ought to be paid for this matter, and I went on. I supposed at the time that it was an investigation which would occupy perhaps an hour or two. I saw Mr. Crowley and told him the case had been referred to me. I do not think Mr. Crowley entirely liked it. I think his view was this: That if my report was adverse to him, my relations to the Attorney-General were such that Mr. Brewster would not be likely to overrule my report, whereas he (Crowley) would perhaps have two chances if the case was referred to somebody else.

Q. Did Mr. Crowley suggest that?—A. No, he did not suggest it; but something occurred which indicated that Mr. Crowley did not entirely like the reference to me. I applied for the evidence. I found that the district attorney had none. It resulted in that letter being written, which is in evidence here, referring the matter to me. That was carrying out a previous verbal understanding. I then set to work to find out what the facts were in the case, but I could not find any evidence.

At first, I remember, I got hold of the error book in the case of Halleck, who had been himself tried and convicted, and there had been an appeal and an error book made up, but after a while Mr. Crowley brought me a large bundle of evidence taken on the two trials. The evidence on the first trial was, I think, absolutely complete—the stenographer's minutes—but I think there was some break in the record of the evidence on the second trial, though not very much. The first thing I did was to sit down and read that evidence through. It took me eight hours of steady reading to read the stenographic report of the evidence on the two trials. I found that I had got into a larger job than I had anticipated. After reading the stenographer's minutes I commenced a pilgrimage around among the different lawyers who had been concerned in the case, and after that I began to see that I was getting into pretty deep water, and I wished I was out of it. I was confronted with this condition of things: I have always said, and I remember I said, in connection with this matter, to the Attorney-General, that I considered there was as much dishonesty in the Government or anybody else not paying a claim which it did owe as there was in paying one which it did not owe, and I said that this seemed to me to be a case akin to that. The Government claimed that the money belonged to it; but it had tried in two trials, one in 1876 and the other in 1877, to establish that fact, and had failed utterly, and yet the evidence satisfied my mind morally that this was really the Government's money. I could not resist that conviction. I have no doubt about it now. But the Government had tried twice over to establish the fact, and had failed. Once they had got six jurors, I think, or perhaps it was five, and the other time eleven against them, and the twelfth man was not even for them. He said he would not vote "guilty," and he would not vote "not guilty." He seemed to go upon the idea that they perhaps could find more evidence some time or other. I went to work to make inquiry also as to the character of the jurors, to ascertain whether they were a relic of the old time when it was said that juries here were "fixed." I found that there were among the jurymen several who were spoken of as entirely reputable and unimpeachable men, and, under the circumstances, I was a good deal bothered. I did not think the Government ought to give up that money, and yet I did not think they had any right to retain it without establishing their claim to it. I remembered also what I think has appeared in evidence here, that on three occasions Ottman's counsel had applied to the court to have the case proceeded with.

Q. The civil suits or the criminal suits?—A. Criminal suit.

Q. Was there any application on his part to have the civil suit pressed?—A. I don't know of any. I found that all proceedings had rested from the spring of 1877; that Mr. Wells, who had been district attorney in charge of the case, had remained in office for nearly three years after that, but had done nothing about the case, and I found all the counsel agreeing that there was no prospect of success in a criminal suit. Everybody appeared to agree upon that. I found, also, that Mr. Halleck, the chief witness, had gone West, and had gone away feeling dissatisfied with the officers of the Government—feeling that they had not kept faith with him. He had testified, under an agreement with Mr. Taft, the Attorney-General, which they were compelled, after a good deal of a struggle, to produce in court, promising immunity to him, and it was claimed that that immunity could only be given, under the terms of the promise, in case he testified in a manner satisfactory to the prosecution. At any rate, they had discharged him on his own recognizance, but they had never entered a nolle, and Halleck felt badly treated on that point. I found, therefore, that Halleck was not a very available witness in any form. I was a good deal bothered about the matter. Mr. Wells expressed the opinion that he could succeed in the civil suit in establishing the claim of the Government to the $12,500 (I think it was) which was on deposit in the bank at Alexandria. There was that amount of money on deposit, and as to a portion of it there was claimed to be evidence that it was derived from five-hundred-dollar bills, and as the money stolen from the Treasury was in bills of that denomination, it was claimed that this money in Alexandria was the proceeds of the robbery. I think there was some portion of the deposit that could not be so identified. At all events, there was $12,700 there, and the suit was a proceeding in equity without a jury, and Mr. Wells suggested that the claim of the Government could be established. Mr. Wells is wrong in saying that there was any conversation between him and me with reference to the propriety of a compromise. The fact is that the first idea of a compromise that came into my mind was consequent upon his suggesting that that $12,500 could be got by a proceeding outside of a jury trial. I decided that I would make a report upon the case—very much such a report as I finally did make; but after I had got ready to make it, and had got it perhaps drafted, I told Mr. Crowley that I was going to report that the money belonged to the Government; that it was very embarrassing, and that I was going to leave the thing substantially as it was; that I was not going to express an opinion as to what should be done about it. He sat down and undertook to argue that the Government could not establish its claim. I simmered it down finally to the point that we could establish the claim to the money in Alexandria. He said we could not, but finally I said to him, "Will you make a proposition to pay over the money at Alexandria?" He said he would not; he refused to do it; he said he would have the whole or none. "Very well, then," said I, "I will report against you." He then said, finally, that he was going to send for Ottman to come over and see about it. I told him I was not going to delay my report on that account, and I put in the report as it was. I went to Mr. Brewster with it. He asked me to state its contents, in general terms, and I did so. I think it would not have required much urgency to have induced him to approve the report on the spot, simply on looking it over and my reading it to him, but I said to him, "Now, Mr. Attorney-General, you want to consider that. It presents a very serious question. There will be a racket about it some time or other. It is going to come upon you practically, and these are the facts." He said I was right, and he would think it over. Then, either at that interview or at a subsequent one, I went a little into detail as to the evidence (I had not gone into detail in the report), and called his attention to various things that had occurred to me in connection with the case. A day or two afterwards I went in and we talked it over, and he said that he had decided to authorize me to see whether that arrangement could be made. I remember that on that occasion Mr. Brewster said, when I told him that there would be criticism of this matter, and that the public probably would not understand the giving up of money of which the Government claimed to be the owner, although the claim could not be established—I remember that he said that he had taken up the office with honor and that he meant to lay it down with honor, and that he should not have the approbation of his own conscience if, for fear of criticism, he refused to do anything which it seemed to him was right, and that he did not think it was right for the Government to sit there and hold on to this money which they had tried to establish a claim to and had failed. Then he authorized me to make this negotiation. Mr. Crowley brought Ottman here. Ottman got up very much on his high horse, and at first would not agree to anything of the sort. I saw him for a few moments. Afterwards, either later in the same day, or subsequently, they came to me and said they would agree to the arrangement; but they wanted that I should agree to take the lawsuit practically at Alexandria, for there was a suit there for the $12,500. That was a suit based upon the ground that there was a deposit to Ottman's credit and that the money out of which that deposit was made was the proceeds of these stolen bills, but the bank had issued a certificate of deposit for the amount, and that certificate had passed, subsequent to the arrest, into the hands of Matt. Carpenter, and he had passed it over to Russell Sage. I said, "No, that won't do. There will be a fight there, and I do not know how far they may come in, and I won't do that. You shall pay the Government that amount out of this other money which is here in Washington, and you may have your litigation with Matt. Carpenter's estate and with Mr. Sage." On that we differed for a while, and—

Q. You knew that that certificate was passed to Mr. Carpenter for fees that he had earned in defending Ottman?—A. I do not know whether I knew that or not. In fact, I never knew it; but I assumed it to be so. Then, I went on and made that statement, and reported it to the Attorney-General, and was authorized to carry it out, and did carry it out.

Q. Was it your opinion that in order to succeed in the civil suit it would be incumbent on the Government to prove Ottman's guilty participation in the receipt of the money?—A. It was my opinion that if Ottman had innocently received the money, and that money had been changed innocently into any other form, it could not be followed into that form; but that if the specific thing stolen could be traced, whether Ottman had got it in good faith or in bad faith, it could, I supposed, be seized; but the trouble in the case was that, in my opinion, the specific thing stolen could not be followed. All the evidence there was on the subject was the evidence of one man in the Treasury Department, that some bills put up in that package which was stolen were in the numbers of seven thousands. Of the series to which those bills belonged, there were some twenty-eight millions outstanding, and there were a hundred million and odd, I think, of that sort of notes, only that the series differed. They were issuing, at the time of the theft, bills which were in the current numbers of about forty-six thousand or forty-seven thousand. Now, the bills that were put up at that time were bills that had been issued once, and had in some form come back to the Department, and they took those bills in the six or seven thousands. And here again let me say that Mr. Wells is wrong in his testimony. The bills stolen did not follow in consecutive order, or in numbers which would be accounted for as not having changed their position. That was true of some of them; but there were breaks intervening. Mr. Wells's idea is that they, in making these bills, chopped down, making four at a time, and that they came in regular order; but that is wrong. You very often got a bill between the fours. And, moreover, the officer who took them from the vault and put them on the table swore distinctly not only that some of the bills had been previously issued, but that the bills put into that package had been disarranged.

Q. Was there not proof to show that a portion of this $19,000 that was in Washington was made up of bills which were in the continuous series of fours?—A. Some of them were in continuous numbers of fours, but, as I have said, there were some breaks between them. For instance, instead of fours there would be twos between. The officer swore distinctly that they had been previously issued, and also that numbers of that size must have been issued as long as six or eight months before. Therefore those bills had probably been out of the Department somewhere six or eight months, and they had subsequently come back. Now, there was no reason why they might not have been passed honestly into Ottman's hands, even if they had been kept together. That was the argument used, but, of course, I did not believe that the fact was so.

Q. You believed, from the evidence in the case, that those were the actual bills stolen?—A. I did form that opinion; and yet, as a jurymen, I would not have found a verdict of guilty upon the evidence.

Q. If that was so, how did you arrive at the conclusion from reading the evidence that those were the actual bills stolen?—A. Well, simply from the evidence; but if I had been asked, as a jurymen, to find a verdict of guilty on that evidence, it would have been different.

Q. Still, in the civil suit, would not the case have been decided upon the preponderance of evidence, and would not the evidence which decided your mind probably have satisfied the average jurymen?—A. I think not. I thought that the evidence to establish the identity of the bills was not sufficient even for a civil suit.

Q. In a civil suit it was not necessary that the jury should believe the fact to be so beyond a reasonable doubt. It was only necessary that they should believe it?—A. Yes.

Q. As you believed it?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, under those circumstances, believing from the reading of the evidence in the case that that was the actual money stolen from the Government, why did you not recommend the continuing of the civil suits and let the claim of the Government in the premises rest upon the result of the trial, whatever it might be?—A. As to believing that this was the Government's money, I formed the opinion from the evidence, as I read it, that there was not enough of it to lead to the obtaining of a verdict for the Government in a civil suit. I may have been wrong, but that was my judgment of the evidence.

Q. But you say the evidence did convince you?—A. You say it convinced me.

Q. You believed that the money belonged to the Government?—A. Yes; but if I had been acting under an oath as a jurymen, in a case where I was to pass upon the property of an individual in that way, I do not think that I could have found such a verdict. I am bound to say, too, that there probably entered into my mind the consideration that I was perhaps a little better able to discard the doubts that would be thrown around the question than an average jurymen would be. I came to the conclusion that there could not be a verdict for the Government recovered in the civil suit, and I did not find anybody who thought there could be one except Mr. Wells. Mr. Wells seemed to have some idea of that kind. There was no attachment suit pending which attached all this $19,000 in this District. The attachment had been practically worked out upon some land which proved to be mortgaged for all it was worth and upon a racing horse which ate itself up. Mr. Wells seemed to have some idea of extending the attachment so as to cover this property or some idea of bringing a new suit, but he was the only person who suggested to me the idea that the money could be recovered, and there were reasons why I did not give to Mr. Wells' opinion the same weight that I gave to that of other gentlemen.

Q. Can you cite a precedent in which the property in controversy was alleged to have been stolen from the Government, and where the Government compromised the case by taking a portion of the alleged stolen property or money, giving another portion to the defendant or the person charged with the theft?—A. I don't know that I can. I have known of the Government doing things which were very much akin to that. I have known of the Government making seizures of goods and releasing a part of them.

Q. But in those cases the Government never claimed to own the goods?—A. Yes; it claimed to own them because the moment smuggled goods are seized they are forfeited to the Government.

Q. Yes; but the parties originally had the bona fide ownership of the goods; but here is a case where the money in controversy was either the property of the Government or it was not. Either that money was stolen from the Government or it belonged to Ottman, and the Government had no right whatever to it—is not that correct?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, has it not been the universal practice in such cases for the Government to rest its claim upon the verdict of the jury or the court in a civil suit?—A. I don't know whether that has or has not been the universal practice.

Q. Of course you realize the fact that it is much more difficult to make the required proof in a criminal case than in a civil suit?—A. It is more difficult, and in some classes of cases much more difficult. But in other cases I don't know that it is much more difficult. It is much more difficult to prove a murder so as to justify a verdict of guilty than it is to recover damages for assault and battery, though both prosecutions may arise out of the same fact. But, on the other hand, where you are going for money, and where in either case, civil or criminal, the question turns upon the identity of the money, negotiable Treasury notes which are in circulation, while it is undoubtedly more difficult to get a verdict in the criminal case, I do not think it is much more difficult. You have got to make the evidence pretty clear and strong to get a verdict in either case.

Q. Ottman, in this case, was a saloon-keeper, I believe?—A. I understood that he was.

Q. He was known not to be a man of large wealth, and not likely to have much ready money—$40,000 or $50,000?—A. Upon that point let me say that it did appear that there was one transaction where he had $10,000 or $12,000 available to make a purchase.

Q. But he could account for that money and tell where he got it?—A. I don't know whether he could or not.

Q. But suppose he had insisted that this money belonged to him, would it not have been incumbent upon him to account for it and to show how he had become possessed of it?—A. I think he would have had to account for it, but if Mr. Ottman were a rascal I felt that he would be able to account for it.

Q. Was not the amount that was seized in this city, over $19,000, found concealed in such a manner as to indicate that he had not become possessed of it in any legitimate way?—A. I have no question about that. My recollection is that the money was put into a box and placed as a special deposit in the bank at Alexandria. There was a deposit there to Ottman's credit, and then he had this special deposit in this box, and among his suspicious transactions was the hiring of a negro about the jail to go down to Alexandria and get this box from the bank. All this showed that if those were not the proceeds of the Treasury robbery Mr. Ottman had probably got them under such circumstances that he did not want them to be traced or followed.

Q. Was there not proof of the fact that he was working off those bills?—

A. To show how completely a gentleman may be in error in his recollection (I speak after having read over again the stenographer's minutes of the trial since this inquiry has been going on here), Mr. Wells testified that up at Saratoga, N. Y., there was a bill passed of that denomination. The witness from Saratoga said distinctly that he did not remember anything at all about the denomination of the money passed there; yet Mr. Wells gave you a different account of that evidence, and gave it, of course, in perfect good faith. He also told you that they proved the passing of some of this money at Worcester, Mass. Now, the witness from Worcester said distinctly, "I cannot identify the man ["Peg-leg" Brown] as the man from whom I got it." The identification in those cases was not satisfactory. There had been dealings with Brown. Brown had gone to Saratoga, and had bought some drafts and made some remittances from there, but it did not appear in evidence that they were bought with $500 notes. Mr. Wells was wrong about that. It did appear also that Brown was there at Saratoga; that the races were going on; that there was some betting upon the races, of course; and therefore there was a theory on which that money transaction could be explained. It appeared that there had been put into one Boughton's hands six or eight or ten thousand dollars in $500 bills, and there were certain $500 bills undoubtedly that were traced directly to Ottman. At least, that is my recollection. I notice that there must have been a desire at some time in this examination on the part of some member of the committee to make Mr. Cook say, and finally perhaps he was made to say, that the Treasury clerks recognized the denomination of the bills as found; and, at another stage, that the envelope in which the bills were put up was found. All I have to say about that—and I say it after reading the testimony on the trials, and I shall be happy to give the committee the references if necessary—all I have to say about it is, that it appeared positively from the evidence on the trial that when the bills were found there was no envelope. If there had been an envelope it had been destroyed or had disappeared; the bills were simply strapped up. And as to the recognition of the bills, there was only one witness, I think, a Mr. Whitney, from the Treasury Department, who had any recollection of the money, and Mr. Whitney's only recollection was that among the bills that went into the stolen packages were some that were in the seven thousands. These packages contained some bills in fours and fives, and some in sixes and sevens—quite a number in sevens. Then, again (it is unimportant, probably, but I merely call attention to it as showing the fallibility of recollection), Mr. Wells told you that the package had passed along among the people in the Treasury, and that Halleck was the fourth man to whom it had been passed, and that it never was seen after it came to him. Now, in point of fact Halleck was the first man; his seal was put upon it and then it passed immediately on. In the next place, Mr. Wells told you that it was possible for somebody upon the outside to have reached over and stolen that money. I could refer you to passages in the testimony on the two trials where it is stated affirmatively that it was not possible to do that, but it is sufficient to say that Halleck himself testifies that when the mythical Gates told him that he had taken the money in that way, he, Halleck, at once said to him, "That is too thin; that would not work;" and it appears affirmatively that this was the first package put up, that they were piled quite high upon the table, and that this was one of the under packages, the others being piled on top of it. As to Gates, it does not make any difference whether he existed or not. I say he did not. Upon that point, Mr. Wells placed a good deal of reliance upon the fact that there was a memorandum found on Ottman which he said was signed C. Gates. In fact, there was not any such memorandum found. There was a little slip of paper which had upon it a "C" and something that you could make out as "G." It did not relate at all to a division, although it related to money. Halleck's statement as to Gates was this: that the money had been stolen; that all the people in sight were under suspicion including himself; that he was in a drinking saloon, not Ottman's, and that somebody whom he had never seen before approached him and asked if he was Halleck, employed in the Treasury Department; that he said he was; whereupon this person told him that his name was Gates, and said, "Now if I can turn up that money or tell you where it is, will you divide?" Halleck said that without a moment's hesitation he answered that he would. On cross-examination he was compelled to admit that at the time of this alleged interview he knew he was under suspicion, and that he thought every man was a detective upon him, and he was unable to state any reason why, under such circumstances, he so promptly "gave himself away" in this manner. He went on to say that Gates took him into a closet in this drinking saloon and pointed up on top and showed him there one $500 bill as a specimen; that subsequently it was taken down; that then Gates told him that the money was deposited in the water-closet in the Treasury Department; that he, Gates, would not bring it away, and that he, Halleck, would not bring it away, because it would cause suspicion, but that Halleck put his hand down and felt something like money under the seat, and felt the strap on the package, which convinced him that the money was there; that he went away to get somebody to get it out, and that he went and talked with Ottman; that Halleck went into one of the closets and took this money out and found a memorandum, which he destroyed, and went into the next water-closet and turned around towards Ottman, and that Ottman pulled the package out and took it away; that he, Halleck, never saw it afterwards; that he did see Gates once or twice afterwards, and that he and Ottman proceeded incontinently and promptly to cheat Gates out of his share and gave him no portion of it. Halleck could not name any person who had ever seen this "Gates" or knew where he lived. He did say, on cross-examination, that he had heard of one man who knew him, and then he explained that he had taken "Gates" into a soda-water saloon, and that this man had served them, but did not know that that was Gates. Halleck had previously made several confessions, in which he had admitted that he had stolen the money himself; and it is a remarkable thing, in view of the testimony of Mr. Wells here the other day, that he expressed the opinion upon the first trial in his address to the jury that Halleck was himself a thief. I don't suppose it makes any difference as to the propriety of the settlement whether "Gates" existed or did not exist, but I am entirely convinced from the evidence, and so was Mr. Jere. Wilson, who was the brains of the prosecution, that "Gates" did not, in fact, exist, and that Halleck himself stole the money.

Q. Halleck stole the money and the Government lost the money?—

A. The Government lost the money and Halleck stole it. I have no question about it. However, if I were acting as a jurymen and dealing with a man's property or money, I believe I could not have found such a verdict on the evidence. Still, my belief is that that was the Government's money which was found in Ottman's possession.

Q. Something was said in your report about the bona fides of the other claimants of a part of this money.—A. I spoke of the bona fides, subject to the claim of the Government. Here was a negotiable certificate of deposit, and whether that certificate of deposit when it passed from Carpenter to Sage was so held that it could not be taken bona fide was the question.

Q. If it passed to Carpenter in payment of his fee in the Ottman case, of course he must have had knowledge of the facts?—A. Of course.

Q. And after that, a subsequent assignee must look to Carpenter; is not that so?—A. Well, I think it would depend on how soon the certificate had passed. I think if that certificate had passed to Carpenter the very day it was issued, and the next day it had passed, without knowledge, to Sage, and Sage had given value for it, there would be a question. But I said, always, the bona fides, subject to the claim of Government; and that limitation does not seem to have been noticed in the examination here with reference to my report.

Q. In what way were you baffled in your attempt to secure a negotiation?—A. Well, I was baffled originally because I was going directly for the $12,700 in the bank at Alexandria; but when I found these assignments I discovered that if I took a conveyance from Ottman of the money there I would have to litigate with those other parties.

Q. If the money was the Government's there could not be any bona fides as against the Government.—A. Undoubtedly; but Mr. Sage was going to come in, for he held this certificate of deposit, and the question was whether the Government could establish its claim to this money.

Q. He stood in Ottman's shoes though?—A. Not as a holder of negotiable paper.

Q. He could not stand in any better shoes than Ottman's?—A. Perhaps not. At all events I got around those difficulties, which embarrassed my mind considerably, by refusing to take the money in Alexandria and merely using it as a measure of the money that we were to have, and compelled the other side to pay that money from the available fund here and let them deal with the question about the money at Alexandria. There was considerable difficulty in bringing them to that point.

Q. Of course, Mr. Sage could not have any better right to the money than Ottman originally had?—A. No; but Mr. Sage had a right to compel the Government to prove that that money was stolen.

Q. So did Ottman have that right?—A. Undoubtedly. But Mr. Ottman was not going to admit that the money was stolen. Therefore, if we had settled with Ottman and then had to litigate with Sage, we should have had the same thing over again.

Q. But you could not have settled with Ottman except by proceeding with your suit, and then you would have been bound by the result of the litigation?—A. Probably; but we would have got only the $12,000 that we did get, anyway.

Q. That suit would have determined the Government's rights in the matter, leaving Ottman and Sage to fight out their respective claims. But I do not see how the fact that Sage was the assignee of Ottman's certificate of deposit could embarrass the Government in the litigation?—A. Not if we went on with the litigation, but when we came to talk of the settlement it was an embarrassing thing if we were to take simply the Alexandria bank money, and I would not take it. They tried for some time to get us to take it.

Now, let me say, in reference to the testimony you have had here that Ottman at one time offered to compromise the matter by paying a large sum of money, that Mr. Wells never suggested anything of that sort to me in our conversation. Mr. Wells is greatly mistaken as to the length and breadth of the conversation between us. He did not tell me what the evidence on the trial disclosed as to this, that, and the other thing, because I knew it all before. I had read the evidence, and was more familiar with it than he was—several little things showed that I was. Then, we had not any such length of conversation as Mr. Wells seemed to think, and in that conversation he never suggested to me that there had been an offer to pay $35,000. I never heard of any such offer until it came out in this testimony, and Mr. Ottman has addressed a letter to Mr. Merrick, in which he says that he never heard of any such proposition being made, and never authorized any such proposition in any manner. I don't know anything about it myself, except that Ottman has written Mr. Merrick such a letter. Mr. Merrick was sick, and his partner sent me the letter.

Q. Did you receive any compensation from the Government for your efforts in connection with the Ottman case?—A. Not a cent; nor from anybody else. I got the kicks and the cusses, and that is all I did get.

Q. Then you have performed all this labor for the Government without any consideration?—A. Yes, sir; when I commenced it I told Mr. Brewster that I would do it as a personal kindness to him.

Q. Were you not actuated by any desire to be personally kind to Mr. Crowley, also?—A. No; not at all.

Q. Did Mr. Crowley tell you how much he was interested in the case?—A. No, sir; I never knew anything about that.

Q. And he never offered to make you a present or to remunerate you in any way for your assistance in the matter?—A. No, sir; Mr. Wells suggested some idea that on another trial they could get along without Halleck's testimony. Now, I am bound to say that that struck me as absurd. He said that they had got along on the first trial without Halleck. That is true; but how? Because, by some extraordinary rulings of Judge Olin, who made a deliberately prepared ruling, in which he said there were two things to be proved in the case, the first being that Halleck stole the money, and held that the testimony of the declarations of Halleck, though he was not a witness, were good to prove that he had stolen the money. Mr. Wells says that Halleck did not steal it, but the first trial proceeded on the theory that he did. Then the judge let in all Halleck's declarations out of court, not only to prove that he stole the money, but to prove what he did with it—that he gave it to Ottman, and so forth. Now, I do not believe that is good law or that it could be sustained. On the first trial Judge Olin was obviously determined to have a conviction, and he went for it. On the second trial Halleck was a witness. Now drop Halleck out. In the civil suits you could not put in statements made out of court of what Halleck had said to anybody about that money. There would not be any pretense that you could do that, and you could not get ahead as far as from here to the door with the case without Halleck's testimony. Without the testimony of Halleck, you would simply prove that Mr. Ottman had a lot of five-hundred-dollar bills, some of them in the seven thousands, and that he was arrested and that he acted suspiciously. Halleck's testimony was absolutely essential to that case, whether in a civil or in a criminal suit. No lawyer can look at the evidence and have any doubt on that subject. Mr. Wells got very much interested in the case and felt very strongly about it, and he went so far (as appears from the evidence on one of the trials) as to put a detective under a bogus conviction into Halleck's cell and keep him there three or four weeks for the purpose of extracting a confession from Halleck. I have been told outside that that is true, and that it is considered that Mr. Wells went pretty far in so doing. I mention it not to censure Mr. Wells, but to show that he took a very great interest in the case. The case was prepared with most wonderful care and detail. Jere Wilson seems from the record to have been the leading counsel for the prosecution, and I must say that I have never seen a case prepared with more care or detail, and it was very clear to my mind that in either a civil or a criminal suit you would not be likely to get so much of a case again.

Now, as to this matter, all I can say is that I acted in entire good faith in recommending the settlement. If I had to do it again, and found myself in the same position of having undertaken a thing without knowing its extent, I would make the same recommendation. I am sure also that the Attorney-General acted in entire good faith in making the arrangement, and acted with a full knowledge of the facts so far as I could gather them as they were stated in my report, and partly stated orally to him, and he acted, too, with a full knowledge that he was doing a thing of which other people might take a different view, but which was one of the burdens he was bound to accept with the honors of his office.

Q. Did you say that he understood the details of the compromise?—

A. He understood the details at the time—they seem to have passed from his mind subsequently; but the question of that settlement was talked over with him by me certainly at two interviews which occupied a good deal of time.

Q. Did you answer the dispatch which is printed on page 672 of our record?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You refer to the dispatch dated Washington, July 9, 1883, in which the Attorney-General asks you, "Was the $12,500 all the Government was to have in the Ottman case?"—A. I know I answered it. My present recollection is that the dispatch came late at night, and that I answered it from my house.

Q. You answered it in accordance with the fact that the Government was not to have the $12,500 at Alexandria?—A. Yes, sir. Now, I want to say one thing in reference to this case, and to ask the attention of the committee to it. The first witness examined here upon the Ottman case is Mr. Cook, and he states emphatically that he is still counsel in the case. Being still counsel in the case he goes on and makes these statements: That a third trial would probably result unfavorably to his client; that fresh information could be obtained; that from personal conversation and knowledge he has no doubt that the case could have been adjusted originally by entering a nolle, the money being all given up; that the Government could have got judgment against his client in the civil suits; that Mr. Ottman had no property; that in his (Cook's) opinion the money was the money stolen from the Government, and that Mr. Merrick advised Ottman to plead guilty. Then he goes on to say that he is not at liberty to say what he learned in his professional relation, and he adds that he would not believe Ottman, and that Ottman may have lied. Now, that is a counsel referring to his own client. I hope the committee will examine Mr. Merrick and see whether Colonel Cook's statements as to his having an opportunity to go into the civil suits, and refusing to go into them, and as to what he says Mr. Merrick said to him about advising a plea of guilty are true. I hope they will also ask him whether Colonel Cook did not put into the trial of that case some witnesses for the defense who were so clearly perjured that both Mr. Carpenter and Mr. Merrick refused to have anything to do with their examination. That, perhaps, is not pertinent to this inquiry except as it indicates the character of the man who comes here and talks about this matter.

Now, as bearing upon myself, let me say that I am informed from sources which I believe are correct that it is intended to come in at some time hereafter with a fresh swash-bucket of filth and abuse of me. All that I have to say about that is that if anything comes in here reflecting upon me or upon my action, I shall ask the committee to give me a chance to meet it. I wish to say, finally, that in my whole relations to the star-route cases I acted as an honorable, high-minded counsel is bound to act in every case with reference to the matters confided to him, and that I never was influenced in any way, so far as I know, by any improper influences, or anything of the kind. I may have erred in judgment from time to time. I do not see very many of those errors, but if errors were made, they were errors of judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair has no information of any such intention on the part of anybody with regard to you.

The WITNESS. I presume not; but I have received such information.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course the committee are not testifying. We are investigating these matters, and we have to hear the witnesses who present themselves.

The WITNESS. That is all right. I do not object to your examining anybody, nor do I ask to be present when you are examining them. I merely say that if anything is said hereafter by any witness reflecting on my conduct in these matters, I shall be glad to have an opportunity to answer it. I don't suppose it will carry much weight, but I may as well, perhaps, put on record here that on the 7th of December, 1881, Mr. Cook made a report to the Acting Attorney-General, in which in three several places he enlarged to a considerable extent upon the industry, fidelity, and ability which Mr. George Bliss had brought to the preparation of the star-route cases.

I have here a copy of a letter which I wrote to Mr. Lawrence, the First Comptroller, in 1882, when he called upon me with reference to my bill, for a statement of the arrangement under which I was employed. I think the letter may as well go into the record. It touches the question of the rate of compensation and the contract and so on. The letter is as follows:

NEW YORK, November 12, 1882.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of 10th. In reply I have to say that my retainer in the star-route case came about in this way: I first was applied to informally by Hon. Thomas L. James, then Postmaster-General, to accept such retainer. I declined on the ground that I had for some time declined such retainers from the Government because there were always delays in payment, charges were cut down, and work was not appreciated. I was urged to reconsider this, and was finally sent for to meet Attorney-General McVeagh and Mr. James at Long Branch. I there agreed to be employed. As to my rate of charges, I said, and it was agreed to, that I was content to leave that to be settled by the Attorney-General, then present, or his successor; but that I might be at liberty to refer his successor, if he had one during my time, to him in case his successor's views did not agree with mine. I also stated, and it was accepted as proper, that I had not for years accepted a retainer which involved my being away from New York City for less than $100 a day and expenses during my whole absence; that no client had a right to require me to travel at night, and that if I worked a day and traveled a night I charged it as two days, and that my charge of $100 per day did not cover what I regarded as work involving extra labor, strain upon the brain, such as elaborate argument in court and engagement in trials. I stated that I knew this would seem large to any one not accustomed to New York rates, and that I should not work for the Government for less than that, that general rate to be accepted as the basis, with possible additions or reductions as experience might show was proper, and that the Attorney-General should be the judge as to these. My terms were accepted. By this I do not mean that there was any written agreement or any formal stipulation, but that the Attorney-General and Mr. James said that the matter was satisfactorily arranged, and a short time after

I received a written appointment, though it did not, I think, come till after I had been at work some time, and was then made to take effect from an antecedent date, which, however, was later than my actual engagement, and left me with some little time during which I had been at work, and for which I have never received or asked pay.

When Mr. MacVeagh was about to leave office, I, at the request of the present Attorney-General, rendered a bill, having had one previous payment. Mr. Brewster informed me that he had submitted it to Mr. MacVeagh, who had informed him that it was less than he expected, and Mr. Brewster expressed the same opinion. I called his attention to the fact that it was not rendered as in full, and was not intended to be so, as I thought when I came to render a bill for a period covering a trial I should "even up things."

I may be permitted to add that had I supposed the engagement would take my time so exclusively as it has, I should never have accepted it at the rate referred to, or, indeed, at almost at any rate. It has practically taken my entire time for over a year, taken me from my home and my office. It has broken up almost entirely a business which I have spent twenty-five years in building up, and has been a thankless and unsatisfactory business. I have made more than one formal application to be relieved, and would forego much if I could now be allowed to go out of the cases. I came in unwillingly, and I remain unwillingly, and at a personal and pecuniary loss. At the same time I know that the payment to me and other counsel seem and are large; but it is not my fault. I was employed with a distinct understanding of what it would cost, though it was not, I presume, supposed the labor would be so continuous. I think I may say that no time has been wasted. I have every day given to the Government at least twice the number of hours of work that the Department exact from their subordinates, and have worked as many hours Sundays as other days. I may without vanity add that is the opinion of every one who has had anything to do with the star-route cases that whatever of success there has been would not have come but for my labor and perseverance.

With this statement, which I am prepared to make oath to, I now ask that my account, as certified by the Attorney-General, be promptly passed.

To meet one inquiry in your letter I beg to add that the bill now before you covers all services rendered by me between May 26, I think it is, and September 13; that it covers the entire period of trial of the case of the United States vs. Brady and others; that it also covers services before the grand jury in presenting to them various cases against Price, to Messrs. Salisbury, to Messrs. Parker, Mr. Kellogg and others; that it covers some preliminary motions in the case of United States vs. Brady and others, and also covers much of investigation and correspondence as to other star-route cases between the dates named. Besides this I have regarded it as to some extent covering the services rendered previous to May 26, and for which I had been paid in part. In short, it was intended to be a bill in full up to its date.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS,
Assistant Attorney.

Hon. WILLIAM LAWRENCE,
First Comptroller.

In reply to a request by the chairman that Mr. Bliss would give the committee the benefit of his views as to the policy of compensating United States district attorneys and marshals by salaries instead of fees, the following letter was received:

NEW YORK, April 4, 1884.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your favor of yesterday, I have to say that as the result of my experience as United States attorney for the southern district of New York from 1873 to 1877 (during which time I probably received more fees than any other officer ever received there, except one of my predecessors), I am very decidedly of opinion that the system of compensating district attorneys in any degree by fees is vicious, and should be cut up by the root. I publicly expressed this opinion while still holding the office, and observation has confirmed me in the opinion. Even the best and most conscientious officer is liable to be unconsciously influenced by his possible interest in the results of his action, while the fact that he has such an interest exposes him to distrust and suspicion in court and out of court.

As to marshals I cannot, of course, speak from experience. In this district I do not think the evils of the fee system, in their relations to the marshal, have ever been very marked, nor do I think they have been great in the case of the deputy marshals; but in other districts in the States I believe they have been very great, though I think they are not so now. Still, there are evils and evil influences in the system, and it should be abolished as to them.

The difficulty here will be, however, as to the rate of salaries. It is difficult for Congress to understand the high rates of compensation which prevail here among lawyers and those fit for the offices. Even with the dignity and position of judge in this district it is always difficult to find a proper man for the place, and the selection is always and necessarily confined to those having a private income. With district attorney and marshal the difficulty would be greater to get good men for inadequate salaries—that is, salaries inadequate as rates prevail here. An efficient and competent district attorney saves to the Government here tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars a year by the energy and ability with which he defends the thousands of suits which in effect settle the rates of duty to be exacted throughout the country in millions of dollars' worth of importations.

When legislating on this subject some provision ought to be made as to the bailiffs and officers attending upon courts. There are three and four terms or branches of the courts in session here nine or ten months in the year. The attending officers are now paid inadequate sums, and even that under some device to comply in form with the law.

While writing, may I avail myself of the opportunity to make an explanation, which I desire should be brought to Mr. Fyan's attention, and which should perhaps go in some form into the record.

Mr. Fyan asked me if I had ever said that I was satisfied with the action of the grand jury or that I was only dissatisfied as to one case, and I answered I had not. While this is strictly correct, I have an indefinite impression that in conversation with one or more of the jurymen, who were apparently desirous of talking on the subject, I did say that I had no right to complain of their action, though I could not agree with their judgment, meaning that I did not share in some current complaints as to undue influence. I think, also, that on one occasion when a jurymen referred to the Soledad and Newhall route, on which I thought we had failed, I did say in substance, "We'll accept your action as to all the others; I can't see the wisdom of your course as to one route," which I named; I cannot say whether it was Fargo and Pembina or Wells and Hamilton. As to all this my recollection is indefinite; I was in an embarrassing position with the jurymen; I had no evidence of improper influences, or motives, yet I dissented from their action, and therefore when any of them spoke to me I "slid over" the matter easily.

Mr. Fyan also asked me as to a witness named Parrish, whom he connected with a Salisbury route. I do not remember to have ever heard of him in connection with any route, but Mr. Brewster Cameron informs me that a man named Parrish was connected with the Vinita and Las Vegas route, which was known as a Parker route, not a Salisbury. I know nothing about it, however, but Mr. Cameron can doubtless tell you.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS,

Hon. WM. M. SPRINGER,
Chairman.

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1884.

The following letter from Mr. George Bliss was received and ordered to be inserted in the record:

160 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, May 1, 1884.

DEAR SIR: In returning the proof of my testimony corrected I ought, perhaps, to call your attention to the fact that while my answer to the second on page 300 is correct, I ought, perhaps, to say that the Attorney-General when deciding that Mr. Kellogg should be prosecuted directed that the case should not be proceeded with until he ceased to be Senator. My answer, "No human being", &c., is so much broader than the question that I have thought I ought to mention this fact, lest it might appear that I misled you.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS.

Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER,
Chairman.

MONDAY, April 7, 1884.

JOHN L. SARGENT sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your residence and occupation.—Answer. I reside at 913 E street N. W., in this city. My occupation is that of an independent detective.

Q. State whether at any time you were employed by any of the attorneys to aid them in the prosecution of the star-route trials?—A. I was, sir.

Q. By whom?—A. Col. William A. Cook.

Q. How long did you continue in the service of the Government?—A. I continued, I may say, from the 1st of June until January, 1881. Colonel Cook sent for me and desired my services, and afterwards, in July, he and Mr. Gibson recommended to the Department of Justice that I be employed, and I think my employment commenced about the middle of July in the Department, and I was paid by them until they stated that my services were no longer required, which I think was in January, 1882.

Q. Do you know how much you were paid for your entire services?—

A. In the neighborhood of $100 a month. I think it was at the rate of $3 a day; 25 cents a day was allowed me for car-fare.

Q. Did you have any assistants or any persons under your employ assisting you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were other detectives employed by Colonel Cook, so far as you know?—A. Yes, sir; I think Colonel Moore was employed. I do not know this of my own knowledge, but I used to see him in connection with Colonel Cook.

Q. I am asking especially whether there was anybody else employed in connection with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was the nature of the duties which you performed?—A. The first duties which he required of me were to get the names, residences and avocation, and general habits and associations of the grand and petit jurors.

Q. Then impaneled?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the object of that information?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Did you make a report to him?—A. I reported verbally every day.

Q. Did you make a written report?—A. No, sir; I never made a written report, but I reported verbally every day, and also verbally to Mr. Newcome, a special agent of the Department of Justice.

Q. Did he make any notes of your reports?—A. I think not; because I was specially assigned to duty there by Colonel Cook.

Q. Did Colonel Cook make any notes or memoranda of your reports?—A. He may have done so. I do not know. I don't remember that he did.

Q. You do not remember that he took any notes of your statements?—A. Not that I am aware of.

Q. Did you report with regard to the members of grand and petit juries?—A. I did.

Q. As to all of them?—A. Yes, sir; their general reputation, character, &c., and also during my service Colonel Cook desired me to assist Special Agent Henderson of the Post-Office Department in the arrest of Lilley and Broht. He had the warrant for their apprehension, and I pointed out Mr. Broht to him and also Mr. Lilley, and they were taken into custody. During that period the Signal Service Bureau desired that the Attorney-General should render some assistance in the arrest of Howgate, as Lieutenant Caziarc had discovered that he was a defaulter to the extent of some $40,000, or an embezzler at least, and Mr. Newcome was assigned to that duty. He went to Mount Clement, Mich., and apprehended Howgate and brought him back. In the mean time I had hunted up the records and discovered that Mr. Howgate had at least $100,000 worth of real estate in the District of Columbia. He was placed under bonds and was released on bail. A short time after he was released on bail further discrepancies in his accounts to the amount of sixty or seventy thousand dollars more were discovered, and a new warrant was issued for his arrest. He heard of it in some way and left the city. Colonel Cook, who had been appointed special attorney to prosecute him, immediately attached all his property, which is under attachment up to the present time. Mr. Newcome went to New York and made every effort to discover his whereabouts, but failed. Finally I discovered that he had come to town one night and had quietly gone to his house. I went to Mr. Newcome and placed an officer in the front and rear of the house and arrested him the second time. He desired me, or his family did, to remain with him over night and not to put him in jail. I told Mr. Newcome I would do so. I did so. Next morning I surrendered him to the marshal of the District and he was placed in jail; his bondsmen on the prior warrant having surrendered him and he being unable to get any new bond. After he had been in jail some time by order of the court, under the plea of desiring to examine some important papers, he was allowed to go, in the custody of a deputy marshal, to his house to examine these papers; the last time he went he left the marshal in the front room and he went out the back door, and that is the last that has been heard of Mr. Howgate.

Q. What deputy was that?—A. C. H. Doing.

Q. Was he a deputy under Marshal Henry?—A. He was a deputy under Marshal Henry.

Q. What has been done, so far as you know, in regard to apprehending Howgate since his escape?—A. Nothing that I know of. I have had nothing to do with him since I placed him in the custody of the marshal.

By Mr. FVAN:

Q. What was the date of this escape?—A. I am not able to tell you; the records of the court will show that.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is Mr. Doing still in the service?—A. I think not. I asked a deputy marshal yesterday whether Mr. Doing was still in the service, and he told me he was not.

Q. Do you know whether the suits or attachments still exist?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They have not been prosecuted to success?—A. No, sir; it was his escape that gave the Government an opportunity to attach the property. Because, as I understand the law of this District, a man has to be either a non-resident or fugitive from justice before you can attach his real estate.

Q. Do you know whether any effort has been made to discover his whereabouts?—A. I do not.

Q. All you know about it is what you did in the matter?—A. Yes, sir; I arrested him on the second occasion. Mr. Newcome arrested him on the first occasion at Mount Clement, Mich.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the arrest of Ottman?—A. I did.

Q. State what you did in that matter.—A. Well, there was a robbery of $47,000 in $500 bills from the Treasury Department on June 2, 1875. The Government officers failed to apprehend the thief, but Detective Miller received information that one Brown, a sport—"Peg-leg Brown," as he was known—was passing $500 bills at Saratoga at the race track. He went on and took Brown into custody and brought him to Washington at the suggestion of Mr. John C. New, then the Assistant Treasurer of the United States. After he was brought on, Major Richards, my superior officer, desired Mr. McElfresh and myself to take an active interest in the working up of the case. We secured sufficient evidence to show that Ottman and a small man named Halleck, who was a clerk, and Brown, were the active participants. I placed an officer named Schilling to watch Ottman's house and indicate it to Mr. McElfresh; and Mr. McDevitt to go to New York. We ascertained that Halleck was in New York; that he had gone on with Ottman. Mr. McElfresh went and arrested Halleck and brought him back. In the mean time Ottman had come to Washington, and had come to police headquarters, and was indignant at the arrest of Brown and procured bail and had a habeas corpus for him. Then we took Ottman into custody. I think the bond at first was $100,000, and they were all placed in prison. Whilst Ottman was in the central guard-house, one of the colored messengers came to me and said that Ottman wanted him to go to Alexandria, and if he would go he would give him an order on the German-American bank for a package, and when he got it he wanted him to take the paper and destroy it, and then to plant the package in such a place that he could locate it; and, if he did so, he would reward him handsomely when he got out of his trouble; but if he did not he would kill him. I immediately gave the boy a candle and pen and paper, and he brought it upstairs and Ottman wrote the order. We went to trial. Then McElfresh discovered from an agent of Ottman's that he had been to Alexandria with another order, and we went over on the train next morning and when we got to the bank we got the package. When we opened it we found a pine board a little over an inch thick dug out in the center, with Ottman's name on it. We opened the box, and there were twenty-nine $500 bills. Then Mr. Reed, the cashier, told us that Ottman had a bank account, some $12,500; also that he had some stock in the Marine Railroad there, all of which we immediately put under attachment; taking the box, however, of $500 bills because Mr. New had given the bank a guarantee of protection. We brought it to Washington and placed it in the property clerk's hands at headquarters. I also took from Ottman's person $1,025. I then discovered further that "Peg leg Brown" had gone to Saratoga, and to Worcester, Mass., and to other points, and was buying drafts with $500 bills less 10 per cent. payable to William H. Ottman, and sending them to Washington to him. The case came up for trial. Mr. Wells was the district attorney. Brown, though, sent for Major Richards one night at Aman's saloon and told him if he would make a witness of him he would expose the whole thing. Major Richards went to Governor Wells, but the governor said he had evidence enough to convict Brown and didn't want his statement. The major told me about that yesterday. The case came on for trial. The first trial was a hung jury, the second trial was a hung jury, and since that time I have never known anything about it until I saw the recent statements of a compromise or settlement of it.

Q. What was the result of your investigation as to whether the bills you found in the box at Alexandria were the identical bills that came from the Treasury?—A. The best evidence of that is the testimony of Mr. Whitney of the cash room; he can testify about the bills being of a certain series and within certain numbers. Halleck made a confession afterwards, and one of the things that helped largely to jeopardize the case and really to spoil it was that they took a detective officer after Halleck was convicted (Halleck, by the way, was convicted, and the cases were separated) they brought a detective officer down on some nominal charge, and put him in the cell with Halleck to extort another statement, and the result was that the people got somewhat indignant at that mode of procedure, and I told Governor Wells "You have spoiled your case by putting a man into prison to extort a confession from Halleck when you have got plenty of evidence already." They granted Halleck a new trial. He testified to having gone over and told Ottman where this money was; that it was over in the water-closet of a saloon in the city, and Ottman went and got it. I asked Mr. Halleck how much of the money he ever received from Ottman. He said he received $680, but he was to pay him $8,000 of the money for his saloon and restaurant, and Ottman was going to give up the business.

Q. He had enough to retire on?—A. Enough to retire. I went to Worcester, Mass., and to Saratoga, and I brought down the cashiers of the bank. They both identified this man Brown as the man who came in and purchased drafts for $500 bills and sent them on to Ottman. We also attached Ottman's saloon, his public house, horses, and everything. The horses, I believe, they disposed of because the case was delayed so long that it would cost more for livery than they were worth.

Q. Was there any doubt in the minds of those who investigated the matter that this was the money stolen from the Government?—A. There was no doubt in my mind. From the facts and circumstances there could be none. I never saw the money before. The only question was that this was an already broken package; if it had been a full package it would have had the slip indicating the numbers, as I understand; but Mr. Whitney can tell you as nearly as possible about the identity of the money, because he handled the package before it was stolen.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Was this property of Howgate's attached after the first or after the second arrest?—A. It was attached after the second arrest; because we could not attach it before that on account of his not being a fugitive or non-resident. When he discovered that there was a second warrant for fifty or sixty thousand dollars against him he became a fugitive and left the city and was away for some time, his bondsmen offering a reward for his apprehension.

Q. Then as I understand you when he was arrested this second time his bondsmen were released and he was put in jail?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is this property improved or unimproved?—A. It is mostly improved, I think.

Q. Where is this property located?—A. On Thirteenth street; they occupy one of the houses, the one where I arrested him.

Q. What other property has he?—A. He has brick houses scattered around through the city.

Q. Who receives the rent?—A. I think it goes into the hands of the marshals under these writs of attachment.

Q. Are his family the beneficiaries of those rents?—A. Not at all. I think it is only by the sufferance of the marshal that they are permitted to remain in the house.

Q. You say you were in the employ of the Government up to January, 1882?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you communicate the information that you obtained to anybody but Mr. Cook?—A. No, sir; except incidentally to Mr. Newcome, who was a special agent of the Department of Justice.

Q. When your relations with the Government ceased were you employed by any of these parties that were supposed to be implicated in the star-route cases?—A. I rendered some service for Mr. A. B. Williams, an attorney.

Q. How long were you in his employ?—A. During, I think, most of the first trial—all of the first trial.

Q. Can you not give the dates?—A. I cannot; it was during the first trial.

Q. Whom did Mr. Williams represent?—A. I think he represented Mr. Stephen W. Dorsey at that time.

Q. Did he represent anybody else?—A. I do not know whether he did or not.

Q. Were you in the employ of any other of these star-route men or their attorneys?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you ever present when there was an indictment or the draft of an indictment presented against Salisbury?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear of such an occurrence?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you ever present when there was an indictment against Parker presented?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you ever in the employ of General McKibben?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know General McKibben?—A. I know him. Well, I have given information to General McKibben occasionally. I know him well.

Q. State what information you gave him.—A. Well, anything that I would pick up in the way of information.

Q. Information as to Salisbury?—A. Well, generally in connection with the star-route matter; I cannot exactly recollect at present.

Q. Did you ever receive $1,000 on a compromise in relation to any of these cases?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever receive any other sum of money?—A. No, sir. What was that question? You say did I ever receive any other sum of money?

Q. Yes.—A. In connection with what?

Q. These star-route investigations.—A. I received compensation for the services I rendered.

Q. From whom?—A. Mr. A. B. Williams.

Q. Did you ever receive any from General McKibben?—A. Not directly.

Q. Did you indirectly?—A. Well, I may have received a few dollars, but no very great amount.

Q. From whom?—A. Well, I may have received it from General McKibben, so far as that goes, I mean.

Q. Have you any knowledge of Mr. Gibson making a proposition to General McKibben or to anybody else that there would be no indictment found against Salisbury, provided they paid $27,000 by the 15th, 16th, or 17th of June, 1882?—A. No, sir; I know nothing about that; I never heard about that.

Q. Do you know of anybody else making such a proposition?—A. I do not know of any such a proposition.

Q. Was any such proposition made in relation to the Parker case?—A. I never heard of any.

Q. Were you ever in the employ of any persons representing Parker on the route from Las Vegas to Vinita?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Or the Kerens cases; do you know anything about them?—A. No, sir; I do not. I never saw Parker in my life, and do not think I ever saw Salisbury but once, and that was five or six years ago, and I never exchanged a word with him nor with Parker. I would not know Parker if he should come in the room.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. The conversation I was talking about was with General McKibben or any other agent of any of those parties? You don't know of any such proposition?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where was General McKibben's office?—A. On E street, just beyond Thirteenth street.

Q. Number 1305?—A. I think that is the number.

Q. And you never heard any such conversation?—A. No, sir.

Q. Since Mr. Bliss was on the stand, have you had any conversation with him?—A. I have not. I have never exchanged five words with Mr. Bliss in my life.

Q. You have not talked with any of these parties—Gibson or McKibben or others?—A. I have not seen Mr. Gibson for three or four weeks, and then only for a moment. I used to give Mr. McKibben information and he used to pay me for my trouble, as far as that goes. It was general information.

Q. Information in relation to what, these cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whom did you understand he represented?—A. I did not ask him.

Q. I do not suppose you asked him, but you may have understood?—A. Well, I supposed that he represented the Salisbury interest.

Q. Did you not understand that he was the agent of the Salisbury interest?—A. I have understood it, but not of my own knowledge. I have always understood that General Joe McKibben was the man that looked out for the Salisbury interests here and had done so for years.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Whom did A.B. Williams represent?—A. Mr. Stephen W. Dorsey.

Q. Do you say you were employed by him during that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the nature of the services that he desired you to render?—A. To get any information I could that would be of benefit to him and his client.

Q. Did you procure any information for them during your services for him?—A. Yes, sir. For instance, I would ascertain sometimes when witnesses would arrive from far off in the West, when the case was on trial; and I would acquaint him with the fact that so and so, men that I never knew, only by name, had arrived.

Q. Were you able to give them any information as to what those witnesses would testify to on the trial?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you make any efforts to get that information?—A. I did, sir; and possibly I may have found out what one or two would say—some little information of this kind: Where a route had been expedited, and there was a lot of men that lived along the route, and that had come on to testify that the signatures on the recommendations of this expedition were not genuine, that they were forgeries—something of that kind.

Q. How long did your employment by Mr. Williams continue?—A. Only during the first trial. I had nothing to do with the second trial.

Q. Did you furnish Mr. Williams any papers relating to the prosecution of the cases?—A. No, sir; I had no papers to furnish.

Q. Did you know of any papers being furnished him which related to the prosecution of the cases?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear it mentioned by Mr. Williams that he desired to get any papers that were used by the prosecution?—A. No, sir; he never inquired about that of me. He just employed me to get him such general information as he thought would be beneficial to his client, and I was then out of the Government service and being an independent officer felt that I had the right to do so.

Q. Did I understand you to say that you had any conversations with Colonel Cook, in whose service you had been formerly?—A. Oh, I used to see Colonel Cook nearly every day, but not in regard to these matters. I have other matters with him pretty nearly every day.

Q. Relating to the prosecution of the star-route cases?—A. No, sir; other matters entirely.

Q. Relating to his own private business?—A. His private legal business. I did have one conversation with him about this investigation. He asked me if I recollected being in his office one day when the special agent of the Department of Justice, Mr. Woodward, was there, and was protesting against the arrest of Broht and Lilley, and I told him I was.

Q. Who was protesting?—A. Mr. Woodward was. Colonel Cook insisted that they should be taken in custody, as he thought he had a good case, and the warrants were prepared and were placed in the hands of the special agent (Henderson was the special agent and Thomas Trodden was his assistant), and I pointed the men out.

Q. Have you any objection to stating the amount of your compensation from Mr. Williams?—A. Well, I suppose Mr. Williams paid me for my services during that trial some four or five hundred dollars.

Q. Did you get your pay directly from him or ex-Senator Dorsey?—A. I got my pay from Mr. Williams.

Q. You treated with him entirely?—A. I treated with the attorney.

Q. Did you furnish him any written memoranda?—A. Oh, I may have furnished him at times a little list of names of witnesses that had arrived. They were coming in on almost every train from the West. As I would get the names I could not remember them, and I would make a memorandum and turn it over to him, and he would do as he pleased with them.

Q. During your conversation with Colonel Cook was there any mention made of any services you were rendering to Mr. Williams.—A. No, sir. Oh, I may incidently remarked to him that I was doing some business for Mr. Williams.

Q. He knew that Mr. Williams represented Mr. Dorsey?—A. Oh, yes, sir; he knew that.

Q. Did you see him frequently during that time?—A. Yes, sir; every day. I see him every day now.

Q. Did you ever see any papers there relating to those cases?—A. No, sir. Colonel Cook and Mr. Bliss and the other attorneys, when they would come, would go in the third story of Colonel Cook's office and lock the doors, and no one was permitted up there. At least I never was; I think Colonel Moore (being a good penman) assisted in copying some papers, but even that I do not know, because I never was up there.

Q. Did you say that you were also in the service of Mr. McKibben?—A. No, sir; I was not in his service, but I gave him information from time to time.

Q. Was that during the first or the second trial?—A. During the first. I had nothing to do with the second. If I wanted a few dollars at any time from Mr. McKibben I could get it.

Q. How much did he pay you?—A. I suppose he paid me altogether $100; I was not in his service.

Q. Did you not hear it currently reported that the Salisburys were going to pay and were required to pay for immunity?—A. All I heard was a rumor that the Parker and Salisbury parties had made a settlement with the Government in some way through their attorney, but who that attorney was, or how the settlement was, I did not know.

Q. Did you get any of that information from Mr. McKibben?—A. No, sir. I just heard it rumored around; probably I heard Mr. Williams mention it.

Q. What did he say about it?—A. I don't think he said more than that that Salisbury matter or some matters had been settled with the Government in some way. It was in the course of general conversation.

Q. Did he say it was settled by paying anything?—A. He did not say that. I don't suppose he knew about that because he was not the attorney of the Salisburys or Parkers. Mr. McKibben was the attorney, and there is another gentleman who was the more immediate agent of the Salisburys, Mr. Ramage. He was the gentleman who used to go regularly to the Post-Office Department and collect what was due them and attend to the legal business.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who is Mr. Ramage?—A. He was formerly a clerk in the Post-Office Department. He is now the authorized agent of the Salisburys. I recognized him (although I had never any business transactions or dealings with him) as the immediate representative of the Salisbury faction.

Q. Did he ever say anything to you about having had to pay anything?—A. No, sir; I do not suppose we ever exchanged ten words in our lives. He may have asked me——

Q. Are you sure that you never saw any money paid?—A. I am quite sure.

Q. Do you not know of it?—A. I do not know of it. Mr. Gibson or Mr. McKibben or anybody else that had that business never imparted it to me, or any of their information; all they desired of me was whenever I obtained any information to impart it to them.

Q. Do you know Mr. Nathaniel Wilson, an attorney here?—A. Yes, sir; I know him.

Q. Was he an attorney for one of these parties?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge. Judge Jere Wilson was one of the attorneys.

Q. I mean the other Mr. Wilson.—A. If he was I do not know it; there was quite an array of lawyers—Mr. McSweeney and Mr. Totten, and Mr. Chandler, of Missouri; A. B. Williams, Robert G. Ingersoll, and Judge Jere Wilson; I think there were about ten or eleven lawyers employed in the case, but I cannot remember them all now; this was at the first trial that I was rendering Mr. Williams assistance. In the second trial I took no part whatever.

I would say in regard to the Howgate matter that he had some land which I had discovered in Florida, and Colonel Cook immediately had transmitted a communication to the marshal of the district in Florida, and that land was also attached, and is under attachment at the present time.

WASHINGTON, April 10, 1884.

P. H. WOODWARD sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. My age is 51; I consider my residence Windham, Conn., though I reside in Hartford; Windham is my home; my occupation at present is post-office inspector.

Q. How long have you been in the service of the United States as a post-office inspector?—A. I entered the service first in September, 1865, but left it in 1876. I re-entered the service in March, 1881, and am in it still.

Q. Have you held any other positions under the Government?—A. No, sir; I do not remember that I have ever held any other office of any kind.

Q. During your last employment as an inspector what has been the nature of your duties?—A. My duties have been principally in connection with the star-route business; but at odd intervals, at my own request and as a matter of rest and recreation, I have attended to more or less post-office business.

Q. Please go on now and state what service you have performed, and what information you have obtained in connection with star-route matters during the time that you have been engaged in investigating them.—A. I have prepared a statement which embodies in outline the matter called for by your question.

Q. Then you will please proceed to read that statement.—A. (Reading:) About the 10th of March, 1881, I received a telegram from General Joseph R. Hawley, saying that the Postmaster-General wished me to come to Washington. I met Mr. James in New York. He asked if I would accept a position as confidential agent of the Department, with the special view of looking first into the alleged star-route frauds. He desired that the investigation should be conducted in a way to develop the facts quietly without causing scandal. We traveled to Washington together; I was appointed inspector on the 14th, and the next day started on a hurried trip to Charleston, Columbia, and Raleigh.

About the 1st of April the investigation began. Within a day or two Hon. R. M. Daggett, of Nevada, brought in Isaac Jennings, late subcontractor on route No. 40,104, Mineral Park, Ariz., to Pioche, Nev. The history of the route was typical. By orders for additional trips and for expedition the pay was advanced, between January and August, 1879, from $2,982, the contract price, to $52,033.33. Jennings had undertaken to perform the service at $28,000 per annum, subject to fines and deductions, leaving to the contractor a yearly net profit of $24,033.33, without the investment of a penny on the line. In consequence of imperfect work not only was the entire allotment of the subcontractor for the fourth quarter of 1879 swept away, but the account showed an indebtedness from him of $789.83. To this extent the nominal contractor, having absorbed the entire available pay, found himself still the creditor of the man who owned the stock and did the work. Coming thus early, these facts and figures made a profound impression.

During the initial stages of the investigation Mr. George E. Spencer, ex-Senator from Alabama, was quite active. For a number of years he had resided in Nevada, and in his travels on the frontiers had learned much about the star mail service. Several swindles he reported to Mr. James. Early in April he brought to me Mr. A. M. Gibson, who placed in my hands a lot of papers containing memoranda made from the records of the Department.

Mr. Spencer also put me in communication with Mr. Jerome J. Hinds, a mail contractor of long and varied experience. In 1878 Mr. Hinds was a partner in the contract on route No. 40,101, Santa Fé to Prescott, and knew the secrets of the first expedition. From his papers I evolved a statement to which he gave the sanction of his signature and oath. The firm afterwards dropped out when Mr. John A. Walsh became contractor. Mr. Hinds also furnished much miscellaneous information respecting frauds in the mail service.

The memoranda furnished by Mr. Gibson contained a table showing the manipulation of ninety-three routes. From this a revised table was prepared which presented the great increase in cost in a way to carry instant conviction to the ordinary intelligence.

One Saturday evening I asked Mr. James to come to my rooms on Thirteenth street and examine the results already accomplished. He did so, and, amazed at the revelation, hurried me off to the White House. On looking over the figures, President Garfield shared in the astonishment of the Postmaster-General. At first, he could hardly credit their genuineness. In reply to a question from Mr. James respecting the policy to be pursued, he said in substance, "I have sworn to uphold the Constitution and the laws; I shall do my full duty. My instructions to you are, cut the ulcer out, no matter whom it hurts." With much impressiveness of manner he referred to some mysterious attempt to entrap him, the meaning of which was now first revealed to him. He added that, by no wisdom or foresight of his own, he had providentially escaped a great peril. Our silent curiosity was not gratified by further explanation.

At this interview I first learned that the investigation was likely to lead to criminal prosecutions. The decisive order was given by the Commander-in-Chief.

The next day Mr. James and I had a conference with the Attorney-General, and in the evening those officers called together upon the President. From this time the administration adopted a radical and aggressive policy. Soon after General Brady was asked to resign and J. L. French, his chief clerk, was removed. The appointment as successor to French of Mr. Henry D. Lyman, whose ability and character are equally admirable, and who acted for several weeks as Second Assistant Postmaster-General pending the confirmation of Mr. R. A. Elmer, gave us free access to the files and records in the Contract Office.

When recalled by Mr. James I had been out of the service a number of years, and having no expectation of re-entering it had given, during the interval, little attention to postal matters. As Mr. Gibson graciously placed at my disposal valuable transcripts, and intimated that he possessed a minute knowledge of the inner history of the frauds and the influence to press important witnesses into use, I suggested to him that it would be a satisfaction to me to have him employed to assist in the work. He replied that as he had recently severed his connection with the Sun he should like such an engagement, but did not think General Garfield would assent. I advocated his employment to Messrs. James and MacVeagh and also to the President. After a time Mr. MacVeagh directed me to telegraph to Mr. Gibson, then in New York, to return to Washington. He came; we went together to the Department of Justice, where the Attorney-General orally employed him. It was early settled, with the full concurrence of the Postmaster and Attorney Generals, that the implied obligation of immunity should be sacredly observed towards such minor offenders as elected to give full, frank, and truthful information to the Government. From the start upon this point I insisted upon a definite understanding. While my conversations on the subject were chiefly with Mr. James, I knew that Mr. MacVeagh approved of the policy.

In May, 1881, those officers, acting in concert, sent a number of picked inspectors to the new States and Territories to procure evidence in the regions where the frauds were committed. With unwearied zeal they worked late into the fall. In this connection, as deserving of special praise, let me mention the names of Messrs. A. G. Sharp, George L. Seybolt, J. E. Stuart, John B. Furay, G. W. Porter, Brewster Cameron, J. D. King, S. P. Child, R. B. McGaughey, and Edward E. Boyd.

One of the first persons to make important disclosures to the Government was Mr. George F. Brott. This gentleman had lost a large fortune in mercantile ventures at New Orleans, through the general failure of the crops in the years 1864-'65. In the county in Connecticut where I lived he had a circle of friends by whom he was held in high esteem. We had known each other slightly since 1867. He said he came in the interest of good government, and on account of the personal confidence he reposed in me, to communicate certain facts which in his judgment ought to be disclosed.

Mr. Brott gave information which led to the forced retirement from office of J. M. McGrew, Sixth Auditor, and of Fred B. Lilley, deputy Sixth Auditor. He turned over letters in the writing of Lilley, which established his guilt beyond question. Mr. Brott explained how, by the payment of a fee of one thousand dollars ($1,000) to William Lilley, father of F. B. Lilley, he had secured a steamboat contract on Pearl River, Mississippi, at an annual compensation of $7,500, after the ordinary recommendations had failed; and how, through F. B. Lilley, he had procured a steamboat contract from Donaldsonville to Red River Landing, at the yearly pay of $44,518, the sum having been fixed considerably above the price originally asked by Brott, to furnish a fund for dividends. This service began about January 10, 1880, and in consequence of numerous disasters was imperfectly performed till March 1, 1880, when it was discontinued. Hence the expectations of profit were not realized.

Mr. Brott told how route No. 39103, from Santa Fé to Mesilla, N. Mex., James B. Price, contractor, was expedited, how much it cost, and how, as a part of the bargain, the same parties tried unsuccessfully to secure the establishment of the short route, or cut-off, from Las Vegas to Albuquerque.

In May, 1881, Mr. Gibson ardently urged the employment of William A. Cook in these cases, and invoked my aid. So far as I remember, his recommendations were oral, and I orally, but mildly, reinforced them.

Shortly after the engagement of Mr. Cook was publicly announced, I received a summons from President Garfield to be at the White House at a designated hour. Without much preface he said he had sent for me to ask if I could explain how the appointment came to be made; that the day before a judge of the Supreme Court had informed him that Cook was one of the most disreputable members of the Washington bar, and that the selection was a disgrace to the administration.

I attempted to justify the action of the Attorney-General on the ground that, as the investigation widened, it would be desirable to have in the cases a local lawyer who possessed an intimate and extensive knowledge, not only of the criminal class, but also of the darker elements that go to make up the life of the District. I added that the experience of post-office special agents was of little aid in fitting them to work successfully in the social strata referred to, as they traced crime to its source, not by communication with the guilty, but by purely intellectual processes. The President seemed partially satisfied.

A few days later, Mr. James invited me in the forenoon to ride with him to the White House, whither he was called in the routine of business. We found fifteen or twenty people in the Cabinet room. Before we left, the President took me one side and asked if I did not regard as confidential the conversation above referred to. I replied that I did. "Why, then," he continued, with some severity, "did you report it to Mr. Cook?" I answered him that I had never mentioned the subject to any one. He then said that Mr. Cook had written him a letter, making special reference to the imputations of a Supreme Court judge, and defending his own character. I assured Mr. Garfield that the fact had been disclosed through some other channel.

The above letter ought to be among the papers of the late President.

Early in June, 1881, Montford C. Rerdell, the confidential clerk of Stephen W. Dorsey, through Hon. Powell Clayton, ex-United States Senator from Arkansas, tentatively offered himself as a Government witness. By prearrangement he came to the Arlington Hotel, where he told his story in the presence of Messrs. James, Clayton, and myself. Its substance may be condensed into a few words.

Rerdell was the clerk and stenographer of Stephen W. Dorsey. While that gentleman was still in the United States Senate, Rerdell, with others, worked nearly all of one night in the house of Dorsey, completing a large number of proposals for carrying the mails. These were made in the names of J. R. Miner, John M. Peck, J. W. Dorsey, and A. E. Boone, the last of whom was afterwards frozen out to make room for H. M. Vaile. At the close of his Senatorial term, Stephen W. Dorsey made no further concealment of his interest in the mail business. Rerdell went West to place service on a number of routes and to procure the needful data for working it up to an altitude of satisfactory profits. On some, he himself became nominal subcontractor.

A set of mail books for Dorsey were kept by Rerdell. They show payments of over $37,000 to Thomas J. Brady, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, who is designated as "Wm. Smith"; also of $600 to William H. Turner, contract clerk, designated as "Sam'l Jones." Brady received 33½ per cent. as his share of the increased allowances. Rerdell exhibited a memorandum, alleged to be in the writing of Stephen W. Dorsey, charging to the firm the following donations of mining stock:

James N. Tyner, 1,500 shares.....	$2,000
A. M. Gibson, 1,500 shares	2,000
William H. Turner, 1,200 shares	1,500

In one instance, within the knowledge of Rerdell, Dorsey paid $2,000 on the bonds of failing bidders to secure a settlement. Of this sum $1,000 reached the public Treasury, and $1,000 the pockets of the then Sixth Auditor and his deputy.

At the time of the Congressional investigation into star-route matters Rerdell feigned sickness for ten days in order to secure time for the preparation of a false set of books. He drew a pencil mark around the items to be hidden under a new disguise, the charges to Smith and Jones being now carried to profit and loss.

Rerdell also exhibited two balance-sheets purporting to be correct transcripts from the genuine books of Dorsey, and from the amended books prepared during his pretended sickness.

Mr. James advised Rerdell to seek, without unnecessary delay, Attorney-General MacVeagh, who was then out of town, but was expected back the following Friday. I told Rerdell to be at the house of that gentleman on Friday evening unless otherwise directed. We happened to meet on the door-steps about 8 p. m. Rerdell had under his arm a package, which proved to be the letter-press books of Stephen W. Dorsey. From these he read a number of missives directed to the Wilcoxes, in Oregon, and to other persons. He repeated in substance the story told at the Arlington. He said the original account-book, containing the criminating entries to the debit of Smith and Jones, was in New York, and he volunteered to go thither and procure it.

I saw but little more of Rerdell till long afterwards. He had two or three further interviews with the Attorney-General, but soon yielded to the importunities of his old associates. At that time he possessed valuable papers, and would have made an important witness. I shall never forgive myself that undue deference to official station deterred me from cleaving to this man till the last scrap of evidence had been wrung from him. The hand of one could have held him firmly, but from our joint grasp he was easily fished away.

A week or two later George E. Spencer, on returning from New York City, reported to us that on Sunday, June 12, about 1 o'clock p. m., Stephen W. Dorsey called upon him at the Everett House, entering his room unannounced and in a state of terrible demoralization. He smoked incessantly and drank frequently. He said his clerk, Rerdell, had "squealed," betrayed him, and shown his papers to the Government. He begged Spencer to help him. Hon. S. B. Elkins was present a part of the time, and to him Dorsey made the most abject apologies for previous wrongs.

Mr. Spencer added, that on Thursday evening, the 16th, Dorsey came again to the Everett House, but now in a state of high exhilaration, having become satisfied in the mean time that Rerdell had not "squealed."

Before your committee Mr. Cook testified that he had several private interviews with General Garfield, by whom he was instructed to communicate directly with himself on star-route matters, thus, in a degree, ignoring the Attorney-General.

From events in which I bore a share I know with the assurance of certainty that these representations are false. Mr. Cook was introduced to General Garfield by Postmaster-General James in my presence on the Wednesday evening preceding the assassination. The event was pre-arranged. Mr. Cook called at the Arlington in a carriage at twilight. Thence we three drove to the White House. We were ushered into one of the lower rooms. Shortly after the President entered. Mr. Cook was presented to him by Mr. James. They met each other as persons hitherto unacquainted. I cannot believe that the Executive of this Nation arranged a job with a man whom a Supreme Court judge had only a few weeks before denounced to him as disreputable, for the purpose of deceiving an honored member of his own official family.

On that occasion other topics were broached more pregnant with significance than comments on the progress of the cases, or sensational warnings in reference to dangers threatening the President and two of his Cabinet.

Mr. Cook insisted that immunity should be granted to Stephen W. Dorsey, on account of his great services to the Republican party. In answer, I modestly suggested that penal laws and penitentiaries were not devised for the exclusive benefit of Democrats.

To illustrate the total depravity of the star-routers, Mr. Cook told the President that General Brady had already attempted to corrupt even him; that he had been invited to meet a representative of that gentleman at the Portland; that, fearing a trap, he declined to go thither, but did receive the representative at his own office, having first prudently concealed a detective under the bed to overhear the conversation! I scrutinized the face of Mr. Garfield to discover the impression made upon his mind by these strange outpourings, but his impassive features gave no response.

In view of the fact, however, that in a community where he had lived for many years, and where his character was minutely known, the virtue of Mr. Cook had so soon been thus rudely tempted, one could not help asking mentally how long it would be able to resist the shock.

General Swaim, the close personal friend of Mr. Garfield, thoroughly familiar with the inner history of his brief administration, remembers the indignation of the President over the appointment of Mr. Cook, and my summons to the White House in quest of an explanation. He remembers the letter called forth in answer to the statements of a Supreme Court judge, and the prudential reasons which withheld the President from ordering the summary dismissal of Mr. Cook on account of his moral unfitness for the trust. He also remembers our call at the White House the Wednesday evening before the assassination. To the best of his knowledge this was the only call made there by Mr. Cook between March 4 and July 2.

About the middle of August, 1881, Postmaster-General James sent me to Philadelphia to interview Thomas A. McDevitt, a nominal contractor for principals who held a large amount of expedited service. He was absent from the city, but on the 18th he called upon me at my rooms in Washington. McDevitt had already been indicted in Philadelphia for conspiracy to defraud the Government by fraudulent bidding on certain routes in Texas—a matter quite distinct from those on which his evidence was chiefly sought.

His statements made on the first day of our acquaintance were summarily rejected by the Attorney-General. On the 20th he returned. I handed him the affidavit already made, told him I had no copy, and that as the disclosures were unsatisfactory to Mr. MacVeagh, I should make no use of them, or, if he chose to trust me, I would listen to anything further he might have to say. After looking me steadily in the eye for a moment he replied, "I will trust you and tell all I know."

In the affidavits prepared that day, he explained how a farm and quarry near Richmond, Va., were conveyed, at a nominal consideration of $76,000, to James Kee and W. H. Crawford, of Philadelphia, for the express purpose of qualifying them to become sureties on the proposals to be made by him; how the property was reconveyed, to the original owner after the contract term began; how he himself, with proposals resting on such security, obtained a number of routes in Dakota and Montana; how petitions for increase and expedition were gotten up and forwarded to him without compensation by one Ezra I. Traverse, of Nevada; how he himself, with no personal knowledge of the matters involved, made the affidavits respecting stock and carriers intended to measure the cost of expedition; how, through a stranger, he secured from General Brady orders which vastly increased the cost of the service; and how, after this preliminary work, he sold his hypothetical interest in the contracts, through Col. Joseph C. McKibben, to the Salisbury combination for $2,500 and then disappeared from the scene, as he supposed, forever. He also explained his part in the transactions upon which the Philadelphia indictment rested. McDevitt added that he would freely communicate any further information within his knowledge, whenever called upon by the Government. Upon reading the second affidavit, Mr. MacVeagh seemed to be satisfied.

In response to a call from the Attorney-General, Mr. Gibson wrote a voluminous report, giving a partial history of the Dorsey mail transactions. He also prepared a history of route No. 40101, which was made the basis of the information.

Meanwhile, Inspectors Tidball and Shallcross were engaged in developing the methods by which sundry contractors habitually imposed fraudulent and worthless bonds on the Department. Their report to the Postmaster-General was subsequently printed and transmitted to the President.

When comfortably seated in his new chair Mr. Cook proceeded to employ a number of local detectives to report to him personally. The discoveries resulting from their joint labors were not added to the common stock of information, and, so far as I am aware, not a ray of light emanating from either that luminary or his satellites ever disclosed a scrap of evidence for the benefit of the prosecution.

As will be seen, our efforts during the spring and summer of 1881 were of a rather desultory character. In Washington a few witnesses were exposing parts of the sores which had eaten deeply into the public morals and the public purse. Inspectors on the frontier were doing excellent work. Tasks of great severity they performed with cheerfulness, intelligence, and fidelity. As the reports came in the new administration of the Post-Office Department applied the pruning knife so fearlessly and vigorously to existing abuses that in a few months the deficiency in the postal revenues was practically extinguished.

Meanwhile the newspapers were mysteriously inspired to warn the star-route contractors of the speedy destruction in store for them at the hands of the Government. As the sultry summer wore away I became more and more painfully conscious that the condition of our magazines was far from justifying this tone of exultation. Except as heretofore described our armories were practically bare.

Toward the close of September, 1881, I began systematically to prepare the cases for trial. By means of the files and other departmental papers, I was enabled to dig out the special frauds practiced on each route, and largely to demonstrate the methods pursued by the different rings. To the evidence thus developed, I added an abstract of the proofs furnished by the traveling inspectors, together with such oral testimony bearing on each case as from time to time I was able to secure from parties having personal knowledge of the inside affairs of the various combinations. The papers so prepared gave a brief but comprehensive history of each route by itself. In this way, I examined the exceptionally bad service of the Dorseys, and, to a less extent, of the Parkers, James B. Price, Root and Kerns, the Salisburys, and others. This work I continued till called into court in June, 1882, when, with a few slight exceptions, it was permanently suspended. The papers were placed at the disposal of Col. George Bliss, special assistant United States attorney.

In November, 1881, Colonel Bliss prepared to initiate criminal proceedings against Fred. B. Lilley. Mr. Geo. F. Brott, the essential witness in the case, had some time before gone to Minnesota on business. Just as an inspector was about to be sent thither with a subpœna, I learned that Mr. Brott had started eastward. He came to Washington, and, after a short delay, proceeded to Philadelphia. With the knowledge and approval of Colonel Bliss, I called upon Mrs. Brott, and at my request she telegraphed to her husband to return immediately to the city, with the view of appearing before the grand jury.

About the the same time Fred. B. Lilley was brought before United States commissioner, Charles S. Bundy, for a preliminary hearing. William A. Cook appeared for the Government. After putting in the formal parts of the proof and identifying the handwriting of the defendant, Mr. Cook placed me upon the stand to establish the essential points of the case by hearsay testimony. As this was promptly and properly ruled out the prosecution broke down ignominiously, the commissioner refusing to grant even a continuance. We left the room with our papers amid the derisive laughter of the crowd which had gathered there.

Mr. Cook read before this committee an extract from the Evening Star to prove that he is the leading criminal lawyer of the city. He is not a chicken in years or experience. Why, then, did he thus engineer this lamentable fiasco?

William Lilley, the father of Frederick B., told me often that William A. Cook, for $1,000 guaranteed immunity to his son, and that on the very day when we appeared before Commissioner Bundy, $250 of the fee, through the underground channels employed for the conduct of the business, had already found its way into the pocket of Cook.

From the quarters of Commissioner Bundy I accompanied Mr. Cook to his office, where, against my indignant protests, he proceeded to subpoena Mrs. Brott to appear before the grand jury as a witness against her husband. This was the last official interview I ever had with the man.

At this juncture, after explaining the outlines of the case to the grand jury, I started for Connecticut on the afternoon of Thanksgiving day, for the purpose of accompanying my family hither. On my return I was amazed to learn that Mr. Brott, though he came back to the city for the purpose under the circumstances above described, was not only not permitted to testify before the grand jury, but was himself indicted.

I at once denounced the proceeding to Colonel Bliss, who, in the part taken by him, had, as I believe, been deceived by his associates, Cook and Gibson. I told him if this was the way the prosecutions were to be conducted I should neither seek nor accept further evidence from implicated persons; that while many doubtless would be willing to assist on that line, there was not money enough in the vaults of the United States Treasury to bribe me to win the confidence of a man to betray it.

Before this committee Mr. Cook reproached the Department of Justice for permitting the indictments against George F. Brott to slumber. He demands that the Government shall butcher in cold blood a witness who voluntarily imparted very important facts, against whom there is not a scintilla of evidence, except such as he himself furnished, who, trusting to our honor and good faith, deprived himself of all defense, and placed himself at our mercy. It should be remembered, too, that the destruction of Brott would remove the essential witness against F. B. Lilley, whom Cook prosecuted with suspicious feebleness before Commissioner Bundy.

From this time onward I have never communicated information that might be used to the injury of the persons who gave it, except to the Hon. Richard T. Merrick, who, a few months later, was employed to take charge of the cases. Under his leadership the most scrupulous good faith has, in all cases, been sacredly observed. In the close and confidential relations that have subsisted between us I long ago learned to rely with implicit trust on his judgment, his integrity, and his honor.

In August or September, 1881, the attitude of Mr. A. M. Gibson towards certain combinations, notably the Salisburys, underwent a sudden and remarkable change. Previously he had been the zealous advocate of sweeping reductions of service. All at once he discovered that the Department was going too fast and too far. He expostulated with Mr. Lyman, then chief clerk of the contract office, and now Second Assistant Postmaster-General, against the continuance of a policy which hitherto he had earnestly approved. As the new condition of things developed both General Elmer and Mr. Lyman began to suspect him of treachery. An incident illustrates the feeling. One day Colonel Ingersoll brought some matter of business in behalf of his client, Mr. Salisbury, to the attention of General Elmer, who jocosely replied, "Yes; your associate counsel, Mr. Gibson, took the same view." By those faithful officers I was gently warned, but my eyes were not yet opened.

I must here introduce more fully William Lilley, whose name has several times entered into this narrative. He died last year, aged over seventy years. In the spring of 1881 I made his acquaintance through ex-Senator George E. Spencer. When his son, Fred. B. Lilley, was ejected from office, further intercourse between the father and myself ceased for a number of months. In the fall it was resumed.

William Lilley had an extensive experience in crooked affairs, and his knowledge was much wider than his experience. As an attorney he prosecuted claims before the officers of the Post-Office Department during the Brady-McGrew regime, received many favors from the presiding authorities, and became familiar with the true inwardness of many dishonest transactions.

Whatever the motive which induced him to seek a renewal of our acquaintance, I think he soon began to entertain a sincere regard for me, and in a qualified degree, to wish me success. Little by little he dropped valuable bits of information. After many hints he finally told me that of his own knowledge Cook and Gibson were selling out the Government, that a burglarious seizure of the papers had been discussed, and that when the catastrophe came it would be so contrived as to ruin me, if possible.

I still listened with incredulity but walked with increasing circumspection. Notwithstanding the apparent sincerity of Mr. Lilley, and the different roads by which at different times he approached the central and vital allegation, I conjectured that this might be part of a scheme to sow dissensions in the camp of the prosecutors. But a crisis was swiftly approaching.

Toward the close of November, 1881, I first learned, after the document was in actual print, that Mr. Gibson had made an elaborate report on "The Star Mail Service," and addressed it to my chief, the Postmaster-General, to whom he bore no official relations, serving as he did in the Department of Justice. Here was another surprise. I never knew that such a report was contemplated till I saw it in type. Although we occupied contiguous rooms, the fact was successfully concealed from me.

Through my unwise and ill-stared efforts Mr. Gibson had been employed to assist in the investigation. From the day the fact was announced I had been compelled to defend his reputation, which, too late, I found to be unsavory. Still, in the face of increasing difficulties, I treated him as one associate should treat another. My reward had come. While I was absorbed in preparing the evidence to be presented to a petit jury, he was equally absorbed in preparing a screed to glorify himself.

I at once told the Postmaster-General that with my consent the report could not be addressed to him. Notwithstanding the dishonor of its birth, I expressed a willingness, provided the address was changed to the Attorney-General, that any use should be made of it which those two Cabinet officers might deem best.

At the time of this discovery Mr. Gibson was in New York. On his return shortly afterwards Mr. James sent for me, and, in the presence of Gibson, urged forgiveness and forgetfulness. My reasons for declining to acquiesce were condensed into a single remark, which I will not repeat, for it hardly befits the decorum of a written statement. A few days later Mr. James again summoned me to his room and in the same presence renewed his efforts. I plainly told them both that all further co-operative relations between Mr. Gibson and myself were at an end.

As the report was not intended for use in the court-room it was available, first, to convince the public that great frauds had been committed in the star service, and second, to advertise the writer. The first reason for its production did not exist, for the country months before accepted the existence of the frauds, and was then demanding that we should furnish the legal evidence to substantiate our charges. As the contract term began July 1, 1878, and as the most flagrant orders for expedition were compressed into the next twelve or fifteen months, at this very time the statute of limitations was rapidly barring the overt acts. The crisis called for hard and earnest work in the preparation of the evidence, not for the issuance of self-laudatory manifestoes. So heavily did the pressure weigh upon me that I neglected the ordinary duties of life in the fight to save the statute.

In December, 1881, Wm. Lilley informed me that he had learned some time before that A. M. Gibson had become the paid agent of the contractors on route No. 40116, from Phoenix to Prescott, Ariz. I at once examined the papers on that route and found the following extraordinary document over the signature of A. M. Gibson:

40116.

There is no proof of fraud in this case. There are suspicious circumstances, such as the advertisement of the route as 140 miles long when in reality it is only 108 miles, and the bid of $680, and the subsequent raising to $32,640; but, in the first instance, the advertisement of the distance as greater than it really is, the contractor cannot be held responsible for the laches of the Post-Office Department; and, in the second place, while the enormous increase of price is suspicious, still the Department cannot base its action upon mere suspicion. There must be absolute proof of fraud either in obtaining the increase or in performing the service after the increase has been obtained. In this case there is, as remarked above, no proof whatever of fraud. The service is, according to all the evidence, capitally performed, the contractor employing first-class stock and equipments, and making faster time by several hours than the terms of his contract call for. The necessity of the present schedule time is admitted by all who speak or testify in regard to this route. There have been large reductions already made in the service leading to and from Prescott, and I do not believe the Department would be justified either by the evidence or public policy in making any change in this route. Inspector Sharpe does not recommend that the old schedule be restored, but, on the contrary, says it would be unwise to do so. The schedule cannot legally be changed unless proof of fraud is clear and positive. There can be no half-way work—it must be either left where it is or put back to the original schedule. The latter, in my judgment, as before stated, would be illegal, and of course unwise public policy.

A. M. GIBSON,
Special Counsel.

“There is,” says this “special counsel,” “no proof of fraud in this case.” If this statement is correct, there is no proof of fraud in any case arising under the administration of General Brady. In fact, this is one of the very worst routes of the lot, not more than two or three being able to compete with it in pre-eminence of badness. It was let, one trip a week, at $680 per annum. Within nine months, without competition, the trips were increased to seven, the speed expedited twice, and the annual pay advanced to $32,640.32, or forty-eight fold. From October, 1878, to June, 1881, Prescott had a daily supply, except Sunday, from Phoenix via Wickenburg also. The affidavit intended to measure the cost of the first expedition involved an absolute physical impossibility, palpable to the most ordinary intelligence. The fact that such an oath was permitted to enter into the transactions of the Department reveals the recklessness with which the business was conducted.

For the present term the route was let at free competition from Prescott, via Phoenix, to Maricopa, 32 miles longer, on a faster schedule, seven times a week, for $9,500 per annum; or, pro rating for the old distance, at $7,265 per annum.

If there was no proof of fraud in this case, it was the duty of the investigators to confess to their superiors that they had raised a clamor about nothing; to close their rooms, to seek other work, and to save to the Government the cost of pursuing a useless inquiry further.

The presence of Mr. Gibson had become unbearable. No one could foresee what might be the next manifestation of his apparently innate and incurable depravity. Having reflected maturely on the subject and notified Mr. James and Colonel Bliss of my purpose, I suddenly changed the lock-combination on our two iron safes. The following day I caused a full inventory to be made of the contents, and about the same time partially reconstructed the clerical force working under my direction. Mr. Gibson tacitly confessed the justice of the proceeding by never asking of me any explanation, or making any complaint, though he continued for two or three weeks to come to our rooms.

In February, 1882, I was called repeatedly before the grand jury, of which Mr. Wilson was foreman. It was a highly intelligent and painstaking body. They found the indictments against Dorsey, Brady, and others, in which Montford C. Rerdell and J. L. Sanderson were described by initials only.

On the 29th of March, 1882, Hon. E. John Ellis and Mr. George F. Brott called together at my office. Mr. Ellis produced a copy of such parts as related to him of a memorandum known as the "Brott statement," made in the spring of 1881. (The subject has lately been investigated by the House Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.) The original was locked up in one of our safes. By this event I was first apprised that copies of some, at least, of our papers had found their way into hands unauthorized to hold them.

A few days later William Lilley, in a highly excited state of mind, brought in a verbatim extract from the same document, narrating one or more incidents in his career. He complained that I was collecting evidence against him, notwithstanding the value of the information he was from time to time giving me. I replied that the original was penned long before the Government came under any obligations to him, and that such publicity as had been given it was due not to my action, but to treachery. He said he obtained it from General Brady, who had a large stack of our papers.

I asked Mr. Lilley to find out where General Brady procured them. After visiting that gentleman, Mr. Lilley reported that while General Brady made no direct admission, the conversation proceeded on the assumption that he had obtained them from William A. Cook, through his partner, Cole.

A copy of the Brott statement was sent to Mr. Cook November 1, 1881.

Mr. Cook testified before the Post-Office Committee and reiterated in his evidence before this committee:

I never had any papers in my possession, nor saw any papers, nor heard any testimony from Mr. Woodward or anybody else, officially or unofficially, directly or indirectly, implicating Mr. Ellis in the star-route frauds, nor reflecting against him.

He also testified here that he prepared the indictments against Mr. George F. Brott and Fred. B. Lilley, and afterwards returned to the Post-Office Department the papers upon which they were based. An examination of those papers shows that the parts relating to Mr. Ellis, though entirely irrelevant, were embraced by the clerk who transcribed them for the common use of Messrs. Bliss and Cook in their work before the grand jury. If Cook had anything whatever to do with a job which he claims to have done with no aid from Colonel Bliss, he must have read the reflections upon Mr. Ellis. This incidental fact is mentioned simply to show that he erred in his testimony.

Mr. Cameron and I found in the same package the original drafts of the Brott-Lilley indictments, in the writing, not of William A. Cook, but of Col. George Bliss. The interlineations and marginal notes indicate carefulness of preparation. Thus, upon a second and vital point connected with this bundle of papers, both Cook and Gibson, though swearing with great confidence, are found to have been mistaken.

The New York Sun of February 23, 1884, prints extracts not only from the statements of Brott and Rerdell, but also from "another document on file," tending to show that Hon. J. P. Kidder, late Delegate from Dakota Territory, was unwarrantably active in aiding John R. Miner to secure increase of service. The statement respecting Mr. Kidder seemed unfamiliar to me.

On examination, I found it was written by Mr. H. J. Finley, a clerk who assisted in the early part of the investigation. It is taken with slight variations from an abstract of seventeen pages, setting forth the substance of the Departmental files on route No. 35051, Bismarck, Dak., to Tongue River.

To make my meaning intelligible, I must explain our early method of procedure. As already stated, I began late in September, 1881, to prepare as complete a history of the routes, each by itself, as the data on hand would permit. On two of them, Nos. 35051 and 38134, Mr. Finley made up an abstract from the files, while I prepared the summary of the evidence furnished by the inspectors. On routes Nos. 44154 and 44155 he also transcribed the substance of the files, but on these my abstracts embraced the entire history.

Impressions of my work, each route by itself, are interspersed through my letter-press books. In the preparation of the cases Mr. Wm. A. Cook called for copies of the abstracts. These were made, some by Maj. Jas. H. Reeves, some by Chas P. Blackmar, and some by A. M. Gould. No other clerk was employed on this branch of the work. An impression of each copy so made was taken in a letter-press book.

On October 15, 1881, copies of our abstracts on five routes were sent to Mr. Cook, and on November 1 eleven more were sent to him, together with copies of the statement of M. C. Rerdell and Geo. F. Brott.

The matter reflecting upon Mr. Kidder, and printed in the Sun of February 23, 1884, went to Mr. Cook October 15, 1881. It was in the writing of Major Reeves, and is the only copy that ever left our office. Except this specific one, I defy the world to produce a copy of that abstract in the writing of either Reeves, Blackmar, or Gould, the only clerks employed in our rooms in making them.

The following list is from a memorandum made at the time:

(Sent Col. W. A. Cook.)

- Oct. 15. 35051, Bismarck to Fort Keogh. Two parts.
 38113, Rawlins to White River, Colo.
 38134, Pueblo to Rosita, Colo. Two parts.
 38135, St. Charles to Greenhorn, Colo.
 38140, Trinidad to Madison, Colo.

December 27, 1881, after the change in the lock-combinations of our safes, Mr. Cook sent me the following letter:

[William A. Cook, attorney at law, Washington, D. C., lock-box No. 71.]

DECEMBER 27, 1881.

SIR: 1. Allow me to call attention to the fact that up to this time I have only received a portion of the papers in what is called the "Dorsey cases." I am embarrassed in my investigation of these cases by the delay in supplying me with copies of these papers or abstracts, as I have heretofore requested. I presume that furnishing me with these papers will not interfere with the investigations of my associate, Colonel Bliss.

2. I have repeatedly requested that a copy of the Tidball report in relation to bonds of contractors should be furnished me, but up to this time I have not received it. As in the Dorsey cases so in this, the delay is embarrassing to me. You may remember that Mr. Gould, who was temporarily detailed for service with me, was placed in the rooms set aside for the investigation of the star-route cases so that a copy of the report and accompanying papers might be speedily furnished me. I have to request that this be done with as little delay as possible.

3. It is important that a re-examination of papers in case 40101 should be made, as I have received instructions in relation to it. Mr. A. M. Gibson some time ago obtained the copies of the papers belonging to me in this case to aid him in making some report, and they have not been returned. He has informed me that he is unable to do so because they are in your custody. These constitute no part of the files of the Post-Office Department. Will you please return them immediately to me, so that I may proceed with the required examination of the case?

Very respectfully, yours,

WILLIAM A. COOK,
Special Assistant Attorney United States.

P. HENRY WOODWARD, Esq.,
Post-Office Inspector.

By Mr. Blackmar, I sent the history of route No. 40101 to the office of Mr. Cook, with instructions to bring the package back if that person was not in. Mr. Blackmar returned with the papers. I did not repeat the experiment. Upon consultation with Colonel Bliss, no more copies were allowed to go to him.

In May, 1882, witnesses went again before the grand jury in the Dorsey case, and a new indictment was found. The first trial began the first of June, and was continued into September. As it progressed, Judge Wylie called for proof of conspiracy, and a few days later called again. Hon. Richard T. Merrick, special Assistant Attorney-General, from the recency of his employment, was largely introduced to the facts as developed from the witness-box. Becoming greatly disquieted, he told me that bricks were abundant but mortar scarce; that he had the materials for the walls of the edifice, but little cement to bind them together; that evidence of fraud was complete in the records, but direct testimony of motive and combination was needed, and that the need must be met by oral testimony from a person possessing inside knowledge.

In this emergency Mr. John A. Walsh seemed to be the most available resource, if he could be obtained as a witness. As mail contractor and as banker loaning money to other contractors and to General Brady he had acquired a large stock of information respecting the methods of the Department, as then administered. Many facts could be substantiated by documents in his possession.

Since the spring of 1881 I had met Mr. Walsh often. Meanwhile he had moved from Washington to New York City. However, he had a way of turning up here in crises of despondency, when he would cheer us with hopeful words and fresh installments of evidence.

At this juncture Mr. Walsh reappeared in the city and came to see me as usual. An interview was arranged between him and Mr. Merrick. As a result of the conference he took the stand and testified to the custom of General Brady in granting increases and expeditions.

The record of the first trial is spread through three volumes.

After the verdict and a day or two of imprisonment Montfort C. Rerdell offered himself to the Government as a witness. Counsel directed me to listen to his story. Owing to the obstructions in the way of meeting a man so circumstanced in Washington, I directed him to report at Hartford, Conn., later in the season. In November he came.

Having impressed upon him the supreme importance of absolute truthfulness and accuracy, I spent over a week in the preparation of his statement; it covered sixty-six pages, and plowed through the center of Stephen W. Dorsey's career in the mail business. With the papers deliverable in June, 1881, and with the character Rerdell then bore, the facts communicated would have made his testimony invaluable. Notwithstanding the known existence of one recantation of the disclosures of June, 1881, the Government accepted him. While he was on the stand we were confronted with a second recantation, of the existence of which we had had no intimation. The accidents and backslidings attendant on his conversion seriously impaired the credibility of what was doubtless a correct story.

The second trial began December 7, 1882. Having gone to Connecticut to spend the holidays, I was summoned back to Washington a day or two after Christmas. On my return I was informed that Mr. James B. Price, of Missouri, desired to testify on behalf of the Government, and that a controversy had arisen respecting the propriety of accepting him. By common consent I was directed to interview Mr. Price to learn the extent of his knowledge and of his willingness to communicate it.

We spent two days in preparing a statement of facts. The affidavit was placed in my hands in trust, to be delivered to the prosecution only on condition of the acceptance of Price as a witness. December 31, I read it to the Attorney-General, and in answer to interrogations repeated the evidence developed by Mr. Walsh. Mr. Brewster went over the case carefully, noting the interdependence of the testimony of the two.

The acceptance of Price would involve the arraignment of ex-Senator

William P. Kellogg, of Louisiana. Mr. Brewster, while fully appreciating the gravity of the situation, showed no hesitation, after reviewing the facts, in coming to a decision. He took the ground that his official oath required him to administer the laws impartially; that so long as the responsibility for their enforcement remained with him, he should recognize no distinctions of party, persons, or pecuniary condition; that where a man, honored by the people with a high and sacred trust, stooped to take bribes, the crime should be followed by the more certain and speedy retribution. He ended by directing me to notify counsel that he accepted Mr. Price as a witness for the Government.

Early in 1882, Thomas A. McDevitt notified me that he was about to be forced to trial on the Philadelphia indictments. Believing that the implied faith of the Government could not and would not be broken, I wrote him to employ no lawyer, to go to no expense, and to rest in peace. However, the case was pressed. The Attorney-General refused to interfere. Feeling that my own honor was involved in the protection of a man who, at the invitation of the Government, had through me placed himself at its mercy, I appealed to District Attorney Valentine. This act of intervention, though severely censured, led to a postponement of the case.

In the fall of 1882, in the teeth of my remonstrances, McDevitt was tried, convicted, and sentenced to the penitentiary for one year.

At my solicitation, Messrs. Merrick, Bliss, and Ker recommended his pardon. Ex-Postmaster-General James placed on file a manful letter, assuming his full share of responsibility for the overtures which induced McDevitt to testify in August, 1881. Pained by the failure of efforts dictated solely by a sense of duty, on the 8th of February, 1883, I addressed a communication to his Excellency, the President, in which, after reciting the facts, I closed as follows:

In collecting the star-route evidence, I have performed an obscure but laborious work. At every step I have aimed to be true and faithful, not only to the Government, but also to the offenders who, through me, have been invited to trust that Government. I should never have listened to the story of McDevitt, had I not been previously assured by the high officials who directed my actions that he would be saved from harm, provided he acted with frankness and truthfulness. This, in my judgment, he did. That the case in which he might have been an invaluable witness was not brought to the front, arose from no default of his.

In the trial and conviction of McDevitt the solemn pledges of the Government have been broken. Let me, as one who has also been wronged in this matter, ask you to review the facts at an early day, and to exercise such clemency as your judgment and sense of justice may dictate.

The above appeal I forwarded through the Attorney-General, accompanied by the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a communication to His Excellency, the President, which I think should be forwarded through you. If for any reason you do not wish to transmit it, please return it to me.

At the indirect solicitation of a Cabinet officer, upon conditional promises of immunity, Thomas A. McDevitt came to Washington at his own expense, and under oath made statements which provisionally at least were accepted as satisfactory. He did nothing subsequently to forfeit his claims.

The innocent part borne by me in this and in one or two other transactions, which somewhat similarly have gone amiss, have caused me intolerable pain and humiliation, and have seriously embarrassed me in the performance of my official labors.

While not primarily responsible for the pledges referred to, I cannot shirk my duties to the men who have been asked through me to trust the Government of the United States.

Extreme reluctance to obtrude my own personality, or otherwise make myself disagreeable, cannot absolve me from my obligations.

Very respectfully,

P. H. WOODWARD,
Post-Office Inspector.

Hon. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General, &c.

McDevitt served the full term of the sentence. In the treatment accorded to him a grave mistake, in my judgment, was made. I have never for a moment, however, questioned the conscientiousness of the Attorney-General. As viewed by him the path of duty led in one direction; as viewed by me, in another. From association with Mr. Brewster in these cases, I have reached the conviction that his actions are guided by lofty sentiments of personal and professional honor.

The second star-route trial ended June 14, 1883. The evidence and argument fill four volumes, aggregating nearly six thousand pages. Notwithstanding the adverse verdict of the jury, the record will remain a permanent memorial of the thoroughness with which the case was prepared, and of the completeness with which the charges were proved.

Some of the salutary results accomplished by the star-route prosecutions can hardly be appreciated by persons unfamiliar with the revolution it has helped to effect in the methods of the Post-Office Department. Since April, 1881, when the investigation began, two millions and a half a year have been lopped from the expenditures for star and steamboat service, notwithstanding an increase of mileage; an annual deficiency extinguished; letter postage reduced; and the Contract Bureau transformed into a model of purity and efficiency.

Could the honest and courageous officers at the head of the Department have succeeded in enforcing such far-reaching economies without the aid derived from the criminal proceedings? I think not. For years its corridors swarmed with professionals, each aiming to procure fat contracts, not by fair and lawful competition, but by unfair and irregular, not to say illegal, special orders. These men were upheld by all sorts of personal, political, and financial supports. The ordinary employé craved their favor and dreaded their enmity.

Yet, the power, once so firmly entrenched, has been completely dislodged. The reform begun in the spring of 1881 has never halted in its successful march. In the ordinary course of affairs the departmental administration which attempted to clean the Augean stable would have been crushed. In this case the triumph of the honest and economic policy was made possible by the vigor of the prosecution.

We might go still farther and claim that the standard of public morals has been elevated. On the one hand, the people have grown more intolerant of wrong-doing; and on the other, men in positions of trust have grown more timorous about yielding to dishonest inclinations.

I have seen my associates give days and nights of anxious toil to this work; their labors, though ending in a disappointment, were not in vain.

WASHINGTON, April 11, 1884.

P. H. WOODWARD recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. On yesterday you stated that Mr. Cook, in the interview with President Garfield, at which you and Postmaster-General James were present, made some statement with regard to the prosecution of ex-Senator Dorsey; please state all that was said upon that subject at that interview.—Answer. Well, I only remember that he urged that immunity should be granted to Mr. Dorsey on the ground of his great services to the Republican party. The language in which it was put I don't remember, but the circumstances I very distinctly recall. I had said very little during this conversation, but at that I spoke, giving utterance to the idea which I expressed yesterday.

Q. Did he indicate what those services were?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he make that remark to the President or to the Postmaster-General?—A. To the President.

Q. Was there any indication of approval or disapproval on the President's part?—A. Not at all. President Garfield was a good listener, and he said very little during the entire interview.

Q. Was that all that occurred at that interview on the subject?—A. That is all that I remember with regard to that point. I know that the President did not indicate any opinion of his own at all, or any purpose of his own. Mr. Cook took one side, I took the other, and the President gave utterance to no opinion whatever.

Q. Before that interview closed was there anything said by the President which indicated his purpose with regard to prosecuting all the offenders?—A. I know it was his general purpose to push these prosecutions.

Q. Was that the interview at which the remark was made to which Mr. James referred about "cutting the ulcer out"?—A. No, sir; that was at the first interview we had with the President. That was at the time when this first table of routes was shown to the President.

Q. Was Mr. Cook present at that interview?—A. No, sir; he hadn't come into the case at all at that time.

Q. Is there any further fact which you remember which convinces you that that was the first interview with reference to the star-route cases that Mr. Cook had had with the President?—A. I know he was introduced to him that night. That was the first time they had met—unless the President was acting a part, which I do not believe he was doing.

Q. Did the President indicate from his manner that that was the first presentation of Mr. Cook?—A. Certainly. That was the understanding of Mr. James and myself, that Mr. Cook was going up that night to be introduced to the President; and he was introduced. Of course I don't remember the minute circumstances, but we were both thoroughly satisfied on that point.

Q. Did the President ever say anything to you about having instructed Mr. Cook to report to him directly upon those cases?—A. Never.

Q. With whom did he consult with regard to the prosecutions?—A. I presume chiefly with the Attorney-General, who was the law officer of the Government.

Q. Did you know of any failure of his to consult with the Attorney-General in regard to the prosecution of these cases?—A. No, sir. That is something that I would not know about; I was not a member of the Cabinet.

Q. If there was any disposition to avoid any of the members of the Cabinet in matters pertaining to the prosecution, you did not know it?

—A. I did not know it.

Q. There was something said about the failure to indict J. L. Sanderson; it was explained by Mr. Bliss by saying that he ought not to have been included in the first indictment. Please state what you know about Sanderson's case?—A. Well, I was very much surprised when he was included in the first indictment, because he did not in any way belong to the Dorsey combination. He was a subcontractor on the route from Saguache to Lake City, which belonged to John R. Miner. He took it from Mr. Miner either at the beginning of the contract term or perhaps shortly before—my recollection is that it was shortly before the contract term; and so far as the papers showed he had no previous connection with that combination, and no subsequent connection. Afterwards we found that he was perhaps the beneficiary on a short route from Ouray to Los Pinos—perhaps twenty-miles long—once a week service, where the annual pay was between three and four hundred dollars. That service was duplicated; that is, there was also daily service between Los Pinos and Ouray; but at the time of the indictment I do not think we knew of Sanderson's connection with this small route.

Q. If there was no evidence implicating him why was it that his name was included in the first indictment?—A. I know nothing about that. I had nothing to do with it and know nothing of it of my own knowledge; and I was surprised when his name appeared there.

Q. You did not furnish his name, or draw the indictment, or make any suggestion?—A. No, sir; I did not make any suggestion with regard to the inclusion of any one. That was something I had nothing to do with.

Q. Did the papers contain his name or show any connection with the route?—A. Yes, sir; the route from Saguache to Lake City was one of Mr. Miner's routes. It belongs to that group. Our inspectors had investigated the service on it, and the history of that route was among the papers which I turned over to Colonel Bliss; and to a person casually looking at them, Sanderson might seem to have some connection with the conspiracy. He had some connection with the route but not with the conspiracy.

Q. Who was responsible for putting his name in the indictment?—A. I do not know; that is a matter that rests between Mr. Ker, who drew the indictment, and Colonel Bliss, who managed the business generally. But I have no personal knowledge of that.

Q. There must have been some evidence before the grand jury?—A. All the evidence that was put before the grand jury I put before them, and it included this Saguache and Lake City route.

Q. Did you testify before the grand jury to any fact which would have warranted the placing of J. L. Sanderson's name in this indictment?—A. Well, theoretically, I would not be perhaps a competent person to pass upon the sufficiency of evidence for the inclusion of any one.

Q. Did you testify to any fact implicating him?—A. I put before them in the ordinary course of business the history of that route in which Sanderson figured as contractor at the full rate of pay, showing that he was the substantial owner of the service; but the reason for not including him was that he had no connection before or after this time with the Dorsey combination. I mean no close connection which would indicate that he was one of them.

Q. There must have been some evidence before the grand jury implicating him or the grand jury would not have reported him for indictment; or else his name was surreptitiously put into the indictment?—A. I have an indistinct recollection that the oath on that route was made by Sanderson. I presume it was on that that he was embraced in the first indictment.

Q. Was that oath true or false?—A. False, I think; but every one of them that we investigated was a false oath without any exception.

Q. Do you remember particularly whether the facts stated in their affidavits were true or not?—A. Yes; I remember distinctly that they were not true.

Q. Then there was evidence upon which he could be indicted in the first indictment?—A. Not as a conspirator with the Dorseys. I know that Sanderson came to me, and his attorney came to me, at my office. I told Sanderson that I thought he was indicted in this case by mistake, and that when we went for him we should go for him not on any baby case but on the strongest case we could make against him. It didn't seem to comfort him much, but it was all that I could say to him.

Q. If he swore falsely to that affidavit, would not that be ground for indicting him for perjury?—A. Well, I am not up in the law, but I think that that matter was discussed by counsel from time to time, and they thought these oaths were not papers that actions for perjury could be sustained on; that they could only be introduced as part of the general evidence to prove a conspiracy.

Q. That they were not such judicial oaths as the statute imposed the penalty of perjury upon?—A. I think that was their conclusion, but of course I would not be a competent person to testify to matters of that kind.

Q. No, but I am only asking you with regard to the general course of the prosecution?—A. I don't remember that any one was ever indicted on any of those oaths for perjury; perhaps one or two were. I do not know of my own knowledge. Some of them were very rank perjuries, undoubtedly. The reason that I say he ought not to have been embraced in that first indictment was that he had no close connection with that conspiracy, and that, when indicting him, we ought to have indicted him on the very strongest case we could find. This was a weak one; we could have done better. I will say, furthermore, with reference to the route from Garland to Ouray, that right in the midst of my work I was called into court (in June, 1882), and the work of further preparing these cases was there permanently suspended.

Q. Do you know how it happened that the name was left out of the second indictment?—A. I do not.

Q. He was indicted by his initials, as were also one or two others?—A. Yes, sir. With regard to the indictment by initials, Mr. Ker asked me once or twice what the first name of M. C. Rerdell was; I never saw his name signed in any papers except "M. C. Rerdell." Afterwards the clerks hunted among the bids and they found some proposals which were signed "Mont. C. Rerdell." One or two of the grand jurors asked me about this also. I was very busy and did not pay much attention to it. I suppose I am responsible for the misnomer of Vaile. One of the jurors asked me what his name was, and I had never seen it in the papers except as H. M. Vaile; but I made some inquiries, where and how I do not recall, and as a result reported to the grand jury that his name was Henry. So that that mistake originated through me.

Q. Will you explain what efforts were made by you and the counsel for the Government to secure indictments in connection with the Corpus Christi and San Antonio route?—A. Well, if I had known that the question was to be asked me I would have looked it up. But in the first place, you know, in regard to those late matters I had nothing to do with the grand jury. I simply prepared the evidence and turned it over to Colonel Bliss; but I know that they were indicted successively; that is, at first Brady and Price were indicted. I do know something about the introduction of Price as a witness, because that I had something to do with, but that came along afterwards. That rested within my own knowledge; the other matters Mr. Bliss or Mr. Ker would be much more competent to testify about than myself. Is that what you refer to?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, in the year 1882, I went to Connecticut to spend the holidays, and perhaps the day after Christmas I was telegraphed to to come back immediately to Washington. I came here and was told that a controversy had arisen between the counsel respecting the acceptance of Mr. James B. Price as a Government witness, and that the matter had, in a certain sense, been referred to me. I was handed a statement, unsigned and unsworn to, which purported to give what Mr. Price was willing to testify to, and was told to see him and obtain more explicit information. I spent two days with Price, taking down his statements. He put them in my hands in trust, to be returned to him in case he was not accepted as a witness. I called on the Attorney-General and read this statement. He asked me more or less questions about the relations of the testimony of Price and Walsh to each other and to the case. I explained everything as well as I could, and there seemed to be no doubt in his mind with regard to the propriety, and, in fact, the necessity of accepting Price as a witness.

Q. To what did that testimony relate?—A. It related to the Corpus Christi and San Antonio route; it related to the payments of money toward the fund which was raised to influence the action of Congress in 1882, when the appropriation bill for $1,200,000 was pending; and it related to some steamboat service in Missouri, I think, which was comparatively unimportant; and to the payment of a check which was given for the benefit of Mr. Brady. I have not read the affidavit for a long time; that is, that part of it. I have read the part with reference to the San Antonio and Corpus Christi route within a couple of months, but the rest I have not read for a great while.

Q. What were the facts with regard to the payment of money to General Brady?—A. That has passed out of my mind. It is embraced in the affidavit, but I could not testify to it now.

Q. What amount of money was it?—A. I think it was a check for $500; I do not recollect the circumstances of the payment sufficiently to testify to it; my recollection is that General Brady was the beneficiary of this payment, and that it had to pass through a bank in some way.

Q. Was that the same payment collected by Walsh afterwards?—A. No, sir; it had nothing to do with that. It is in the affidavit, which is at your service at any time.

Q. Did that affect in any way the finding of an indictment against Senator Kellogg?—A. Yes; this led to the indictment of Senator Kellogg. The Attorney-General directed me to notify the counsel that he accepted Mr. Price as a witness. I know that it was on the 31st of December that I had this interview with him; I think that was very near the end of the week; perhaps it was Saturday night; my impression is that it was.

Q. Was there anything said between you and the Attorney-General pending the consideration of the question of receiving Mr. Price as a witness, as to whether his testimony would cause an indictment to be found against Senator Kellogg?—A. Oh, yes, sir. That was the essential matter of discussion.

Q. What did he pretend to say in reference to that?—A. Well, he took the general ground that in the discharge of his duties he could know no distinction of persons, and that the more elevated the rank of a wrongdoer the more certain should be his punishment.

Q. With that full knowledge of the fact that Price's testimony would probably cause the indictment of Mr. Kellogg, what instructions did you receive from the Attorney-General with regard to the acceptance of Mr. Price?—A. He told me that he accepted Mr. Price as a witness, and he instructed me to notify the counsel to that effect.

Q. Did you do so?—A. I did. I wrote a letter and presented it jointly to Messrs. Merrick, Bliss, and Ker, informing them that I was instructed by the Attorney-General to notify them of the acceptance of Mr. Price as a witness.

Q. Who is Price?—A. He lives in Missouri. He has been a mail-contractor for a long time, and he had considerable service at the time these investigations began in Texas and in the southwest.

Q. He was a contractor?—A. Yes; he was a contractor.

Q. Have you a copy of the letter which you wrote to the counsel?—A. I presume I have. I keep copies of all letters now. It was simply a notification that the Attorney-General instructed me to inform them that he accepted Mr. Price as a Government witness.

Q. Did you have any conversation with any of the counsel after this on that subject?—A. Yes. I talked with Mr. Merrick and Mr. Bliss. It led to considerable disturbance. Mr. Merrick took the ground, even before this action of the Attorney-General, that Mr. Price ought to be accepted as a witness, because where the contractors or the lesser criminals come forward and gave evidence against greater criminals, they should be allowed to testify, and that the implied obligation which the Government came under to witnesses under such circumstances should be observed.

Q. Which was immunity?—A. Which was immunity. Of course there was nothing said about immunity, but it was always understood that if any witness was accepted that carried with it immunity. Mr. Merrick took the ground that a high officer of the United States, whether the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, or a member of Congress, or a Senator of the United States, who took bribes under such circumstances, was far more guilty than a contractor who was acting under more or less compulsion although acting voluntarily. Mr. Bliss, on the other hand, contended that the evidence against Price was strong and conclusive, that he was already indicted, and that the Government had no right to give him up to take anybody else; that he was sufficiently guilty to hold him, and that it would be wrong to give him up for the sake of taking Senator Kellogg. That was the ground of difference between them.

Q. Did the indictment of Mr. Kellogg turn upon the acceptance of Price as a witness?—A. It did. Mr. Kellogg does not appear in the record anywhere. But Mr. Price testified that he gave him $20,000—$15,000 in drafts and $5,000 in a note—to secure the expedition on two routes. Walsh testifies that he received the same drafts and notes from Mr. Kellogg, with instructions to collect and pay half the money to Mr. Kellogg, and the other half to Mr. Brady. In fact it took both Walsh and Price to make one complete witness.

Q. What did Colonel Bliss say as to whether Price should be accepted as a witness under those circumstances?—A. I have given you the substance of all I know about it. He opposed it.

Q. Do you know what course he took in reference to other prosecutions on account of this action of the Attorney-General?—A. What do you refer to?

Q. Whether he ceased in any way his efforts in prosecuting other cases for the Government for any time by reason of this.—A. Well, he felt personally aggrieved by the action of the Attorney-General. He thought there was something in it which was injurious to him; he took offense at it—I don't know why altogether—but the whole transaction was perfectly above board, so far as these gentlemen were concerned—Mr. Merrick and the Attorney-General—and I saw no reason why he should be aggrieved.

Q. Did he withdraw from the prosecution in any way?—A. He staid out of court for two or three days.

Q. Pending what trial was this?—A. The second star-route trial was then in progress.

Q. And Colonel Bliss felt aggrieved at the action of the Attorney-General and withdrew from the court for two or three days on that account?—A. Yes; he was in ill humor for two or three days.

Q. Who conducted the prosecutions during this time?—A. Mr. Merrick and Mr. Ker. I presume I prepared the papers. Perhaps Mr. Ker did; I don't remember. Mr. Bliss had a great familiarity with the papers, and whenever he was absent from any cause it was very embarrassing to us on account of his great familiarity with the papers, and his facility in putting them in.

Q. Did he remain in the city during that time?—A. I think so, but I do not know.

Q. Can you give the exact date?—A. It was on the 31st day of December that I called on the Attorney-General, and this occurred the following week. That would be the first week of 1883.

Q. What time in the week?—A. Unless I am mistaken, the 31st of December came on Saturday. That is simply my impression.

Q. And Mr. Bliss did not reorder the prosecution for two or three days?—A. I think not.

Q. Now, as to the papers which were supposed by the Government counsel to have fallen into the hands of the defendants, what information did you obtain as to the number and character of those confidential papers that fell into the hands of the star-route defendants?—A. Well, I know, in a way that I cannot explain, that they had our evidence in almost all of the routes. I know that they did not have our evidence on the route from Mineral Park to Pioche, or on the route from Garland to Parrot City, and by a coincidence that is perhaps not singular, our evidence on those routes was not sent to Mr. Cook.

Q. Are the papers to which you refer those which were finally introduced in evidence, or other papers which you did not intend to put in evidence at all?—A. They were not introduced in evidence. They were simply our briefs of the case. They were papers from which the lawyers made up the indictment, and they were the guides of the lawyers all through the case in putting in the evidence. They followed those briefs.

Q. Were any of those papers put before the police court at any time?—A. No, sir; the police court did not consider the matters embraced in those at all. They considered only the straw-bond cases, with which I had nothing to do.

Q. Pending the trial of the case, were the papers to which you refer handed over to the attorneys for the defense so that they could examine them before introduction?—A. Never. This was our case. They were allowed to go to the Department and examine the public files and records. They had free access to them to dig out whatever they chose to, but these abstracts were our private papers.

Q. They were not put on the files or accessible to the public?—A. They were not accessible to the public. They were turned over to the lawyers for their exclusive use in the prosecution. You are a lawyer in a case; now, the other side had no more right to those papers than the side opposed to you would have a right to your brief.

Q. They were intended for the confidential and exclusive use of the counsel for the Government?—A. For the counsel of the Government, and no one else except those who were assisting them in some way.

Q. But there were papers that were handed over to the other side?—A. All the files of the Post-Office Department they had access to; that was proper. They were public records. But these papers contained our arguments all the way through. They developed what we considered the frauds and their significance.

Q. So there there were two kinds of papers used; one kind which there was no objection to any one seeing, and the others confidential papers which were prepared exclusively for the use of the Government?—A. Certainly.

Q. And it was these confidential ones to which you refer that could have gotten to the prosecution in no way, except the one which you have described?—A. I described yesterday the only way in which that Kidder paper could have got to them.

Q. Now, please state before what grand juries you appeared, and in what cases you testified?—A. I was summoned before the grand jury first in February, 1882. It was the grand jury of which Mr. Wilson was foreman, and I think I was the only officer of the Government who appeared before that grand jury at all. I put before them the evidence on which the first indictment against the Dorseys was found. I went before them because they kept sending for me, and I went without asking any questions. It was a very competent, careful, conscientious, and painstaking body of men.

Q. How many times were you before that grand jury?—A. I think it ran over a period of perhaps three weeks. Probably a prosecuting attorney or lawyer would have done the work in much shorter time, but I was really under their control and not claiming in any way to exercise any direction over them.

Q. What did you do before the grand jury, and what was the nature of your services?—A. I took in the the files of the Post-Office Department; took in all our evidence; told them what the different witnesses would testify to, and gave them their names. I would go in, for instance, on, say, the route from Trinidad to Madison. I would explain the frauds as developed by the files and the record, and I would give them a list of the witnesses, and perhaps tell them in a few words what they would learn from each witness.

Q. Please state what your duties were generally in regard to these cases?—A. Well, it is rather difficult to say. It would take a book. I had the general charge of the preparation of the evidence and the custody of the papers.

Q. Was there any other person who had the custody of those papers than yourself?—A. Well, primarily I had custody of them, of course subject to the direction of the Postmaster-General, if he had ever chosen to give any; but nobody ever did give me any.

Q. Were those confidential papers obtained or prepared after General Brady's removal from the office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General?—A. He was removed in April, I think, or perhaps May, and I did not begin preparing those papers until late in September.

Q. Could he have taken any of those papers out of the office with him?—A. Not one.

Q. Did you take the papers which embraced the Government case before the first grand jury before which you testified?—A. I presume I took them in for the purpose of refreshing my memory.

Q. Did you hold on to them or did you leave them with the grand jury?—A. Oh, I never left one of them, I think. If I did, they were returned to me immediately. I would not say absolutely that I never left a paper there, but I cling to papers pretty tightly.

Q. State whether the papers that came before the grand jury embracing the Government's case could have gotten there through any other person than yourself without your knowledge?—A. I do not know that I fully understand your question.

Q. Was there any other person in the employ of the Government who could have furnished this information to the grand jury from the papers you had in your custody without your knowledge?—A. Well, if I had been in the city I should have known of it. I had the general custody of them, but of course the counsel would control my actions.

Q. I am not speaking of the counsel. I am speaking of any other post-office inspector or employé who would have those papers in his reach?—A. We have two or three clerks there who would have access to them in my rooms; that is all. Nobody has ever handled these papers except the few of us who were employed in those rooms. At the time they were first presented to the grand jury I do not think we had more than two or three clerks left there, perhaps not so many.

Q. Can you state how many times you were before that grand jury?—A. I should say I went at least four times a week, or perhaps five times a week, for nearly three weeks.

Q. Did you take the papers in each of the 19 routes on which the indictment was founded in the conspiracy case, and explain them?—A. I explained the history of each route so far as I thought it was necessary. I did not take out every paper in the files on the route, because a great many of them would not indicate any fraud. I took out those papers which in my judgment went to prove fraud, and put them before the grand jury.

Q. Then you must have been at least several hours a week for three weeks before that grand jury in this one case?—A. Yes, sir. I was very sorry that all the cases could not have gone before that grand jury, because they came to understand this star-route business very thoroughly, and I think they were animated by a desire to do their exact duty; but the grand jury came to an end about that time by the expiration of its term.

Q. That grand jury before which you appeared so often did find certain indictments?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Against whom?—A. Against Stephen W. Dorsey, John W. Dorsey—

Q. (Interposing.) They found the indictment against the Dorsey combination?—A. They found the first indictment against the Dorsey combination. That indictment was relinquished on account of the misnomer of Vaile, and the indictment of Rerdell by his initials.

Q. Then another indictment was found against the Dorsey combination?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you appear before that grand jury on the Dorsey cases yourself?—A. I cannot recall whether I did or not. I appeared before that grand jury more than once I know, because I remember the attitude of a particular man on the jury who appeared to be very captious (I don't remember his name), and from that circumstance I remember that I was before them more than once.

Q. Was that the Mitchell grand jury case?—A. Yes, sir. But the only case that I remember appearing on distinctly was the Venita and Las Vegas case.

Q. Which one of the Government's counsel was charged with the responsibility of conducting the Government's case before the grand jury?—A. Colonel Bliss.

Q. Did Mr. Merrick have anything to do with it?—A. Nothing whatever.

Q. Did Mr. Ker?—A. Not at that time. He went before the grand jury perhaps eight months or a year later in the Kellogg case, but during 1882 he had nothing whatever to do with the matter except to prepare the indictments.

Q. Then it was the duty of Colonel Bliss, as one of the Government counsel, to appear before the grand jury and present the evidence in those cases?—A. I do not know that it was his duty to appear before the grand jury. All I mean to say is that the evidence was turned over to him to make such use of it as he thought best. It would not have been necessary for him to appear.

Q. Whose duty was it to see that the witnesses were summoned to appear?—A. Colonel Bliss attended to all that. He selected the witnesses to appear and had them subpoenaed.

Q. State what you did in the way of furnishing Colonel Bliss with the necessary evidence on which indictments could be found.—A. I prepared a paper giving a history of each route, and what each witness would testify to on that route so far as we knew the facts up to that time. Of course, when the witnesses came here to the trials I examined them still further, and we got some additional evidence.

Q. Then, the responsibility of procuring the necessary evidence upon which indictments could be found, and briefing it, was with you?—A. Yes, sir; with me.

Q. And the responsibility of bringing it to the attention of the grand jury was with Colonel Bliss?—A. Yes, sir; and the responsibility of preparing the indictments was with Mr. Ker, and Mr. Merrick came in to conduct the cases in court.

Q. He was simply counsel to conduct cases upon indictments already found?—A. Yes. Of course he was ready to counsel with them at any time, but he came in late.

Q. State what you did before the grand jury in regard to the Las Vegas and Venita route.—A. I was before them a very short time, perhaps half an hour, and I cannot recall what I did. I probably pitched some evidence at them.

Q. Did you answer all questions put to you by Colonel Bliss?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he present?—A. He was present.

Q. What was the nature of that examination, and what information did you bring to his attention with regard to that route?—A. He had all the evidence in my possession before I went in and I answered any questions that he asked me, but of course I do not recall what they were.

Q. Were the papers taken from the files of the Department, and those reports of the special agents to which you have referred used before the grand jury in procuring indictments in all of these cases?—A. The files of the Post-Office Department relating to them were carried there.

Q. And they were used before the grand jury as evidence?—A. Yes, sir; and they were admitted as evidence by the judge at the trial before the petit jury.

Q. State to what extent you explained the papers in the Las Vegas and Vinita route before that jury?—A. I don't recall; I cannot remember what I did testify to. It was a very short time that I was there.

Q. It was a short time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you there long enough to explain all the facts, and did you explain all the facts in relation to that case to the grand jury?—A. I explained all the facts that I was called upon to explain.

Q. What facts were those?—A. Well, the facts are numerous and complicated, and just what I was asked I have no remembrance of whatever.

Q. You have some idea of what would constitute a case before a grand jury to justify them to find an indictment?—A. Well, I have the abstracts prepared up to that time that were in our possession.

Q. Did you give the grand jury sufficient information while you were before them upon which they could properly have found indictments in the Vinita and Las Vegas route—orally I mean?—A. That is a question upon which I could hardly pass an opinion. It would depend upon the grand jury; and I do not remember the questions that were asked me. I had no responsibility of course for the presentation of that case.

Q. I understand that; but I want to know whether Mr. Bliss drew out of you by questions the evidence in that case which was in your possession, and in the possession of the Government.—A. Well, of course, in half an hour I could not have explained that case.

Q. You could not?—A. No, sir; I think not. I think that in an hour or two the Wilson grand jury would have understood that route.

Q. In an hour or two?—A. Well, I think in one day they would have understood that route; but how much information this grand jury had about the star-route matter I do not know. The Wilson grand jury became very familiar with the matter.

Q. I am only asking about the information which you gave the grand jury in regard to that route.—A. Well, I was before them a very short time.

Q. Can you remember the nature of the questions put to you by Colonel Bliss in that case?—A. I don't remember.

Q. What were the facts which your briefs furnished with regard to that Vinita and Las Vegas route?—A. They are here. I can give you, I think, in a few words the substance of the facts, if you would like it.

Q. Yes; please give them.—A. There is a good deal of complication about the early orders in this route, and it would probably only confuse if I should go into them; so that the questions with regard to compensation, &c., I will defer until towards the end, because I have them much more explicitly detailed further on; but I think in a few words I can give you a general outline of the history.

Route No. 32024, from Vinita, Ind. Ter., to Las Vegas, N. Mex., was let to V. W. Parker, of Atchison, Kans., once a week service on a schedule of ten days, from October 1, 1878, to June 30, 1882, at the annual pay of $6,330. The distance, as advertised, was 725 miles. By an order of September 27, 1878, the contractor was ordered to embrace Hayes, Wheeler, and Tascosa, all in the "Panhandle" of Texas; and by an order of October 8, to embrace San Flaris next after Fort Bascom, Cabra Springs, Gallinas Springs, Hatch's Ranch, and La Liendre next after La Cinta. October 22, two petitions were filed asking for increase of service to three trips a week, and a third, couched in the same language, followed December 11. November 9, 1878, General Brady ordered:

From December 1, 1878, increase service to three trips per week, and allow contractor $12,660 per annum additional, being pro rata.

November 16, 1878, there was filed the subcontract of J. W. Parker, for the full term at full pay. In November, three more petitions, written or copied by the same three hands that prepared the petitions for additional trips, and, like them, worded in the same language, were filed. They ask that the schedule be reduced from ten to seven days. November 14, 1878, V. W. Parker made affidavit that tri-weekly service on a ten days' schedule required 20 men and 45 horses; that the same on a schedule of seven days would require 50 men and 124 horses—an increase of one hundred and sixty-seven per cent.

On a schedule of ten days the rate of speed was 3.02+ miles per hour, and on a schedule of seven days, 4.31+. With three trips per week there were 621.43 miles of daily travel. If 45 animals were used they would be required to travel on an average 13.81 miles per day, and if 124 were used, an average of 5.01 miles per day only would be imposed on each. In other words, an increase of speed from 3.02 to 4.31 miles per hour, reduced the capacity of a horse for daily travel from 13.81 to 5.01 miles. Under the last supposition an average use of one hour and ten minutes per day only would be required of each animal. If double teams were used it would be necessary to multiply the above results by two.

On the 23d of December, 1878, General Brady ordered:

From January 1, 1878, perform service in seven days in each direction, and allow contractor $31,846.31 per annum additional, being pro rata for additional stock and carriers required, as appears by sworn statement of contractor.

By this order the total annual pay on the route was increased to $50,836.31.

Mr. James C. Blythe, postmaster at Vinita, Indian Territory, took a different view of the needs and prospects of the country, from the author of the two sets of petitions; for January 12, 1879, he wrote to Hon. D. M. Key that the service as increased to three trips (he evidently knew nothing of the expedition) was—

Wholly superfluous and a burden to the Department, for the following reasons:

First. That during this whole distance, 720 miles, there are only two (2) intermediate offices, and they of minor importance, and can be easier supplied.

Second. That there is no country through which the route passes (wilderness and desert) to build up offices—perhaps two neighborhoods.

Third. That during the time I have not, as yet, received to exceed fifty letters and half a dozen papers since the route went into operation.

Fourth. That contractor is not complying with terms of contract.

This letter was written 102 days after the service began, showing that the letters received averaged about one for every two days.

We come now to a remarkable batch of letters, most of which were transmitted to the Department through Mr. W. L. Hunt, Superintendent Railway Mail Service, at Saint Louis.

February 22, 1879, General John B. Hatch, commandant at Fort Elliott, Tex., complains to Hunt that no mail from any point east of Dodge City, Kans., has reached the post for ten days, though in that time four have come from Dodge City.

February 28 Mr. Hunt replied to General Hatch, that mails for Fort Elliott had, for a short time, been forwarded via Wichita, Kans., to Darlington, Ind. T., and thence by route No. 32024. He infers that service on the latter is not properly performed, and therefore directs that it again be sent via Dodge City.

February 27 W. M. D. Lee, postmaster at Fort Elliott, notified Mr. Hunt that his office had not received any eastern mail for nearly three weeks. He attributes the delay to the ordering of the mails via Darlington, and shows why they should come via Dodge City. One thousand pounds are detained on the road.

On March 2 Mr. Lee wrote substantially the same facts to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. On the 7th he notified Superintendent Hunt that the mails were coming all right via Dodge City. In answer to the query, "Why regular tri-weekly trips are not made between this place and Darlington," he said: "We can simply say we don't know. This office has no information, official or otherwise, except from the agent of the contractor, of the existence of such a contract."

On February 10 George E. Reynolds, postmaster at Darlington, Ind. T., replied to a letter of inquiry from Hunt, with regard to weight of mails, &c., over route 32024, that to the best of his knowledge there had not passed through his office over the route but two papers and not to exceed two letters per month. Respecting the relative merits of the roads to Vinita and Caldwell, he said:

We depend entirely on the Caldwell route for our mails, and the road is an old one * * * and the only one thought of or traveled to and from this point. As to the road from this point to Vinita, I have no knowledge of there being any, as there is not nor has there ever been any line of communication between the two points excepting the present mail service. That is being performed on horseback over the prairies regardless of roads.

To a similar inquiry J. C. Blythe replied, February 7, that the mail sent over route 32024 was very small; some trips none whatever either way. The letters would not average over two to the round trip. No papers; roads very bad; service performed on horseback.

March 12, Mr. Hunt transmitted the correspondence, with a report, to W. B. Thompson, Superintendent Railway Mail Service. He had ordered the mails sent via Dodge City, and everything was again moving smoothly.

March 17, Brewer, contract clerk, indorsed upon the report of Superintendent Hunt:

On the above date I reported the facts herein to General Brady, and he directed that no change in the service be made. The contractor was personally notified of the complaint.

The change referred to by Mr. Brewer relates not to the orders made by Mr. Hunt, but to reduction of the service on 32024.

The correspondence shows that the route was worthless, that the service was miserable, and performed on horseback. The last fact is important in view of the affidavit of the contractor respecting the equipment.

On the 8th of March, 1879, H. A. Chambers, inspector, addressed a singular communication to the Postmaster-General. He had been urged to privately call his attention to the efforts of interested parties to secure further increases on this route. From general report he believes the service, as originally let, ample. He apologetically suggests that the Postmaster-General investigate the facts before allowing additional service.

During the early part of 1879 the service was wretched, as appears from overwhelming evidence. The postmaster at Darlington knew of no road thence to Vinita. The officers at Fort Elliott sent indignant complaints to Superintendent Hunt on account of the long and total interruption in the through service from the East. The postmaster at Fort Elliott claimed that his information respecting the existence of the route was derived wholly from the agent of the contractor. The trouble and commotion at Fort Elliott were caused by a mistaken effort on the part of Mr. Hunt to utilize that part of the route between Darlington and Fort Elliott. He finally broke the blockade by ordering the mails to be forwarded via Wichita and Dodge City, Kans., around three sides of an irregular square.

Two additional trips and costly expedition had already been ordered upon the route; yet, despite this wanton and useless expenditure, at the very time when an outraged public and honest officials were bringing the facts respecting the wretched quality of the service to the attention of the Department, the conspirators were massing their forces for another, and, if possible, more disgraceful raid upon the Treasury.

Stereotyped petitions were manufactured asking that the number of weekly trips be increased from three to seven. The Merchants' Exchange and the Cotton Exchange of Saint Louis were induced to lend their aid. Numerous Senators and Representatives from the Southwest joined in. Notwithstanding the official information in his hands, which remained uncontradicted, General Brady was ready with his puissant pen, for June 25, 1879, he ordered:

From July 1, 1879, increase service to seven trips per week, and allow contractor $86,052.59 per annum additional, being pro rata. Change schedule to daily. Make same allowance to subcontractor.

A partial history of the principal paper upon which the above order was based was imparted to me by a gentleman who, in procuring it, acted a subordinate but not unimportant part in the scheme. At the instance of the contractor's attorney, this gentleman took a carriage one day in this city to circulate a petition for increased service on this route among Senators and Representatives from the Southwest, chiefly from Texas, Arkansas, and Missouri. He called upon members of both houses, and all who were invited, except two, signed the paper without hesitation or comment. One member of Congress said: "This ought not to be done, and if I were Postmaster-General I would not do it." After some further parley he added his name with the general remark: "This is wrong and the Postmaster-General will not be fool enough to do it, but I sign to oblige you."

The gentleman received $500 for his afternoon's work.

In the earlier stages of the development of the job other prominent public men, doubtless with equal lack of reflection, lent the weight of their names to its furtherance.

In this connection the manner in which another paper, which was likewise made an additional excuse for the increased service, was manufactured, may be briefly given.

Mr. Joseph W. Parish, now of Washington, was employed by the firm of which the contractor was a member to circulate petitions among members of the Merchants' and of the Cotton Exchanges of Saint Louis, asking for daily trips on route No. 32024. They proposed to give him a share in the profits, and talked of schemes for cattle raising and colony planting in a way to greatly stimulate his efforts. Mr. Parish was told to represent that he had an interest in the route, that his friends in the Exchange might think they were benefiting him by giving their names. He labored three or four days in the appointed vineyard with great success, using the letters and arguments furnished by his employers. He recognizes the petitions now on file as the ones circulated by him in the month of February, 1879.

For the above services Mr. Parish received $100 in cash and a loan of $750, with the understanding that it was never to be called for if the petitions were granted, but otherwise to be repaid. Parish gave his obligations for the amount subject to this contingency. After the Department had granted the increases the firm attempted to collect the loan. About October, 1879, E. W. Parker tried to excuse broken promises by alleging that so many were holding their hands behind them that he could not do anything then, but would soon. Subsequently, in Washington, he repudiated his original verbal agreement on the ground that the firm would not furnish the requisite funds. The dispute is in litigation.

On August 16, 1879, E. W. Parker wrote to Mr. Parish: "Be careful and impress Hunt that you are an interested party and find out his price," &c.

Mr. Walter L. Hunt, then superintendent of railway mail service for the Southwest, with headquarters at Saint Louis, had, during the previous winter and spring, reported to the Department a number of unpalatable facts with regard to the general uselessness of the route and the poor quality of the service upon it. Parker wished to change his attitude and knew of but one method. With the directness characteristic apparently of the business, he urged Mr. Parish orally and by letter to ascertain the cost of securing the support of Hunt, and volunteered to furnish the purchase money.

Acting under such solicitation Parish saw Hunt, whom he knew well, told him he had an interest in the route, and asked his aid, but offered no money, believing that Hunt would resent any attempt at bribery.

Parker also urged Parish to ply Hunt with liquor in order to bring him more fully under control. Parish claims that his efforts to influence the officer were confined to strictly legitimate methods. On his side Hunt represented that the matter did not concern him particularly, and he seems to have dropped it.

Let us now examine the manner in which the length of the route was manipulated, whereby it was first cut down from 725 to 638 miles, and then by embracing new offices extended to 810 miles.

An official distance circular sent out January 6, 1879, and filed March 17, 1879, gave the total length of the route as let as 638 miles. A second circular, without date, but, like the former, directed to V. W. Parker, filed March 18, 1879, gives the length of the route as 810 miles. This last circular, which seems to have been made the basis of the subsequent increases of distance, is throughout in the same handwriting. The names of all postmasters were signed by a single person. There is an original, marked "4" in blue pencil in the upper right hand corner, and signed by 12 postmasters, from which it was obviously manufactured. In the original the distance from Hayes to Fort Bascom is given as 85 miles, but "109" is written boldly over it; from Fort Bascom to San Hilario, 20 or 22 miles, over which "28" is written; from Gallinas Springs to Las Vegas, "40" is written over an erasure—perhaps "30." The distance from Cabra Springs to La Liendra was also changed to 30, possibly from 40. From Vinita to Darlington the circular is blank.

By an order of September 27, 1878, prior to the beginning of the term, Hayes, Wheeler, and Tascosa, all in the Panhandle of Texas, were embraced from October 1, 1878, the pay for supplying them being left for future adjustment. The three offices were established on the recommendation of Stephen W. Dorsey, dated April 26, 1878, his views being indorsed on the several location papers, which in each instance purport to be filled, as far as they are filled, by "William Burnes, mail carrier." The vital queries, intended to inform the Department whether the distance is increased, and if so, how much, are all left unanswered. It should be borne in mind that the figures below given are prorated on a basis of $6,330, the original contract price, and that after the subsequent manipulations they were multiplied by over twenty-two.

On March 19, 1879, General Brady ordered:

I. From October 1, 1878, allow contractor $843.34 per annum pro rata for 85 miles additional for Tascosa, Hayes, and Wheeler, embraced by order No. 8392, September 27, 1878.

Inspector Edward E. Boyd, in a report dated February 9, 1882, says that—Tascosa and Wheeler are directly on route No. 32024, between Fort Bascom and Mobeetie (Fort Elliott). Tascosa is a small town, having a few stores and, in my judgment, from 100 to 200 inhabitants. Wheeler, 25 miles east of Tascosa, is only a cattle ranch, and directly on the main trail to Mobeetie. Hayes, which was discontinued in 1879, was also a cattle ranch, but its exact locality I was unable to learn.

W. L. Nicholson, esq., topographer for the Post-Office Department, in January, 1882, prepared a map of the route from the best attainable data. The above offices are therein located in the valley of the Canadian River, and hence they must be on or near the traveled highway. Hayes was discontinued February 18, 1879, and Wheeler, temporarily, December 11, 1878, so that both were defunct when the order of March 1879, was made.

Again, March 19, 1879, General Brady ordered:

V. From January 1, 1879, allow contractor and subcontractor $535.77 per annum pro rata for 12 miles additional for Seven Oaks and 6 miles additional for Prior Creek.

A location paper issued from the appointment office November 12, 1878, filed at the same November 23, 1878, and filed with the topographer December 5, 1878, states, over the signatures of Alexander M. Rider, proposed postmaster at Pryor Creek, and James C. Blythe, postmaster at Vinita, that Pryor Creek is directly on route No. 32024, 20 miles from Vinita.

Another location paper issued November 19, 1878, and filed as above December 9 and December 23, respectively, states over the signatures of Thompson M. McFadden, proposed postmaster, and W. M. D. Lee, postmaster at Fort Elliott, Tex., that Seven Oaks is directly on route No. 32024, and will increase the travel nothing. It gives the distance to Fort Elliott as 27 miles and to Darlington as 140.

These papers, seemingly of the highest authority, show that the distance was not increased at all by embracing Pryor Creek and Seven Oaks.

Referring again to the comprehensive orders of March 19, 1879, which I have not treated as originally arranged, General Brady ordered:

II. Modify order No. 8879, October 8, 1878, to embrace San Hilario next after Fort Bascom, and Cabra Springs, La Liendra, Chaperito (n. o.), Hatch's Ranch, and Gallinas Springs, in the order named, next after La Cinta, increasing distance 69 miles, and pay $684.89 per annum pro rata.

The above is grounded in part upon the map and explanations, copies of which follow:

GALLINAS SPRINGS, N. MEX., November 28, 1878.

HON. THOMAS J. BRADY,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General:

SIR: We, the undersigned, certify that to supply the post-offices on route No. 32024, from Vinita, Ind. Ter., to Las Vegas, N. Mex., in the Territory of New Mexico, in the following rotation, viz, Las Vegas, La Liendra, Chaperito, Hatch's Ranch, to Gallinas Springs is impracticable, because there is no regularly traveled road; because the Gallinas River has to be crossed six times, and often, owing to the rise and fall of its waters, more times; and because of the mountains which, in one place, have a grade of about fifteen hundred feet to a mile, down a rough, rocky mesa or table-land, very dangerous to ascend or descend for a man or horse; and would recommend and ask that the route be run to supply the offices in the following rotation, viz, Las Vegas, by Gallinas Springs, Hatch's Ranch, Chaperito, to La Liendra, this way being the only one by which these places can be regularly and practically supplied.

This petition is signed by "Jas. E. Whitmore, P. M., Gallinas Springs, N. M.," and ten others.

Col. A. B. Carey, of the United States Paymaster's Department, long stationed in New Mexico and familiar with the country, told me February 22, 1882, that the traveled way from Fort Bascom to Las Vegas always passed directly through Gallinas Springs. Two other Army officers were present and corroborated the statement from personal knowledge. In going from Gallinas Springs to Fort Union Colonel Carey usually went via Hatch's Ranch and Chaperito, crossing the mesa, which could be done on horseback or in a light vehicle, but not with a load.

In this connection a letter, dated October 9, 1878, and accompanying map, from G. W. Stonerod, postmaster at Cabra Springs, N. Mex., becomes important. At that time the service between Fort Bascom and Las Vegas was practically duplicated. Mr. Stonerod asks to have Cabra Springs placed on route No. 32024, it being then on No. 39110, from Gallinas Springs to Fort Bascom. He says that the two mails come together at a point about one mile east of his office, and thence follow the same road to Fort Bascom, 64 miles. His letter was written nine days after the beginning of the term on No. 32024, and he assumed that "it was the intention of the carrier to cross the dangerous mesa." In the advertisements La Cinta was embraced on both routes, and the letter of Mr. Stonerod would indicate that the point of divergence, if there was any, was near Cabra Springs and not at La Cinta, as given on the map of Mr. Nicholson.

The "distance circular" filed March 17, 1879, runs thus:

	Miles.
Fort Bascom to La Cinta	33
La Cinta to Las Vegas	60
Total	93

The "distance circular" filed March 18, 1879, runs:

	Miles.
Fort Bascom via San Hilario (directly on the road) to La Cinta	36
Las Cinta to Cabra Springs	38
Cabra Springs via La Liendra, Chaperito, and Hatch's Ranch to Gallinas Springs.	48
Gallinas Springs to Las Vegas	40
Total	162

Increase, 69 miles.

The diagram of Mr. Stonerod makes the most direct distance from Fort Bascom to Las Vegas to be 110 miles.

The evidence is that, taking the year together, the only practicable road ran via Gallinas Springs.

Inspector Edward E. Boyd, who made a thorough examination of the western end of the route, in a report dated June 15, 1881, makes the distances—

	Miles.
From Fort Bascom to Cabra Springs	77
From Cabra Springs to Gallinas Springs, direct	16
From Gallinas Springs to Las Vegas	36
Total	129

He says that, owing to the mesa, Chaperito and La Liendra, 17 miles and back, were served by a side supply, when served at all. La Liendra was discontinued in January, 1880. From September, 1880, till May 1, 1881, even Chaperito was not supplied.

Mr. Boyd makes the entire length of the route, embracing every office upon it, and even the side supply to Chaperito, 724 miles, or one mile less than advertised. Excluding Chaperito, its length is 710 miles.

Practically, from end to end, the length of the route was only increased to embrace new offices by the loop north of Gallinas Springs, which had no relations to the through service, being a mere side supply.

Both "distance circulars" were fraudulent. The first did not follow the traveled road. The second was not authenticated by the signature of a single postmaster.

Let us see what the supposititious 172 miles added to the route, first by reducing it from 725 to 638 miles, and then elongating it to 810 miles, cost the Government annually.

By the order of December 23, 1878, from January 1, 1879, $31,846.31 were allowed annually for expedition, tri-weekly service.

On the 19th of March, 1879, General Brady ordered:

VI. Modify order No. 11421, December 23, 1878, to allow contractor and subcontractor $40,429.88 per annum pro rata for expedition in lieu of sum stated.

The difference, $8,583.57 represents the annual cost of expedition for tri-weekly trips on the distance improperly added to the length of the route.

By order of March 19, 1879:

Allowed for 85 miles, 1 t. w	$843 34
Allowed for 69 miles, 1 t. w	684 59
Allowed for 18 miles, 1 t. w	178 59

Annual allowance for trips only, 172 miles, 1 t. w	1,706 52

172 miles, on three trips a week	5,119 56
172 miles, expedition, three trips a week	8,583 57

Annual increase for 172 miles, 3 t. w	13,703 13
	$\frac{7}{4}$

Annual increase for 172 miles, 7 t. w	31,973 97
---	-----------

In other words, the sophistication of the distances superadded nearly 27 per cent. to the cost of the service : 638 miles : 810 miles :: 100 : 1.27, nearly.

But the memorable order of March 19, 1879, is not yet exhausted, for section VII provides—

Distance being now 810 miles, in lieu of 638 miles as let, allow contractor nine days running time in each direction from March 20, 1879, being pro rata, and change schedule accordingly.

Thus the schedule time was first reduced from ten to seven days, and then, by methods already described, extended to nine days. What did the operation cost?

Original pay, 1 trip a week	$6,330 00
Additional trip a week, 85 miles	843 34
Additional trip a week, 69 miles	684 59
Additional trip a week, 18 miles	178 59

Pay without expedition for one trip a week	8,036 52
	7

Pay without expedition for seven trips a week	56,255 64
---	-----------

Total pay (including expedition) from July 1, 1879, 7 t. w	150,592 03
Total pay for trips only, 7 trips a week	56,255 64

Cost of expedition	94,336 39
--------------------------	-----------

Thus, a saving of one day out of ten, real or fictitious, on a line extending through a wild, and to a large extent, uninhabited country, was made to cost the Government the sum of $94,336.39 per annum.

By the order of March 19, 1879, 85 miles were added for embracing Tascosa, Hayes, and Wheeler. At that very time Tascosa was the only one of the three in existence, Wheeler having been discontinued December 11, 1878, and so remained until August 18, 1879, and Hayes having been discontinued February 18, 1879. The allowances of distance were actually made for supplying dead offices.

Although 69 miles were added for La Liendra, Chaperito, Gallinas Springs, &c., it has been already shown that the only practicable road between Fort Bascom and Las Vegas passed through Gallinas Springs, and that the places off from the road were served by side-supply. La Liendra and Chaperito should never have been embraced on this route. A separate and adequate service could have been given them at trifling expense. Besides, La Liendra was discontinued January 30, 1880, and Chaperito was discontinued October 8, 1877(?), to be re-established January 30, 1880. In neither instance did the contract office reduce the length of the route.

This route was advertised to be 725 miles long, ample as already shown to embrace every office, and to take advantage of the pass at Gallinas Springs, N. Mex. Are contractors permitted to triangulate imaginary highways across impassable mountains, as was evidently done between Las Vegas and Vinita?

As has already been pointed out, the attention of the contract office was early directed to the worthlessness of the route and the utter needlessness of any increase in the service, by means of the letters and reports of those familiar with the needs of the country through which it passed. But General Brady had another and infallible source of information respecting the productiveness of the route, and he did not need to leave the departmental building to obtain the benefit of its light. The total net revenue derived from all the intermediate offices on the route from the beginning of the contract term to the quarter ending March 31, 1881, was as follows:

For the year ending June 30, 1879.....	$794 28
For the year ending June 30, 1880.....	1,068 02
For the nine months ending March 31, 1881.....	1,089 20

But Darlington, as we have seen, depended exclusively upon the inlet via Caldwell and Wichita, Kans.; Fort Elliott received its principal supply by Route No. 32021, from Camp Supply to Fort Elliott; and Fort Reno and Mobeetie were each supplied by two other routes. Deducting the revenue derived from these offices, the total net revenue derived from all the offices which depended exclusively for their mail supply upon this route reached the sum of $151.65 for the year ended June 30, 1879; $216.07 for the year ended June 30, 1880; and $232.49 for the nine months ended March 31, 1881, to offset an annual expenditure of $150,592.03.

It should also be noticed that this statement of the net revenue derived from post-offices situated on the route covers the period from July 1, 1878, up to the 31st of March, 1881, while the petitions and letters asking for increase and expedition, and setting forth the marvelous growth of the country, were circulated late in 1878 and early in 1879. Meanwhile twenty-four months have passed by, allowing that period for development. Now come the cold, impartial figures of the previous page, the record evidence of the Department, reducing the hyperboles of the contractor to the test of fact. When the increases were ordered, the causes against such action were still stronger. In attempting to justify his conduct to Congress General Brady published the recommendations, prepared by the contractor and signed by many respectable men, who knew little or nothing about the matter, but carefully withheld all actual information.

I have already quoted at length from the letter of Mr. Blythe, then postmaster at Vinita, Ind. T., dated January 12, 1879, exposing the uselessness of this route. Having a curiosity to learn why he left the service, I sent to the appointment office of the Post-Office Department for the information. He was made postmaster at Vinita December 29, 1876, and removed April 30, 1879. The record comprises:

1st. An undated petition from 15 citizens asking for his removal on the ground of inefficiency and neglect of duty.

2d. A report from Post-Office Inspector Schaurte, dated January 27, 1879, saying that there is no foundation for the charges.

3d. A petition from 40 citizens asking for his retention.

4th. A letter from General Brady to First Assistant Postmaster-General Tyner, dated April 21, recommending his removal for "gross neglect of duty in making out and forwarding registers of arrivals and departures," &c. The official who could not be used by the conspirators was summarily dismissed. Truth-telling came near being a capital offense.

On the 22d of April, 1880, Mrs. Margaret Lackey, postmaster at Red River Springs, San Miguel County, New Mexico, wrote to the Postmaster-General, inclosing a copy of a letter from E. W. Parker, asking her to "connive (?) with him to change the mail route and the manner of delivery at (that) office, by offering me (her) a bribe of $15 per month for myself (herself) and $15 per month for my (her) son, who is a child twelve years of age." She asks to be relieved from "all future annoyances from this man." Strange to say, in 1881 Mrs. Lackey was still postmaster.

In the spring of 1881 Inspector Edward E. Boyd made a personal investigation of the route, and his report is dated June 15, 1881. With his report he forwarded to the Department statements from postmasters and others showing the uselessness of the route. E. W. Warfield, esq., superintendent R. M. service, gives reasons to show why Route "No. 32024 is not nor ever has been of any practical utility so far as forwarding mails from the eastern terminus is concerned."

On June 10 George A. Montgomery, postmaster at Mobeetie, Texas, pronounces the eastern end of the route "of little or no value." From his office nothing is sent for points beyond Darlington, and very little for that place.

George E. Reynolds, postmaster at Darlington, June 10 reports that for three consecutive trips each way, beginning June 2, he handled five letters and two postal cards. Several times the pouch contained nothing but the mail bill. June 3 the postmaster at Darlington says he can see no necessity for the existence of the route from the Sac and Fox Agency westward to Mobeetie, Tex. He recommends the entire discontinuance of the service.

James E. Whitmore, postmaster at Galinas Springs, N. Mex., in an undated letter (written probably in June, 1881), reports that no mails were sent to Chaperito for seven months during the season just past. He claims that orders to that effect were sent by the Department to the postmaster at Las Vegas.

In his report Mr. Boyd exposed the uselessness of the route, and recommended extensive curtailments. On the 30th of June, 1881, General Elmer, then Second Assistant Postmaster-General, from July 11, 1881, discontinued all allowances for expedition, amounting on three trips per week to $40,429.88 a year, and wiped out entirey extensive parts of the route, restating also the distances. Previously, from May 1, 1880, the service had been reduced to six trips a week, and from August 1, 1880, further reduced to three trips a week.

Q. Now that you have refreshed your memory in regard to the facts in this case, can you inform the committee whether you made a similar statement before the Mitchell grand jury?—A. Well, I cannot remember at all how much I did state to them. I know I was before them a very short time.

Q. Did you give them as full and clear an explanation of that case as you have given this committee this morning?—A. I naturally would not, for the reason that they interrupted me considerably with questions, and I was in a hurry, and it was rather an impatient body.

Q. Mr. Bliss was there, was he not?—A. He was there.

Q. Did he know all the facts that you have testified to this morning, and put them before that grand jury?—A. Really, I cannot recall. The only thing I can recall is that I was before them a very short time and went hurriedly over some of these things, how much or how little I cannot say. I know that before the Wilson grand jury we went over everything carefully and patiently.

Q. But you did not do so before the Mitchell grand jury, and in this case especially?—A. No, sir. It was gone over in a very different way. But I was responsible in the other case. That is, they called me in, and I felt the responsibility in a degree before that grand jury.

Q. But in this case Colonel Bliss had the data with which you have refreshed your memory this morning?—A. Yes, sir; these are the papers that he had.

Q. Did he, in your presence, call the attention of the grand jury to those facts and state that they could be all proven by competent testimony?—A. Well, he had numbers of other witnesses usually.

Q. In this case, I mean?—A. As I told you, I have no recollection positively of what we did there.

Q. This was a very important case, was it not?—A. I looked upon this as the strongest single route we had, and of course it has been enormously strengthened by the evidence prepared on the ground, which we should have had on the trial. If I had been responsible for this I should have stuck to that grand jury a week if necessary, until I made them understand those facts; that is, if they permitted me.

Q. But you did not stay with them a week?—A. I was not responsible.

Q. I understood that you did as Colonel Bliss directed you?—A. Exactly.

Q. And you answered all the questions he put to you?—A. Everything.

Q. When the grand jury failed to indict on this Vinita and Las Vegas route, did you understand why they failed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did any fact occur to you at that time which might explain it?—A. Well, it was almost simultaneously that an arbitration was announced. I hardly gave a thought to it. It occurred to me in a cursory way that the Government had decided to arbitrate these matters rather than prosecute the cases criminally, but beyond that I never gave it a thought. It was none of my business.

Q. You did not see any serious effort in that Vinita and Las Vegas route to find an indictment?—A. Well, that is a matter I am not competent to testify to, because I was before the grand jury but a very short time.

Q. Well, for the time you were there you did not see that Mr. Bliss was making a very labored effort in this case?—A. I could not say that. He was responsible for the case. He was presumed to know just what he wanted me to testify to, and I was not presumed to know, and I did not know, what he proposed to put in by other witnesses.

Q. Assuming the facts as you have stated them here to-day on the Las Vegas and Vinita route, if those facts constitute an indictable offense, upon whom did the responsibility rest of procuring those indictments before that grand jury?—A. Mr. Bliss assumed the responsibility of putting the evidence before them.

Q. And of course the evidence was what the case rested on?—A. Yes; but when it comes to the responsibility for the failure to indict, I do not know whether it would rest with the man who put it before them or with the grand jury. The grand jury might be perfectly honest perhaps in disregarding that evidence and failing to indict.

Q. Well, so far as your action went, did you do everything in your power, under the direction of Colonel Bliss, to bring these facts before the grand jury?—A. I should say so.

Q. Then if these facts were not brought before the grand jury they were accessible to the grand jury through your instrumentality?—A. Everything that is in this paper was before them.

Q. And the witnesses themselves were accessible?—A. Well, Colonel Carey was here in the city. He was a very important witness as to the distances, and Mr. Boyd had been over the line, and he was here; Mr. Parrish always notified me whenever he left the city, in order that he might be ready to return if he was called upon.

Q. Now you have stated somewhat in detail the facts in regard to the Las Vegas and Vinita route. State whether that abstract is a sample of the abstracts of evidence which you furnished in the other routes?—A. The abstracts in the other cases were much more complete than this.

Q. In how many routes did you furnish more complete abstracts than this?—A. When I say more complete, I do not mean that they cost more work, because I put more labor into this than into any other abstract I prepared; but that was because I had to dig out a great deal of it myself. For instance, I had to guess what papers I would find in the topographer's office, and I went there and found them. I had to find out myself from the files of the Department, without any help from inspectors, that these distances were all fictitious. But some of the abstracts which would be technically much more complete were only five or six pages long.

Q. I am only asking you now as to the number of cases in which you furnished abstracts similar to this.—A. I have made out a list of all the cases upon which I prepared abstracts.

Q. Have you got that list with you?—A. I have. I made it up from my letter-press copy-book. Here it is [producing the paper].

Q. Now, in all of these routes on this list you furnished evidence to Colonel Bliss which he might have put before the grand jury?—A. Yes; but in some of these routes the evidence was slight.

Q. It was of varying degrees of strength, of course?—A. This last part refers to my examination of witnesses, and these were appendices that I made on the routes that were embraced in the indictments that were tried.

Q. How many routes were embraced in that memorandum?—A. There seem to be 39 here that I have not counted in; I counted about 43, because there may have been some that were continued. Evidence came in at different times, and where it did I added it in appendices.

Q. Then these 43 routes were carefully investigated and abstracts of the evidence that can be furnished in each case were put in the hands of Colonel Bliss?—A. I turned all those papers over to him; that is, they were under his control.

Q. Now, in how many of those routes were indictments found?—A. Of these that I worked up there were about 19 of the Dorsey routes. I think there were two dropped out afterward: Saguache to Lake City and Dalles to Lake View. In the latter route the overt act on which they relied had been barred by the statute of limitations.

Q. Did the nineteen routes embraced in the Dorsey combination constitute one case?—A. They constituted one case.

Q. So that there was only one indictment?—A. There was an indictment found on the San Antonio and Corpus Christi route, and that also included the route from Monroe to Shreveport.

Q. Were there any indictments found against the Parker combination?—A. No, sir. This Vinita to Las Vegas route belonged to the Parker combination.

Q. Or any against the Salisbury combination?—A. None against the Salisbury combination.

Q. Were there none against Patrick?—A. There was a man named Patrick who had the route from Rock Creek to Etchitas.

Q. Was that one of the routes investigated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was an indictment found on it?—A. There was none against him.

Q. Did you go before the grand jury and testify in any other cases than the nineteen routes of the Dorsey combination and the Vinita to Las Vegas route?—A. I know I was before the Mitchell grand jury more than once; and I was before them but once on the Vinita to Las Vegas route; but what I then testified to I do not remember.

Q. Do you remember that you testified on any of the Salisbury routes?—A. I cannot say whether I did or not. There were four of the Salisbury routes presented to the grand jury. Of those I worked up two—Silver Bow to New Chicago and Solidad to New Hall; and Mr. Blackmer prepared the evidence in the two other routes.

Q. Can you explain why it was no indictments were found against the Parkers and the Salisburys and Sanderson?—A. I cannot.

Q. Were those the chief beneficiaries of expedited routes?—A. The Salisburys received a great deal of money; and the Parkers received a good deal. I will say of the Salisburys that when I came to examine the files in their cases I was a little surprised at the weakness of the record evidence; they seemed to have done their work in anticipation of future trouble. For instance, this man McDevitt, with regard to whom I testified yesterday, was the contractor on five of their routes. He made the affidavit for expedition; he did all the seemingly fraudulent work, and yet he was a mere dummy; he was put forward, and the Salisburys did not appear upon the record until after all this work is done.

Q. Was McDevitt the witness who would have testified against the Salisburys?—A. He was.

Q. That was the main witness that you should have relied upon against the Salisburys?—A. He was the witness I should have relied upon to break into the Salisburys combination, and show their method of doing this business.

Q. And the Government took that witness and sent him to the penitentiary?—A. That witness went to the penitentiary. But I went through numbers of their routes where I expected to find a great deal of evidence of rascality, and from the moment they appeared upon the record, and the evidence failed. Now, I have not reached that point where I can build up houses without material. You see these cases are prepared by digging out the frauds from the records, and where the evidence fails the process fails.

Q. Colonel Bliss spoke about the papers upon the Salisbury routes being abstracted.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you know about that?—A. I have never got hold of any evidence to show that any of them were taken. I only know that the files were very bare of them. I was the first person of those now in the service who handled them, and we were surprised at the bareness of the files.

Q. You stated yesterday that McDevitt was promised that he should not be prosecuted if he gave this information.—A. The promise was made to me, not to him. That was a point upon which I insisted on the most rigid understanding.

Q. Who authorized you to make this statement to McDevitt, that he should have immunity?—A. I never made any such statement to McDevitt.

Q. What did you say?—A. I told him if he could trust me to go ahead; and he did trust me. I think the implied obligation under which you come in listening to a man's statement is the very highest obligation you can assume, because it is an obligation of honor.

Q. You, of course, could not have made that promise without some assurance from higher authority?—A. Oh, I talked about it with Postmaster-General James repeatedly before that, and also with Attorney-General MacVeagh, because that was a point upon which I determined to have an understanding before I obtained any information from anybody.

Q. With whom did you have that understanding?—A. With Mr. James principally, and also with Mr. MacVeagh.

Q. But after Mr. James went out and the new Attorney-General came in your understanding with McDevitt was not carried out?—A. It was not carried out. The implied obligation under which we came was disregarded.

Q. And that destroyed the only witness you could have relied upon for evidence against the Salisburys?—A. Well, we should have had to take the Salisburys not in one group, but in a number of groups.

Q. Would he not have been a material witness?—A. Yes; on those routes where he was the contractor, because he explained the methods. His testimony would show——

Q. Did you take his testimony?—A. Yes, sir; I have got his affidavits.

Q. What would his statements have shown?—A. I gave the substance briefly yesterday. They would have explained the Salisbury methods of doing business through dummies, and only appearing on the record after the oaths were made, although on some routes they did make the oaths.

Q. In your judgment was there sufficient evidence with McDevitt's testimony, to cause indictments to be found against that combination?—A. I do not think either of them were ever presented to the grand jury. They presented other cases which Colonel Bliss considered stronger. There were cases against the Salisburys, perhaps, where they appeared on the record throughout, I think on the Chicago to Silver Bow route, they were the contractors of record. I think Colonel Bliss selected cases which were free from these complications. The point I make is simply this: That their service was broken up into different groups and it all could not have been embraced in one indictment; but I presume that Mr. Bliss—that is, I have no reason to doubt it—selected the cases which in his judgment were the strongest. I know that route from Chicago to Silver Bow was a pretty strong case. If he had taken the McDevitt cases we would have been thrown back upon his solitary testimony, and fighting a combination as strong as that it would be very uncertain to rely upon any one man.

Q. Can you explain the oaths that were taken in order to cause the expedition to be made?—A. I have got a lot of them here on the Dorsey routes. You ought to have them lithographed if you want to make your report complete. We proved that all those oaths were kept in stock. Some were made in blank by Mr. Peck out in New Mexico; some were made in blank by John W. Dorsey up in Vermont; and when they wanted an oath they would go to these blanks, and fill them in to meet the exigencies of the case. That is what we proved in court. Those papers were the sole measure of the cost of expedition. No other evidence was furnished, except these oaths. For instance, that expedition, costing ninety and odd thousand dollars a year, on the Vinita and Las Vegas route, was based entirely on the oath of the contractor. Of course, behind that were petitions and recommendations of members of Congress, but there was no evidence to show that these oaths were correct. We put on witness after witness with regard to the efforts made to obtain facts from them, and we never heard that the contractors ever consulted a single man on the road to get correct information. The number of men and animals is the essential point, and that is in these oaths. These oaths took hundreds of thousands of dollars out of the Treasury.

Q. There must have been a trade carried on in ready-made affidavits?—A. Yes, sir; here is one that I wish to call special attention to. I will read it:

SIR: The number of men and animals which are necessary to carry the mails on route 41119, seven times a week, on the present schedule, is three men, six animals. The number necessary to carry the mail on said route on a schedule of thirty-three hours, seven times a week, five men eighteen animals.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN M. PECK.

Hon. THOMAS J. BRADY,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

That purports to have been verified in the county of Colfax before a notary public, J. S. Taylor.

Now, you will see what that statement leads to. The advertised route was 132 miles. The actual length was 120 miles, the schedule 60 hours. There were 240 miles of daily travel. There were three men and six horses to do it on the original schedule. Six horses traveling 240 miles would have to go 40 miles a day. Each horse would have to travel 40 miles a day every day in the year. There are only three men. Each man would have to travel 80 miles a day. But the speed was two miles an hour, so that each horse would have to travel twenty hours and every man forty hours a day on that schedule.

Mr. CRISP. They proposed to lengthen the days, probably, as well as the routes.

The WITNESS. That shows the carelessness with which the statements were prepared.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. They were what might be called machine affidavits?—A. They were kept in stock, as I said before, and that was proved in court; and you would know that from the appearance of the papers.

Q. Did I understand you to say that Mr. Dorsey had any interest in this Vinita and Las Vegas route?—A. No, sir; I said there was some evidence to show that he originally took an interest in it.

Q. A pecuniary interest?—A. Not a pecuniary interest, but a personal interest. The offices of Hayes and Tacosa and Wheeler were established early; perhaps before the route was let. At all events they were established quite early. I was told that, but I could not find anything in the papers except the fact that he was instrumental in having those offices established to indicate that he had anything to do. He had nothing whatever to do with the contract so far as appears from any of the papers, and there was no reason to think he had anything to do with it any way.

Q. What do you know with regard to the remission of penalties on route 40101?—A. That is the route from Santa Fé to Prescott. Here are the papers upon which the penalties were remitted. The first one is quite immaterial, but it will give the amounts:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 15, 1881.

SIR: Referring to the deductions made by the inspection division of the Post-Office Department on route No. 40101 for the quarter ending March, 1881, and amounting to the extraordinary sum of $671.07, I would most respectfully represent that the said deductions, together with the fine amounting to $2,430.24, are most excessive and oppressive to say the least, if indeed there be any reason whatever for imposing either a fine or making deductions, when the difficulties that lay in the way of performing the service are considered.

The past winter has been one remarkable for its severity, and nowhere was its extraordinarily severe character felt more than on the line of this long frontier route, sparsely inhabited and with no vehicles other than the mail wagons passing over it. Consequently my wagons, at great loss of time, no sooner broke a road through the snow than it drifted back again, making the same work necessary by the following wagon. In addition your attention is called to the fact that the Atlantic and Pacific Railway in constructing its track selected for its road-bed the beaten or traveled wagon-road proper, and as a consequence my mail wagons had to make long detours which partly added to the difficulties already caused by the elements.

When it is considered that sixty or seventy miles of this road leads across the Mogollon range of mountains, where the snow at times drifted six or seven feet high, during the months of December, January, February, and March, thereby not only rendering it impassable but absolutely dangerous to life, the wonder is that I was enabled to get through at all. It was utterly impossible for days at a time to make the passage of the range, as I have been informed by my agent. During all those delays caused by the elements it must be borne in mind that my expenses were in no wise diminished, but, on the contrary, rather increased, in that damage was done my stock, and in other ways needless to recite. The schedule of time on this route is one of the fastest known to the region, and that over a road which in the best of weather is conceded to be one of the worst (length being considered), if not the worst, over which mail service is performed.

Touching the matter of a fine amounting to $2,430.24, I have to say that there was no abandonment of mail on the part of my agents, and no failure to provide "proper celerity" for the same. When it is remembered that the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fé Railway, with which my road connected, failed to arrive at Albuquerque for three and four days at a time during the quarter ending March, 1881, it can be readily understood that the accumulated weight of mail for these days, together with the snow-covered condition of the road, might add to the difficulties of a condition already sufficiently harassing from causes over which we had no control; that there might have been slight delays in delivery of second and third class matter, under all those circumstances is more than possible; but that there was such failure to provide "proper celerity" as to warrant the imposing of a fine of 10 per centum of my pay, therefore, I most emphatically deny. When by reason of drifted snow, &c., it became a physical impossibility to make way with the wagons, men were sent along on horseback and pack horses with the mail; this method continued until it, in its turn, at times, had to be suspended. If mails, under these circumstances, were temporarily made to wait it certainly was no fault of my agents. I cannot avoid thinking that a consideration of all these facts and conditions, instead of lending reasons for imposing fines and making deductions, will rather tend to a remission of the excessive ones that have been made. In conclusion, while it may appear superfluous, I will take occasion to state that on my part there has been at all times a disposition and determination to live up to the terms of my contract with the Government. I have sought faithfully to perform the service, and for that purpose put forth my best energies. There never has been any attempt or disposition on my part to secure any but proper registers or reports from postmasters. Service has been actually performed unless when causes intervened over which we have no control. It is not charged, or even intimated, so far as I know, that I made false affidavits to the number of men and horses required for the expedited service, hence I respectfully submit to your careful consideration the facts as hereinbefore recited, and pray for such relief as you in your judgment may deem just and equitable.

Yours, respectfully,

J. A. WALSH.

Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington.

[Indorsement.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 21, 1881.

Respectfully referred to Hon. A. A. Freeman, Assistant Attorney-General Post-Office Department, in connection with case of deductions, route 40101.

R. A. ELMER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

But the reasons given in this affidavit amounted to nothing, so far as we were concerned. This is the affidavit which embraced the reasons on which we acted:

WASHINGTON, June 30, 1881.

SIR: Referring to my affidavit of June 1 concerning the matter of remission of fines and deductions on Route No. 40101 for quarter ending March, 1881, I would beg leave to furnish the following additional facts, all of which I think are pertinent to the issue.

I will premise my statement by saying that I became contractor on Route No. 40101 by reason of the fact that the contractor, George S. McDonough, and his partners, J. J. Hinds et al., owed me a large sum of money which I advanced them, as a banker and lender of money, to equip this and other routes. Being unable to pay me, the contractor of record, McDonough, turned me over the service.

The record of the post-office inspector discloses the various changes that occurred. In good faith and at great expense I equipped this road and stocked it with better animals than had ever been on a stage route in the Territories, but at the outset I was met with every obstacle and so continued until the discontinuance of my contract. In my affidavit of June 15, 1881, I referred to the great difficulties that I had to encounter during the quarter ending March, 1881, because of the snow-storms that then prevailed. In corroboration I refer you to the report made by Post-Office Inspector R. B. McGaughey, who as late as March 17 or 18, 1881, refers to snow on the Mogollon Mountains, as being 5 feet deep and drifting as high as 6 and 7 feet, relates how he and the mail driver were lost in a blinding snow-storm for eight hours. What must it have been in the month of January and February? I assert that there was no lack of men and horses to carry the mails, but when railways are three and four days behind time, owing to the elements, it seems to me some excuse might be found for overland mails coming in behind time.

As illustrative of the difference in views regarding roads and their condition, I will call your attention to the fact that while the postmaster at Prescott said the road was never in a better condition Agent McGaughey reports at the same time that snow was five feet deep, and that he lost his way for eight hours in the blinding snow-storm. It is possible that these reports of so adverse a character may have been the result of a conspiracy against me, with a view of getting possession of my contract. This, in the light of events, I verily believe and depose to be the fact, and am satisfied that the head and front of this conspiracy was Thos. J. Brady, late Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

In the first part of the month of December, 1880, I was told by Brady that I had better settle with J. J. Hinds in order to avoid scandal that he (Hinds) would inevitably make. To this I demurred, and the subject was dismissed. In the latter part of December Brady, in referring again to the subject, gave it as his opinion that I had better dispose of my contract to some person or persons who would take care of Hinds, otherwise trouble was imminent from Hinds because of my refusal to pay him (Hinds) a large sum of money. I responded that I was quite willing to dispose of my contract, all I wanted was something approaching the sum of money that I had invested. About this time I was approached by Judge Lilley and George F. Brott, who addressed me on the subject of disposing of my road, Route No. 40101. A great deal of discussion ensued between us as to the amount of the consideration to be paid me. To be brief, we disagreed on this point; our views were radically apart. I declined their offers. Various efforts in different ways were made to induce me to dispose of the contract, to all of which I objected, because I would be losing too much money in accepting.

I have since heard and believe that at this stage of my obduracy Mr. Brady informed Judge Lilley that I was to be let alone, and that "he (Brady) would deal with him, and that Walsh in a short while would be very glad to sell at any price." During the month of January, 1881, I went to New York, and from that place, on the 25th of January, 1881, asked permission from the Department to sublet Route No. 40191. The request was granted; not, however, without Brady's inquiring by telegraph to whom did I wish to sublet? This was a laudable thirst after knowledge unusual. On the 27th of January, 1881, permission was given me to sublet; but remarkable rumors began to circulate as to the intentions of the Department touching this road, which rumors, to say the least, were not calculated to be reassuring to any outsider who might think he wanted the route. I went on with my efforts to sublet the road, carefully avoiding, however, going to any of the old contractors, for the reason that they might deem me too anxious to dispose of the route.

On the 24th of February, less than one month after giving me permission to sublet, Mr. Brady revoked the said permit, and on February 28, four days after said revocation, ordered Post-Office Inspector R. B. McGanghey to inspect and report en route No. 40101. Why was the permission to sublet revoked?

Did my refusal to write a letter exonerating Brady from charges made against him have anything to do with this revocation, and the order to have route No. 40101 inspected?

In the first part of February, 1871, J. J. Hinds, through counsel, addressed a communication to Hon. Charles Devens, then Attorney-General of the United States, in which was set forth grave charges against Tho. J. Brady, then Second Assistant Postmaster-General, and, in substantiation of said charges, Hinds cited myself among four or five others as being competent witnesses to prove the truth of the charges. This letter, as I understood, was referred by Mr. Devens to the Post-Office Department.

At this juncture I was applied to in the interest of Brady to write a letter addressed to him, denying the statements made by Hinds in his aforementioned letter to the Attorney-General.

I was informed that the other gentleman named by Hinds was either going to do this or had already done so. I declined writing the letter. On the 24th of that same month, a few days after my refusal, Mr. Brady revoked the permission given me to sublet, and on the 28th of February (same month) addressed Post-Office Inspector R. B. McGanghey to inspect the route No. 40101. On the 9th day of the following month of March, 1881, there appeared in the New York Times an affidavit made by J. J. Hinds, which, although published on that date, had been made apparently on the 1st of December, 1880. On the 10th day of March, 1881, there appeared in the columns of the National Republican, of Washington, D. C., letters of denial from all the gentlemen named by Hinds (except myself) in his letter and affidavit as having a knowledge of the facts which he alleged therein. On the 24th day of March, 1881, I was summarily and without any hearing declared a failing contractor on route No. 40101. When he thus declared me a failing contractor he had not yet heard from Agent McGanghey. Agent McGanghey made, on the 25th of March, 1881, a report, in which he certainly does not indicate abandonment of the service on my part.

In this report he finds fault with the service, a condition of things which existed, no doubt, everywhere over these long frontier routes, but nowhere in this report could Mr. Brady find ground for his arbitrary action. The facts of the case are simply that Second Assistant Postmaster-General Brady had determined to break me down, for the reason that I was not willing to be subservient to him. I respectfully submit that it is unjust and oppressive to subject me to fines and deductions when the difficulties of this situation are considered.

The fine, amounting to $2,430.24, is so manifestly unjust that I feel satisfied of its entire remission. This fine, it will be remembered, is in addition to heavy deductions made on a basis that no one knows anything about. A fine could only be justified as a penalty for some gross criminal act of negligence amounting to a willful destruction of mail matter, which is not charged by any person. No complaint came from the people along the line of the road as to their mails being lost or destroyed, as regards the delay in prompt arrivals on schedule time of the mails. I again reiterate the difdifficulties as being of such a character as to preclude that exact efficiency which might be hoped for, was there no snow-storms or other natural causes to interfere.

In conclusion, I must respectfully suggest that it is very difficult for a contractor to perform service on a road whereon the Second Assistant Postmaster-General of the United States is determined to cause him to fail. It is possible that an opposition so potent might even have influence enough to color reports of subordinates.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN A. WALSH.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., June 30, 1881.

From examination into the facts of this case we are fully satisfied that the conspiracy alleged within actually existed, that it proved a great damage to the contractor, and broke up the service of the route. In view of the injuries he sustained in consequence, we agree in this opinion that the fine and deductions should be acquitted.

A. M. GIBSON,
P. H. WOODWARD,
Post-Office Inspectors.
A. A. FREEMAN,
Assistant Attorney-General.

Q. Did any one else see this recommendation except those who signed it?—A. We took the responsibility of it.

Q. Did you show it to Colonel Cook?—A. I think we did; I don't remember.

Q. Or to Colonel Bliss?—A. This was before Mr. Bliss came into the cases. Colonel Cook was in the cases. To go back a little, Mr. Walsh refused to contribute $8,000 assessed against him to influence the action of Congress when that appropriation bill was pending. An order was made curtailing his route at Albuquerque, but instead of reducing it 35 miles in length, the proper length, it was reduced 80 miles, which was a great hardship. That order was subsequently modified so as to reduce it 50 miles; and from the parties that were engaged in the business I have learned that two combinations certainly were after the route at that time. The Department remitted those fines to Mr. Walsh because he had been broken up by the action of the officers of the Government.

Q. Did you explain these matters fully to Mr. Freeman, the Assistant Attorney-General?—A. Well, Mr. Gibson and I rather took the responsibility of it.

Q. Mr. Gibson examined it himself, did he?—A. Yes, sir. Subsequently Colonel Cook and Mr. Gibson were very anxious that the one month's extra pay should be allowed, and both of them joined in a letter to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General asking it.

Q. Was that in addition to this remission?—A. Yes; that came on afterwards. They were the lawyers in the case and were both very urgent about it. Now, when this was done I do not know whether I talked with Walsh or Gibson or both—I think both; though Walsh said that I never talked with him about it afterwards, but Walsh expressly, either personally or through Gibson, made a waiver of the one month's extra pay. This was all we could do under the law. The law does not contemplate that post-office officials are going to conspire to break down contractors. I told Mr. Lyman, who was Acting Second Assistant Postmaster-General most of the summer, that that extra month's pay was waived. He insisted that a written waiver should be put on the files; and that waiver was put on the files. A waiver was put on file, but afterwards it was found not to be for the extra month's pay, but a waiver of any claim for any pay after a certain date, a different thing from what I had reported. Mr. Lyman was very much opposed to allowing the extra month's pay, and Mr. Gibson was very anxious it should be allowed. I came back from Connecticut and Mr. Gibson from New York, and it was found then that Mr. Lyman had peremptorily refused to make this allowance. Colonel Cook asked me to go and get this letter for him, and I did so, and he destroyed it. I am not certain but Walsh has a claim for that one month's extra pay. I am not questioning at all the propriety of their action in the matter.

Q. Did Mr. Gibson and Mr. Cook recommend this remission of fines and penalties?—A. Mr. Gibson recommended it; I do not know that Colonel Cook did. But of course in recommending the allowance of the additional month's pay he would, in a general way, take the ground that the remission was right. The recommendation of the pay was an entirely subsequent transaction.

Q. You say that Colonel Cook did recommend the additional month's pay?—A. He did.

Q. In the letter which you saw?—A. Yes, sir; in the letter which I saw, and which was in the Department, but which was withdrawn by him when Mr. Lyman peremptorily refused to allow it.

Q. Did Mr. Lyman refuse to allow it?—A. Yes, sir; he was indignant that after it had been waived, as he thought, and as I had reported to him, the claim should be renewed.

Q. Did Walsh make any demand for this remission in consideration of his appearing as a witness in the case?—A. Never.

Q. Did he make any demand for an extra month's pay as a condition precedent to his appearing before the grand jury?—A. Never, sir.

Q. Not to you?—A. Never, sir; to me or to any one, that I ever heard of. If he did I am not aware of it.

Q. This remission, then, was granted upon the merits of the case, as presented in his affidavit?—A. And upon what information we had besides. We were thoroughly satisfied that the conspiracy existed.

Q. You were thoroughly satisfied that he was required by Brady to exonerate him from some charge, and he refused to do so?—A. There were two grounds for it. In the first place, his refusal to pay the assessment of $8,000 for the fund to push through that appropriation. His refusal to pay that was the beginning of the trouble.

Q. Who assessed that against him?—A. If you want to get additional evidence you will have to ask Mr. Lyman. It is a matter of common notoriety that such an assessment was made, and that Mr. Walsh refused to pay—

Q. Did Walsh say that Mr. Brady had anything to do with making that assessment?—A. Mr. Walsh said that the paper was brought to him by Chase Andrews, a contractor there, and I have known, in a general way, as one finds out who is in the focus of an investigation like this, that there was more or less feeling against Walsh for refusing to contribute to that fund.

Q. When was that?—A. That must have been in 1880; one of Price's affidavits relates to his contribution to that fund.

Q. How much did he contribute?—A. I think that it was $2,500 in cash, or $2,500 in postal drafts. Walsh refused to do that, and then subsequently—

Q. One moment. What did you learn was done towards raising a fund from these parties?—A. What I know about that I know in a general way. There was a fund raised.

Q. What did you learn as the bottom facts?—A. Well, I should not want to testify to matters which I know so indefinitely.

Q. But here was a case in which Walsh was being squeezed out of the service?—A. Yes.

Q. And he alleged that it was because he had refused to contribute a certain sum to be used to corrupt Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time was that?—A. That was the time when Mr. Brady called for the two millions, but finally got $1,200,000. It was in the Forty-sixth Congress.

Q. Walsh was the contractor on this route?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they desired him to contribute $8,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he declined to do so?—A. He declined to do it.

Q. He was then embarrassed?—A. I think his embarrassment began after that.

Q. He was declared a failing contractor, was he not?—A. No; he never was declared a failing contractor.

Q. Well, he so states.—A. Well, it was something that he would understand as equivalent to that, but technically he was not a failing contractor.

Q. Here is what he says:

On the 24th of March, 1881, I was summarily and without a word of warning declared a failing contractor on route 40101.

A. I don't know about that. I think that is a misapprehension of his. I will read the order that was made in that case:

From March 24, 1881, curtail service so as to end at Fort Wingate, decreasing the distance 150 miles, and deduct from contractor's pay $38,005.43 per annum, being pro rata; and it being reported that the contractor has failed upon the remainder of the route, the question of one month's extra pay upon the discontinued portion is reserved for further consideration.

Who made that order?—A. That must have been made by Mr. Brady or French. It was made during Mr. Brady's administration. But after Walsh's refusal to contribute, Mr. Hinds printed this affidavit in which he called upon a number of witnesses. They all put in disclaimers except Mr. Walsh, and he refused to do so. I talked with Mr. Lilley, who was engaged in this scheme, and he told me all about the interviews with Brady and the scheme to break up Walsh in this route. There is no doubt in my mind—not a particle—of the existence of that purpose and that scheme, and it was really on the ground that, so far as this transaction was concerned, the fault rested primarily with the Government that the remissions of fines were recommended.

The CHAIRMAN. I have a telegram from Colonel Cook, saying that he desires to cross-examine you with regard to your testimony of yesterday. He is in Philadelphia. I do not know the points to which he would direct his cross-examination. Possibly he may desire to have you return for that purpose.

The WITNESS. I know one thing, that I have not told anything but the truth here; and I have not told all the truth. That is, if I had told you what has come to me confidentially, I could have told you a great deal more than I have told, but I do not break confidences even to expose the villainies of rascals. The more Mr. Cook stirs this matter up the deeper he will get into the mire.

WASHINGTON, April 11, 1884.

R. W. WEBB sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Please state your residence.—Answer. I reside at Golden, N. Mex.

Q. State when the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad was completed to Trinidad, Colo.—A. To the best of my belief it was completed there in 1878; I know I landed there on the road in 1878, and I went from there by stage to Las Vegas.

Q. What part of the year was that?—A. I got there in November; I think on the 1st of December I went from there to Las Vegas, and went over the old Santa Fé trail by stage.

Q. And the railroad has since been built on to Las Vegas and the South?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether the old Santa Fé trail, which is practically covered by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Road, was not the main route for western travel for a great many years.—A. It was so considered.

Q. And this railroad is practically parallel to the expedited mail-route known as the Las Vegas and Venita route?—A. Well, yes; I should think it would be.

Q. State whether to your knowledge Senator Dorsey was interested in the Las Vegas and Venita route. If you know of any facts which would show his interest one way or the other, please state them.—A. I was publishing a paper in Las Vegas in 1879—I think it was in July, it might have been a little later, but it was somewhere along there—and Mr. Dorsey came to me and explained to me this Venita and Las Vegas route and the manner in which it had been expedited, and he characterized it in very strong language as a fraud and an outrage upon the people, and asked me as a newspaper man to ventilate the matter. I took the facts, figures, and statements that he gave me and made up an article in regard to it.

Q. Was it not generally understood at the time that that route was a fraud?—A. No, I think not; I think it was looked upon as a route of service, but of course there were a few who understood about it.

Q. Senator Dorsey knew what it was?—A. Yes, he knew what it was, and came to me without any solicitation on my part and gave me this statement.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 16, 1884.

HENRY D. LYMAN sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Please state your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. My residence is in Ohio. I am thirty-two years of age. I am Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Q. How long have you been in the postal service of the United States, and in what capacities have you served?—A. I was appointed a clerk of class 1 in November, 1875; a special agent on the 16th of July, 1878; a clerk of class 3 on the 30th of December, 1878; chief clerk of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General on the 26th of April, 1881; Second Assistant Postmaster-General on the 5th of February, 1884, and confirmed February 11, 1884.

Q. State what are the general duties of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General.—A. The placing of all service under contract, the control of railroad and steamboat mail transportation, and the mail equipments.

Q. Then the Contract Bureau of the Post-Office Department is under your supervision?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state whether you were selected as one of the arbitrators on behalf of the United States for the settlement of certain alleged claims against contractors for overpayments to them.—A. I was.

Q. Please state the circumstances of your appointment.—A. An agreement was made between Mr. Bliss, representing the United States, and Mr. R. G. Ingersoll, representing the Salisburys and the Parkers, to submit four routes to arbitration. The arbitrators designated in that agreement were R. G. Ingersoll, George Bliss, or any person he might name, and the then Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Elmer. Subsequently Mr. Bliss substituted me in his place.

Q. State what duties, if any, you performed in pursuance of that appointment?—A. We never met as a board.

Q. Have you with you here the correspondence which I requested you to bring in regard to the creation of that arbitration?—A. Yes; I have it all.

Q. Please read the letters, then, in chronological order, together with such agreements as you have pertaining to the matter.

The witness produced and read the following:

MR. BLISS TO MR. ELMER.

Bliss & Schley, attorneys and counsellors, 160 Broadway, New York. George Bliss, William T. Schley.]

NOVEMBER 24, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I now inclose to you the original agreement of arbitration made in the Salisbury and Parker cases. I have indorsed on them a substitution of Mr. Lyman in my place. I remain strongly of the opinion that the cases should be at once proceeded with. Mr. Merrick agrees with me.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS,
Special Assistant Attorney.

Hon. R. A. ELMER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

We made no answer to that letter.

MR. ELMER TO ER. HOWE.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., November 23, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of an agreement dated June 7 1882, between George Bliss, esq., special United States attorney, and R. G. Ingersoll, esq., attorney for V. W. Parker, J. W. Parker, and E. W. Parker and others interested with them, in which I am designated in connection with the said attorneys to determine whether the Messrs. Parker, or others interested with them, have received from the United States any money to which they were not entitled for transporting mail on the route from Venita, Ind. T., to Las Vegas, N. Mex. Also a copy of an agreement without date, but of like import, between the same attorneys, touching any overpayments to Monroe and O. J. Salisbury, Luke Voorhees, M. V. Nichols, or some other person or persons connected with the Salisburys, on the route from Wells to Hamilton, in Nevada; Fargo to Pembina, in Dakota; Soledad to Newhall, in California; and Silver Bow to New Chicago, in Montana.

An examination of documents in the possession of the special United States attorney has convinced me that large overpayments have been made on account of service upon the routes named, and that money has been paid by the Department in consequence of fraudulent representations by these contractors.

Inviting your attention to the provisions of section 4057 of the Revised Statutes, I seek your direction as to my course in relation to these payments in view of the proposed settlement of the cases by arbitration. A copy of a communication on this subject, addressed to me by Mr. Bliss, on the 23d ultimo, is also included.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Hon. T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

R. A. ELMER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

MR. HOWE TO MR. BREWSTER.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., November 25, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to hand you with this a letter from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, with the inclosures referred to by him. You will notice that General Elmer is of the opinion certain parties referred to in his letter have received moneys for services never in fact performed.

Under section 4057 of the Revised Statutes, the case presented by the Second Assistant seems to be one requiring this office to prosecute. But the cases seem also to be included within the terms of a submission agreed to by the Hon. George Bliss, acting for the Government, and by the Hon. R. G. Ingersoll, acting for the other parties.

It occurs to me that if the submission is a valid one, it will be an answer to any suit that might be commenced against the parties to it. If not valid, of course it is no answer to the suit, nor would the award conclude either party.

I refer the papers to you with the request that you will advise me whether, in your opinion, the submission is valid, and will bind either the Government or the other parties who are supposed to be liable to the Government.

Very respectfully,

Hon. B. H. BREWSTER,
Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.

T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

(Stamped :) Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, October 24, 1882. Postmaster General.

[Bliss & Schley, attorneys and counsellors, 160 Broadway, New York. Gerge Bliss. William T. Schley.]

OCTOBER 23, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I beg to inclose you copies of agreements made with the representative of Monroe Salisbury and others, and with the representative of V. W. and J. W. Parker, looking to an arbitration of the claims of the Government upon them for money believed to have been overpaid on certain routes.

I informed you of these agreements about the time they were made, and of the circumstances which surrounded them; how we had failed to secure indictments on these routes, and, as the statute of limitation was running against criminal prosecutions, I thought it wise, after consultation, to make the agreements.

It seems to me the time has now come when it is desirable to put them in execution. It is with that end in view that I inclose them to you.

You will perceive that there is reserved to me a right to substitute some one to act in my place. I propose, therefore, to substitute Mr. H. D. Lyman.

I beg to suggest that the way is to serve upon Colonel Ingersoll a notice of the substitution, and, at the same time, a notice of the first meeting of the arbitrators. This will set the matter in motion. If this meets your approval I will prepare the necessary papers.

I hoped to have seen you when in Washington last week and talked these matters over with you, but you left the night I got there.

Your humble servant,

GEORGE BLISS,
Assistant Attorney.

Hon. RICHARD A. ELMER.

It is claimed by the Government that Monroe and O. J. Salisbury, Luke Voorhees, M. V. Nichols, or some other person or persons representing or connected with the Salisburys, has or have received moneys from the Government, to which they were not entitled, on the four following postal routes, namely: Wells to Hamilton, Fargo to Pembina, Soledad to Newhall, and Silver Bow to New Chicago.

It is therefore agreed that the claim of the Government in the said four routes, or any of them, shall be referred to Richard A. Elmer, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, George Bliss, or any one that may be designated by him, and Robert G. Ingersoll, or any one that may be designated by him, to determine whether the said parties, or any one of them, have received from the United States any money to which they, or any one of them, were not entitled, for transporting the mails upon any of the four said routes mentioned.

It is further agreed that the said referees, or a majority of them, shall have full power to decide all questions submitted, and to act on any evidence satisfactory to them or a majority of them; and if they, or a majority of them, find that on said routes, or any of them, money to which they, or any of them, were not entitled has been received, it shall be refunded on demand, or may be recouped by the Government.

If the Government hereafter institutes any other proceedings against the said parties, or any of them, on account of any matters growing out of the said four routes, then this submission shall be void.

This instrument does not affect the ordinary proceedings of the Post-Office Department as to fines, penalties, and stoppings during the pendency of this arbitration.

"Legally" stricken out, and "to which they or any of them were not entitled" interlined before signing.

GEORGE BLISS,
Special United States Attorney.

R. G. INGERSOLL,
Attorney for Monroe and O. J. Salisbury, Voorhees, Nichols, and all others interested with the Salisburys.

In pursuance of the power reserved to me, I hereby designate H. D. Lyman to act in my place and stead under the foregoing instrument.

GEORGE BLISS.

It is claimed by the Government that Virgil W. Parker, J. W. Parker, E. W. Parker, or some other person or persons representing or connected with the said V. W. and J. W. Parker, has or have received moneys from the Government to which they are not entitled, on the following postal route, namely, Las Vegas and Vinita.

It is therefore agreed, That the claim of the Government in the said route shall be referred to Richard A. Elmer, Second Assistant Postmaster-General; George Bliss, or any one that may be designated by him; and Robert G. Ingersoll, or any one that may be designated by him, to determine whether the said parties, or any one of them, have received from the United States any money to which they, or any one of them, were not entitled, for transporting the mails on the said route between Las Vegas and Vinita.

It is further agreed, That the said referees, or a majority of them, shall have full power to decide all questions submitted, and to act on any evidence satisfactory to them, or a majority of them; and if they, or a majority of them, find that on said route money has been received to which they, or any one of them, were not entitled, it shall be refunded on demand, or may be recouped by the Government.

If the Government hereafter institutes any other proceedings against the said parties, or any of them, on account of any matter growing out of the said route, then this submission shall be void.

This instrument does not affect the ordinary proceedings of the Post-Office Department as to fines, penalties, and stoppages during the pendency of this arbitration.

GEORGE BLISS,
Assistant United States Attorney.
R. G. INGERSOLL,
Attorney for V. W. Parker, J. W. Parker, E. W. Parker, and all others interested in said route.

JUNE 17, 1882.

(Stamped:) Post-Office Department, December 29, 1882, Office of the Postmaster-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, December 28, 1882.

SIR: On the papers referred to me by you concerning the arbitration of claims of the United States against certain mail contractors, I have to answer as follows:

You request me to advise you whether the submission agreed to by George Bliss, esq., acting for the United States, and R. G. Ingersoll, esq., acting for the contractors, is valid. (Letter November 25, 1882.)

I have not found any opinion of my predecessors bearing on the question involved, but in United States v. Ames (1 Woodbury & Minot, 89) the circuit court held broadly that a submission by the United States was invalid on account of the want of authority in any officer of the United States attorney to enter into a submission in their behalf that shall be binding: saying, "All judicial power is by the Constitution vested in the Supreme Court, and such inferior courts as Congress may from time ordain and establish. (Constitution, Art. 3, Par. 1.) No Department nor officer has a right to vest any of it elsewhere."

The Court of Claims, however, in the case of the Great Falls Manufacturing Company (16 C. Cls. R., 195) made the following distinction, as shown by the syllabus:

"Though an officer may not be authorized in terms to submit a matter to arbitration, yet if he be specially authorized by Congress to act in regard to the subject-matter of the submission, so that he will have power to carry into effect the decree which the award may direct, he has power to submit the matter to arbitration." The chief-justice dissented on the ground that no authority to arbitrate had been given by Congress (p. 200).

I have found no other federal decision than these, and no statute authorizing such submission; but it appears that by section 4057 Revised Statutes the Postmaster-General is required to cause suit to be brought to recover such claims as those in question.

It is apparent from the statement of Mr. Bliss that if no legal impediment exists it would be greatly to the advantage of the United States to carry out the submission, and it further appears that the contractors are not only desirous to do so, but are willing to give bond to abide by the result.

Mr. Bliss is of opinion that the submission is lawful, but enters into no discussion of the subject, and furnishes no authority for his opinion, which, in view of the decisions above cited, is unfortunate. Thus far, knowing his experience in acting for the Government, I have assumed he knew of some statute or authority to warrant the course he has taken.

The circuit court proceeded apparently on the ground that, where by statute a particular authority is vested or mode of proceeding is directed it is exclusive; and section 4057 cited, gives peculiar force to the doctrine as applied to this case. It might also be said that the officers of the United States concerned in this matter, if considered either as general agents or as agents with designated powers, are unauthorized to bind their principal by this species of contract.

The Court of Claims does not dispute but avoids such reasoning by holding that the delegation of authority to submit need not be express, but may be implied from the nature and extent of control over the general subject-matter expressly given. Section 4057 seems to stand in the way of taking any benefit of this distinction.

In ordinary cases it might be put on the general power of an attorney at law to act for this client, but even there the weight of authority is, I think, that the power can be exercised only after suit brought, though there are decisions upholding its exercise before. It is doubtful whether such a doctrine is applicable to the present case, for it is difficult to imply a power in the Attorney-General to submit to arbitration a case in which the Postmaster-General is specially directed to cause suit to be brought. As a question of law, therefore, the right of submission seems to me to be in serious doubt.

Assuming, however, that both parties are desirous of securing the practicable advantage of the submission, and are willing to take such measures as may avail to put the proceeding beyond question of its legality, I suggest that end would be accomplished by the formal commencement of suits in the supreme court of the District against the respective contractors, in which, by their attorney, they should enter their appearance. Then, upon application, and by consent of parties, the court would doubtless appoint the persons named in the present agreements as arbitrators, and their award could be returned to and made the judgment of the court. This course will satisfy the reasonable doubt in your mind, and, unless open to some objection which does not occur to me, would avoid the danger of making a precedent which might, under other circumstances, be used to the disadvantage of the public.

In this connection I call your attention to Alexandria Canal Company vs. Swan (5

How., 86), in which suit, brought in the circuit court of Washington County, the cause after issue was referred by a rule of court to four arbitrators, upon terms specified in a written agreement filed in the case setting forth the manner in which the arbitrators were to be selected, &c. The Supreme Court upheld the proceeding, Chief Justice Taney declaring that "a trial by arbitrators appointed by the court with the consent of both parties is one of the modes of prosecuting a suit to judgment as well established and as fully warranted by law as a trial by jury." (See, also, Newcomb vs. Wood, 97 U. S., 582.)

The proposition of the contractors to give bond to abide the result, though indicative of their good faith, does not seem to me to change the legal aspect of the case, for if by inherent defect of authority the promise of one side is not binding, it would, I think, affect the validity of the collateral no less than of the principal agreement.

I am, with respect, &c.,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Hon. TIMOTHY O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

The WITNESS. I had some discussion with Mr. Ingersoll about this proposed arbitration, and he wanted to open a court and bring witnesses and take their testimony, and so on, but it never amounted to anything. We did not agree on that point. We have had no other correspondence with Mr. Ingersoll. When he has come in we have talked the matter over and discussed it in various ways, but we have never made any movement as to the settlement of the cases.

Q. You say you never met as a board for the purpose of adjudicating the questions at issue?—A. No, sir; we never did.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Do you say that it was proposed to call and examine witnesses, and that you objected to that?—A. Well, I objected in the first place because it had not been decided that we had authority to go ahead.

Q. For no other reason?—A. For no other reason.

Q. Then, so far as appears, the Salisburys and Parkers, by their representative, expressed a willingness to go ahead, but the Government declined to do so?—A. Yes, sir; they seemed anxious all the time to effect a settlement in that way. We were not certain that if—

Q. (Interposing.) You acted under the advice of Attorney-General Brewster?—A. No, sir. This case was submitted to the Attorney-General some time afterwards. We were pretty clear upon the point that we had no authority to go ahead with that arbitration, and if we had carried it to a finality and made an award or a judgment against these parties, we could not see that they would be bound to abide by the award, and if not, we would be left without recourse against them, and have our trouble for our pains.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. It was the understanding of your office in the first place that this proposed arbitration was not binding upon them?—A. Yes, sir; we raised the question with the Postmaster-General.

Q. You interrogated the Attorney-General on the subject?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you took it that his answer was in corroboration of your views?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That the arbitration could only be availed of by commencing suits and then arranging some sort of an arbitration under cover of those suits?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those suits have never been commenced?—A. Never, to my knowledge.

Q. And that was the reason you suspended action?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And not because of any reluctance to have the matter determined?—A. Oh, no, sir. When this matter was first submitted I called the attention of Second Assistant Postmaster-General Elmer to section 4057 of the Revised Statutes, which seemed to me to be mandatory as to the commencement of suits, and this letter which was addressed to the Attorney-General was the result of that. The Postmaster-General, discussing the matter with us, had the same view, and he said he would submit the question to the Attorney-General, as you see he did.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What further correspondence did you have on the subject?—A. No further correspondence. I have had a great many discussions with Colonel Ingersoll about the matter. I told him that I thought we would have to go to suit with all these cases. In the first place, the arbitration embraced only four routes, while there were a number of other routes of the Salisburys which I thought were just as bad as this, and I said that I could not see where the Salisburys were going to gain anything by having those four routes settled up, and then we going on and suing them on four or five other cases of the same kind.

Q. Did you make that suggestion to Mr. Ingersoll?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What answer did he make?—A. Well, he made no particular answer. He had his own view of that.

Q. Did he suggest that that difficulty might be remedied by putting in all the routes?—A. He wanted all the routes settled in this way. The agreement, of course, included only four routes. We were a long time making up our minds as to what we would do about this, and during that time I took up three or four more routes of the Salisburys that we had no evidence upon, and had them investigated, and got together as strong a case on those routes as we had on the four that were included in the arbitration. I furnished Mr. Ingersoll with a statement showing what I thought we should claim if we went on with the arbitration, and I have a copy of it here which contains, as you will see, more routes than those that were agreed to be submitted to arbitration.

Q. Is this the statement of the amounts that you found due from the Salisburys to the Government?—A. No; this is the statement I gave Mr. Ingersoll, a memorandum as to how we proposed to take up the cases if we finally decided to go on with the arbitration. This was early in the discussion. This first statement includes only the four routes. Afterwards I got additional information about these other routes.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Why have not suits been brought in these cases?—A. I cannot answer that question. I have here two tabular statements, marked respectively A and B. A embraces the Salisbury routes agreed to be submitted to arbitration and the Vinita and Las Vegas route of Parker, which was not included in the statement I gave Mr. Ingersoll, because at that time I had not sufficient data on that route to make a statement of this character. Subsequently I obtained that information.

The following are the statements above referred to:

A.

Route.	Termini.	Period.	Contractor received for service.	Contractor paid for service.	Profit.	To be recouped.
35040	Fargo to Pembina	August 1, 1878, to July 31, 1881.	$72, 531 99	$36, 000 00	$36, 531 99	$24, 177 33

Q. What other correspondence did you have upon this subject, if any?

By the CHAIRMAN:

—A. With the Attorney-General?

Q. With the Attorney-General or with Mr. Bliss.—A. No other correspondence at all. I have furnished you copies of all the correspondence.

Q. What other papers are those that you have there?—A. These are copies of correspondence between Postmaster-General Howe and Mr. George Bliss, and the Attorney-General, in relation to star-route matters occurring prior to this arbitration. They are, I think, within the scope of the resolution calling upon the Postmaster-General for copies of all correspondence relating to the subject.

Q. Do they relate to the conduct of the prosecution of the star-route cases?—A. They relate to the general conduct of the cases, the subpoenaing of witnesses, and so on.

Q. Then you will please put them into the record.

The witness submitted the following:

MR. JAMES TO MR. BLISS.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 17, 1881.

SIR: From an examination of the records of this Department I have been convinced that money has been [paid] out of the funds of the Government to certain persons under circumstances which bring such payments within section 4057 of the Revised Statutes in a number of instances.

The evidence which seems to me sufficient to maintain suits by the United States to recover such moneys is on file in this Department. Copies of much of it are already in your hands.

In compliance with law I hereby request that unless you shall differ from me as to the weight of the evidence, you will cause suits to be instituted in the name of the United States for the recovery of said moneys illegally paid from the parties who received the same.

Very respectfully,

THOMAS L. JAMES,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. GEORGE BLISS,
Of Counsel in "Star Route" Mail Cases.

MR. BLISS TO MR. JAMES.

WASHINGTON, December 18, 1881.

DEAR SIR: The request contained in your letter of yesterday that suits should be commenced to recover moneys illegally paid to contractors with the Post-Office Department is received.

When I first became connected with the cases known as the star-route cases, I called the attention of the Attorney-General to the propriety of commencing civil suits such as you suggest. He fully agreed with me, but the matter has been delayed in consequence of the unexpected labor connected with the preparation of the criminal cases. I was and am unwilling that any idea should go forth that criminal proceedings were to be forborne or delayed and civil proceedings substituted. If frauds, such as I believe can be shown to have been committed in these cases, cannot be punished by convictions in the criminal courts, it is more important to show this fact to the law-making power and the public, and thus secure a change in the law, than to recover for the Government even the whole of the large amount wrongfully taken from the Treasury. I do not believe that our criminal laws—defective as the United States Statutes are in all criminal matters—are so defective that crimes such as these are not punishable. Nor do I believe that there will be any hesitation on the part of juries in convicting on proper evidence, such evidence as I believe we can present. Under this conviction, I have temporarily put aside the question of civil suits, and have devoted myself to the criminal cases. Even you, familiar as you are with these cases, can have little idea of the amount of labor which has necessarily been bestowed upon the preparation of them. The witnesses are scattered over thousands of miles. Hardly one of them is less than 1,500 miles from this city, and many of them are twice that distance. These witnesses have been sought out by your inspectors with an energy, fidelity, and perseverance rarely combined in subordinates, either in public or private life. The thousands of pages of testimony thus gathered, together with that furnished by the voluminous records of the Post-Office and Treasury Departments, have been examined, arranged, and abstracted, first by Inspector Woodward and then by counsel, with an amount of personal labor far beyond anything I anticipated when I came into the cases, and far beyond anything I would then have been willing to undertake. In this examination breaks and omissions in the chain of testimony have been discovered and supplied.

The criminal cases naturally divide themselves into four or five great combinations. We have this week completed, to our satisfaction, the preparation, for the grand jury and for trial, of the evidence as to one of these combinations, and though, as a general rule, I prefer not to say anything as to what we expect to do, I may mention that I intend to issue this week subpoenas for about sixty witnesses to appear before the grand jury as soon after the New Year as that body will be ready to examine them.

A good deal of progress has been made in the preparation of the criminal cases connected with the other great combinations, so much, indeed, that, so far as I can perceive, there is no danger that the statute of limitations can bar any of the cases. I hope they will be ready for the grand jury and for trial as soon as jury and court can attend to them.

Under these circumstances, your request for the commencement of civil suits seems to me timely. Personally, I have no authority to commence such suits; but you and I know that the senior counsel, who was yesterday confirmed as Attorney-General, will not hesitate to give the requisite authority, for one of the chief reasons for his selection for that position was his avowed determination to press the star-route cases. I shall at once transmit to him a copy of your letter, and ask his approval. When received I will cause civil suits to be commenced in those cases in which the evidence in the possession of the Government seems to justify such a course.

You will, I know, agree with me that these civil suits should not in any way supersede the criminal prosecutions, for punishment of the offenders is of infinite more importance than the recovery of money. Both civil and criminal proceedings will be pushed as rapidly as is consistent with justice to the Government and to the defendants, though it is quite possible that you will not find the progress so rapid as you desire.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS,
Special Counsel.

Hon. THOMAS L. JAMES,
Postmaster-General.

MR. HOWE TO MR. BREWSTER.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith the account of A. G. Sharp, post-office inspector at San Francisco, amounting to $217.56, for expenses incurred in serving subpoenas in connection with the star-route cases.

This voucher is submitted with the hope that you may be able to pay the same from the funds at your disposal.

As the inspector has advanced the amount above mentioned, I respectfully ask that the matter be considered at as early a date as possible.

Very respectfully,

T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. BENJAMIN H. BREWSTER,
Attorney-General United States.

MR. BLISS TO MR. HOWE.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1882.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation of to-day, I beg to state the facts in the cases as I understand them.

Various postmasters in Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona were understood to possess important information bearing on the pending "star-route cases." To subpoena them would have taken time that could not well be spared, and would have involved considerable expense. I consulted the Postmaster-General to learn whether there existed any authority to direct a postmaster to report here, and was informed that such authority was exercised not infrequently. No question was raised as to the expense, but letters were sent by Postmaster-General James requiring them to report here at once, there being added a statement that their reasonable expenses would be paid, or some equivalent phrase. Such letters were written to twelve or fifteen postmasters. None of them were, I think, subpoenaed, certainly none till after they had received the Postmaster-General's letter and were on their way or just starting in obedience to such letter. On their arrival here I have taken them up as witnesses under subpoenas, getting an admission of service, and have got for them their mileage and per diem as witnesses.

In several cases they claimed and satisfied me that their mileage and per diem did not cover their actual expenses, but this arose chiefly from the fact that they were compelled to employ assistance in their office during their absence. On calling the attention of Mr. Hatton to three of these cases he undertook to provide for the excess by making an allowance for clerk hire. The postmasters were satisfied, were paid their mileage and per diem, and went home. It now appears that a question has arisen as to the right or power of the Department to reimburse these postmasters. They stand upon the letter of your predecessor, stating that their expenses should be paid, and claim this has not been done.

So far as I am at present informed, these claims are about as follows:

Postmaster, Durango	$83 25
Postmaster, Saguache	69 50
Postmaster, Pagosa Springs.....	30 00
Postmaster, Oji Caliente.....	55 75
Postmaster, El Rito	77 95
Postmaster, Mineral Park.....	140 00

Of these I am not sure that those at Oji Caliente or El Rito involve any portion of expense for clerk hire.

Mr. Hatton seemed confident this morning that there was no appropriation from which they could be paid, unless, perhaps, from that as to clerical service.

Of course, I must defer to his judgment if he has examined the matter, but I venture to suggest whether the appropriation for Colonel Parker's branch of the service is not in some form available.

Also, whether there is not a contingent fund available.

I cannot but feel that if you are really satisfied the men ought to be paid you will find a way to do it.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS,
Special Assistant United States Attorney.

Hon. T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

MR. HOWE TO MR. BLISS.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1882.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 16th instant, touching the payment of witnesses who have been brought from different portions of the West, to testify in the so-called star-route cases, I have to say that it appears from your letter that such witnesses have received the mileage and per diem allowed by law to witnesses.

As I understand it, that is the only compensation the law provides for any witness brought from any part of the country. I cannot understand how the fact that the witness is a postmaster should entitle him to extra compensation, any more than if he were a banker, lawyer, or doctor. It is urged that my predecessor made some special promise to induce the attendance of these witnesses. I have consulted the Sixth Auditor and the Assistant Attorney-General of the Department. Their opinions coincide with mine, that I have no fund out of which I can legally make extra payment, even in case such promise was made.

Very truly, yours,

T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. GEORGE BLISS,
Post-Office Department, Washington, D. C.

MR. BLISS TO MR. HOWE.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I have your favor of to-day. I cannot perceive how the fact that when the Postmaster-General has directed a postmaster to report here, and has given him a written promise to pay his expenses, the claim of the postmaster for a fulfillment of that promise is satisfied because another Department volunteers to pay to him a portion of those expenses, though he did not come here under subpoena, and he reduces his claim upon the Post-Office Department to the mere balance, crediting against his actual expenses the amount thus received. The postmasters obviously look at it as a matter of bad faith on the part of the Government, not appreciating the force of the plea of a want of appropriation.

Having done my best to get them their pay, I can do no more, except that I have directed that copies of the correspondence be transmitted to each such postmaster, and have told them I know of no mode of relief except by application to Congress.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS,
Special Assistant United States Attorney.

Hon. T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I have your favor of the 17th instant. In reply I beg to say I was not aware that any one had urged voluntary contributions of the Department of Justice made to witnesses as the fulfillment of a promise made by the Postmaster-General to pay such witnesses their expenses.

I was not aware that the Department of Justice had made voluntary contributions to any witnesses. I assumed that the Department of Justice was supplied with funds to pay all witnesses, while this Department was intrusted only with funds sufficient to pay postmasters.

In the cases under consideration it seems that certain persons who had served both as postmasters and as witnesses, and who had received the pay awarded to both services, still claimed compensation, not allowed by law to either, upon the ground that a Postmaster-General had expressly promised such compensation. I did not know whether such promise had been made or not. If made, I assumed it had been made at your suggestion, and that you might be able to designate the fund out of which some Department might redeem such promise. I know of no such funds under the control of this Department. This morning the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department refers me to section 850 of the Revised Statutes. That section seems to authorize the Department of Justice, not the Post-Office Department, to pay any officer, when sent away as a witness, his "expenses" instead of his "mileage and per diem."

Under that section I respectfully submit that if the expenses of the witnesses who complain of "bad faith" exceed the sum you have paid them as per diem and mileage, you may safely pay them such balance.

If, on the contrary, their expenses are less than the sum paid, I respectfully inquire if the difference should not be ascertained and reported to this Department, and stopped from their future salaries.

As you have directed copies of this correspondence to be sent to the witnesses who complain, and whose names are not known to me, will you be good enough to direct copies of this letter to be sent to the same.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

GEORGE BLISS, Esq.,
Post-Office Department, Washington, D. C.

MR. BLISS TO MR. HOWE.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., May 6, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I have to request that you will by telegraph direct the following-named postmasters to report here on May 15 to testify in the star-route cases. Their proper expenses will be paid by the Department of Justice. Titus W. Fouch, Gardner, Huerfano County, Colo.; Zachariah R. Petty, Bijou Basin, Colo.; Wm. Dowlin, Fort Stanton, Lincoln County, New Mexico; Rich'd H. Clendenin, Martinsdale, Montana

If to any of these points there is no telegraph, I suggest that you forward through the postmaster at the nearest telegraph station.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS,
Special Assistant Attorney.

Hon. T. O. HOWE, Postmaster-General.

MR. BLISS TO MR. HOWE.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., May 10, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I verbally requested Mr. Lyman, who was accidentally in the office, to ask that John C. Manning, postmaster at San Antonio, be directed to report here as soon as possible with all correspondence, letters, and telegrams in his possession or under his control from Thomas J. Brady, J. B. Price, John L. French, and J. J. Ellis, or either of them. I now repeat the request, and add that I will see that his reasonable expenses are paid by the Department of Justice. A subpoena has been issued, but I desire his attendance earlier than a subpoena could go and return.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS,
Special Assistant Attorney.

Hon. T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

MR. BLISS TO MR. HOWE.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., May 20, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I will be obliged if you will, by telegraph, request William M. Krider, postmaster at Mineral Park, Ariz., to come to Washington at once. He proves to be a necessary witness in the case against Dorsey. His expenses will be paid by the Department of Justice.

I see by the papers that heretofore it has been the practice to reach Mineral Park by telegraphing to Prescott, and forwarding thence to Mineral Park, but there may be more direct communication now.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS,
Assistant Attorney.

Hon. T. O. HOWE, Postmaster-General.

MR. BREWSTER TO MR. HOWE.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington November 7, 1882.

SIR: With this I send you the correspondence between Mr. George Bliss and myself with reference to star-route prosecutions—more especially those that are against Salisbury and others.

Mr. Bliss makes a full report with reference to these cases, and expresses an opinion of the necessity for some preparation and assistance before further proceedings are had in these cases against Salisbury and others named in his letter, and indicates that the preparation and assistance should come from your Department.

I call your attention to this correspondence, and I also desire you to say if it is the wish of your Department to have these cases further pursued, or if, in your opinion, they cannot be pursued prosperously. If you think they ought to be pursued, will you give directions to have the assistance furnished that Mr. Bliss calls for?

The preparation and arrangement of the evidence in your Department must necessarily be made by officers of your Department.

And oblige, truly and respectfully,

BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Hon. TIMOTHY O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

MR. BREWSTER TO MR. GRESHAM.

HOWLAND HOTEL, LONG BRANCH, N. J. July 25, 1883.

SIR: With this I send to you a copy of a letter this day received by me from George Bliss, esq. I also inclose you a copy of my answer to him.

Very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

HON. WALTER Q. GRESHAM,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

MR. HOWE TO MR. BREWSTER.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., November 8, 1882.

SIR: I have your favor of yesterday, covering a correspondence between yourself and Mr. George Bliss "with reference to star-route prosecutions."

You say Mr. Bliss "expresses an opinion of the necessity for some preparation and assistance before further proceedings are had in those cases," * * * and indicates that the preparation and assistance should come from this Department.

I am sure you could not mean to intimate that this Department had neglected any preparation in its power to make, or refused any assistance in its power to give. This Department has no means of aiding any prosecution, save its records and its officers.

I understand that long before you took charge of the Department of Justice, and longer still before I came to this Department, attorneys representing your Department were assigned to rooms in the Post-Office Department. So far as they wished they took possession of its records. More than once I have been called upon for certified copies of records of this Department, which I could not give at the time without assistance from the Department of Justice.

So far as I know, the attorneys representing your Department have had as complete control of the officers of this Department as they asked to have. Indeed, "the energy, perseverance, judgment, and fidelity displayed" of the inspectors of this Department not only led Mr. Bliss to ask that the difficult task of summoning witnesses should be as far as possible intrusted to them rather than to the marshals of the United States, but drew from him a special letter of acknowledgment to the chief of that division. As for myself, knowing I was quite unable to aid the attorneys specially charged with the prosecution of these important causes, I was so scrupulous not to embarrass him that, at the personal request of Mr. Bliss, I declined to take charge of this Department for some days after I reached Washington.

You desire me "to say if it is the wish of your (this) Department to have these cases further pursued, or if in your (my) opinion they cannot be pursued prosperously," I am anxious as you are, and as every good citizen must be, that if crime has been committed it should be punished. If liability has been incurred to the United States, the proper remedy should be applied.

But when you remember how much time was consumed by the learned assistants specially retained to aid the Department of Justice in the prosecution of these cases, I am sure you will not think it safe to put the legal rights of the United States under the direction of the Postmaster-General.

You also say that the preparation and arrangement of evidence in this Department must necessarily be made by officers of this Department. On reflection I think you will see that the postal officers can prepare no evidence which does not exist, and you will prefer to have evidence which does exist arranged by your officers rather than by ours.

You may be very sure Mr. Bliss will have all the assistance he "calls for," if it is in the power of this Department to render it.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

HON. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General of the United States, Washington, D. C.

MR. INGERSOLL TO MR. ELMER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 11, 1882.

DEAR SIR: When will it suit your convenience to make arrangements for taking the testimony in the Salisbury & Parker routes submitted to you and to Col. George Bliss and myself as persons selected by said Bliss and myself?

On the part of Salisbury & Parker I am ready to take testimony.

Yours truly,

R. G. INGERSOLL,
Counsel for Parker & Salisbury.

Hon. R. A. ELMER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

MR. INGERSOLL TO MR. ELMER.

DECEMBER 16, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: I only want to let you know that I called according to promise.

Yours always,

R. G. INGERSOLL.

Hon. R. A. ELMER.

MR. GRESHAM TO MR. BREWSTER.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1883.

SIR: It is proper to inform you that under the provisions of section 4057 of the Revised Statutes I have taken the preliminary steps towards suits for the recovery, on account of fraud, of all moneys paid for expedition on all the routes, save one, that were included in the case of the United States vs. John W. Dorsey et al., recently tried in the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

The same course has also been taken in regard to other routes in which what are known as the Parker & Salisbury combinations were interested, and in due course these as well as other cases will reach the Solicitor of the Treasury from the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department.

This is the usual method of proceeding in such cases.

Very respectfully,

W. Q. GRESHAM,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

MR. BREWSTER TO MR. GRESHAM.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, June 22, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for your information, copy of indictment No. 14249, in the case of the United States vs. John R. Miner, for perjury; also, a list of all indictments against persons charged with violations of the postal laws.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Hon. WALTER Q. GRESHAM,
Postmaster-General.

MR. BREWSTER TO MR. BLISS.

HOWLAND HOTEL, LONG BRANCH, N. J., July 25, 1883.

SIR Your letter of the 24th of July was handed to me to-day. Some month or more ago, perhaps two months, as I have advised you, the Postmaster-General communicated with me upon the subject of the civil suits arising out of the star-route cases. In consequence of that I put you in direct communication with him, and I conveyed to him copies of all the correspondence between the Department of Justice and yourself as to these cases. You gave me a verbal but brief account of your interview with the Postmaster-General, and I understood you to say that you were to be retained to assist him in some general way in the prosecution of those civil suits.

I have not the correspondence by me at this place, or probably I would find in some one of your notes written to me at or about that time a statement of the result of your interview with the Postmaster-General, and what you understood your position to be. My recollection now is that you were to have charge of them in some general way, and much was to be left to your discretion as to when and where you would appear, your desire being that you would not add expense to the case by going to any remote point, if it would be necessary to bring suits other than in Washington or New York, or in some other convenient jurisdiction. Indeed, if I am not much amiss, I now remember that it was your purpose mainly to supervise such suits as might be brought in Washington or New York, so as to avoid expense that would be occasioned by your absence from your business in New York.

Since that time the Postmaster-General has verbally said to me that he was having the papers prepared for the purpose of directing suits to be brought. I believe much labor was necessary to arrange the papers and adjust the accounts and get things ready for the suits. You know that by statute it lies with the Postmaster-General alone to direct suits or not to direct them. I have no power except as I am requested by him to direct action to be taken, or to take action myself. When he reports to me the result of his preparations and requests me to bring certain suits to recover certain claims, of which I can know nothing unless they are so reported to me, I will then be ready and prepared to communicate with you.

When I first became Attorney-General and we advised together upon this subject, it was after you conveyed to me the information that Mr. James had deputed you to take charge of those civil cases, and I understood from you that before you intended to act it was your wish that I should know that you so proposed to do, that I should know by what authority you would undertake to act, and that you wished to have my sanction as the head of the Department of Justice to any such suits as you might think it proper to bring under the authority given to you to Mr. James. Then I promptly accepted your proposals and suggestions, and assented to your immediate action if you thought it necessary under the instructions you had received from the Post-Office Department.

The impression I had soon after that communication made by you, and in which I responded, I believe, in writing, was that it was considered inexpedient to begin those civil suits at that time, because of the urgency of the criminal proceedings; and from time to time since then, in my letters to you, I have adverted to these outstanding cases, and reminded you of them, indicating my intention to speed them whenever the Post-Office Department and yourself were ready to act; and I have been ever since prepared to sanction such suits, and instruct and direct them when they were brought.

The suggestions of your letter of the 24th of July I will remember; I will also send a copy of that letter to the Postmaster-General, and of this also.

Very respectfully, yours,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

GEORGE BLISS, Esq.,
Special Assistant United States Attorney in the star-route cases, New York City.

MR. GRESHAM TO MR. BREWSTER.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., July 27, 1883.

SIR: I am just in receipt of your letter of the 25th instant, inclosing a letter addressed to you by George Bliss, esq., on the 24th instant, and your reply thereto of the 25th instant.

The Second Assistant Postmaster-General is at work industriously preparing cases for civil suits against a number of star-route contractors. In his absence his chief clerk informs me that it will be ten days before they will be able to turn the cases over to me for my examination.

Colonel Ingersoll requested yesterday that before suits were brought against some of the contractors whom he represents, I should inform him of the amount which was demanded. While he did not say so in terms, I inferred that perhaps the Salisburys and others contemplated paying the amount which the Government claimed, or will claim, is due from them. I told Colonel Ingersoll that he and his clients should have an opportunity to settle without suit, if they desired to do so, before I addressed you again upon the subject.

If it shall appear from the papers submitted to me by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General that any star-route contractors have obtained money from the Department by fraud, I shall address a communication to you, requesting that suit be brought against such persons.

Respectfully, yours,

W. Q. GRESHAM,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Q. Did you make any estimates of the amounts due on account of overcharges by contractors on all the routes in question?—A. The Postmaster-General wrote a letter to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, asking him to prepare certified statements showing the amounts paid for expedition on the routes embraced in this sheet [marked C], showing the numbers and termini of the different routes, the names of the contractors, and the amounts paid for expedition, less fines and deductions for failure to perform the expedited service.

Q. During what time?—A. During the contract term of the several routes mentioned in the statement. You see, expedition was put on after the beginning of the service, and sometimes it ceased before the end of the contract term.

Q. What is the aggregate amount estimated to be due, as shown by this statement?—A. $2,172,132.87. There are 40 routes.

The statement is as follows:

Q. What are these routes that are marked with a star?—A. Those are the routes that were included in the trials of the Dorsey case.

Q. Was it the opinion of the Post-Office Department that the expedition obtained upon these routes was obtained through fraudulent representations?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the expedition was obtained through fraudulent representations or false affidavits, then the whole amount paid for expedition was illegally paid under the rulings of the Department?—A. We thought that if suits were brought we should sue for all the payments made for expedition. There is no middle ground at all in the matter. I told Colonel Ingersoll that if we were to sue we should probably sue for all that had been paid, alleging fraud in the inception.

Q. There were some 90 and odd routes, were there not, that were mentioned as being implicated in these fraudulent transactions?—A. Ninety-three.

Q. Have you made any estimate of the others not included in this statement?—A. No, sir; I have no data on the others. I picked out the largest routes, all that we had evidence upon. As to the other, we have no information upon which we could base suits.

Q. Is it your opinion that an investigation of the other routes making up the 93 would show a similar state of facts to that which you found in these forty included here?—A. I think it would in some cases, but it is hard to say about that. Undoubtedly on some of the routes it would not. Some of them are good cases where there is no fraud at all; small service on which allowances were properly made for expedition.

Q. I see here that on the route from Fort Worth to Yuma John T. Chidester is put down as having expedition to the amount of $477,000. Who is he?—A. I never saw John T. Chidester; but it is generally understood that the persons interested in that contract are Logan H. Roots, of Little Rock, and R. C. Kerens, of Saint Louis, Mo.

Q. Any others?—A. There may be others, but I cannot now recall their names.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Is this Chidester, a man of straw?—A. Chidester was the contractor, but how much personal interest he had in the routes, I never knew.

Q. Who was on his bond?—A. One Senator was on the bond on a proposal, on that route.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Do you remember his name?—A. No; but the case came up in the discussion before Judge Key, as to whether that Senator could legally be a bondsman on that proposal, and Judge Key held that he could, and accepted the proposal. There was a question about accepting it.

Q. That seems to be a very large contract.—A. Well, the route is 1,420 miles long from Fort Worth, Tex., to Yuma, Ariz. It was expedited, and $165,000 was allowed in the order for expedition.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. I suppose it may have been true that on some of these routes expedition was necessary?—A. Yes; I think expedition was necessary on some of them.

Q. And some additional compensation was, of course, required in those regions where the country was filling up?—A. Oh, yes; the difficulty was in having too slow a schedule to start with on the routes. Of course, the Department can never tell what causes may arise for increasing the speed in the future, and they sometimes make their schedules slow, because expedition may never be required; and if you put on a fast schedule, of course it will cost more than a slow one.

Q. State whether or not the officers of the Department have ever entered into any computations to ascertain or have been able to ascertain how much expedition could have been made legitimately on those routes so as to determine, for instance, what percentage of the gross sum might have been properly allowed for expedition.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. The truth is that the officer of the Department who was expediting this service was interested in these improper transactions as particeps criminis.

The WITNESS. That is what the Government attempted to maintain in the star-route trial.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. And he has been indicted and has several indictments pending against him for his connection with these very transactions.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEWART. That is another question entirely. What I was trying to get at is how much of the gross sum that has been paid for expedition the Government has actually lost, the estimate being made upon the theory that some payment was proper and necessary.

The WITNESS. I think it is impossible for any person to tell how much should have been allowed in any of these cases. Under the statute which authorized the Postmaster-General to expedite a schedule and make an allowance for it there is no way in which the Department can make an accurate allowance for the increased speed. The Department has to rely entirely upon the contractor's statements as to what the cost will be. The methods employed in making these allowances for expedition were, in my opinion, wholly unwarranted and not authorized by the statute at all.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. You did subsequently investigate several of these routes. Now, did you make an estimate or a calculation of the extent of the claim of the Government against these various contractors for overpayments improperly made to them?—A. Yes, sir. I took Mr. Brady's method of figuring the expedition.

Q. And is this statement which you have presented here the result of that calculation?—A. Yes, sir; that is the statement of all the amounts paid for expedition on those various routes without regard to the question of what amount of the money was actually earned by the contractors. In other words, we claim that there was fraud in all those cases, and if we went to suit we would sue for all the payments, on the ground of fraud in the inception.

Q. Now, the question of Mr. Stewart is this: About what proportion of the money so paid do you regard as actual overpayments to these people?—A. I have no means of ascertaining that, and I think it cannot be determined.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. I understand you to say that the methods adopted by the Department in making allowances for this expedition were in your judgment unauthorized by the law as it stood?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state in what respect.—A. Section 3951 of the Revised Statutes is as follows:

No extra allowance shall be made for any increase of expedition in carrying the mail unless thereby the employment of additional stock and carriers is made necessary, and in such case the additional compensation shall bear no greater proportion to the additional stock and carriers necessarily employed than the compensation in the original contract bears to the stock and carriers necessarily employed in its execution.

Section 620 of the Post-Office Regulations provides that—

When it becomes necessary to increase the speed on any route, the contractors will be required to state, under oath, the number of horses and men required to perform the service according to the contract schedule, and the number required to perform it with the proposed increase of speed.

That regulation, you will perceive, substitutes in place of the word "stock," which is used in the statute, the word "horses," and for the word "carriers" in the law, it substitutes the word "men," so that when they desired to expedite the schedule on any route, the contractor came in and made oath that on the present schedule so many horses (or "animals," as the case might be) and men were required to perform the service, and that so many horses and men would be required to perform it on the expedited schedule. Now, the method employed to adjust the pay for expedition was to add together the horses and men on the original schedule and to add together the horses and men on the expedited schedule, subtract the one from the other, find out what the increase was, and make the allowance pro rata. In other words, a horse was a man, and a man was a horse, for the purpose of calculating the expedition. Now, I have not heard any discussion on that point, but it seems to me that that way of figuring expedition is entirely unwarranted by the law. Indeed I don't know how any man can fix an allowance for expedition under that law as it stands and be safe. I have taken the ground upon all requests for expedition of that character that we would readvertise the service unless the contractor would carry the mail on the expedited schedule without additional compensation, because I say I do not know how to fix compensation for that expedition under the statute.

Q. So you practically make the contractors work under the original contracts?—A. Yes, sir. In the first place, I try to get the schedule as fast as possible at the beginning. In some cases the expedited service can be performed with little or no additional cost.

Q. Do you think any amendment of the law is necessary with reference to that matter; and if so, can you suggest what amendment should be made?—A. I drew a bill and had it introduced at the last session of Congress which provided for the repeal of this statute. I can almost remember the terms of the bill, but I can send you a copy of it.

Q. What became of that bill?—A. It did not get through.

Q. Was it reported favorably?—A. I think it was reported favorably from the committee, but I am not certain about that.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What were the general provisions of it?—A. That whenever it becomes necessary to increase the speed at which the mail is carried on any post route the service shall be readvertised for the reduced time required, provided that the contractor for the service shall have the option of performing the expedited schedule without additional compensation therefor. Then it provides for the repeal of section 3961 of the Revised Statutes and the subsequent act which limited the allowance for expedition to 50 per cent. upon the contract as originally let.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. As I understand you, your practice at present amounts to pretty much the same thing?—A. Yes; we carry it into practice, but I do not like to see the law stand as it is.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was the weak place in the statute which permitted this improper expedition of service?—A. I do not see that the statute does permit any such method of calculation as was adopted in making the expedition on these routes. The regulation says that the contractor shall make oath as to how many "horses," and how many "men" are required, but the law says "stock and carriers." Now, can anybody tell what "stock" means there, whether it means men and horses, or what it means.

Q. Who wrote that regulation?—A. I do not know. It was prepared, I suppose, at the time they got up this book of regulations in 1879, as there is no regulation before that that I can find touching the question of expedition of service.

Q. Who was Second Assistant Postmaster-General when that book was compiled?—A. Mr. Brady, I think. Mr. Key was Postmaster-General.

Q. You say you have not been able to discover who was the author of that regulation?—A. No, sir. We made a careful inquiry in order to be able to testify to that on the star-route trial, but we were unable to find anybody who knew anything about it.

Q. You state that it is your opinion that that regulation was not warranted by the statute?—A. I don't think it is in pursuance of the statute.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Why is it not abrogated?—A. It stands there just as it is because we have been expecting to get the whole business repealed. I told Judge Gresham that I would draw a regulation to repeal this one, and he approved of the idea.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Then you are not acting under that regulation?—A. Not at all. I don't think we have had any requests for expedition beyond three or four within the last two or three years. In one case we found that the application was worked up by the contractor, and we readvertised the route on him, and when he found that out he got the people to say that they did not care for the expedition.

Now, let me illustrate the method by which expedition was calculated in these cases. I will not take any particular route; I will take a case where the pay is, say, $2,000 per annum. Suppose that on the slowest schedule the contractor swears it will take two men and four animals to perform the service. For the purpose of getting the proportion those are added together and they make six—either six animals or six men. Then for the expedited schedule he swears that it will take six men and fourteen animals; that makes twenty. Subtract the six from the twenty and you have fourteen, and the increase of the pay is made in that proportion. That is, as 6 is to the original pay, $2,000, so is 14 to the amount to be paid; so that if you are paying $2,000 for the slow schedule you will pay $4,666.66 for the expedition on that method of calculation, and in proportion to the number of men and horses that the contractor swears are necessary will be the increased compensation allowed.

Q. Hence, the importance of these oaths as to the men and horses required for expedition.—A. Yes, sir. Now, you see the contractor can understate the number of men and horses required on the first schedule and overstate the number required on the expedited schedule, and thus fraudulently increase the allowance for expedition.

Q. Is that the way you found it had been done?—A. Yes; it was changed about in various ways. Sometimes they figured in stock tenders, drivers, and the men driving the supply wagons. Everybody working on the route would be figured in under the head of "men," and all the horses used, including extras, would be included; everything would be figured in on the expedition. I think the testimony on the trial shows that on the Bismarck and Tongue River route they figured in every man they had working on the route, including those engaged in clearing the road, so that the expedition figured up over $70,000, and the allowance was made at a rate a great deal less than pro rata on the basis of the oath.

Q. Please state now whether any suits have been instituted to recover the amounts set forth in the table marked C, by direction of the Postmaster-General under section 4057 of the Revised Statutes.—A. I cannot answer that question. The Postmaster-General, on the 25th day of October, 1883, addressed a communication to the Attorney-General giving a brief outline of nineteen cases on which there was claimed to be fraud. On the 27th of March, the Attorney-General detailed two of his assistants to examine the papers in the Post-Office Department relating to suits, but what further action he has taken in the matter I am not able to say.

Q. So far as you know, then, no suits have been begun?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Do you know whether the statute of limitations has run on any of those cases?—A. I do not. I have heard some of the counsel discuss that question, and they seemed to think that the statute did not run against the suits.

Q. It does not run against the Government in civil suits. Do you know whether Mr. William H. Bliss, of Saint Louis, has been employed to begin suits?—A. He is one of the Attorney-General's assistants that I have referred to.

Q. Detailed to begin suits?—A. No; to examine the papers. He is one of the assistants detailed for that business, and Mr. Blair is the other.

Q. Does the Department have in view the beginning of any suits at Saint Louis, Mo.?—A. No, sir; all the Post-Office Department has done is to call on the Attorney-General to institute proceedings, and to furnish him with all the information at its command.

Q. Is there any difference of opinion between the Post-Office Department and the Department of Justice as to whose duty it is to institute these suits?—A. I cannot answer for that. The Attorney-General and the Postmaster-General may have had some discussion in relation to it that has not come to my knowledge; I have no knowledge about that. I had some discussion about it with Mr. Elmer when he was here, and I thought that the right course was to state these balances to the Solicitor of the Treasury through the Auditor, and that he, being an officer of the Department of Justice, and having control of the district attorneys, would proceed in the regular channels. That is the way all suits are instituted in cases of balances due the United States on account of failing contracts, and it was finally determined that the Postmaster-General should write to the Attorney-General transmitting certified copies of those balances claimed for expedition with a brief outline of the points in each case, and leave it for the Attorney-General to take the appropriate action; and except the call I had from Mr. Blair and Mr. Bliss to examine these papers I know of no further action taken by the Department of Justice.

Q. Do you know whether any of the persons mentioned in the statement marked C, which you have submitted here, are still contractors in the postal service?—A. Yes, sir; I do not think they are contractors under their own names, but I think they must be interested in certain routes in the names of other persons. I think the Salisburys are so interested. I simply surmise that, however; I have no personal knowledge of it. I think the Salisburys must be interested in certain contracts, and also the Parkers and Mr. Sanderson; I think they are all interested in contracts under other names.

Q. Are they still interested in subsisting contracts?—A. I think so; I have no means of knowing positively; it is only an inference.

Q. Are the persons named in the table responsible?—A. I am not able to say as to that. It is generally understood that Mr. Salisbury is responsible, and that Mr. Parker is, but I have no knowledge on the subject one way or the other.

Q. If any of these persons have contracts now subsisting they must have given security for the performance of the service?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you not the right under the law to deduct from payments on subsisting contracts any overpayments that may have been made on previous contracts?—A. The difficulty is to prove the connection of these parties with the present contracts.

Q. But have you authority to make such deductions?—A. I do not think we have. I should hesitate to involve ourselves in trouble on those routes by assuming that certain persons are interested in them without any knowledge or means of proving it.

Q. Who is A. H. Brown?—A. He is a contractor who lives in Washington, and he is an attorney and agent for Sanderson.

Q. This route, then, is supposed to belong to the Sanderson combination?—A. I presume it does.

Q. Who is John D. Chidester?—A. All I know about him is in connection with that route, and all I know on that subject is from the record.

Q. This being a very large contract, he must have had other persons interested with him?—A. I think so. To run a route 1,400 miles in length requires considerable capital to stock it and to carry on the service.

Q. Do you know whether Chidester, or anybody else mentioned in the record, is responsible for the $477,000 due here for improper expedition?—A. Do you mean whether we have any evidence that would connect any of the other persons with it?

Q. Yes.—A. I am not aware of any evidence that would connect anybody else with it; I do not know, however, but there may have been some.

Q. Who is C. Cosgrove, on the Las Vegas and Las Cruces route?—A. I never met him; of course there is a good deal of talk among the agents and men who come around the Department, and in that way we learned more or less about these different persons; but we do not have it authoritatively. My inference is that the parties in that case are Roots and Kerens, the same that were interested in the route from Fort Worth to Yuma.

Q. Roots and Kerens would be responsible, would they not?—A. I think they are responsible.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Where does Cosgrove live?—A. His address was given at Atchison, Kans., when he was contractor on that route; I don't know where he is now.

Q. Do you know how much is due from the Salisbury combination on the table that is now before you, marked C?—A. Their amounts could be easily separated and added together. Their names appear here separately. M. Salisbury and O. J. Salisbury are one and the same, and there is one route here, No. 46120, from Soledad to Newhall, in which appear O. J. Salisbury and M. V. Nichols. Nichols and Salisbury were competing bidders on that route, and their bids were a tie, and the Department gave the route to them jointly. I suppose that is the reason why they happen to appear together on that particular route. That is the only route on which Nichols is connected with the Salisburys, so far as I know, and it came about in that way.

Q. Have you any means of knowing how much was paid for expedition on the others of the ninety-three routes?—A. No, sir. It would involve a long work to calculate it. That table which I have put in here represents a great deal of labor. I had it prepared in advance, with the expectation of being called upon to furnish it, so that I was able to bring it here without delay. Otherwise it would have taken a good while to get it ready.

Q. Is it your opinion that the remaining routes not estimated here would amount to half as much as these?—A. It would be simply a guess; but I do not think they would. I do not think they would amount to more than perhaps one-seventh as much.

Q. Do you think they would amount to one-quarter as much?—A. I do not. They are small routes.

Q. These routes included here cover the great bulk of the expedition, so far as the cost is concerned?—A. Yes, sir; nearly half the routes expedited are in this table. During the term when Mr. Brady was Second Assistant Postmaster-General he expedited about one hundred and twenty-eight routes. His predecessor expedited five or six, and the previous Second Assistant some half dozen, I believe.

Q. How many have been expedited since Mr. Brady went out?—A. We have expedited three or four; but that expedition has not cost the Government anything.

Q. Then, a considerable change has taken place in that branch of the business of the Department?—A. Yes, sir; we have readvertised one or two routes. I have got one in Oregon readvertised now, in which the contractor is claiming that there is some injustice done to him in re-advertising, and I am not sure but there is; but, at the same time, I hope before reletting the service to come to some arrangement which will be satisfactory, and let him keep his contract. I do not expedite routes except in cases of great emergency.

Q. You have been in the Post-Office Department for many years. State what has been the effect upon the service so far as efficiency and costs are concerned of the change since the removal of Mr. Brady.—A. Well, the net saving to the Government on the changes in the star service and steamboat service is in the neighborhood of $2,500,000 a year, and the mileage has increased about 1,700,000 miles.

Q. So that you have largely increased the mileage and decreased the expenses?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is the star service being performed now for $2,500,000 less a year than it cost during Mr. Brady's term?—A. No; because during the last six or eight months we have reduced the service to the lowest possible point; but it has been growing.

Q. But I mean since the investigation of the star-route frauds began.—A. I should have to refer to the annual reports to see what the appropriation was at that time and the annual rate of expenditure; but the figures I give you, $2,500,000, represent the orders of reduction during the year 1881. I have figured in the miles of the three years, and the increase of mileage amounts to 1,700,000 miles.

Q. You mean the mileage between the termini—you mean that you have increased that much the amount of travel necessary to be done in performing the service?—A. Yes, sir; 1,700,000 miles.

Q. And at the same time you have reduced the cost of the service two and a half million a year?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is the service as efficiently and satisfactorily performed now as it was during the other regime?—A. Yes, sir. We changed and cut the service all up, in the advertising of it. We saved a great deal in that way. We would take a long route and divide it into two, thus giving people a chance to bid, who would not be able to stock and carry on a large route, and we put them on fast schedules, every one of them under the advertisement, and when we relet the service, we let it out at a great deal less money than it cost under the allowances for expedition. The route from Phoenix to Prescott, Arizona, was an instance. I think that route was costing us about $32,000, and we readvertised it and got it for about one-quarter of that amount, while at the same time we added some mileage to it. These cases show, I think, that the former method of calculating the allowance for expedition was very unsafe. In my judgment, the only way in the world to fix the value of expedition, is to open the route to competition, but I think the Department should also at the same time use great discretion in readvertising, because hardship will occur to the contractor in such cases.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. It is possible that there should be an honest contractor on a route where expedition is asked for, and that the expedition should be necessary?—A. Yes, sir. There are some cases where expedition is required, good cases where it ought to be granted. The difficulty we have is to get the expedition on a route and at the same time to avoid doing injustice to the contractor. A contractor may have provided his stock with the intention of carrying on the route for three or four years, and in those cases a readvertisement of the route may do him great injustice. However, in those cases where they have the stock on hand on the route they are better able to bid than anybody else, being on the ground. But, as I have said, there are very few cases of expedition now, because we are taking great care in advertising routes originally to get the service so fast that there will be no necessity for expedition. We put it at three and a half or four miles an hour in nearly every case.

One further point about these balances for expedition. I furnished Colonel Ingersoll, during our discussion of this proposed arbitration, certified copies of these statements on these routes for his information and at his request, so that he could see what we claimed and be prepared to answer if it went to suit, and I stated to him that we were going to sue for the full amount paid for expedition on the ground of fraud; he took that statement as a statement of an account against the contractors, as a statement of the balance actually found by the Auditor to be due, and he appealed from that to the Comptroller.

He wrote the following letter to the Postmaster-General giving him notice of that appeal, and I have been since informed by the Auditor that the Comptroller dismissed the appeal. Here is the letter that he wrote:

[Law office of Robert G. Ingersoll, 1421 New York avenue.]

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
November 23, 1883.

DEAR SIR: In the cases of J. W. Parker on star-routes Nos. 29143 and 29149, in which the Sixth Auditor has certified a balance due the United States from said Parker, as follows:

On route 29143 of	$38,515 64
On route 29149 of	30,841 67

The said J. W. Parker has this day appealed to the First Comptroller under section 270 R. S.

And in the case of V. H. Pease, on route 45103, in which said Auditor has certified a balance of $5,753.38 as due the United States from said Pease, the said Pease has this day appealed to the First Comptroller of the Treasury under section 270 R. S.

And in the case of M. Cosgrove, on route 39109, in which the Sixth Auditor certified a balance due the United States of $132,827.82, the said Cosgrove has this day appealed to the First Comptroller of the Treasury under section 270 R. S.

It being claimed in all of said cases that the said Sixth Auditor had no jurisdiction to reopen and restate said accounts.

I have the honor to remain yours, respectfully,

R. G. INGERSOLL,
Attorney for Appellants.

Hon. WALTER Q. GRESHAM,
Postmaster-General.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. That seems to be in disregard of the agreement to arbitrate?—A. Those are routes that are not included in the arbitration. As I have stated, while we were talking about going on with the arbitration, I had several other routes of the Salisburys investigated. We kept the men busy investigating them with the view of getting as much money out of the matter as we could, and the result was that in the course of five or six months we had three or four more cases of Salisbury routes just like the others. Colonel Ingersoll understood this to be a statement of account by the Auditor, of which the Auditor had jurisdiction, instead of what it was—a statement prepared by the Postmaster-General, to be sent to the Attorney-General as a basis for instituting suits.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. You do have data which supply pretty general information as to the propriety of expediting or increasing the service on any route, do you not?—A. We do have a good deal. The only thing we rely on, though, is the statement of the Auditor of the revenue derived from the post-offices and their business.

Q. But the postmasters are all required to make quarterly returns, and when you tabulate the returns from all the offices on a route you have specific data of the amount of work done on that route at each office?—A. Yes, sir; but we have a case now in Idaho in which a post-office has been established and it is represented that three or four thousand people are rushing in there to a mine at the present time, and it is estimated that five thousand or six thousand people will be there within the next six weeks. Now, that office has just been started and of course there is no return of its business, and they want service twice a week and want it immediately, and we have no information on which to decide the question.

Q. But that lack of information cannot exist longer than one quarter?—A. No; but there is a case where the people want the service at once, and we have nothing in the Department to guide us or to check their statements by.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. You get your information from the locality?—A. We get our information from anybody who comes in and makes representations, and then we have an investigation to see whether the statements are borne out. I mention this case to illustrate some of our difficulties, but of course such cases are very rare.

About the arbitration, I wish to say that when this submission was made between the counsel we had very little data on route 32024 (from Las Vegas to Vinita) on which to proceed, and we had to have that route investigated subsequently, and it took some time. That route was 726 miles long, and of course it took a good while to get up the information about it, but we did get it and we have it complete. Then we had very little information also in regard to a route from Soledad to Newhall, in California, and we had to have that gone over in the same way. So that if it had been decided to proceed with the arbitration, we would have been provided with evidence strong enough, we thought to justify us in going ahead.

WASHINGTON, May 5, 1884.

The Chairman submitted a letter from Mr. William Pitt Kellogg, asking that in case the committee should decide to investigate the charges against him, he should be permitted to appear by counsel to cross-examine adverse witnesses, and to introduce other witnesses in his own behalf.

After some discussion as to the propriety of going into an investigation of the Kellogg case, the committee adjourned.

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1884.

Mr. William Pitt Kellogg appeared, accompanied by his counsel, Messrs. R. G. Ingersoll and J. M. Wilson.

The committee having under consideration the question whether it should go into an investigation of the matters charged against Mr. Kellogg in connection with certain star-route transactions, Mr. Ingersoll said:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee: Of course we are not aware of what the scope of your investigation will be, and we have not examined with any particularity your authority or the resolution that gives you the authority, but what we would like is this: If any testimony is introduced here in any way affecting Mr. William P. Kellogg, we would like the privilege, first, of cross-examining the witness; and, secondly, of having witnesses called, whom we may designate, to controvert anything that may appear to be established against Mr. Kellogg. I believe that is about all we want. If the investigation takes such a course, why, we would like to be heard. I do not know of anything else that I wish to say upon this subject now.

Mr. J. M. WILSON. I will simply say, gentlemen of the committee, that our attitude in respect to this matter, as I understand it, is simply this: We have not anything to say as to what the scope of your inquiry ought to be. We are not here to oppose any direction that you may see fit to give this investigation. We are not here to throw any obstacle in the way of your making any investigation that you deem it your duty to make under the authority or the direction of the House of Representatives; but we are here, as Colonel Ingersoll has suggested, to ask of the committee that if the investigation takes a direction which shall involve the bringing out of any statement by any witness or witnesses affecting the honor or the integrity of Mr. Kellogg, we may have the privilege of examining such witness or witnesses, and, in so far as any such witness may give testimony reflecting upon Mr. Kellogg's honor or integrity, we desire to introduce evidence to disprove such statements. More than that I do not see that I can say. We think it is due to Mr. Kellogg that he should have that opportunity. I have just read the resolution under which you are proceeding. It is not necessary that I should read it or comment upon it here, but we would like to have the committee determine the question as to what is to be the scope of this inquiry, and if it opens the door to any testimony in the direction that Colonel Ingersoll has alluded to, and to which I also have referred, we beg of the committee that we may have an opportunity to meet that class of testimony. Outside of that we have nothing to do with this case. I think that in the spirit of entire frankness it may probably be well to say that the only witnesses of this character whom we anticipate your calling are Mr. Walsh and Mr. Price, and the reason why we anticipate their testifying is that Mr. Price's affidavit has been published, in which he is said to make certain statements. We know nothing of the affidavit except as we see it in the newspapers, and we know nothing of Mr. Price's testimony except as we heard it in the recent trial. As to Mr. Walsh, we have heard him testify, and we therefore know something as to what will be the drift of his testimony. Those are the two witnesses to whom we especially refer, and if Mr. Walsh is called, and you go beyond an inquiry as to the direct conduct of the Government officials or those who are charged with that investigation, and go out into the realm of the facts of the case, then it is as to that line of examination that we desire to cross-examine and produce further testimony. As to matters that Mr. Walsh might testify to concerning his relations with the Government officials or with the Government counsel, we have nothing to do with them. We do not pretend to know anything about that, and we care nothing about what may have occurred between Mr. Walsh and the Government counsel or officials. Those are controversies and quarrels as to which we have nothing to do. But whenever he gets beyond that, and you go into an investigation to determine the guilt or innocence of Mr. Kellogg, then we desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. I will state that the committee caused a subpoena to be served upon Mr. Price while he was in this city, but he left the city without giving the committee any notice; sending by a friend of his a certificate to the effect that he was in a very bad condition of health. Further than that we know nothing of his whereabouts at the present time. While the committee was in session here awaiting his presence, supposing him to be in the city, it was suggested that it might be more convenient for the committee to make use of the testimony which Mr. Price had given in court in the case against Mr. Kellogg. That question, however, was not determined; but it is probable that in case Mr. Price's attendance could not be obtained we would be compelled to resort to the record of the evidence which he gave in court.

Mr. WILSON. I will say in respect to that, that if you conclude to go into the kind of investigation which I have just indicated we will not make any objection to your using the testimony that was taken before the court. We will stand upon no technicalities in respect to this matter; the committee may have that testimony; we will make no objection, and the committee may use it just as if Mr. Price had given it here under examination.

The CHAIRMAN. Assuming that the committee should desire to incorporate into its record the testimony of Mr. Price as given before the court in the case against Mr. Kellogg, and should determine to go no further, would you then desire to introduce any evidence?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; if that testimony is incorporated in your record, we shall, of course, want to answer it.

Mr. STEWART. You cross-examined Mr. Price on the trial, I suppose.

Mr. INGERSOLL. We cross-examined him only upon one point, specially reserving the right to finish the cross-examination; but of course the court would not allow a case to go on when it was admitted by the prosecution that that was their evidence, and their only evidence, and when it appeared from that evidence that a conviction was absolutely impossible.

Mr. STEWART. I understood that Walsh was summoned as a witness and was not examined. How, then, could the public prosecutor say that Price's evidence was the only evidence in the case? That is something which has puzzled me.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I think I can make that perfectly clear. Mr. Price made certain statements which he claimed to be the truth. Among other things, he stated that he had delivered to Mr. Kellogg certain postal drafts. Now, it appeared from the evidence—because these postal drafts had already been introduced—it appeared that they were paid, some in 1880 and some in 1881, and the prosecutor stated that the evidence of Price covered the whole ground; that is, that they might prove the same facts, or try to prove the same facts, by other witnesses, but that when the evidence was all in they expected that the facts shown by the other testimony would be as Price had stated them. Thereupon the court said that if that was the case the question had better be argued at once, because there was no need of wasting all summer in a trial, if a conviction was impossible. It was upon that hint that we spoke. Admitting all the facts which they claimed to have established, and all that they claimed they could establish—for they did not claim that they could establish other or different facts from those set forth by Price, but simply that they had more evidence showing the same facts—we admitted the truth of the facts alleged, for the purposes of the argument, as a demurrer admits the truth of the declaration or indictment.

Mr. STEWART. Your motion was in the nature of a demurrer to an indictment?

Mr. INGERSOLL. Yes, sir; and it was made really upon the suggestion of the court, because the first witness for the prosecution demonstrated that the case was different from the one mentioned in the indictment, and that they were not even remotely related, except that the name of the defendant was the same in each.

Mr. WILSON. He was the connecting link?

Mr. INGERSOLL. Yes, sir.

On motion of Mr. Stewart it was resolved that the committee should notify Mr. Kellogg's counsel of the result of its deliberations as to whether the investigation should extend to the Kellogg case.

WASHINGTON, May 9, 1884.

JOHN T. MITCHELL sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. State your residence and occupation.—Answer. I reside in Washington ; I am a merchant. Now, Mr. Chairman, before we proceed any further I would like to have the question determined how far the committee have a right to interrogate me about transactions occurring in the grand jury-room. I have endeavored to inform myself in regard to the question and there seems to be about as much difference of opinion among legal gentlemen on the outside of the committee as there is among those inside the committee, and I do not desire to place myself in a position to be criticised by gentlemen inside or outside ; so that I would like to have the question determined.

After some informal discussion among the members of the committee, The CHAIRMAN said :

In answer to the request of the witness the chair will state the law of the matter as he understands it. In Bishop on Criminal Procedure, section 857, the law is laid down in these words :

Various reasons for this requirement of secrecy have been assigned ; one is to keep from an unarrested defendant the knowledge which would induce him to escape ; another is to prevent the indicted persons from meeting the evidence at the trial by perjured testimony ; another, to render the witnesses before the grand jury more free in their disclosures. Consequently, when the purposes of the secrecy are accomplished, it is the better opinion, contrary perhaps to some cases but maintained in most, that any revelations of the grand jury's doings may be made which justice demands. The testimony may come from a third person present, from a grand juror himself, or from one who was a witness before the grand jury ; he may be even questioned as to what was his own evidence.

In support of this rule laid down by the text writer there is cited the case of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts vs. Mead, 12 Gray, 167. That was a very learned court, of which Mr. Shaw was chief justice, and its opinion is therefore entitled to very great weight. In that case the court held that—

The only other question arising in the case is whether the testimony of grand jurors is admissible to prove that one of the witnesses in behalf of the prosecution testified differently on his examination before them from the testimony given by him before the jury of trials. As to the competency of such evidence the authorities are not uniform. The weight of them is in favor of its admissibility. On principle it seems to us to be competent. The reasons on which the sanction of secrecy which the common law gives to the proceedings before grand juries rests are said in the books to be three. One is that the utmost freedom of disclosure of alleged crimes and offenses by prosecutors may be secured. A second reason is that perjury and subornation of perjury may be prevented by withholding the knowledge of facts testified to before the grand jury which, if known, it would be for the interest of the accused or their confederates to attempt to disprove by procuring false testimony. The third is to conceal the fact that an indictment is found against a party, in order to avoid the danger that he may escape and elude arrest upon it before the presentment is made. To accomplish these purposes the rule excluding the evidence to the extent stated in the Commonwealth vs. Hill, 11 Cush., 140, seems to be established, and it is embodied substantially in the oath of office each grand juror takes on entering on the discharge of his duties. But when these purposes are accomplished the necessity and expediency of retaining the seal of secrecy are at an end. Cessante ratione, cessat regula. After the indictment is found and presented, and the accused is held to answer, and the trial before the traverse jury is begun, all the facts relative to the crime charged and its prosecution are necessarily opened, and no harm can arise to the cause of public justice by no longer withholding facts material or relevant to the issue merely because their disclosure may lead to the development of some part of the proceedings before the grand jury. On the contrary, great hardship and injustice might often be occasioned by depriving a party of important evidence essential to his defense, by enforcing the rule of exclusion having its origin and foundation in public policy, after the reasons on which this rule is based have ceased to exist.

The WITNESS. I want to put in an additional word just there, with the permission of the committee. I asked one of the judges of the supreme court of the District for advice in regard to this matter, and he said he did not feel disposed to advise, because in either case this question might come before him judicially.

Mr. STEWART. He meant that in case you should refuse to answer and should be prosecuted for contempt, he might want to issue a writ of habeas corpus.

The CHAIRMAN. It might come before him, of course. I will state further, as bearing upon this question, that it appears in our record here, from the testimony of one of our witnesses, that in the northern district of Alabama there was an investigation made recently of certain charges preferred by members of the grand jury against Mr. William H. Smith, the United States attorney there, and in that investigation the court caused an examination, under oath, to be made of each member of the grand jury as to what the district attorney had actually done and said in the grand-jury room.

Mr. STEWART. I have no doubt myself that it is a question of privilege. I think the committee has a right to ask these questions; but if Mr. Mitchell thinks that his oath of office as a grand juror precludes him from answering them, he has a right to say so.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that in this Alabama case Attorney-General Brewster instructed the district attorney to have the whole matter investigated, and the members of the grand jury were called before the court and their testimony was heard as to what has occurred in the grand-jury room. Now, in view of these authorities which I have cited, it is the opinion of the Chair that the reason for the rule of secrecy no longer exists in the case of this witness, and that the ends of public justice do not require him to withhold from this committee any information he possesses as to what transpired before that grand jury, especially as to the conduct and statements there of the United States attorney, Mr. Bliss, for this further reason: Mr. Bliss himself has already appeared before this committee and stated in detail what he did and said before that grand jury. That statement must either remain entirely uncontradicted or some member of the grand jury must be permitted to testify in reference to it. There can be no doubt that if Mr. Bliss had been merely a witness before the grand jury, and not the Government counsel, any member of the jury could be called to contradict or explain the testimony that he has given here. Why not extend the rule so as to permit members of the grand jury to explain the conduct and the statements of the district attorney in the grand-jury room? It seems to the Chair that there is no good reason why the rule should not be so extended.

Mr. Stewart suggested that the examination might proceed until some question was asked which the witness might decline to answer.

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, do you accept the suggestion made by Mr. Stewart that I shall answer so far as my own judgment dictates?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. If you claim your privilege at any time in reference to any inquiry that may be made of you it will be your duty to so state to the committee, and then it will be a question for the House to determine. Before proceeding with the examination of the witness the chair would be pleased to have an expression of opinion upon this question from the members of the committee present.

Mr. FYAN. I concur with you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CRISP. I have not investigated this question with a view to testimony given before a legislative committee. I will say, however, that I have no doubt that where the ends of justice require a member of the grand jury to divulge the secrets of the jury-room in a court of law, he can be required to do so; for the reason that I do not believe it was the intention of the law to lock up in the breasts of the grand jury facts, the disclosure of which would tend to advance or further the ends of justice. How far that rule applies to a legislative committee I will not undertake to say, because I have not investigated that question; it has not presented itself to my mind at all.

The CHAIRMAN. If you regard this committee as a part of the House of Representatives, which is the grand inquest of the nation so far as the presentment of all persons who may be guilty of impeachable offenses is concerned, would not the rule extend as well to the House of Representatives, and therefore to this committee, as to a court?

Mr. CRISP. Possibly it might. As I have said, I have not investigated that question at all, and therefore I would not like to express an opinion about it.

Mr. STEWART. I think the reasons for secrecy have been answered already, and if a court has power, for the furtherance of the ends of justice, to make inquiry as to what transpired in the grand-jury room, I think that the supreme legislative authority of the land has certainly a right to make similar inquiry as bearing upon the good faith of an agent or an officer of the Government. Of course, the question of the effect of the oath upon the man's conscience is a question for him to settle.

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, is there any precedent for a case of this kind?

The CHAIRMAN. I have not seen any.

Mr. STEWART. I understand Mr. Mitchell's inquiry to be simply as to what he ought to do under the laws of the land. This is, to some extent, a new question. I do not know that the question ever arose before with reference to a legislative committee; but my personal opinion is, so far as I have been able to give the matter any thought, that we have a right to make this inquiry.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think it is rather a dangerous thing to do, but still I think we can do it. I think the great object of the secrecy imposed upon the members of a grand jury is to secure immunity for witnesses from criticism for the testimony that they give before the grand jury, and I think the testimony given there ought always to be kept secret; but, as I understand, we are now going only into an investigation of the conduct of the district attorney, and I do not see that the rule I have mentioned would apply in his case particularly, especially as he has undertaken to give his own version of the matter here; and therefore I am in favor of hearing what Mr. Mitchell, the foreman of the grand jury, has to say.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. State whether you were at any time a member of a grand jury of the District of Columbia.—A. I was.

Q. At what time?—A. At the March term, in 1882, I think.

Q. Were you foreman of that grand jury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the deliberations of that grand jury did Mr. George Bliss appear before you as counsel for the United States in any cases which you were called upon to consider?—A. He did.

Q. Please state whether he called the attention of the grand jury to the facts in the case of the United States vs. William Pitt Kellogg, and also in the case of the United States vs. Kellogg, Brady, and Price?—

A. They were incidental questions.

Q. Was there evidence submitted before that grand jury by the district attorney in the case of the United States vs. Kellogg?

The WITNESS. Now, Mr. Chairman, are you not going a little too far? I think I ought not to answer that question.

Mr. STEWART. What is the question?

The CHAIRMAN. Whether there was evidence presented to that grand jury by Mr. Bliss as Government counsel in the case of the United States vs. Kellogg. I have not asked what the evidence was, but simply whether evidence in that case was presented. [To the witness.] What is your answer?—A. I decline to answer that question, sir.

Q. I will put another question: Did Mr. Bliss appear before that grand jury as the attorney representing the United States?—A. He did, sir; and before admitting him to the grand jury room as counsel for the United States, I investigated to ascertain whether he had been sworn as assistant district attorney, and finding such to be the fact, he was admitted to the grand jury room.

Q. You may state (as you have already made such returns to the court) in what cases you made presentments at that term?

A. (Referring to a memorandum.) I find by reference to the court record that in case No. 14,336, the case of Dorsey, Brady, and others, the presentment was made on the 20th of May.

Q. Was that the first indictment against Dorsey, Brady, &c.?—A. Yes, sir. This that I have here is simply a note of my own. I find that in cases No. 14,357 and 14,358, presentments were made on the 17th day of June.

Q. Were there presentments made in other cases?

The WITNESS. Connected with star-route matter?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. I do not recollect in regard to that. These presentments were made on the 17th of June; the indictments were ordered and presented to the court on the same day, and the grand jury were discharged on the same day.

Q. How long was that grand jury in session?—A. About three months. It seemed to me about forty years.

Q. Have you read the testimony of Mr. George Bliss given before this committee in reference to the cases which he submitted to that grand jury?—A. I have.

Q. Is there any part of that testimony given by Mr. Bliss as to what he did before the grand jury and the evidence which he submitted there, in regard to which you desire to make any explanation or statement?—A. Yes, sir; there are some matters in regard to which I would like to say a few words. From my reading of Mr. Bliss's testimony it appears that in the Dorsey case where the indictment was found there is no question made at all. There is very little reference made to it by Mr. Bliss. What he has to say is mostly in regard to the Salisbury and Price case. In one of his statements, page 164, in reply to a question, or perhaps in connection with his general statement as to why there was so large a number of witnesses brought here, Mr. Bliss says:

Of course, therefore, we had to be very careful not to bring unnecessary witnesses, and at the same time we wanted to bring, as far as possible, witnesses who would be fair, and it required a great deal of care and occupied a great deal of time to make up the list. Then, too, of course, we must have witnesses to prove our whole case as to a given route. If we brought five or six witnesses here in relation to any one route, at heavy expense, and missed one whose testimony was necessary to cover a particular point, our chain was broken.

I make reference to that simply because I propose to refer to another part of his testimony in connection with it. On page 200, in referring to the Salisbury matter, he was questioned by the chairman and answered as follows:

Q. Before you leave this subject, let me ask if you can explain the statement you made yesterday with regard to the papers in the Post-Office Department being very meager as to the Saulsbury matter?—A. I stated I had no evidence on the subject. My impression is simply gained from this fact, that when you find a route of the Dorseys, a route 150 miles long with perhaps ten or a dozen post-offices on it, extending over four years, you will find a pile of papers very frequently 6 or 8 inches thick, and you will find a vast mass of papers which, if you could take up Mr. Woodward's analysis in the cases, you will see how these little things that are on file there dovetail in with affidavits and information that was given with regard to the routes, and which go very far to make up a complete case. When we came to the Saulsbury indictment, we found nothing there but the merest formal papers. There was not anything that inculpated anybody, except there was a big order of expedition. While it is of course possible that the Saulsbury combination did their business in a different way, and they did not put on file such things, yet it is hardly probable, because a great many of those papers, for instance, would not come from the contractors; they would be complaints from people along the routes, stating the mail was not carried, and all that sort of thing, which would go on file with the papers of the route to which they related. We did not find anything of that kind in the Saulsbury cases. The difference was very marked. Mr. Woodward discovered it and said nothing about it, because really I was so very busy that Mr. Woodward and I had very little time to confer except with regard to more important matters. But when we did get an opportunity to talk over the matter I found the same thing, and there was no evidence that anybody had taken any papers at all.

And he says that when that matter was brought to his attention afterwards by Mr. Woodward he found upon investigation that it was true and he remarks in another part of his testimony that the case had eventually been "milked" before he got to it.

Q. Do you give this as a reason for the grand jury not making a presentment in the Salisbury cases?—A. No; I do not pretend to give any reasons as to why the grand jury did not find an indictment. It is patent to everybody that the grand jury did not find an indictment, and they had their reasons for not finding it; and the only protection I ask is that I shall not be required to give the reasons why the grand jury acted as they did.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not ask that.

The WITNESS. No, I understand not; but that is all the protection I ask. Now, in another part of Mr. Bliss's testimony, page 170, he says.

I had no evidence of it; but I believe, and believe implicitly to-day, that the files of the Post-Office Department, so far as they related to certain of the Salisbury routes, had been interfered with—in a technical phrase, had been "milked," and that many of the papers had disappeared.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, this evidence is all before us, and I do not see the necessity of reading it again by piecemeal.

The WITNESS. The only purpose I have is to show that the action of the grand jury was perfectly justifiable according to Mr. Bliss's own statement; to show that he did not get the witnesses there that he expected, and that he gives three or four instances in which the witnesses that he expected to produce either did not appear, or, when they did come, did not testify as he had expected.

Mr. CRISP. Well, I submit that we are not investigating the conduct of the grand jury at all.

The CHAIRMAN. No; but I suppose this is admissible, not as relating directly to the conduct of the grand jury, but in reply to testimony already given by Mr. Bliss before this committee.

Mr. CRISP. But we have that testimony before us now, and therefore I do not see the use of having it read to us again.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Mitchell is not called upon to defend the action of the grand jury; nobody makes any imputation upon them.

The WITNESS. Mr. Bliss does, in his testimony.

Mr. STEWART. Not as to the Salisbury cases.

The WITNESS. That is just where he does it.

Mr. CRISP. But if there are other portions of his testimony which militate against or explain those portions, all that testimony is before us, and it is to be assumed that we will consider all that is before us.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you desire to have this part of the testimony of this witness excluded, Mr. Crisp?

Mr. CRISP. No, sir; but I do not see any necessity for repeating here what is already before us.

The WITNESS. Mr. Bliss in his statement says that he put certain "briefs," which are printed in his testimony, before the grand jury. Mr. Bliss never left a brief or paper in possession of the grand jury for one minute.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In making that statement do you refer to the printed brief marked A, which appears on page 173 of our record, and to the briefs marked B and C, which appear on page 174, and to the one marked D, which appears on page 175?—A. Yes, sir. I have no reason to say that those papers were not in the grand-jury room, but suffer me to explain. Mr. Bliss came in with piles of papers, sometimes with a hamper basket full of papers which it required two men to carry. That was so in the Dorsey case particularly. Every morning he came down to the grand-jury room with those immense clothes-baskets filled with papers, which it was just impossible for any grand jury to read. These "briefs" of the testimony, which he desired to refer to, Mr. Bliss brought with him, and he first selected a package of papers and then took out of the jackets such papers as he desired to lay before the grand jury and read them for our information.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Do you say that he read the papers referred to in the briefs?—A. It is utterly impossible for me to say whether he read all the papers or not. I could not begin to answer that question. I could not say whether he did or not. There was a vast amount of documentary evidence there. I went to the judge and asked the question whether the grand jury were compelled to accept all this mass of material—basket-loads of it—as being evidence.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was the instruction of the court on that point?—A. It was that if we believed that they were official documents from the Post-Office Department, we should accept them as evidence.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. They were not withheld from your inspection, I suppose? They were open to your inspection, were they not?—A. They were all there. Mr. Bliss had been, as he says, two years eating and sleeping and breathing the Star-route cases, and here were a lot of laymen just brought into the case and expected to make an investigation in regard to it in the course of a few days. But Mr. Bliss never left the grand-jury room leaving any papers in our possession.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were those large baskets of papers which you have described carried out of the grand-jury room every day?—A. Yes, sir; when the court adjourned they were carried out.

Q. Were they carried out when Mr. Bliss went out?—A. Yes, sir; they went out with him. Not a scrap of paper from the Post-office Department in the shape of an official document was ever left in the possession of the grand jury for an hour. It would seem to me from the reading of these “briefs” that they were simply Mr. Bliss’s own briefs or private notes of the testimony that he desired to present. For example, in one place he says:

It would seem, however, that so far as the people everywhere, except at Hamlington, were concerned, this unauthorized change, while benefiting the contractors, certainly did not injure any one else. But it was a violation of them contracts.

In another brief he says in regard to French: “This fact, I think, I failed to call to the attention of the grand jury.” From the reading of these I would suppose that they were simply his private notes or briefs of the testimony that he desired to present.

Q. Can you state whether the documents referred to in the briefs were read to the grand jury and explained?—A. It has been two years since these things took place and I could not say. I can say that it is impressed on my mind very positively that in several cases, I would not like to say how many, the oral testimony did not bear out the documentary evidence.

Q. Now, I will return to the question to which objection was made: Was there any documentary or oral evidence submitted to that grand jury by Mr. Bliss in the case of the United States vs. William P. Kellogg?—A. Yes, sir; there were incidental matters brought there in regard to Mr. Kellogg.

Q. Incidental matters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were witnesses examined?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who appeared?—A. Mr. Walsh.

Q. Were there any other witnesses produced in that case?—A. None that I recollect of. I could not say positively.

Q. Was Mr. Walsh sworn and examined by Mr. Bliss in the presence of the jury?—A. Witnesses are not sworn in the presence of the grand jury. The witness goes before the clerk of the court and is there sworn, and a certificate is issued that he has been sworn, and then he is permitted to come before the grand jury.

Q. Did Mr. Walsh appear there and testify?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long was he in the presence of the grand jury?—A. Twenty minutes, I should think, would be the limit of the time. I may be mistaken in regard to that.

Q. Did he present any documentary proofs in connection with his oral testimony?—A. Yes, sir; he had some papers with him.

Q. Did he read them to the grand jury, or were they read to the jury?—A. Some, he did; he did not read all the papers that he brought with him.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Do you know why he did not read all the papers?—A. I do not.

Q. Was he interrogated by Mr. Bliss as to all of them?—A. He was interrogated in regard to certain facts, matters connected with the case; but whether in regard to all of them or not I do not remember; I could not say. Mr. Walsh kept possession of his own papers. Taking a seat in the center of the grand-jury room, as the witnesses always did, he drew up a chair this way [illustrating] and put his papers on it. I was not within ten feet of him, consequently I could not say whether Mr. Bliss interrogated him in regard to all the papers that he had in his possession or not.

Q. Did Mr. Bliss make any statement to the grand jury with regard to the effect of Walsh's testimony or in what way it should have been considered?—A. That is a difficult question to answer. You had Mr. Bliss here long enough to know him pretty well in regard to his manner. He was always talking in regard to something; what was his particular line of thought and idea and language at that particular time I could not pretend to recall now.

Q. Did he prepare and submit to the jury in that case a bill of indictment against Mr. Kellogg?

Mr. STEWART. They do not prepare the indictment until after the bill is found.

Q. The practice here is to file the information first, and upon the presentment by the grand jury the court orders an indictment to be prepared. Then the indictment is prepared and submitted to the grand jury and the foreman indorses it.

Q. And it never was presented in this case?—A. As there was no presentment made to the court of course there was no indictment.

Q. Was there a presentment made by that grand jury against Brady and Price?—A. Not unless it was in one of these three cases which I have referred to. I have no recollection of the names; I could not call up the names.

Q. Did Mr. Bliss state to the grand jury that it was a serious matter to indict a United States Senator?

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE (interposing). Did he say that either in words or in substance?

A. Personally I have no recollection of Mr. Bliss ever having made that remark, and I inquired this morning of two members of the grand jury, who were with me, if they had any recollection of it, and they said that they had not. Further than that I cannot go.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was it known to the grand jury that the Kellogg who was mentioned by Mr. Walsh in his testimony was Senator Kellogg?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That fact was known to the grand jury?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Was there any other evidence in that case brought to the attention of the grand jury than that which was brought to their attention by Mr. Bliss—any testimony, paper, or document in the case?

The WITNESS. In the Kellogg case?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. The Kellogg case was not an individual case. The Kellogg case was only an addendum to the Brady case.

Q. But Kellogg was subsequently indicted.—A. That was by another grand jury. I do not know anything about that.

Q. In the case before the grand jury of which you were formen the charge was against Kellogg, Price, and Brady.

Mr. STEWART. He has not said that.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. What case were you investigating at the time Walsh was examined?—A. I am not clear in my recollection in regard to that. It has been two years since.

Q. Was it not the Brady and Price case?—A. It may have been. I could not say. It must have been before the Brady indictment was found, from facts that are in my mind.

Q. Was it your grand jury that found the indictment against Brady and Price?—A. I think not; I think it was subsequent one.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What are we to understand by the word "incidental," which you used a while ago in relation to the Kellogg matter?—A. That Mr. Walsh was brought there as a witness in connection with the case we were examining, but I have no recollection that any presentment was made against Mr. Kellogg in which Walsh was a witness before our grand jury.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Then what was the case to which you refer?—A. It must have been the Dorsey-Brady case.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Then, so far as Kellogg was concerned, he was not accused before that grand jury except as it came out incidentally in the testimony of this witness Walsh in another case?—A. Exactly so, sir. You tell it better than I can tell it myself.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Then, if I understand you, there was no presentment at all in the case against Kellogg and Brady as such, but the case which you were investigating was the case which was subsequently tried, known as the Dorsey-Brady case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the case in which Walsh had testimony before you?—A. Walsh was testifying in the Brady-Dorsey case.

Q. Then you did not have your attention specially called to another case in which the defendants would be Brady, Kellogg, and Price?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any other statement made by Mr. Bliss before that grand jury to which you desire to call attention?—A. I only desire to call attention to the fact that when the grand jury got through Mr. Bliss was perfectly satisfied with our action.

Q. He was not "sick" then?—A. No, sir; he got "sick" afterwards.

Q. Was the Venita and Las Vegas route investigated at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what Mr. Bliss said to you after you got through, about being satisfied with your action.—A. After the vote had been taken by the grand jury, Mr. Bliss was in the adjoining room, and I sent for him to come in and said to him: "Mr. Bliss, we have found certain indictments against certain parties"; and I read them over to him. He said, "I am very much obliged to you, gentlemen. You have had a long, tedious case; you have been very patient in your investigation. There is one other case in which I would like to have had an indictment, but I presume that the evidence placed before you was not sufficient to justify you in finding an indictment. I am very much obliged to you for your courtesy." Little pleasant remarks of that kind, and he evidently left the grand jury under the impression that they had done their duty to his entire satisfaction.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Did you understand what other case he referred to?—A. No, sir; not from that remark.

The CHAIRMAN. He explained that here. It was the case of the Soledad and Newhall route.

The WITNESS. And yet he says in his testimony that his witnesses did not testify to the same state of facts before the grand jury that they testified to when they were out on the plains, and that witnesses who were very important as connecting links were not produced; and he states that it brought home to him the truth of one of his own theories, that if he got five witnesses to testify in a case, and did not get the sixth, whose testimony was necessary to complete the chain, the five that he did get would be of no use to him.

Q. In the cases of the Venita and Las Vegas, the Wells and Hamilton, and the Fargo and Pembina routes, which were dismissed, and also in the Soledad and Newhall case, did Mr. Bliss express to you at any time any surprise that you had not found indictments?—A. No, sir; he did not. On the contrary, he says, in regard to the Wells and Hamilton route—

Asto O. J. Salisbury, he seems to have been a sort of dummy. Monroe Salisbury was the sole contractor. His route was certainly false. If Brady is not included, there are not two conspirators, unless Gilmer can be included.

Q. How long were you investigating the Venita and Las Vegas route?—A. I could not tell you; I have no recollection. The manner of proceeding of the grand jury was this: These cases were brought up and the witnesses were brought here from all over the far West. They came in detachments. Witnesses on one route would be here now, and perhaps in half an hour there would be a witness on another route, and after that a witness on another route would come in, so that perhaps in the course of the day we would have five or six witnesses before us upon as many routes.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Did you reduce their evidence to writing?—A. I will tell you in a moment. The witnesses were introduced as I have stated. The secretary of the grand jury and myself took the numbers of these cases upon separate sheets of paper, and as each witness was called to be examined we took notes of his testimony as we went along. Then that witness was dismissed, and some other one was called in reference to another route, and we would take up the sheet of paper on which we had previous testimony in regard to that same route, and would take up the connection and go on. Then the next witness would be, perhaps, on a third route, and we would take up the sheet of paper belonging to that route and take notes of his testimony. Those sheets of paper were put in a drawer, and kept under lock and key until we got through with the entire investigation. In that way we had notes of the testimony of each particular witness as it progressed. Of course we could not undertake to remember the testimony on all those routes.

Q. What became of the sheets?—A. A committee was appointed to burn them up and they were destroyed.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was there any other record kept?—A. No, sir. When we came to the end, I read over the entire testimony as I had taken it down and as the secretary had taken it down.

Q. When the testimony was read over, was there a vote taken as to whether you would find a bill in each case?—A. Oh, yes; of course.

Q. Did you ask any instructions from the court as to whether you should keep a record of your proceedings and return it to the court?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had no instructions on that subject?—A. We did not intend to keep any record.

Q. Did Mr. Bliss give you any instructions as to whether you should keep a record of your proceedings?

By Mr. STEWART :

Q. Please state whether, to your knowledge, any outside or improper influence of any description, from any source, was attempted to be exercised with reference to the action of the grand jury upon those cases during the pendency of your inquiry.—A. In answer to that, I would like to state that the members of that grand jury were as good a class of men as could possibly be picked out anywhere. I never saw a better class of men on an average. Some of the very best citizens here, merchants and business men, were on that grand jury. Of course there were some that were not educated, but they were men of good common sense, and I don't think I ever saw the names of a better grand jury called in this District than that was. And, knowing the statements that had been made in regard to previous grand juries, that they had been tampered with and that they were under the espionage of detectives and that class of people, I was careful whenever the opportunity occurred to caution the members of the jury in regard to conversation of any kind with anybody in connection with anything that occurred in the grand-jury room, and I do not believe that a single solitary iota of effort was made, in any way, shape, or form, to influence a single member of that grand jury. I think I can say that there were not more than five members of that grand jury, to the best of my recollection, who would have known Brady or Dorsey or Kellogg or Price or Walsh if they had met them in the street.

By Mr. CRISP :

Q. Did you examine or have before that grand jury in those cases any witnesses or any evidence not brought or sent before you by the counsel for the Government?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That has reference, I suppose, to the question whether a Congressional document giving the proceedings in the contested-election case between Messrs. Spofford and Kellogg got into the grand-jury room?

The WITNESS. No, sir; it did not.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. I would like to know whether you examined any witnesses or documents that were not sent or brought before you by the Government counsel?—A. No, sir; members of the grand jury had seen something of this investigation in which Mr. Walsh appeared before one of the Congressional committees. Some of the members of the grand jury had seen the document and read it, and perhaps it was talked about in the grand-jury room, but not as testimony or evidence; nor was it used before the grand jury in any way.

Q. Was the book in the grand-jury room?—A. I cannot say whether it was or not. I have no recollection that it was.

By Mr. STEWART :

Q. Was there any indication which you observed in the course of your inquiries of any disposition on the part of the representatives of the Government, the district attorney or anybody else, to suppress any evidence?—A. No, sir; I think not. I could not say that. As I said before, witnesses came before that grand jury, not only in those cases, but in other than the star-route cases, where documentary evidence was read to them with their own signatures to it, and they denied any knowledge of the extent to which it went.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did or did not Mr. Bliss call the attention of the grand jury to the fact that the evidence before you disclosed a case against Kellogg or against Kellogg in connection with Brady and Price or others?—A. No, sir; we had nothing to do with the Kellogg case at all.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, May 10, 1884.

The CHAIRMAN. I will state to the members of the committee that I have received a letter from Mr. John A. Walsh, in which he calls attention to the fact that some of the testimony given by Mr. Bliss before this committee reflects upon him in regard to a claim which he has made against the Government in connection with his service as a mail contractor, and expresses a desire to appear before the committee and make a statement in reference to that. I supposed that such a request would come under our general rule, and accordingly I have instructed the clerk to send Mr. Walsh a copy of our resolution adopted some time since, to the effect that whenever persons desire to appear before the committee in their own defense, they can do so at their own expense, and to inform him that we will be prepared to hear him on Monday next.

ELIAS S. HUTCHINSON sworn and examined.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Question. Please state your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. My age is forty-nine years; I reside in Washington; I am a merchant.

Q. Were you foreman of a grand jury organized in connection with the supreme court of the District of Columbia?—A. I was.

Q. When?—A. At the June term of 1882.

Q. Were you foreman of the grand jury that returned indictments against Brady and Price?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did the grand jury of which you were foreman return indictments in any of the star-route cases?—A. It returned no indictments in the star-route matters. Let me explain. We were called in session in an emergency—we were so instructed by the court. The grand jury had been discharged until October without being organized, and we were called in and organized about the 14th or 15th of July, instead of waiting until October. We were in session a few days and then adjourned until October.

Q. What was the object of calling that special session of the grand jury, so far as you know?—A. We were instructed by the court that there were some matters to be presented to us which it would be necessary to consider at once. I think the judge said they were matters that we must consider then.

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Q. Were you informed that unless those cases were considered at once the statute of limitations would run against them?—A. I think the court so instructed us.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who appeared before that grand jury in behalf of the United States?—A. Mr. Bliss.

Q. The committee yesterday, in reference to the case of Mr. Mitchell, the foreman of a prior grand jury, decided that the rule of secrecy did not apply as to the matters about which we interrogated him ; that Mr. Bliss had already, as the counsel who represented the Government before the grand jury, made a statement to the committee here in regard to what he had done before the jury, and of the evidence he had laid before them, and that that opened up the matter so far as he was concerned, and Mr. Mitchell was instructed to make a statement in reference to those matters except so far as his own conscience might dictate to him another course. The committee now propose to examine you in the same way, but if we should ask you any question that you think you ought not to answer, you may so state, and we will consider the matter further.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; I understand; I do not know that you will ask me anything that I shall not be prepared to answer, but I think it is quite likely you will.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What did Mr. Bliss state to the jury were the matters to which he desired to call your attention.

The WITNESS. Do you mean in the grand jury room?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The WITNESS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I consider that the proceedings in the grand jury room are a matter that I am bound by my obligation to keep secret.

The CHAIRMAN. But Mr. Bliss made that matter public.

The WITNESS. He may have made his version of it public, and he may have told the truth or he may not; but I do not think that relieves me of my obligation.

The CHAIRMAN. If a witness before that grand jury had testified falsely, would not you be required in a judicial proceeding to testify as to what he had stated before the grand jury—as to whether he had made the same statements there that he had made before the petit jury? Your oath of secrecy would not relieve you from testifying in such a case. That is universally held to be the law of the matter. Otherwise a grand jury might be imposed upon by perjured testimony, and there would be no way of convicting persons who testified falsely before a grand jury. Clearly, therefore, that is not one of the matters which you are bound to keep secret.

THE WITNESS. Well, I am being instructed. I do not claim to understand the question fully.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. You have been told that Mr. Bliss has been examined as a witness before this committee in regard to the proceedings had before that grand jury. Among other things Mr. Bliss stated here that a case was presented to that grand jury accusing Mr. William P. Kellogg of crime. Is that a fact?

The WITNESS (after some hesitation). I don't know whether I shall answer that or not. I will tell you directly. I don't know whether that is a matter of record or not. I doubt if it is.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. That is an open secret.

The WITNESS. It may be an open secret.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee stated the rule of law to Mr. Mitchell as laid down in Bishop on Criminal Procedure as follows:

Various reasons for this requirement of secrecy have been assigned. One is to keep from an unarrested defendant the knowledge which would induce him to escape; another is to prevent the indicted persons from meeting the evidence at the trial by perjured testimony; another, to render the witnesses before the grand jury more free in their disclosures. Consequently, when the purposes of the secrecy are accomplished, it is the better opinion—contrary, perhaps, to some cases, but maintained in most—that any revelations of the grand jury's doings may be made which justice demands. The testimony may come from a third person present, from a grand juror himself, or from one who was a witness before the grand jury; he may be even questioned as to what was his own evidence.

The WITNESS. The obligation that we took was not to divulge the proceedings of the grand jury, was it not?

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Unless called upon to do so under due process of law.

The WITNESS. No; there is no exception made; the oath does not make any exception.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. A witness is always to be governed by the instructions that he receives from the forum where he is called upon to testify. For instance, if you were called as a witness to give evidence in a court having jurisdiction of the matter, the court would instruct you that that was not a matter of privilege, and then you would be required, under law, to answer the question. Of course in such a case you are absolved by such instruction from all obligations and from all pains and penalties, either in conscience or otherwise.

The WITNESS. Well, I do not understand that I am relieved of any part of the obligation that I took as a grand juror. I do not say this to obstruct your investigation in any way. If I can do anything conscientiously to help you out I will do it; but I most certainly understand that the obligation I took there binds me to secrecy, and the theory of the organization of the grand jury, in my mind, is that the proceedings are to be strictly secret. If the district-attorney or any other man as a witness chooses to represent or to misrepresent what took place there, that is his business and not the business of the grand jury, as I understand it. I received my subpoena last night, and of course I took it for granted that this was the business you wanted me for, and that I was called here because I had been foreman of that grand jury, but I think I ought to have some advice in the matter before I am required to answer. My own opinion is that I cannot divulge the proceedings before the grand jury; but if I can aid you in any way without violating my obligation, I give you my word that I will do it. Before answering, however, I would like to have an opportunity to take some advice.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Who was the judge who held the court?—A. Judge Wylie.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Did your grand jury find a bill of indictment against William P. Kellogg?

The WITNESS. No.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. The administration of oaths to witnesses who are to be produced before the grand jury here is done publicly, in open court, I believe?

The WITNESS. Yes; that is a matter of record.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Walsh was sworn in open court, was he not, to give evidence in a case pending before that grand jury?

The WITNESS. The swearing of the witness is a matter of record.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do you know of your own knowledge whether Walsh was sworn to give testimony before that grand jury? Did you see him or hear him sworn?

The WITNESS. We take a great many things for granted, you know. I did not see him sworn.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then you do not know it of your own knowledge?

The CHAIRMAN. But you know that Mr. Walsh did give testimony before that grand jury. You know that of your own knowledge.

The WITNESS. You are getting into the grand jury room now.

The CHAIRMAN. That cannot be said to be a secret any longer, because Mr. Bliss has testified to it here.

Mr. MILLIKEN (to the witness). Are you willing to take legal counsel as to this matter, and then come before the committee?

The WITNESS. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to call the attention of the witness and the committee to the fact that while this matter was secret at the time the grand jury were carrying on their investigations, it has been since made public by the Government counsel himself, and made a part of our public record here. [To the witness.] How long were you in session at that time?

The WITNESS. We were in session three days in July.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there any bills returned during that session?

The WITNESS. No; we made no presentments.

(At the suggestion of Mr. Milliken the witness was excused until Monday, in order to give him an opportunity to take advice in the mean time.)

WASHINGTON, May 12, 1884.

ELIAS S. HUTCHINSON recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. At the last meeting of the committee you were excused for the purpose of enabling you to consult with counsel as to the extent to which you would go in answering questions in regard to what transpired in the presence of the grand jury, of which you were foreman; are you now prepared?—Answer. I have taken counsel, and I think that I am prepared to answer the questions that you will be likely to ask me, judging from what you said on Thursday last.

Q. Please state whether Mr. John A. Walsh was examined as a witness before the grand jury of which you were foreman.—A. He was.

Q. What, if any, cases were presented to that grand jury by Mr. Bliss for your consideration at that special term?—A. The Government counsel, Mr. Bliss, before we examined witnesses, told us that we were called together to consider the case against Senator Kellogg—charges or testimony and evidence that would be brought against Senator Kellogg—and we were urged to act at once and promptly because the statute of limitations was about to run.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. You say you were “urged;” by whom?—A. By Mr. Bliss. I think it was on the 14th, 15th, 16th, and 17th days of July, 1882, that we met.

Q. Were there any other cases to which your attention was called?—A. There were no other cases. He told us that the testimony would be brought in that had been presented to the previous grand jury—testimony running in the same way, and very much the same testimony in which Mr. Brady and Mr. Price were involved; but they had been already indicted, and we were notified that we were not expected to indict parties who had been already indicted.

Q. When had Brady and Price been indicted?—A. At a previous term of the grand jury.

Q. Then there was but one case to which your attention was called at that term?—A. Only one case.

Q. What witnesses were called before you?—A. Only Mr. Walsh, and some of the clerks from the Post-Office Department, to verify papers.

Q. How long was Mr. Walsh in the presence of the grand jury?—A. The two days' sessions; I suppose on Thursday several hours, and on Friday the whole session—I guess four or five hours. I don't remember exactly. It was a very hot day I remember.

Q. Was he interrogated about matters in that Kellogg case, before the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir; by Mr. Bliss.

Q. Did he present any documentary evidence in addition to his oral statements?—A. He had some papers—very few.

Q. Do you remember what kind of papers they were?—A. He had, I think, two or three drafts or checks that bore evidence of having been paid, and also a telegram, I remember, signed "K," I think, but I don't remember what the telegram said. I only remember the fact that he had a dispatch.

Q. You say it was signed "K." To whom had it been sent?—A. As I remember, it was directed to Mr. Walsh. This point is not very fresh in my mind. It is nearly two years since, and I forgot it as much as I could. I supposed I never was to tell anybody of it, and it is nearly two years past, and I have not carried it in my mind. What I say is to my best recollection, and I may say something that I would want to correct later, because as the subject comes up my memory may be refreshed.

Q. Were there any postal drafts presented to the jury?—A. Now, I should say not; the papers that I have mentioned comprised all that he showed us, I think; I think there was a file of three papers.

Q. Were there any checks or promissory notes?—A. I think there was a file of three papers; whether they were checks or notes or drafts, I cannot remember; but they were some evidences of a claim; my impression is that they were checks; there may have been a draft among them, or they may have been two checks and a note.

Q. Was there any evidence produced as to the time of payment—as to whether they were barred by the statute of limitations?

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. (Interposing). State when they were drawn?—A. I could not tell you; I haven't the remotest idea now when they were drawn.

Q. Upon whom were they drawn?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. To whom were they payable?—A. I think the checks were drawn on Mr. Walsh, as a banker, by Senator Kellogg. That is my impression.

Q. What were the amounts?—A. I think that altogether they amounted to about $4,000—the whole of the evidence that he presented of payments.

Q. Can you not give the dates?—A. No; I cannot give the dates.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Can you state whether the date was a special subject of consideration, so as to determine whether the act was barred by the statute of limitations?—A. I suppose the dates were noticed; I noticed the dates at the time, I am sure, because I saw the papers; but that our attention was specially called to that point by any one, I do not now remember.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. What became of those checks and telegrams after you got through with them?—A. Mr. Walsh took them away with him.

Q. Have you ever seen them since?—A. No.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Was Mr. Walsh fully examined concerning the subject-matter to which those papers which were submitted to you referred?—A. I considered that he was. I thought the examination was exhaustive.

Q. Who made that examination?—A. Mr. Bliss.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It is well known that the grand jury failed to find a bill?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, was that failure the result of insufficient evidence, or did it depend upon the question of the statute of limitations?—A. The statute of limitations was not considered by us. We acted entirely upon the testimony—the evidence.

Q. Was Mr. Price introduced before you as a witness at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did his name appear in any of the papers?—A. Mr. Bliss had a large bundle or trunk-full of papers, and Mr. Price's name was in them very generally. There were contracts and papers pertaining to expedited routes, the name of which I do not remember; but Mr. Price's name was involved, I know.

Q. Do you know whether Price's name was mentioned in those notes or drafts?—A. I think the checks were drawn by Mr. Kellogg, as I have said, on Mr. Walsh as a banker, and I do not think Mr. Price's name was on those checks at all. I am almost certain that it was not. I haven't any recollection of Price's connection with them.

Q. And you do not remember that Mr. Price had anything to do with the papers that were before you?—A. Those that were in Mr. Walsh's possession, do you mean?

Q. I mean any papers that were before you.—A. No; I don't remember that Mr. Price's name was associated with those that Mr. Walsh had. I spoke of his name being on papers in Mr. Bliss's possession.

Q. Those related to his contracts for carrying the mails and to expedition?—A. Yes, sir; matters upon which he had been already indicted.

Q. Were any drafts presented drawn by Price?—A. There may have been. I think there was some evidence of indebtedness that was in a check among Mr. Walsh's papers, but its character I cannot remember at all, and whether Price was associated with it I cannot tell.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Do you mean some papers other than this telegram?—A. Some drafts—a time draft or a note.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was the object of presenting those papers?—A. They were brought out in Mr. Walker's testimony.

Q. For what purpose were they presented?—A. In considering the charge against Senator Kellogg as having received the money on these checks—that is, received money through Walsh, on the expedition of some mail contract.

Q. Did the evidence go to that extent; was their evidence to show payment of that kind?—A. There was testimony of that kind.

Q. Did that evidence connect it with the expedition of star-route contracts?—A. It pertained to the expedition of star-route contracts.

Q. Then, while there was evidence tending to show payments on account of such contracts, was that evidence deemed sufficient to warrant the jury in finding an indictment?—A. The testimony that was presented was not sufficient to warrant an indictment; I am speaking now from the result of the grand jury's action.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Was there any evidence of any misconduct or attempt to conceal or suppress evidence on the part of anybody representing the United States Government in that matter of inquiry before you?—A. No suppression that we could suspect. We could not suspect any suppression of evidence or testimony. We were promised on Friday that Mr. Price would be there Saturday almost to a certainty, but he did not come. I suppose, however, that the Government attorneys were not to blame for that.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Who made that promise?—A. Mr. Bliss.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Do you know why Price did not come?—A. I do not.

Q. Was any reason given?—A. Simply that he did not come. We understood that he was to come, but, as a matter of fact, he did not come.

Q. Do you know where Mr. Price was at that time?—A. I do not.

Q. Was he under arrest?—A. No. My opinion is that he was in Canada at that time. I think Mr. Bliss said that he had, until recently, been in Canada, but that he (Bliss) had learned, through a respectable source, that he would be there the next day.

Q. But he was not there?—A. He was not there.

Q. Was there any evidence that came to your knowledge directly or indirectly that anybody, in behalf of anybody charged with crime, or in behalf of the Government, attempted to influence improperly the action of the grand jury?—A. No, sir.

Q. There has been a good deal said about the jurymen in this District. What sort of a grand jury was that of which you were foreman?—A. Yes, sir. Well, I believe we were drawn in the regular way. That grand jury had been organized, I think, or had been drawn any way, and then when they were wanted by the court for this case they found there was not a sufficient number of the members in town. It was in the middle of summer, and a good many of them were inaccessible, and several tallymen were ordered to complete the panel.

Q. Do you remember how many?—A. I believe it was five or six. I don't know that I ever knew how many, but I think that was the number.

Q. What was the general character of that grand jury for respectability? The grand jury are not on trial, of course, but there has been a good deal said in the public prints in regard to the various bodies here that have tried to investigate this star-route matter, and I would like to have it appear what kind of men these grand jurors were.—A. Well, leaving out myself, they were a very respectable class of men, I assure you. I guess that they were strictly a business body; I think that all of them were engaged in legitimate business in town.

Q. Can you name some prominent citizens who were on that grand jury?—A. There was Mr. Stephenson, of Stephenson Bros.; Mr. Ross, the tobacconist; Mr. Johnston, secretary of the Howard University; Mr. Keyworth, the grocer; Mr. Sempken, Mr. George Truesdell, Mr. Edmonston, the grocer; Mr. Henry Willard, —.

Q. I guess you have named enough to give the jury a color of respectability.

The WITNESS. As you have drawn the "color line" [laughter], I might say that there were three colored members.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was any evidence submitted to the grand jury there that was not introduced by Mr. Bliss?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there a book brought into the grand-jury room containing testimony in regard to a contested election case between Messrs. Spofford and Kellogg?—A. Some of the jury asked about that book, and as the duties of a grand jurymen were rather fresh to me, I asked him if it would be proper for me to send for it, and he told me it would be, and I made a requisition on the Congressional Library for the book, and it was brought in the next morning.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. That testimony, as I understand, had some reference to the credibility of Mr. Walsh as a witness?—A. Well, I looked it over and I did not see that it had anything in the world to do with what we were examining Mr. Walsh about, and when we were through with the testimony on the case Mr. Walsh spoke of the book, and I said, "There is nothing there that interests you or me"; and I think he misunderstood me, because he seemed a little impetuous about it, and Mr. Bliss right away said that he thought it was only fair to Mr. Walsh that he should be allowed to make an explanation, and I said, "Certainly, if he wants to make an explanation, but I don't see that there is anything there that interests him or the jury, or that has anything to do with Mr. Walsh's testimony here, calling it in question in any way."

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was there an extract read from that book before the grand jury or in the presence of the grand jury?—A. There might have been at that time in making this explanation by Mr. Bliss.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. Who suggested to you that that book had better be got?

Mr. STEWART. He did not say that anybody did.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE (to the witness). I am asking you.—A. Some member of the jury.

Q. Do you remember who?—A. Well, I would not answer if I did.

Q. You would not answer if you did?—A. No; but I do not remember.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. But you did apply to Mr. Bliss about it and he said it was proper to get it?—A. Yes; I asked him if it was proper to send for it, and he said it was.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. What was the object of getting the book? What reason did the man give for suggesting it?—A. Well, it seemed that there had been a Senate investigation, and I don't remember that any reason was given at the time the requisition was made further than that such an investigation had been carried on in a contested election case; I don't think that explanation was made at the time, but my impression is that the grand jurymen thought that Mr. Walsh's testimony before us conflicted with the testimony that he had given in the Senate investigation.

Q. Did Mr. Bliss ask any questions of Mr. Walsh tending to bring out that fact before the jury?—A. Not until this examination which Mr. Walsh had requested.

Q. Did he then ask any questions of the witnesses tending to show that he had testified differently before the Senate committee?—A. Oh, no; there was no effort on the part of Mr. Bliss to show that Mr. Walsh had given testimony in that room in conflict with the testimony that he had given before the Senate committee, and which was published in the book; and it would be stretching a point very much to attempt it. I looked at the testimony in the book and passed it by, because it did not apply at all to what we were considering.

Q. Then what was the object of bringing this book into the grand-jury room?—A. The jurymen evidently thought there was a conflict until the book was brought in—that Mr. Walsh was testifying differently before us from the way he had testified before the Senate committee.

Q. Then the object was to discredit the testimony of the witness?—A. To discredit the testimony of the witness, doubtless—at least, to inform the jury rather, I should say.

Q. Did you in that grand-jury room hear Mr. Bliss say that it was a very serious matter to indict a Senator of the United States?—A. Well, I don't think he said it was a very serious matter. He certainly said it was a serious matter.

Q. Did he say that before the grand jury?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you give all that he said in that connection?—A. I could not, but I remember that language. I would not attempt to repeat the conversation going with it.

Q. I should like to know the connection in which the statement was made; was it before or after the evidence was in?—A. Well, I don't think I remember sufficiently. I do not think I would remember that language but for the fact that there has been so much said about it. I have seen it in the prints. I think Mr. Walsh made the statement in the Tribune a few months or a few weeks afterwards that such an expression was used, and it having been then brought to my mind, I remembered it.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Was that expression made in the presence of Mr. Walsh?—A. I suppose so. I think it was during the testimony.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. It was made before your deliberations as to whether you would or would not find an indictment?—A. Yes, sir; before our deliberations.

Q. You say you cannot remember the language of the conversation in which that statement was made. Can you give the substance of it, and tell how the subject came up?—A. No; I don't remember the connection, and I would not remember the language only for it being brought up so soon afterwards.

By the CHAIRMAN:

After you had heard the evidence did you ask the opinion of the district attorney as to whether it was sufficient to find an indictment upon, or did he give any opinion?—A. No, sir; I did not ask him and he did not give any opinion.

Q. Did he make any suggestions as to the sufficiency of the evidence?—A. No further than his great apparent anxiety to get Mr. Price there, and his anxiety that we should consider Price's testimony. He was confidant that Mr. Price would be there, and he seemed exceedingly anxious to have him there.

By Mr. FYAN :

Q. Did he make any remark to the effect that it would be necessary to have Mr. Price there in order to find an indictment?—A. No, sir; not as broad as that; nor I don't think he intimated that.

Q. Did he convey any intimation to you to that effect by his declarations?—A. Not that it would be necessary to have Price there, but he seemed to be exceedingly anxious that Mr. Price should be there.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Did he say whether the evidence that he hoped to produce from the examination of Mr. Price was necessary to make out a case?—A. Well I think he said it would be "a clincher," or something like that. My impression at the time was that he wanted Mr. Price's testimony in order to make up the case; that it was necessary. I might have drawn that inference, though, because I thought it was necessary; or I might have drawn it from the manner in which Mr. Bliss said it; I don't know.

Q. Then you drew from his manner that it was necessary to have Price's testimony to make out a case?—A. No; I say I believe at the time he thought it was. Whether I was influenced in that by my own opinion, because I thought it would be necessary, or whether I was influenced by his manner, I do not know; but I certainly thought that he thought so.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE :

Q. Are you willing to say whether or not you submitted your views upon that subject to the balance of your associates?—A. I would not say that.

Q. That is, you are not willing to say whether you did or not?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. You would not say either way?—A. No, sir; I would not give you any of our consultations among ourselves.

Q. Failing, then, to obtain the presence of Mr. Price, what became of the case so far as Mr. Bliss was concerned?—A. Well, on Saturday we came together expecting to find Mr. Price there, and, he not being there, after deliberating, we went down to court and reported that we had considered everything that had been brought before us, and had made no presentments. That was on Saturday about 1 o'clock, I suppose.

Q. Did Mr. Bliss make any statements to the jury on that day as to the reason for Mr. Price's failure to attend?—A. Simply that he did not understand it.

By Mr. FYAN :

Q. After the evidence was all in, and you commenced deliberating, Mr. Bliss was not present, was he?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Do you know whether any member of that grand jury was approached by outside parties representing either the Government or the accused, in order to prevent an indictment being found?—A. I haven't any idea that anybody was approached. I never heard an intimation of it, and I know nothing about it.

Q. You heard of nothing at the time that caused you to suspect anything of that kind?—A. No; nothing.

Q. Did that same grand jury assemble again in October?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was early in October.

Q. Were any star-route cases brought to the attention of the grand jury at that term of the court?—A. No.

Q. How long were you in session?—A. Until December.

Q. From what part of October until what part of December?—A. Well, without having anything more than a recollection—I have not consulted the records at all—I think we were called together in the first or early in the second week in October, and ran along in session until the first week in December.

Q. During that time who appeared before the grand jury to represent the United States?—A. The assistant district attorneys, Mr. Taggart, usually, and the other assistant, I don't remember the name.

Q. Did all those cases relate to ordinary criminal offenses in the District of Columbia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And not to star-route cases?—A. Not to star-route cases.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 10, 1884.

JOHN A. WALSH sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. I was thirty-eight years old last November; I reside in New York; I am a speculator.

Q. Were you at one time a contractor in the star-route service?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that connection you may state what claims you had against the Government, what expedition, if any, you obtained on your service, and what payments were made to you on that account.—A. I will commence by stating that I became a contractor through discounting drafts for the firm of McDonough, Kirk & Co.

Q. On what route or routes was the contract that you got?—A. On route 40101, from Santa Fé to Prescott.

Q. Were you interested in any other routes as a contractor?—A. Later on I was; but the interest was really in relation to the same route.

Q. Just explain your connection with the Government in relation to that route 40101.—A. Well, sir; I, in the course of my business, was applied to by the firm of McDonough, Kirk & Co. to discount some drafts for them, which I did. Later on they asked for still more money, telling me they had been awarded additional service. They had just then been awarded the contract on the route from Santa Fé to Prescott. They told me further, that they expected to have the service increased; that is to say, the service expedited and the pay increased. They dwelt at great length upon that, and represented that it would require considerable money. I told them I was willing to advance the money if I felt reasonably sure of being secured in my advances. They said that there would be no sort of doubt about that; that the service on the route from Santa Fé to Prescott would undoubtedly be expedited and the pay increased. They told me that if I had any doubt about it I might go to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General and inquire of him. I said I certainly would have to go to him, because the amount was too large for me to take any risk about it, and the pay on the route as it stood, of course, would not justify any further advances.

Q. State what amounts you had advanced already.—A. At that time perhaps I had discounted warrants or postal drafts amounting to $4,000 or $5,000, and the contractors represented that they wanted a very much larger sum, as they did.

Q. How much more money did they ask?—A. It really amounted to $36,000 before I got through with it. I went to Mr. Brady, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, and told him that these gentlemen were very impecunious and wanted more money, and I said to him that it would not be advisable for me to give them more money unless there was some show that their pay would be increased. He said there would be no doubt about it; that I could loan them money with perfect safety, that they were reputable contractors, and, generally, that I would be safe, he thought, in advancing to them. I accordingly did so. To show you that I went into this entirely as a commercial transaction, I may state that I went to the Sixth Auditor's office to ascertain the condition of McDonough, Kirk, & Co., in that office; that is to say, to ascertain what drafts they had on file, and then I gave them this additional advance which amounted to $36,000. Here [producing them] are the notes, the chattel mortgages, &c., of McDonough, Kirk, & Co. to me.

Q. Those papers which you now exhibit to the committee are evidences of the indebtedness of those parties to you?—A. Yes, sir; amounting to $36,000.

Q. Upon what were those chattel mortgages given?—A. On the stock of the different mail routes that they had, and on such personal property as they had; further than that, they gave me all these vouchers as you see, these postal drafts, which were turned over to me in order that I might draw the pay.

Q. What do you mean by postal drafts?—A. Drafts on the pay of the contractor, anticipating his pay; when he comes and borrows money, he says to the banker, "I will give you my draft on the Post-Office Department on such and such a route; you file that in the Sixth Auditor's office, and when the pay comes due the Sixth Auditor will pay you to the amount of the draft."

Q. And you took postal drafts sufficient to cover the amounts which you advanced to those parties?—A. More than that; it ran through their pay for a long time; they did all that lay in their power to secure me. Further than that, I did something that perhaps has never been done in any other case in the Post-Office Department; I asked these men to write to the Postmaster-General, saying in effect that I had loaned them money, and that they would not sublet their contracts without my consent. Ordinarily, you know, the Department allows a contractor to sublet on application to the Postmaster-General; but I asked them to write to the Postmaster-General in the way I have stated in order to further protect myself, and you will see by this letter which I now show you that the Postmaster-General acknowledged the receipt of their communication, and said that "they shall not be permitted to sublet without my consent."

Q. Were your advances made on any other route besides 40101?—A. On all the service that these men had.

Q. The contractor in this postal draft which I have in my hand is George L. McDonough?—A. Yes, sir; in that case.

Q. Was he the original contractor?—A. Well, the firm held contracts in the name of George McDonough personally, instead of in the firm name. Sometimes the contracts were in the name of U. E. Fisher. However, they were all partnership assets and considered as such, and hence it made no matter in whose name the contract was, as each party made this stipulation not to sublet without my consent. Here is a letter from E. L. Fisher, who also had some contracts. I call your attention to this to show you that my transactions with the Department were entirely legitimate and of a business nature. Mr. Bliss was aware of all these facts. The matter ran along for some time until there occurred a falling out in this firm, which was composed of McDonough, Kirk (a man living here), Jerome J. Hinds, and U. E. Fisher. Hinds seemed to be the aggressive man of the number. He fancied that he was not being dealt with properly. In point of fact they had no money, and having obtained from me the large amount which I have stated, I told them that I could not go any further; that they had no means at all which would justify me in going further, and I said to them, "Really, you had better look around and see if you can get some banker here to take this indebtedness and relieve me." Mr. McDonough said he was utterly at a loss to find any one, that he had applied to many people, but could not find any one who would take the matter off my hands; but he said he had some hopes through a firm known as Parker & Cluggage, a firm of mail contractors. He said that Mr. Parker, of that firm, or his representative, would be in the city in a few days, and he thought they would take the contract. You will remember that these contracts were in the name of George L. McDonough, especially route 40101, not in the name of the firm. Mr. McDonough came to me one day and said that the arrangements were perfected with Parker & Cluggage through their agent (a sort of a lawyer, not living here, however), who would pay me my money next day. I said I was very much obliged. That night Mr. Hinds arrived in the city, and went around to the various parties in interest and served notice on them that in case Parker & Cluggage bought the contracts there was to be war; that he, Hinds, was being left out entirely, and was being badly treated, and that there would be war—which meant an investigation.

Q. Was that Jerome J. Hinds?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Hinds undoubtedly imagined that he was aggrieved, and perhaps he was; I don't know. At all events Parker & Cluggage declined next day to have anything to do with the matter; they said that Hinds was aggressive, and that they preferred not to get into trouble, and they declined to carry out the transaction. Accordingly McDonough told me that the arrangement was abandoned. I then asked him what he would do. I said to him, "You understand my position; I simply want my money, and I believe you want to pay me." He said that he did. I added, "Of course you cannot get any further money from me." He said, "Well, Walsh, the only thing I can do to secure you is to turn over the contracts to you; I will make you the subcontractor." I expressed assent to that, and I was accordingly made the subcontractor on the route from Santa Fé to Prescott. Mr. Hinds at once announced that there would be war to the knife, and commenced operations through his attorney, Mr. Nathaniel Wilson. He served notice on me that he wanted $15,000 for his share. The contract price of the service on that route was then $74,500 per annum. These men seemed to have no sort of an idea of figures or finance; they really seemed to believe that the contract was a bonanza—Hinds more than anybody else. I, of course, declined to comply with his demand. I was approached by several people who told me that I did not understand the business, and that I had better pay Hinds. I said, "Inasmuch as the concern owes me $35,000 or $40,000 already, I am at a loss to understand why I should pay Mr. Hinds anything." They said, "Well, Walsh, you don't understand the business; Hinds will compel an investigation."

Q. With whom was this conversation?—A. With Mr. Stephen B. Elkins and a man named Kerens, particularly. They came to my office as friends of Mr. Brady and tried to impress upon me that I had better deal in a politic way with Hinds. I told them that it had gone beyond all policy, that it was a matter of per cent., that I did not see how I would "get out," any way, and that if I was going to lose, I might as well lose then as at any other time, and I said I would not pay Hinds. There ensued a great deal of trouble. Hinds commenced to attack the Post-Office Department and to attack Brady, and he really threw them all into the greatest state of excitement. However, there was nothing for me to do but to look on. Mr. Hinds threw all sorts of obstacles in the way. He would send telegrams and letters to Santa Fé representing that he was going to carry the day, that he was backed by the contractors, and that Walsh would be annihilated. While I was performing the service, and while it was being performed as well as it could be and as well as service out there is performed in the best times, notwithstanding that fact, the Department, moved, as I have always felt, by the aggressiveness of Hinds, and by fear of him, declared McDonough a defaulting contractor. Mr. Wilson was at the Department every day with Mr. Hinds, his client, and with Kirk. There seemed to be a complete division of the old firm; Fisher and McDonough on one side, and Hinds and Kirk on the other, and between the two sides they proceeded to grind me out; which they did quite effectually. I stood by and witnessed the process. I said to the Department, "The service is being performed, and there is no occasion whatever for annulling that contract. Of course there is a little disturbance there, but it will come out all right." However, the contract was annulled, and the route was put back to the original price, $13,000 per annum—not to exceed that; service three times a week. It was then tendered to the bondsmen, in accordance with the law. The bondsmen in that case were Kirk, one of the partners, and a gentleman named Gleason, a Floridian, I think. They were tendered the service. Of course that was a result that they did not desire. They did not want the contract at $13,300 a year; so, after some conference—indeed, after some time had elapsed, two or three weeks, I think—they acknowledged that they could not proceed with it. I had my stock on the route, and I said to the Department, "I will carry the mail pending this trouble"; and accordingly a temporary contract was made with me. I do not know but perhaps there was a total suspension of the service for awhile pending the Kirk and Gleason effort. However, this temporary contract was made with me. Later, I declined to carry the mail any longer at that price, saying that I did not want it at any such figure. Then, in accordance with the regulations of the Department, they went up the list. In such cases the contract goes up what they term, technically, "the list." In this case McDonough was the lowest bidder originally at the public letting under advertisement, and the next lowest bidder was J. B. Price at $19,000. These, of course, are matters of public record. I noticed that the next highest bid was $19,000, and I wanted to save myself if I could, so I went to Brady and said, "Mr. Brady, you are fully cognizant of all the circumstances surrounding my loaning money to these men; indeed, I was moved to loan to them largely by your representations in regard to them. Now, what can be done for me?" "Well," said Mr. Brady, "Walsh, under the law I will allow you to have the contract if you bid lower than the next highest bidder, who is Price." I said, "Then I will take the contract at $18,500;" which was $500, under Price's bid. I asked Mr. Brady what would be the chances for expedition and increase, representing, of course, as well as I could, what occasion there was for expediting and increasing the service; indeed, I felt that if there had been a necessity a short time before for daily service on that route, that necessity would necessarily increase as the railroad approached Santa Fé. Mr. Brady gave me no satisfaction. He said, "You will have to use your own judgment about that. If there is any necessity for an increase of the service, it will be increased; but you must use your own judgment." He was vague and unsatisfactory. To be sure, as soon as I got the contract, Mr. Hinds proceeded at once to show that it was a very infamous piece of business. He said that it was all wrong, and he began to resume his tomahawk and battle-ax, and paint, greatly to the terror of the Department. I noticed that Mr. Hinds had the entrée and could get any information he wanted. He knew a great deal better than I did what was going on on the route. He learned it through the Department. Shortly afterwards I instructed my agent out there to endeavor to get up petitions asking for the restoration of daily service on that route. He did so, and the petitions began to come in. I would speak to Brady about the matter occasionally, but I got no particular satisfaction. In the mean time the season progressed, and we were getting toward the month of July, 1879. I was spoken to by Mr. S. P. Brown, a friend of Mr. Brady's, the same gentleman who had seemed to act as an intermediary between Mr. Hinds and Mr. Brady in the matter of the increase that was awarded on this route in the first instance. Hinds, you will understand, was threatening war during all this time—threatening that he would have Congress investigate the matter of that contract, and charging that he had paid Brady $16,000 for the increase of service, and that I was cognizant of it to the extent that I had advanced the money; that I had paid $8,000 on his draft to S. P. Brown, which was true, but I knew nothing about what they were doing with the money. I simply paid Mr. Brown as I would have paid anybody else. Having agreed to advance the money to these parties, I paid it out as they directed. In addition to that, I was also aware that Mr. Brown held about $8,000 of postal drafts on their routes, because the contractors came to me and asked me to relinquish my security to the extent of $8,000. I asked them for what, and they told me it was to secure Brown. Well, I thought I had ample security outside of that, and I let them have those drafts. Now, you will understand, perhaps, why these men were afraid of Hinds. At any rate, I was told that there would be no use in my expecting to get any increase of service whatever unless Mr. Hinds was placated. "Well," I said, "gentlemen, this is astounding. This comes back to where I was before. If I owe Hinds, then I owe McDonough and Kirk and Fisher; yet here are their notes to me for $36,000, and now I am asked to pay one of that firm a large sum of money to placate him." They said, "Yes, that that was the English of it; that that was what I would have to do or else nothing could be done in my case."

Q. Who told you that?—A. S. P. Brown; he told me that that must be done; I finally felt that there was a good deal of force in that view, and I concluded that I must do something, so I sent for Mr. Hinds; he came to see me in accordance with my request; I asked him what he wanted me to do; he said he wanted to be paid. I said, "Mr. Hinds, I do not owe you any money." "Well," said he, "Walsh, it isn't worth while discussing that; you have had experience of what I can do, and if you want to go on and get your money, just make up your mind to do that, or else you will certainly get left." I said, "I rather think I shall from what I have observed so far, and I think the chances are pretty likely that I shall get left anyhow. Evidently," said I, "the Philistines are in the majority." "Well," said Hinds, "I am no Philistine." Said I, "Put it in figures: What do you want me to do?" Said he, "I want $20,000." Said I, "Egad! it is $36,000 now; $20,000 more will make it $56,000; the pay is $74,000 a year, and the contract has three years to run. That is pretty, bad, Hinds, and I shall never see daylight." "Well," said he, "you are satisfied that $74,000 is no pay for a daily mail on that route, are you not?" "Yes," said I, "I am satisfied of that; you men never knew what you were doing when you took that contract. Of course the price seemed to you a pretty big sum, but you never considered the disbursements. Now, what do you think—can I rely upon getting pay commensurate with the disbursements?" He said yes; that that was only a matter of a little work. I do not want to do any injustice to Mr. Hinds. When he becomes impressed with an idea, it becomes a religion with him, and I have no doubt that he religiously believed that I owed him that $20,000. Of course it is difficult to understand how he could have arrived at that conclusion; but I have no doubt that he believed it. Well, the result was that we made an arrangement in writing, which I will read:

UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE, — AGENCY,
Washington, M'ch 28, 1879.

In the event of the service on mail route No. 40101, between Santa Fé and Prescott, being given to me by the P. O. Dept. for the present unexpired term of contract at $18,000 or $18,500 per annum for a tri-weekly mail and schedule of 150 hours, and if this same service be increased to a daily service and a schedule of ninety hours, with an annual pay of $98,000 or $100,000, I agree to pay Mrs. C. B. Hinds the sum of twenty thousand dolls. This am't to be paid in such sums and at such times as may be agreed upon between myself and J. J. Hinds, it being understood that on my part I do the best I can in the matter, and so arrange payments as will aid the said Hinds and not embarrass or inconvenience myself. [You will see that it was quite an elastic agreement; I was to do "as well as I could."] Any money paid J. J. Hinds is to be credited on this side of this contract or obligation.

On the back are the following credits:

May 28. Received of Jno. A. Walsh the sum of one hundred dollars.

J. J. HINDS.

On the back of this paper is the following indorsement:

April, '79. Received on the within one hundred dollars.

June, '79. Received check of Lewis Johnson & Co. for $40.

June 20, 1879. By cash, $25.

June 28, 1879. By cash, $10.

Received this July 23, 1879, $2,000.00 on within.

Oct. 23, 1879. Received on the within $1,000.00.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. Was the pay increased?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent?—A. One hundred and thirty-four thousand dollars or $135,000.

Q. Who got it increased?—A. I did.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Were those credits acknowledged by Hinds over his signature?—A. No, sir; but it was in the body of the agreement that the credits should be made on the reverse side of the original. After having agreed to pay Hinds there seemed to be no difficulty. The papers in the case, so to speak, the petitions or applications for increase of service, signed by citizens of Santa Fé and Prescott, and all along the route, seemed to work the desired result. I was asked to make an affidavit in regard to the number of horses and men required to perform the service. I did so, and I will state here that the correctness of that affidavit has never been questioned by the Post-Office Department. There has never been the allegation made against it that there were not as many men and horses on the route as it called for, a charge which has been quite generally made in regard to the affidavits of contractors on the star routes. I made the affidavit, and the service was then increased to a daily mail, and the contract awarded to me at $135,000 per annum, in round figures.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How long after you made that agreement with Hinds was it that you obtained that expedition and increase of pay?—A. They were almost simultaneous.

By Mr. FYAN:

Q. With whom else did you divide besides Hinds?—A. No one else.

Q. Did you get it all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much did you pay Hinds a year?—A. The credits show.

Q. Is that all?—A. That is all. The matter did not go very far. You will see that it petered out very quickly. Mr. Hinds went out to Santa Fé, not in relation to my contract, but about other business. He asked me to keep the fact quiet; that he had any interest in the contract; and of course I had no object in letting it be known so I said nothing about it. You will see that this contract was in the name of his wife. Mr. Hinds went out to Santa Fé in relation to some business of his own, and while there he did all he could to aid me; he behaved very nicely in the matter, and I paid him as he went along, as indicated by these credits. An investigation ensued. Mr. Hinds had made so much fuss, so much row, that he had gone a little too far, and the whirlwind began to be reaped. The newspapers commenced an attack upon this star-route system, and notably upon this route 40,101. It was held up as a sort of bête noir of the whole business. It was assumed by all the newspaper men that it was a fraud. I state the facts just as they were. It was treated as the very head and front of all the offending. The investigation commenced, and I was very early subpoenaed. I appeared before the subcommittee of which Mr. Blackburn was the chairman. I went into the matter and explained my relation to the contract, just as I am doing here now. I said to them in substance: "Gentlemen, here are my vouchers; here are my disbursements; you can look at them for yourselves; they show what I expended from quarter to quarter. I tell you you are making a mistake in investigating this route. It may appear to you as a monumental fraud, but I think you are turning your efforts in a wrong direction. I think you have taken perhaps the only route that will bear investigation." Of course there was no attention paid to that. Nobody looked at the vouchers at all; perhaps it was irksome. I said, "Here are the vouchers; either they are correct or they are forgeries. If they are forgeries, here are the names of the individuals; please send for them and examine them." That was pretty comprehensive. I put the case very clearly and plainly, and the result was that so far as that route was concerned we never heard any more about its being a fraud, and the newspaper gentlemen very frankly said they had made a mistake, and had taken up the wrong route.

Well, after this investigation I was approached by a mail contractor named Chase Andrews, a young man formerly a clerk in the Post-Office Department, who had become a contractor and a sort of an attorney, devoting his energies and intellect specially to the Sixth Auditor's office—really a very bright young man. He called upon me and said, "Mr. Walsh, here is a list." Well, I was glad to see any list, and I said I was favored. "You see," said he, "that you are down here for $8,000." I said, "Favored again." He said, "Yes, you are favored again." I said, "What is that for, Andrews?" "Oh, well," said he, "Congressional business. You don't suppose we got that appropriation through for fun?" I said, "I do not know. I was examined very largely and exhaustively up there, and I didn't notice that anybody asked me for any money. My route was particularly the subject of investigation, but I saw no indication of anybody wanting any money." "Oh, well," said he, "if you don't understand it, let it drop. The old man will want to see you."

Q. Who was "the old man"?—A. Mr. Brady. A few weeks after that Mr. Brady sent me word that he would like to see me. I went to see him. Said he, "What are you going to do about that, Walsh?" "About what?" said I. Said he, "What Andrews spoke to you about." I tried to turn it off jocularly, though it was quite a serious thing to me, and I said laughingly, "Really, Andrews was not in earnest, was he?" "You do not think so?" said Brady. Said I, "How could he be? Eight thousand dollars! Egad, I haven't anything to pay $8,000 for. I am trying to get out." "Well," said Brady, "that's all right."

It was not long after that that an order was issued on my route cutting off one trip. I thought I understood that. It reduced the pay about $19,000 or $20,000 a year. The next order that came was one transferring the terminus from Santa Fé to Albuquerque, changing the terminus arbitrarily, and saying that thereby the distance was reduced 80 miles. I went up to the Department and said, "Gentlemen, the distance is not reduced 80 miles. The records will show that when the terminus was transferred from Albuquerque to Santa Fé the distance was thereby increased 35 miles, and it seems very clear that the same measure of distance ought to work when the terminus is transferred back from Santa Fé to Albuquerque." "Oh, no;" they said, "that was a great wrong to the Government when it was held that the distance was only 35 miles, and now they were going to right all those wrongs, and the distance was 80 miles." That change threw my whole line into the utmost disorder. The time was very fast and the men could not make it, and reports began to come in from the different offices, "This mail is behind six hours;" "This mail is behind nine hours;" "This mail is behind twelve hours." I was notified of that, and I said, "Of course the mail is behind, when you hold the distance to be decreased is 80 miles when in fact it is decreased only 35 miles." They said, "Well, you go to work and establish that fact, Mr. Walsh." I said, "I will establish it, and establish it by the records of the Department. I will establish it by the records when Barlow & Sanderson had that same route." They said, no, no; that the world was progressing and distances had changed, and I must not attempt to lean upon that record; I must proceed to prove and establish my case. Well, after three or four months I did succeed in getting them to admit that the distance was decreased only 50 miles, instead of 80, but I never could get them to allow the other 15.

Matters assumed a serious aspect. In the mean time I had had transactions with General Brady in reference to money that I had loaned him, discounting his notes, some of which he had paid. In the matter of these Price drafts for $20,000, one-half was placed to his credit.

I suppose you want me to make no reference to the other gentleman who got the other half?

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE:

Q. You regard yourself as estopped from stating that by the injunction put upon you by the committee?—A. Yes, sir; I do not want to evade the ruling of the committee at all. In fact, I have not brought a Kellogg paper with me here, lest I should be tempted; but I have no desire to go into that matter at all unless you wish me to testify about it and bring the papers; if you do, of course I will take pleasure in doing so.

As I have said, I felt that things were getting into a serious aspect and culminating. Mr. Hinds was annoying me for money. I told him I was being absolutely wrecked. I said to him, "I cannot pay you any money; I am losing money, and you know it." "Well," said he, "Walsh, be frank with me. Tell me whether all there is for you to get your money out of is this route." I replied, "That is all, Hinds." Said he, "There is nothing else between you and Brady?" I said, "I give you my word of honor that there is not." Said he, "Have you no temporary service in somebody else's name? Isn't Brady making up these losses to you some other way?" Said I, "I give you my word of honor that he is not." "Well, then," said Hinds, "you are being treated harshly; you are being unjustly dealt with, persecuted, and I shall go to war again." So he began to sharpen his battle-ax again, and he went out into the field, with great results, I assure you. These fellows here trembled in their boots when Hinds went upon the war-path. This was about December, 1880. Some time before that he had begun to show impatience. He came to me for money, and I said to him, "Every dollar that you get out of me is absolutely thrown away by me, and nothing but your wants would induce me to let you have any money." "Well," said he, "I will go up and see Brady. I will beard the lion in his den." So he went up to the den, which was near Farragut Square, and they had quite a time there, as it was described to me by Hinds. Brady was going to put him out, and Hinds said he would like to see him do it, and some pleasant little amenities passed between them, and Hinds came away and said that war was declared. I said, "All right; go ahead; I will look on." The war was commenced in a quiet way. The newspaper men began to take an interest in the matter again. However, there was a strong disposition to suppress it. Mr. Brady about that time thought he would like to borrow some more money from me. I thought it was a good time for me to quit. He wanted $23,000 or $24,000, and he was kind enough to offer his note. I will show you his letter making the request. This was some time in December, 1880. I told him that really it was not convenient for me to let him have the money; that I was quite embarrassed. I did not want to tell him plainly that I did not wish to lend it or that I distrusted him, but I told him that things were a little close with me. I have his letter here, the one of which the Herald printed a fac-simile, and which was presented also to the grand jury, though those gentlemen seem to have forgotten it—they forget lots of things. It is the one that is known as "the ginger letter." You see [producing it] that it is pretty well worn. We tried to get it in evidence once or twice, but somehow or other the fates were against us. I will read it:

MY DEAR WALSH: The Chattanooga people send for me to be in New York tomorrow. We propose to make an effort to put it up this week. I am in need of ginger. Can't you loan me your Chattanooga, for which I will give you my obligation for what you paid for it, and also account to you for any profits made. [Humanitarian, you see.] With that I can raise what I need to help me in the movement. The trouble with me is this: My means are in American Union Telegraph, and the bonds and stock are not yet issued. When issued, will give me $120,000 or $130,000, but this may not be for sixty or ninety days, and hence not available. My telephone bonds are already up as collateral, and, with buying newspapers and mines (rather part of one, Pelican and Dives), mining, the lumber business, &c., I am a little cramped. Help me if you can. It will be helping yourself if we succeed, of which I have no doubt.

Q. What is the date of that letter?—A. It has no date.

Q. Do you know when it was written?—A. I can approximate it. On December 11, 1880, I gave my check to Winslow, Lanier & Co., in New York, in favor of Hatch & Foote, for $24,700.50, in payment for 300 shares of Chattanooga stock. I happened to be in the office of Hatch & Foote one day, having called there to see Mr. Brady, and looking at the "ticker" I noticed that Chattanooga manifested a little life, and inasmuch as some of the "lambs" had some money, and would be apt to put it up a point or two, I thought I would buy a few shares—not on a margin. I do not like to buy on a margin, because the chances are that if the market does not go down upon you the broker will fail. I said, "I have $25,000 or $30,000 in bank, and I will buy 300 shares," and I gave the order. Brady heard me giving the order. I said, "Make the order cash," and when the clerk came in and reported the purchase, I sat down and wrote my check. Brady remarked, "You are solid; you are an investor." I said, "Yes; this is for permanent investment." The young man came back and gave me the stock, and I put it in my pocket and went off. You see, therefore, that Mr. Brady knew that I had the stock, and that is the stock he refers to and wants to borrow in this letter I have just read. The letter was written perhaps a week or ten days after I had bought the stock—this letter in which he expresses a desire to borrow it. I called to see him, and explained that it was really difficult for me to lend anything at that time; that I was rather inclined to be a borrower wherever I could succeed in effecting a loan. [Laughter.] He evidently did not like my talk. Mr. Brady's manner is not particularly pleasing at best, and when he is dissatisfied he is positively morose. "Well," said he, "that stock will go to the deuce if I do not come to the rescue." I said to myself, "Then I shall not make the one or two points that I expected to make." However, I did make one or two points on that stock, after keeping it five or six months.

About the end of December I thought it would be well to have a settlement with Mr. Brady. This attempt of his to get more money out of me I did not like very well, and I thought it would be well to have a settlement, and I made an appointment to meet him at the house of General George A. Sheridan, on E street. It was in Sheridan's name, but, in point of fact, it was Brady's house. I sent a note to him at the Post-Office Department, and he responded. My note was as follows:

DECEMBER 28.

GENERAL: A fire will be made in Sheridan's office at 1 p. m. I wish you would meet me there at that time, or at any time you find convenient.

Yours,

WALSH.

Answer by bearer.

On the reverse side he wrote, "Will be there at 12.30." He came—I might finish the quotation, but I won't. He came and captured the property. It was "abandoned property" in his opinion. He took the notes, and said it was a settlement, that that was an end of the business, and that I certainly never could have assumed for a moment that he was doing these things, increasing service and so on, for any particular amusement. I said, "Well, general, I did not know that you were doing it for amusement, but I thought you were doing it in accordance with the law. I presented petitions for the increase that you gave me." Said he, "Walsh, it is silly to talk about petitions. You have seen enough to know that petitions do not operate unless the fates are propitious. You have sent in a good many petitions to get your service put back to seven times a week. Have you succeeded?" I said, "No, I have not." "Well," said he, "there is an illustration for you that petitions are sometimes ineffective. Now," said he, "for you to assume that I owe you any money is absurd. You never at heart could have believed anything of the kind. You have seen enough to know better than that." I said, "Wherein have I had an opportunity to know better, general?" "Well," said he, "you collected the Price drafts, amounting to $20,000, and you credited me with $10,000 of that. What did you think it meant?" I said, "I never stopped to inquire. It is not part of my business to inquire into other people's business." "Oh, well," said he, "if you didn't understand that you didn't exercise your faculties." "Well," said I, "probably I don't exercise them sufficiently." Said he, "There was the Price draft, $25,000, on the Indianola and Corpus Christi route. Then, too, you affected not to believe that your share of that Congressional assessment was $8,000. Mr. Price did not assume that; Mr. Price paid it." "Well," said I, "general, just favor me with an account. Let us see how we stand. Perhaps I owe you some money." He said that if he figured it down closely he did not doubt that I did. He said, "You found this contract at $74,500 a year." "No," said I, "I found the contract at $18,000 a year." Said he, "Oh, no; McDonough and that crowd had the pay increased to $74,000 per annum. Now, that was paid for." "Yes," said I, "I am painfully aware that it was paid for. It was my money that paid for it. Now, I understand that my money went to Brown." "Yes," said Mr. Brady, "it went to Brown." In the mean time Brown had borrowed a thousand dollars of me in addition to the $8,000 of drafts that McDonough had given him to secure the balance of his $16,000. He never paid that thousand dollars. I sued him and recovered a judgment, but it was returned nulla bona, and it still stands in that way. "Now," said Mr. Brady, "the difference between $74,000 and $135,000 is, in round numbers, $60,000." "Undoubtedly," said I. Said he, "$60,000 per annum for three years, at the rate of 20 per cent. per annum is $36,000, Mr. Walsh, ain't it?" "Undoubtedly," said I. "Your share of the Congressional fund, $8,000, which you seem to forget that you owe, added to $36,000, will make $44,000, won't it?" I said, "Yes, sir." "Now," said he, "I remitted fines in your case amounting to about $6,000." "Well," said I, "those fines were unjustly imposed." Said he, "That's all right; that's all right about the unjust part; I remitted them, didn't I?" I said, "Yes." "Very well," said he, "50 per cent. of those amounts to so much, $3,000." Said I, "General, that is a very comprehensive statement, and it is quite evident that I owe you some money, but do you really think you are going to settle it that way?" Said he, "What other way will you settle it?" "Well," said I, "up here I will settle it in court, but if we lived South, perhaps I might adopt some other remedy." "Well," said he, "you can go to the courts if you want to, but it won't do you any good." "Perhaps it won't," said I, "but I tell you that it will really cost you a good deal of money before you get through." "Oh," said he, "that's all right, Walsh; do your best." "Now," said I, "general, can't you help me out of this? You can do it." Let some of your mail contractors buy me out. They can make money out of the contract. You have told me that I did not understand the business, and I admit that. I admit further that I don't want to understand it. Now, if you will just drop a word to some of those faithful adherents of yours to buy me out, I am willing to get out; I will get out and lose money and call it square." Said he, "That's all right; come round to-morrow." I went around the next day. I did not find him particularly talkative. But a day or two afterwards I received a note as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SIXTH AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY.

MR. WALSH: Will you please call at my room at once, and oblige,

F. B. LILLEY,
Deputy Auditor.

DECEMBER 30, 1881.

I called. Mr. Lilley told me that his father ("Judge" Lilley, the late lamented) wanted to see me; that he had some business with me which would, no doubt, be to my advantage. I said, "Yes, I will call. I would like to see him." In the mean time I went back to my house. All this time I was doing business at 916 F street. I received also the following note:

DEAR SIR: I am to have a final engagement with Jerome J. Hinds at 2 p. m. this day. Would like to see you for a few moments before I go.

Respectfully,

W. LILLEY.

"Well," said I, "what the deuce does he want to see Hinds about for me? I think I have seen Hinds often enough. I don't understand it." At this time I did not know "Judge" Lilley from any other man. I went again up to the Post-Office Department, and I found Mr. Lilley in the hall talking to somebody, and the son came out and introduced me to the father. Old Lilley took me aside, in the most confidential way, into the ante-room of the Sixth Auditor's Office, and said, "I have been up to see Hinds on your part." "Indeed," said I; "who told you to go to him on my part?" "I went up there," said he; "Brady told me to go up there to see Hinds." "On my part?" said I. "Yes," said he, "on your part." Said I, "I am very much obliged to you, but really I am competent to attend to my own affairs. What did you go to see Hinds about on my part?" "Well," said he, "I went up to see what it would take to get that fellow to stop his yawping"—I remember the term very well; "we wanted to stop his yawping, and we thought we would buy you out." "Buy me out?" said I. "Yes," said he, "if you want to sell." "Well," said I, "I do want to sell; there is no question about that." Said he, "I offered Hinds $5,000 if he would stop." "Who is going to pay Hinds?" said I. Said he, "Whoever buys the route." Hinds said afterwards that his wife was present when Lilley came there in company with George F. Brott, who is a very good fellow, too. "Well," said I, "what are you going to give me?" Said he, "I will give $25,000." Said I, "$25,000! My stock cost me about $35,000, and it has not deteriorated any; on the contrary, it is better than when it went out there. I bought my mules in Saint Louis, and they are fine animals, the best that ever went into the Territories, and you fellows ought not to act that way with me. The route stands me $75,000 or $80,000, and it is not abandoned property, and you gentlemen are not going to loot it." "Well," says Mr. Lilley, "there is no disposition to buy the contract at all; nobody wants it." "That is always the case," said I, "when property is for sale." "But," said Lilley, "we want to quiet Hinds; you have got into a great deal of trouble, and you are going to lose all the money you have in this contract; there is going to be a great deal of trouble, and you must expect to lose something." I said, "Yes; I will lose very cheerfully $25,000 or $30,000 and consider that I have made some money if I can get out that way. That brings it back to where I started from. I will take $50,000." "You can't get it," said he. "Very well," said I, "you can't have the contract." Said he, "I guess you will sell out a good deal cheaper." "All right," said I; and we parted. The next gentleman that came after me was Mr. Brott. Hinds kept informing me of the efforts that they were making in his behalf. He did not want to trust them; he wanted money; but to the extent of Mr. Hinds' ability he wanted to aid me. Mr. Brott is a gentleman that I have known for a good many years; I knew him in New Orleans; he came to see me and treated the matter very fairly. He felt disposed to give me the $50,000, and I felt that I was pretty nearly on the eve of getting it. Hinds told me that he thought I would get it; but suddenly there was an interruption. I went up and saw Mr. Brady and talked with him about it. He was inclined to be reticent, but he told me again he thought I had better sell. I said, "I have no doubt of that, but they want to capture it." "Well," said he, "Walsh, you must use your own judgment about it." "All right," said I. I told Brott that I would not take any less than $50,000. I have since learned—that is, Mr. Woodward has learned and has communicated the fact to me—that Brott said that they were ready to pay me the $50,000, and would have paid it, but that he went to Brady, or Lilley went to Brady, and told him of it, and Brady said, "You let him severely alone; don't you go near him; don't ask him any more about his contract; he has been offered enough, and if he don't take it he will wind up by taking nothing." I did not know at the time what was going on. About that time I had come to the conclusion that I could not make any money in Washington, and that perhaps I had better take my chances among the wolves in New York; so I went over there and paid little or no attention to this business, but still went on performing the service as best I could. Brady recommenced his orders against me. I asked permission to sublet the route. That provoked an inquiry on his part as to whom I wanted to sublet to. He evidently wanted to know whether I was going to give it to some of the fraternity. I did not intend to do anything of the kind, and I told him that I proposed to sublet to a gentleman named Leeds. I knew that they did not know Leeds; he was a clerk in a hotel at the time. Then Hinds went to work very assiduously for Brady's scalp. He went to the district attorney here, Mr. Corkhill; he went to the Postmaster-General; he went to the Attorney-General, at that time Mr. Devens. He offered to produce proof of the grossest fraud, especially in the case of the Las Vegas and Albuquerque route, which was under contract to J. B. Price. However, he could get no satisfaction. He employed counsel, Mr. Charles MacLean, of New York. Mr. MacLean, in his turn, went about to each one of those people, but nothing could be done; they could not get anybody to take any notice of it whatever. In the mean time I thought I would try to make Brady feel badly, and I said to him, "It is my opinion that you will be indicted." Said he, "What makes you think so?" "Well," said I, "I think so, judging by what I see in the press and by what Hinds says he is doing." "Oh," said Brady, "that is all right. Don't you concern yourself about me, Walsh. I have a corner on that grand jury." Said I, "All right; you have a corner on the grand jury?" Said he, "I assure you there is no danger. Do not be alarmed about me." He knew

I was not alarmed about his being indicted; but, on the contrary, would be rather glad of it. I went on performing the service just as well as any other like service was performed, but Mr. Brady affected to believe that it was not properly performed. Hinds published a statement in the New York Times charging fraud on this Alberquerque and Las Vegas route, and citing as witnesses who were cognizant of the fraud, that is to say, of the non-performance of the service, Stephen B. Elkins, R. C. Kerens, I think Stephen W. Dorsey, and myself. I was never omitted, and have not been for some three years. Brady sent Mr. R. P. Eaton to New York to see me. Mr. Eaton asked me if I had seen this libelous attack of Hinds. I told him I had read it. Said he, "Walsh, you know there is no fraud there." I said, "I don't know anything about it. I don't know how Hinds came to mention me. I don't know anything about that." "Well," said Eaton, "you know that what he says is wrong." I said, "No, I do not know that, and do not press me, or I might be inclined to give an opinion." "Well," said he, "don't give an opinion; but Mr. Brady will be glad to receive a letter from you." "What about?" said I. Said he, "Denying that statement, saying that what Hinds says is not true." Said I, "I won't do anything of the kind." I said further to Mr. Eaton, "It is not clear to me what you want me to do; let Mr. Brady write me a letter and state what he wants." I wanted to get the letter, but Brady seemed to understand that it was not a good letter-writing time. Again Eaton came to me and said, "They are getting ready for publication in the National Republican, and everybody but you, Walsh, has written in refutation of Hinds." "Well," said I, "I won't write any refutation of Hinds; I know nothing about it." "All right, Walsh," said he; "I am only obeying orders." He was very pleasant about it. I said, "Very well; I will not write." The next thing was another order revoking the permission to sublet, holding me so that I could not get out by subletting to any person. All these orders are of record. The next thing Brady did was to say that the service was not being performed. I have read Mr. Woodward's testimony, in which he differs from me as to the action that was taken about my contract at that time. I think they annulled my contract. That ended that phase of the matter; that was the culminating order.

Q. Brady declared you a failing contractor?—A. My impression is that he did. Of course they have a lot of technical terms in relation to this business which I perhaps never got quite through me. I see that Mr. Woodward says that I was not declared a failing contractor, but in point of fact that is what it amounted to. Then came the inauguration of President Garfield. When Mr. James came in power as Postmaster-General, I of course felt that the end of my business with the Post-Office Department was rather painful, but I decided that I would waste no more time upon it. My family were staying here at the time—they are now in Europe. I came over from New York every Saturday night to spend Sunday with them, and sometimes staid here a day or two in the week. On one occasion Mr. Woodward called on me. He introduced himself as a post-office inspector, and commenced talking about this route, 40101. He said that the Department was in possession of facts tending to show that the greatest injustice had been done me, that a conspiracy had existed to drag me down, and that the case made a bad showing for the Government. At this time Brady had gone out. Well, I was rather reticent with Mr. Woodward; I had not noticed any wild desire on the part of the Government to do me justice, and I was not disposed to say much. Woodward said, "Mr. Walsh, the Postmaster-General would like to see you." I said, "I do not know Mr. James."

"Well," said he, "call up there." I called. Mr. James talked not much to the point; he talked generally, and said he believed I had been treated unfairly. I said, "Yes, sir; I think I have been treated very unfairly, but I suppose there is no remedy." He said, "I don't know about that; in a case like this there ought to be a remedy." I thought that was most remarkable. I said, "What shape will it take?" "Well," said he, "the remedy will take such a shape as the gentlemen charged with this inquiry determine." I said, "I am much obliged to you," and the interview closed. Not long afterwards they rescinded the orders of Brady and "discontinued" the service. That term "discontinued" seems to be a very important one in the Post-Office Department. By "discontinuing" a contract the contractor stands in good repute and is accorded all that the law allows him, and the result was that I was told that a sum of about $15,000 was due me and would be paid. There were fines and remissions that could not be paid at that stage. I said, "I am very much obliged to you gentlemen." I was expecting them to say, "Well, Walsh, what do you know? what are you going to testify to?" or something like that, but there was no reference made to anything of that kind. I was treated with the utmost courtesy by Mr. Woodward all through this difficulty, and by Mr. James, too, so far as I came in contact with him, but that was very little; I don't think I ever spoke to him but twice. An order was made to pay me about $14,000 or $15,000.

Q. What was the foundation for that payment?—A. The certificates of the postmasters along the route showing that the service had been performed during the quarter ending March, 1881, for which I had not been paid and the pay for which Brady's orders had stopped. They went to the records and the records disclosed the fact that I was entitled to so much money on the face of the papers. As I have said, the amount was about $15,000, and I was paid that. There then remained the fines and penalties that had been imposed by Brady, amounting, I think, to something like $9,500. The process at the Post-Office Department in relation to the remission of fines and penalties is this: an affidavit has to be made setting forth the causes of the various deductions in the service. This affidavit is based upon information received from whoever happens to be particularly in charge of the route. On that information I made an affidavit relative to the conditions that had precluded the possibility of my performing the service as promptly as it should have been performed. The affidavit was made and filed and there was no answer to it. A few days later Mr. Woodward, talking to me in relation to the matter, said that he did not think that affidavit was calculated to cover all the ground. Said he, "Now, Walsh, you have spoken to me quite fully in relation to the conspiracy against you. On my side I know what has been done very much more thoroughly than you know it, and I think it would be just as well for you to set forth the facts and make a case that will present itself to the equity of these gentlemen's minds and rest it there." I said, "That will be assuming that the Government, through its agent, has done me wrong. Of course I am painfully aware of the fact, and I have no hesitation in making the affidavit and reciting the facts of the case." Mr. Woodward said, "Do that." I did make the affidavit, reciting substantially what I have stated before you gentlemen now in relation to this conspiracy. I merely touched upon Mr. Brady's desire to have me pay the $8,000 and what ensued after my refusal—one step after another until I was annihilated. On the basis of this affidavit the Department remitted the fines and deductions.

Q. Then you were allowed $15,000 for back pay and $9,500 for fines and penalties?—A. Yes, sir; that left me in the condition of a contractor in good standing, and consequently entitled to all the privileges that such a contractor enjoys. They asked me for a waiver, which I made as I understood it, but I never meant to waive my right to the extra month's pay. I think I was, perhaps, intelligent enough not to do a thing of that kind.

Q. A contractor whose contract is discontinued is entitled to a month's extra pay for services not performed?—A. Yes; he is given that as a sort of indemnity. The Government reserves the right to annul the contract at any time by allowing the contractor this extra month's pay. I made this waiver June 10, 1881:

R. A. ELMER, Esq.

DEAR SIR: I hereby waive claim to pay for service performed on route 40101 after March 24, 1881.

JOHN A. WALSH.

That, you see, is not a waiver of the extra month's pay, and it never was so intended by me. It refers to the service performed during the quarter ending in March, 1881. There was a difference in post-office registers. One postmaster's register on the route would show that service was performed later than the 24th—up to the 26th or 27th. Thus it became necessary to fix upon some basis for the payment, and I said, "Pay me up to March 24th." They said, "Well, make a waiver to that effect"; so I made this waiver. I afterwards demanded the extra month's pay, but it was refused me by Second Assistant Postmaster-General Elmer.

Q. Have you ever received that extra month's pay?—A. No, sir.

Q. State what you have done to secure it.—A. I asked the Second Assistant, Mr. Elmer, to pay me, and he refused. I made the request in a letter, in which I set forth what I conceived to be my rights in the matter. Mr. Elmer declined to pay me. About that time Mr. Bliss came into the cases—somewhat later on towards the fall of 1881. I had nothing to say to Mr. Bliss; I did not know him. I was, as I have stated, in New York, my family having gone to Europe. Mr. Gibson had spoken to me at different times in relation to this business. In the mean time I had filed a suit against Mr. Brady, long prior to any action by the Government. Mr. Gibson spoke to me about it generally, and wanted to know how I expected to prove my case, and in the course of various conversations I told him what I conceived to be the case, dwelling particularly upon the strong points of it. It appears that Mr. Gibson had formulated all these conversations in writing, and had given the statement to Mr. Bliss. I came over here on one occasion, and after talking to Gibson some little time, I asked him how he was getting along—he was then employed by the Government. He said, "Fairly," and I thought there was a little embarrassment about his manner, but finally he said to me, "Walsh, I did something that I don't know whether I should have done or not, but I have done it, and I want to tell you about it, to see what you think of it. I have reduced to writing the various conversations had with you about this business, and I have given the statement to Mr. Bliss. Now, Bliss is a very incredulous man, and I think he is inclined not to put much confidence in anybody or in anything, and I have reached that stage where, if you can do it, I would like you to see Bliss and tell him that that statement contains about what you have said." I said, "Well, Gibson, I really don't like to do it; it is no affair of mine; I am getting mixed up in a way that I don't like, but if it will relieve you of any embarrassment I will do it." He said, "I will introduce you to Bliss." He did introduce me, and I talked to Mr. Bliss. He read the statement over and we made corrections, and I said, "That is about it substantially." He then asked me, "Have you any objection to signing it?" I said, "Yes; I do not sign anything, Mr. Bliss; I am not making affidavits; I am not in that business. Mr. Gibson told me what he had done with the information I had given him, and to help him I have gone so far, but that is as far as I care to go." The conversation with Mr. Bliss was very pleasant, and we parted. I told Gibson what I had done. Mr. Gibson and Mr. Cook on one side, and Mr. Bliss on the other, very soon got into a row. There was great division of sentiment in the family, and Bliss seemed to rule the roost, and showed a strong desire to take their scalps, and the fight degenerated into a regular Kilkenny one; Gibson and Cook sustaining the theory that route 40101 should have been the case selected first, and Bliss holding that it should not—that he was the boss of the business, and that the proper case was the Brady-Dorsey one. Now, I had no more to do with all that than you gentlemen here, but Mr. Bliss evidently conceived the idea that I had all to do with it, or rather that I had taken sides in the fight.

Q. Who were the parties to be indicted in the case of route 40101, from Prescott to Santa Fé?—A. The same persons that they had filed the information against: Brady, S. P. Brown, French, Turner—the parties in the information. The record will show.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. If they had taken up the case of the route on which you had the contract, that would have covered only Brady.—A. I guess it would have done more than that. I did not care whom they prosecuted. It was a matter of utter indifference to me. But Mr. Bliss seemed to think that I sided with Cook and Gibson. I doubt whether I knew Mr. Cook at the time, and with Mr. Gibson my acquaintance was most casual. I had no feeling whatever in the matter; it was a matter of utter indifference to me. Mr. Bliss began at once his attempts to discredit me. Whether that resulted from his surroundings here, growing out of his purchase of an interest in the National Republican, the administration organ—whether those surroundings influenced him to my prejudice, I cannot say, but he unquestionably conceived very early a prejudice against me, and went into print in his efforts to discredit me. I had had one interview with him, and he knew my status with the Post-Office Department; that is to say, he knew what the Government had felt impelled to do as a matter of justice to me, and, from my standpoint, I cannot understand why he should have conceived this prejudice against me, but he undoubtedly did, and he first gave expression to it in print in an interview which appeared in the Cincinnati Commercial of February 19, 1882. He was speaking of the number of witnesses in the Dorsey-Brady case, and this is an extract from the interview:

Col. George Bliss said to your correspondent to-night: "I think I can safely say that you will see Brady, Dorsey, and eight or ten other members of the star-route ring indicted by the grand jury before the 4th of March. I am more confident that they will be indicted than I am that the bondsmen, whom Judge Snell, of the police court, has held for the action of the grand jury, will be. * * * In all, some sixty [witnesses], from every quarter of the country, have been gathered here and introduced in the grand-jury room; that is the advantage we have in this general case, which I call the Dorsey-Brady case, arising out of the frauds perpetrated in connection with the Dorsey combination of star-routes over the Prescott and Santa Fé cases, which we tried to bring before the criminal court on information. The weak point in that case, pre-eminently, was that it hinged almost entirely on his evidence of a single witness, who made the revelation out of revenge. The trouble in such a case is that between two days, the revengeful witness, whose evidence is all important, may be appeased, and may forget all that he knew of the evil deeds of his late enemies and present friends. This places the prosecuting officer in a hole. That was the trouble in that Omaha case. It all depended on the evidence of a single man. The man refused to criminate himself when the time came for the disclosures which were to damn the rascals. That is a mistake I shan't make.

This clipping was sent to me, I suppose, by somebody who was anxious to have me irritated against Mr. Bliss, or probably it was sent in justice to me, and, of course, I was very glad to receive it. I never said anything to Mr. Bliss about it, but I thought I was treated very badly by him as a gentleman representing the United States, and I thought to myself he commences the operation of discrediting me very early, and I suppose he is moved to think that way of me because of his surroundings and his pending negotiations for the purchase of the National Republican. I sometimes saw Mr. Bliss about that time. I met him once on F street, near Ninth, and he said to me, "Walsh, I have taken up the Dorsey-Brady case. It is a better case." He made that remark without any introduction of the subject, without its being led up to in any way. I nodded my head. I did not see why he should say that to me. This meeting was after he had had this interview from which I have read an extract. Said he, "It is a better case, and there are more witnesses." I said, "Well, sir?" "But," he continued, "I think I will take that route 40101, and I will want you to go before the grand jury." I said, "All right, Mr. Bliss; I am not volunteering, but I will obey a summons." "Well," said he, "I will do that." I made some further remark and went off. A few days afterward I wrote this letter:

NEW YORK, March 13, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: Last Friday, I think it was, after leaving you, I met Mr. George Bliss. He had a few moments' conversation with me, during which he took occasion to say that it was likely he would take up No. 40101, in which event he would want to see me, &c. Of course I replied that I was willing at any time to lend him all the aid in my power, &c.; but I think I neglected to give him my address, an oversight which I trust you will remedy by giving him my address (care of Ira Shafer, esq., attorney at law, New York). By the way, I wish you would try and find out where Price is. [I was trying to get Price's deposition de bene esse in my case against Brady.] You can do so by telegraphing the postmaster at Jefferson City, or some special agent in Saint Louis. You will greatly oblige me by so doing, and informing me of result.

Respectfully,

J. A. WALSH.

P. H. WOODWARD, Esq.,
*Inspector Post-Office Department,
Washington, D. C.*

To this Mr. Woodward replied as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 18, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: Your favors of the 13th and 17th received. In compliance with your request I have put agencies at work to find out the whereabouts of Price. It may take some time to locate him, but I will inform you as soon as I learn.

It is the purpose of the Government to present 40101 with the other cases, soon.

Yours, very truly,

WOODWARD.

J. A. WALSH, Esq.

On the 21st of March I again wrote to Mr. Woodward:

NEW YORK, March 21, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: Until the Government, in some way, compels the presence of Price in Washington, I despair of reaching him with legal process. Every effort of mine to compel his presence as a witness has failed, and I confess that he has not only tired me out physically, but financially as well, for, as you can readily understand, my futile efforts to get his testimony have cost me money.

Mr. George Bliss told me some days ago that he was going to take up 40101, and I note that you express the same opinion in your favor. Well, I say to you as I said to him, just let me know when I can, in any way, be of any service to the Government, and I will respond with that pleasure and alacrity which every good citizen should manifest in the interests of justice and good government.

Yours truly,

J. A. WALSH.

P. H. WOODWARD, Esq.,
Post Office Inspector, Washington, D. C.

The WITNESS. Would the committee care to have Mr. Woodward's opinions in relation to the conspiracy that existed against me?

The CHAIRMAN. I think Mr. Woodward testified in relation to that.

The WITNESS. Not so fully as he treats of it in his letters to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The substance of those letters is that the Government desired to procure your testimony in the cases.

The WITNESS. Yes; but you will see how Mr. Woodward's statements conflict with the testimony of Mr. Bliss in relation to me, when I come to take up Mr. Bliss's testimony given here, which I hope the committee will permit me to do.

The following are the letters:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: Since seeing you I have been working diligently on the service in New Mexico; though not upon route No. 40101. I thought last spring that there had been a conspiracy in the contract office to force you out of that route. I have since obtained fresh evidence on the same point. When you find it convenient to come over I will devote myself to this service in New Mexico with you.

Very truly,

WOODWARD.

JOHN A. WALSH, Esq.,
208 East Eighteenth Street, New York City.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 23, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: Yours of the 21st at hand. While I have not heard the matter discussed I presume the remaining Government cases will be put before the grand jury as soon as legal questions raised with regard to indictments already found are settled. When the proper time comes Price will take his choice between putting in his appearance and quitting the country. If he does not come he will be brought. The facts ought to make quick work of him.

Yours truly,

WOODWARD.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., July 6, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: Government counsel decided to-day to have the new grand jury convened next Monday. The judge will issue the order. Mr. Merrick desires to have you come over at your earliest convenience. Come to the Hamilton. I think you will be entirely satisfied with the situation. I spent Sunday and the Fourth at the country place of Mr. Merrick. He is a host. When you and he plant your shoulders together the load will move. I, too, want to see you and be cheered by your presence.

Sincerely,

WOODWARD.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., December 7, 1882.

MY DEAR WALSH: I returned Monday night, having been absent, with the exception of occasional visits to the city, since the close of the trial. During the interval a great change has taken place in the general atmosphere and situation. A few months ago many believed that the Administration was half-hearted in the prosecution, and that impression was reflected painfully in the Departments. Adherents of the criminals were insolent and shameless in expressions of hostility and defiance. Now, around here there is no more swagger, no more apologies for thieves.

I can see that your appearance on the scene of action a few months ago, and the very decided stand taken by you as to the line that should be pursued by the Government, has had a very decided influence in bringing about the change. Mr. Merrick at once recognized the solidity of your views, and has been unwearied in effort to make the prosecution thorough and impartial. Mr. Bliss is co-operating vigorously with him. If there ever was any hesitancy on political grounds, any reluctance to let the blow fall upon an offender because he filled a high place, it has all disappeared.

In these steps forward, manifest to every eye, I recognize the potency of your influence. Do not know how much I may be in Washington, but while here hope I shall be more or less cheered by your presence.

Yours truly,

JOHN A. WALSH Esq.

WOODWARD.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., December 14, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: Mr. Merrick wishes me to write you that a man whom you desire greatly to see will be ready to go before the grand jury on Monday, and that he will corroborate you in every particular. He wishes to consult with you at your earliest convenience. Please come over at once. Mr. Merrick has been unwearied in efforts to accomplish what you both think ought to be done.

Yours sincerely,

P. H. WOODWARD.

N A. WALSH, Esq.,
Care E. H. Grandin, esq., No. 18 Wall street.

Here is an account that was rendered me by Mr. S. P. Brown in relation to this route 40101:

Mr. J. A. Walsh to S. P. Brown, Dr.

1879.

Oct. 1. To balance due on McDonough contract, assumed by J. A. Walsh, after deducting amount of Forney's interest.....	$5,334
“ “ To commissions on increase on Walsh's contract in excess of McDonough's—

You see how Mr. Brown's account agrees with Mr. Brady's theory, as set forth in his interview with me in December, 1880, when he said that I owed for all the increase that was awarded me above McDonough's contract.

Mr. STEWART. What did he mean by your owing for it?

The WITNESS. That I should submit to his arithmetical process of 20 per cent. per annum. Don't you see?

Mr. STEWART. I do not exactly see.

The WITNESS. Twenty per cent. per annum on the difference between $74,000 and $134,000.

Mr. STEWART. That was his price for allowing the increase?

The WITNESS. Yes. This account goes on:

To commissions on increase on Walsh's contract in excess of McDonough's,
$—, at 5 per cent.....	$1,733 75

But there is no "Brown" signed at the end.

The WITNESS. Mr. S. P. Brown rendered me that account, and commenced importuning and annoying me for money, and I began to ask myself, "Where will this end?" and I thought I had better go to Brady himself and settle the matter. I went to him and showed him the account, and said: "General Brady, Mr. Brown is your friend, and he is annoying me very much, and really I do not know what for. He says I owe him this money. I do not know why he assumes that I owe him any money, but he does assume it, and he is growing disagreeable and aggressive, and I wish you would stop it." Brady said, "Well, Walsh, Brown is a man that is very useful, and Congress is in session, and he has a great deal of influence, and it is best that you should be politic with him." "Well," said I, "I cannot be politic to the extent of submitting to be bothered and importuned by Brown. There can be nothing more unpleasant to me, and I do not care whether Congress is in session or out of session, I tell you it must stop. Between Hinds and Brown life is becoming a burden." "Well," said Brady, "I will see about it." Brown never annoyed me any further.

In the mean time, as you see, he credited me with a thousand dollars, which he should not have done, inasmuch as I had loaned that money to him on notes, with collateral in the shape of postal drafts. When he did not pay the money I brought suit against him and recovered judgment; but Brown is judgment-proof. You cannot reach him in that way.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What did Brown say he wanted that money from you for?—A. Well, Brown just said in a general way, "You owe me this money." I asked him, "How do I owe it to you?" "Well," said he, "You owe me that first item because you have assumed the balance that McDonough owed Brady; he owed Brady."

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. How came McDonough to owe Brady? What was it for?—A. For increasing his service. That is what Hinds swore to. His affidavit stated that they had agreed to pay Brady $16,000 for the increase of that service. He further set forth that $8,000 in money was paid by checks at different times, which was true. Then they gave Brown $8,000 in drafts. They wanted to get all the $16,000 from me, but I told them that that was out of the question; that I could not give them so much money. Hence they compelled Brown to take drafts for the balance, and Brown, when he wanted a loan of $1,000, came to me with the drafts as security for the money. Well, I let him have it. I thought he would pay a thousand dollars any how, and he did pay it when the note first became due, but he came back a short time afterwards and got another discount, which he never paid. Now, Brown assumed that I owed that money which was represented by the drafts, and that when I fell heir to the contracts of these other parties I consequently fell heir to the debts of the original contractors to him, and he gave me to understand that he represented Brady. That was for my information, so that I would not object to paying his account. Well, I thought the clearest way out of it was to go right to Brady himself, to carry the war into Africa, and I did so; and, as I have stated, it had a happy effect, for I never was importuned by Brown afterwards. From that time out he let me alone, which he certainly had not done up to that time.

Now, we have reached the stage where Mr. Bliss comes into the cases, and I will take up Mr. Bliss.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you read his testimony?—A. I have, sir, and I have marked certain passages to which I desire to refer. Mr. Bliss, on page 158, says:

The strength of that case, 40101, as a criminal case, rested absolutely upon the evidence of Walsh.

That is not true. There were other witnesses. Mr. Hinds, for instance, was a witness, who is on record in an affidavit, and I have been informed that Fisher and McDonough were both to be witnesses.

Q. Would not S. P. Brown have been a good witness in that case?—A. He would have been a good defendant—a very good defendant. [Laughter.]

Mr. Bliss goes on to say:

He was represented as being able to testify to payments of money to Brady in connection with procuring the expedition and increase of service, and, with Mr. Walsh's testimony, and with the other record evidence as they stated they had it, it seemed a fairly good case. But I told them very distinctly that, with my experience as a prosecuting officer, I could not help regarding Mr. Walsh as a co-conspirator in the case—

You see, gentlemen, he had already commenced to treat me as a co-conspirator. Now, I submit that the record up to this time, of which he was thoroughly cognizant, did not furnish any justification or excuse for his regarding me in that way. He goes on:

that he might regard himself as a victim, and I presumed he did—

I still venture to regard myself as somewhat of a victim. Mr. Bliss proceeds:

but it seemed to me that on the papers he was a co-conspirator, and I could not but believe he was such, and that I was not willing to go on with that case unless Walsh was brought into it. I claimed at first that he should be made one of the parties to be indicted.

It is unnecessary to say that I knew nothing about that. But now, just listen to the absurdity of Mr. Bliss! He says further:

Subsequently, I think I modified my view and said that I was willing to go ahead provided he was named as a conspirator, though he might not be indicted. It was left to Mr. Gibson to see Walsh and ascertain whether he was willing to be put in that position.

Now, gentlemen, if there was ever anything more ridiculous than that, upon my soul, I would like to hear it! [Laughter.] Mr. Bliss continues:

Mr. Gibson seemed to think he would not be willing, and I was very decided in my opinion, in view of some experiences I had had, that, as the case rested entirely upon Walsh's testimony—

Of course it is not necessary to repeat that it did not rest entirely on my testimony. My testimony was rather remote in that case. Hinds was the essential witness and his testimony was on record in an affidavit. Mr. Bliss finishes the sentence as follows:

as I thought, for any possibility of conviction, it would be very unwise to bring the case into the power of a single witness who might at any time slip away.

You see that Mr. Bliss began very early to regard me from the standpoint of his own measure of men. He seemed to think that the best thing to do was to consider me as a bad man, and to arrange that all his own shortcomings should be put upon me, because he undoubtedly thought I would leave the country. Judging from his standard of manhood, I have no doubt that he always figured on that. I am just reaching a point in his testimony where he says that he proposed to me that I should be indicted, and that I pleasantly said, "No, I had rather not." [Laughter.] He says:

After that was all over I said to Mr. Walsh that he ought to know that I had been quite decided in saying that I thought he ought to be included in the indictment; that Mr. Gibson was to have seen him on the subject, and that I understood Mr. Gibson had approached him in relation to it. Mr. Wash said with a good deal of earnestness that Mr. Gibson had never broached the thing to him.

You can imagine, gentlemen, that I might be somewhat earnest about that point. Mr. Bliss says:

Mr. Walsh said with a good deal of earnestness that Mr. Gibson had never broached the thing to him. I told him that after our conversation I was willing to go ahead with that case, based upon his statement as to what he could testify to—that I thought there could be no probable evasion in connection with that statement.

Of course, it is unnecessary to say that I never told Mr. Bliss that I was willing to go in and perjure myself in order to accomplish my own indictment. The statement is really too ridiculous to be made by a man as astute as Mr. Bliss is supposed to be. It is utterly absurd for him to attempt to put me in such a position, for, of course, there was no evidence against me unless I chose to testify against myself and I would have to commit perjury to do that. [Laughter.]

I will not touch on the part of his testimony where he speaks of the aggregations of evidence against Brady, but he says this about the "conspiracy" feature:

But if Mr. Brady increased the service and the speed of the service upon those routes, and allowed a large sum for it, there was in that fact alone no evidence necessarily of guilt on his part—no evidence of conspiracy with anybody.

Mr. Bliss was going to treat me as a conspirator because Brady had increased the service on my single route, yet he says here that that, being an isolated case, would not necessarily involve any crime, yet I was a "conspirator" and a criminal.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. Do you mean to say that Mr. Bliss says there that the taking of a bribe by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General for expediting service on a route would not be a crime?—A. No, sir; he does not say that. In this part of his testimony he is explaining why he took up the Dorsey-Brady case, rather than the other and he says that increase or expedition, made in an isolated case, would not be evidence of conspiracy, but that where you found a number of cases where Brady issued order after order there you would have evidence of conspiracy.

Then, on page 162, he says about me:

I may say further that I saw things from time to time which led me to fear that if Mr. Walsh got the money which he claimed had been wrongfully taken from him, he would not be for us an available witness; so that we might be in the position of having an indictment procured solely upon that testimony and then find Mr. Walsh dropping out.

You see that Mr. Bliss was always trusting to my being absent. I suppose that from Mr. Bliss's point of view it did not seem possible that a man who was offered his money would decline to take it and refuse to leave the country. Mr. Bliss's notion seems to be that no man has any sense of self-respect, and that no wrong can be inflicted on a man that cannot be remedied by the use of money. He says further, page 163:

I did not then consider it wise to proceed with that Prescott and Santa Fé case, resting, as it did, upon the testimony of a single witness, and I do not now consider that it would have been wise. If there is any responsibility to be taken in connection with the failure to proceed with that case by indictment, I desire to accept it in the strongest measure, and to say that it was my judgment that it should not be proceeded with at that time, and that I still remain of that judgment and am prepared to defend it anywhere.

You see Mr. Bliss takes the responsibility.

Q. Now, right there, as I understand you, Mr. Bliss not only knew that you had testified to the facts which you have recited here, but he knew that you were confirmed by the testimony of Hinds?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, I think you said, of some other witnesses. Who were they?—A. McDonough and Fisher, as I am informed. As to Hinds, I have knowledge myself.

Q. You say that in the statement which Mr. Gibson reduced to writing from your conversations and submitted to Mr. Bliss, and which you confirmed as true, you made reference to Hinds?—A. Oh, yes; just as I have done here.

Q. Then do you understand why Mr. Bliss stated in his testimony before this committee that the case of that Prescott and Santa Fé route rested on your testimony alone?—A. I cannot for the life of me understand it. I am proceeding to show you that Mr. Bliss testified to that which, to put it very mildly, is not true. I think there is no evidence so far as we have got that even tends to show that I was one of the conspirators, and I suppose that Mr. Bliss was going on the evidence. Of course I do not know what influences he was surrounded by here at night or in the day time, but I have my notions on that subject, inasmuch as the National Republican steadily opposed the Government in its proceedings in these cases, and at that time came out daily with double-leaded editorials against me. For this reason I have no doubt that Mr. Bliss was prejudiced against me and that he was delighted to be prejudiced against me. I have shown you that he began to discredit me at a very early stage, at a time when I certainly had done nothing to justify or provoke any such course on his part.

Q. But my question is, how could he have made the statement that that case rested entirely on your testimony, if he was in possession of your statement that Hinds knew facts which would substantiate your testimony with reference to Brady's improper and illegal action in connection with route 40101?—A. I cannot account for it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was not Hinds at that time in the employ of the Government of the United States as a special agent of the Department?—A. That I do not know, but I rather think he was. He certainly was either at that time or later. I know that, however, simply from general report. I do not know it of my own knowledge. You see that as the case stood, instead of Hinds corroborating me, I would have been the witness to corroborate Hinds, because he was the man that had paid the money.

By Mr. STEWART:

Q. But your conversation with Brady would have been direct evidence of his complicity as a public officer in making improper and illegal expedition, and also of his proposing to receive a bribe; because, as you have stated the case, he proposed to you to pay him a bribe, which you declined to do?—A. Yes, sir. In my conversation with General Brady I said to him, "Even admitting that you have a right to this money, as you claim, I consider that when I agreed to pay Mr. Hinds $20,000, even from your stand-point, I had perhaps made my peace. I certainly would not pay Hinds $20,000 but for Brown coming to me as a friend of yours and telling me to pay it. Put yourself in my place and see how you would feel about this matter." But he would not put himself in my place. It was not an agreeable place to get into just then.
